ACRO 1127

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2014

https://archive.org/details/christiansun76gene

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1924. | NUMBER 1.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Federal-Aid Highway Mileage.—

The mileage of Federal-aid highways completed at the close of the fiscal year, which ended June 30th, was greater than the circumference of the earth. Twenty-six thousand five hundred and thirty-six miles of Federal-aid highways have been completed. In addition, 14,772 miles were under construction on June 30th, and 6,917 more were contemplated in projects that had been approved.

Respect for Law.—

Said Abraham Lincoln: "Let reverence for the law be breathed by every mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, seminaries and colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books and almanacs; let it be preached from pulpits and proclaimed in legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice." This utterance of that great American should make an urgent appeal just now to all loyal and true American citizens when men in some sections of the country are banding themselves together to enforce the law by breaking the law, as if there were such a thing as enforcing obedience to law by acts of lawlessness. Law enforcement can come only by legal processes.—Ex.

Royalty Quitting Europe.—

One by one royalty is quitting Europe. They began to go at the close of the World War. King George of Greece, accompanied by Queen Elizabeth, left Athens on December 19th for Roumania in compliance with the request of the government that he leave the country until the National Assembly had decided on the regime best befitting the country. Admiral Coundouriotis has been appointed regent. The kings who have been forced to make their exit during and since the war are those of Russia, Germany, Austria, Bulgaria (Ferdinand), Montenegro, Turkey, Egypt, and Greece, and the kings of the federated States of Germany, such as Bavaria. Several other countries have thrown off the yoke of royalty—Poland, the Baltic States, and Czecho-Slovakia, for instance.

Darkness Means Failure.—

What about your life?—is it properly developing in the right way? Sometimes a crop is a failure because it does not get enough heat or enough moisture, and then there is a failure. The same is true in something else than crops—if a life does not get light enough, it will poorly develop, and then the life is a failure indeed. The one thing which each one of us needs is to make sure that we get enough light—enough for the physical life. or enough for the intellectual life, and above all be sure that you get enough light for the spiritual life. Darkness means failure in any department of life. The Northwestern Christian Advocate puts it this way: "We are told that the sunlight which falls on two square feet of earth has sufficient power to drive one of the greatest liners across the Atlantic. Less than a millionth part of the sun's power is caught on the revolving surface of our world, but 'there is nothing hidden from the heat thereof.'

"'I say the truth do thou repeat
To the first man that thou mayest meet
In lane or alley or open street,
That he and we and all men move
Under a canopy of love
Broad as the great blue dome above.'

"Every season always find enough sunlight to mature the crop, and in our little season of life there is time enough, light enough, and power enough to mature the graces without which no man shall see the Lord."

Humanity Restless.—

Humanity is restless. It cannot be satisfied with the world as it is, nor with the things which make the world. Most people are looking for and wishing for a change—a change in something, almost anything just so there is some change. They think it would be better if it were only done in anather way, but if they should get satisfaction by a change, then there would be many other people dissatisfied only because it does not suit them. We all need to learn a lesson in this matter. It will be much better if we train ourselves to be contented with such things as we cannot change—let them be as they now are and make the best of them till you can change them like you may wish them to be. The Presbyterian Advance puts it this way, and we believe he has it about right when he says: "Probably the commonest fallacy ever cherished and still cherished in the minds of men is the almost universal notion that the welfare of the world is dependent upon the substitution of some new system or scheme for the one which prevails. 'The system is wrong, is the popular cry. It is a cry which comes with peculiar appeal until one has lived long enough to learn that the cry is almost as old as civilization and that, while system after system has been swept away, the world is still so far from the ideal that present-day systems are condemned as vigorously as were those in vogue thousands of years ago. Economic systems, governmental systems, and theological systems have come and gone; but men still are crying, 'The system is wrong,' and assuring us that if only some new system were put into effect the world's troubles would vanish and all of its ills be cured."

Financial Statistics of the Government of North Carolina for 1922.—

Expenditures.

The Department of Commerce announces that the costs of government for the State of North Carolina for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, amounted to $25,364,112, which was a per capita cost of $9.58. In 1918 the per capita cost was $2.19, and in 1915 $2.12, the totals for these years being $5,407,381 and $5,003,902, respectively. The per capita costs for 1922 consisted of expenses of general departments, $5.43; payments for interest, $0.28, and for outlays, $3.87. Of these, the largest were nearly $6,000,000 for highways and $2,500,000 for schools.

Revenues.

The total revenue receipts for 1922 were $13,164,249, or $4.97 per capita. For the fiscal year the per capita excess of governmental costs over receipts was, therefore, $4.61. Per capita expenses for general departments and payments for interest exceed the per capita revenue receipts by $0.74.

In North Carolina, property and special taxes represented 41.6 per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 50.2 per cent for 1918, and 51.7 per cent for 1915. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected was 22. per cent from 1915 to 1918, and 84.7 per cent from 1918 to 1922. The per capita property and special taxes were $2.07 in 1922, $1.20 in 1918, and $1.03 in 1915.

Earnings of general departments, or compensation for services rendered by State officials, represented 13.7 per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 20.4 per cent for 1918, and 24.1 per cent for 1915.

Business and non-business licenses constituted 33.9 per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 19.4 per cent for 1918, and 14.7 per cent for 1915. Receipts from business licenses consist chiefly of taxes exacted from insurance and other incorporated companies, while those from non-business licenses comprise taxes on motor vehicles and amounts paid for hunting and fishing privileges.

Indebtedness.

The net indebtedness (funded and floating debt less sinking-fund assets) of North Carolina was $12.59 per capita for 1922, $3.85 for 1918, and $3.77 for 1915. During the current year, over $19,000,000 bonds were issued, of which $10,500,000 were for highways.

Assessed Valuations and Tax Levies.

Taxes shown as collected for the current year were from the 1920 levy. Since that year there has been no general property tax for State purposes.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Your preacher is a good writer. He reports the workings of his Church, and his members all speak well of him. He keeps his field in view all the time. He has something to say, and he says it.

Owing to rerouting of mails in certain districts recently, the addresses of many persons have been changed. Note that the address of Rev. J. E. Franks has been changed from Route 2, Apex, N. C., to Route 4, Raleigh, N. C.

Of the three important city Churches we are building in the Eastern Virginia Conference, the Richmond Church got into their home first, the Christian Temple at Norfolk will likely be the second to occupy the new building, and then will come Raleigh as the third. We are glad to note the growing interest of our people in these great centers.

It is now confidently expected that the administration building of Elon College will be ready for dedication by January 18, 1924—the first anniversary of the burning of the old administration building. No doubt, there will be many of Elon's friends who will wish to be there on that occasion. This is not an official statement, but merely an announcement of what is expected.

President Harper has been quite indisposed of late, but at this time (December 28th) he is improving encouragingly. He has been carrying the load sufficient for two or three men of late. Looking after the five new buildings for Elon is in itself no little undertaking, besides serving as the president of the college. Let him be remembered in prayer, not only because of his sickness, but also for the heavy work he is doing.

Rev. B. F. Black, Route 1, Box 144-A, Berkley, Va., is keeping very quiet about his work, but when he does report we shall likely see that keeping quiet at least in many cases does not mean that the work is not going on just the same. When he has nothing to do in his pastorate, then he is looking after the museum at Elon College. You may be sure he is not sleeping, except when he ought to be.

Our beloved brother, Lieutenant Governor West, of Suffolk, Va., is saying something which ought to be said. We have sent his article to THE CHRISTIAN SUN at Richmond and hope they may soon appear to the enlightenment and encouragement of our people. He is putting the facts down very plainly to our people. Let us read what he says carefully, and then think it all over and act—act in the right way.

In THE SUN of December 20th we called on certain brethren to answer a certain question, and gave until December 24th to answer the same, which allowed a very short time. We intended that editorial for issue of December 13th, but it was delayed a week in Richmond—that made it seem as if we had given the brethren a very short time. We meant to give them, in round numbers, ten days. A part of these brethren have answered, and now we are holding back their matter, waiting to hear from the others, that all may appear at one time.

Now that you have been permitted, in the goodness of God, to see another Christmas, will you not endeavor to give yourself to Him as never before, that He may use you as He pleases, that the highest ends of His kingdom may be fully served in the days of the coming year. If we may be spared to see it, or any part of it, may we not give Him the right of way in our hearts and lives for the best that can be done with us, through and for us, that has ever been done. Let us give Him our best, that the best life may come to us and then go out from us to scatter seeds of kindness and to do service for Him and for our fellow-man.

Did you ever see a honey dew? We have. The very heavens seem to drop dew down upon the earth. Now, where did that honey come from? We do not know, but we are sure it was stowed away where it could be had when it was needed. But, whether we know where it came from or not, we are sure it is God's gift to us in some way and for a wise and holy purpose. He lets us have a shower of sweetness now and then, and that ought to point us to the fact that He is sending us another shower of sweetness now and then as we make ready to receive it—it is the spread of His truth. It falls in many instances as falls the dew; it comes directly, but it is none the less welcome. The dew of His word does for the hearts of men and women just what the dew does for vegetation—it brightens and enlivens, giving new life and vigor to the flowers and to every living thing. The more we study the Word, the more we are prepared to receive the spiritual honey dew.

Let us be consistent all the day long. The Continent has a good word for some of us—and it is time we were paying attention to the suggestion. That paper puts it this way, and it will do us all good to think of it right away and put its timely words into practice. Says the Continent: "Why not copy that archangel?—John Hutchinson, the religious editor of the Rochester Post-Dispatch, wonders why it is that persons in the Churches who love so dearly the epistle of Jude, because it advises them "to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints,' don't read on in the same apostolic letter to the place where it says that Michael the archangel did not dare bring 'a railing judgment' against even the devil, but left him for the Lord to rebuke. How is it, this onlooker asks, that so many of the orthodox feel perfectly justified in treating brethren in the Church worse than Michael would treat Satan? Isn't an archangel a good example for an ordinary or even an extraordinary human Christian?"

It is dangerous to delay action in many cases. Again and again, have we thought of making an appeal to some individual to live the Christian life, but for one reason and then another we have put it off from one time to another till a day came when it was too late—death had called and taken the one we had neglected away, and now there can be no other chance to help such an one to come to Christ. We need to learn not to put off from one day to another till it is too late. Let us do it now and save many regrets. The St. Louis Christian Advocate puts the case after this manner: "You may have tried all year to reach certain individuals and families for the Church. Try again. Leave not the town for Conference and perhaps never again to preach in that community without a special effort to bring some of the boys and girls of the Sunday School, the young people of the league, and the friends who have often been in your congregation, but have not yet surrendered their lives to Christ into the Church. Why not make the last Sunday of the year a special occasion for the reception of members? Let not the last Sundays of the year be taken up with gathering reports and money for salaries and collections. The preacher by example and an effort to raise the spiritual tone of the congregation can change money gatherings into days of consecration of offerings on the altar that will result in opening heaven's windows and transform formality into life and life into revival power and spiritual gifts and graces."

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Amount collected to November 1, 1923	$102,327.77
November collections, per Christian Sun of December 20th	4,214.55
Total collections to December 1, 1923	$106,542.32

During November, Suffolk came forward with $2,291, and Waverly with $660. Will Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. J. L. Foster tell THE SUN readers why their Churches seem to be paying Men and Millions pledges more promptly than the average Church? There must be a reason!

J. E. WEST,
Suffolk, Va. Chairman.

AN APPEAL TO OUR PASTORS:

In the State and nation, we look to our leaders. Without good leadership, not much constructive work is accomplished. Those at the front must lead, and not follow with the crowd. They may be criticized, but they must be men of vision, and a courage to go forward.

The same applies to the Church, and to our denomination. The Christian Church is facing a crisis. If we fail in Men and Millions collections, all enterprises suffer, and we suffer individually. If the members of our Church will not pay these pledges, which help all the various enterprises of the Church, it is useless to originate other drives and campaigns. One-fifth of the total amount pledged has been paid, when four-fifths should be paid by May, 1924. Don't be discouraged.

We are looking to our pastors for leadership and instruction. Will you fail us now? Tell us of the great need for these collections; tell us how the money is distributed; tell us the seriousness of the situation; tell us of the importance of keeping our obligations. Pray for us and pray for the movement. We did not know that forty per cent of this fund went to missions, that the foreign fund is crying for help, and that the home fund is being helped by borrowed money. Tell us that the Christian Church has made great progress within the last ten years, and largely on account of the expansion program of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. Ask the membership if they are willing to cripple the work of the Mission Board.

Pastors, we laymen want to do right, but we have not seriously thought about this question. Teach us to think. Teach us to see our duty. Get aroused yourselves on the question. If our leaders are not interested, how can you expect the membership to be? The good road leaders tell us of the importance of good roads, and we pay our taxes cheerfully for same; the school leaders tell us of the importance of good schools, and we pay our taxes cheerfully for same. We have been blessed during 1923 with good crops and material blessings, and we will pay our pledges, as far as possible, if you will only tell us our duty.

I am speaking for the laymen.

Dec. 27, 1923. J. E. WEST.

Questions and Answers.

CAN ONE FALL FROM GRACE?

Question.—If there be no such thing as falling from grace, or apostacy, please explain the necessity for the following passages: Gal. 5:4; 2 Peter 2:20-22; Hebrews 10:26; Matt. 12:43-45; Luke 11:24-26; John 5:14; Heb. 6:4-6.—W. C. Carpenter, Cullman, Ala.

You have asked a very hard question, and by that I mean it is difficult to answer with any degree of certainty. We are very careful not to be too dogmatic in such matters. We have the words of Jesus Himself as in John 10:28-29, where He says: "And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."—John 10:28. That seems to settle the question, so far as the life of believers may be concerned. Then, in connection with verse 28, read verse 29, where He says: "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."—John 10:29.

As I see it, the Master Himself was very plain about this matter, and I see no way to explain these words, except to admit they mean what they say. Now, as to the passages you name as seeming to favor the opposite view, let me say they do seem to support your side of the question; but would you be willing to set aside the words of Jesus Himself in order to make these passages of the Word to mean what they seem to say? Then, do you say that it seems strange that one part of the Bible seems to contradict what the other part says? Well, that it may seem strange I do not deny, but there can be no clash between one part of the Bible and the other part. Then what shall we say as to this seeming contradiction? I think there is some explanation of the seeming difficulty, which if we could understand, would make it very plain as to whether one passage contradicts the other or not. Jesus made His words so plain that there seems to be no way to make them mean anything else than just what He says. I do not for one moment doubt but that when the Holy Spirit moved the writers to whom you refer, to say what they did say, that what was really said is truth and is in perfect harmony with what Jesus Himself had said. The trouble comes in our not understanding just what they said. Let me put it up to your own good judgment. Would you be willing to repudiate what Jesus said—said in such a way that there seems no way to make it mean anything else—in order to accept what seems to be the meaning of what they say? Now, would you? The reason I think there must be some lack of understanding of what the writers you quote say is this: The Holy Spirit cannot make the mistake of contradicting Himself, and therefore I prefer to believe that in some way we fail to grasp His meaning. It may be that some time we shall understand, and we can see then that no mistake was made. All truth is in agreement, therefore the failure to understand the passages to which you refer must be due to some misunderstanding. Do you say, "But may it not be that there is some misunderstanding in the passage upon which you (we) depend to support the thoughtt hat we cannot be lost, if we are once saved? I see the point, and grant it, only these words are so plain on the one point that I can see no chance for them to mean something else; besides, they are the words of the Master Himself. Again, His words seem to be in harmony with the natural order of things; for instance, if a man is born the son of his father, he can never lose the sonship which he thus receives through the natural birth. Being once a son, he can never in fact cease to be anything else. Now, can you show how this same fact in the spiritual life can be different? If one is born a son of God, how can he become anything else? His sonship must remain. Perhaps you may say: "This is a dangerous doctrine." Well, if it be, it is just what the Master gave us, and I do not think He would give us anything that is dangerous. You may say: if this be true, then many men and women would say, "If I cannot be lost, then I am safe and can do just what I please." Yes, I see; but the man who would take such a course as that is the man who has never been born into the kingdom of God. The true son does not make any such excuses. He is a son and glad of it, and would not for any consideration do anything to displease his Father. We leave the matter with you. If you can give any explanation of John 10:28-29 which will make it clear that Jesus did not mean what He said, please do so, as we wish only the truth. Nothing else would honor God, or bless us as poor mortals. One thing is true: the passage I quote and the passages you quote, if correctly understood, cannot both be true. As the Bible is true, I conclude that some one somewhere has misunderstood the Bible—for the Bible is right.

In the North Carolina Christian Advocate of December 13, 1923, we find a paragraph from the pen of Rev. C. W. Hunt concerning our beloved father in Israel, Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., who, on January 1, 1924, will reach and complete his ninety-eighth year. Bro. Hunt, we presume, is a Methodist minister and his appreciative words indicate that his love is broader than his denomination (he takes into his love some outside of his Church).—Editor.

Bro. Hunt says: "A few weeks ago, in passing, the writer stopped to pay his respects to the first preacher-visitor that he remembers in the home, Rev. J. W. Wellons of the Christian Church, who is now nearing his ninety-eighth birthday, still possessing all his mental faculties, with the same bright, honest eye of sixty years ago, when I first knew him. Long since retired from pastoral work, it seemed unusually fitting that this saint should make his home at Elon College, where his influence can radiate to all parts of his beloved denomination, thus giving the center of the Church of his choice the benefit of his ripe experience and saintly character. We talked of the olden days, of his love for a father, with whom he long lived and labored as neighbor, friend and minister; of the many good times they had together, and of 'Uncle Wellons' ' present work. Said he: 'When the fire came and swept away our main building, I told Dr. Harper, the president, that I was too old to get out, seeking aid for rebuilding, but that I would stay here in my room and pray, holding Dr. Harper up to a throne of grace hourly. He went away and came back with a hopeful sum, and we thanked God. He went away again and came back with more than as much again. All the time I was praying with faith, and each time the news was better.' I was about to say goodby, when he said: 'Not until you and I have prayed together.' He led the prayer; every word a personal, pointed petition for me and mine, and thanks for the life of him who has gone on. In the place of the one Elon College building that went up in smoke, there has come five splendid buildings, and the happy-faced and aged saint watches with more than ordinary interest the many men who are placing the bricks and the timbers for a greater Elon. 'The prayers of the righteous man availeth much.' Who would not feel honored for being prayed for by 'Uncle Jimmie Wellons'?"

LET GOD BE THE RULER.

(Judges, Chap. 8:22-35.)

"I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you; the Lord shall rule over you."—Verse 23.

We have to accept humanity as we find it, in curselves, and in the race all about us. God cannot use any better material than He has at hand for the accomplishment of His purposes. Gideon was a valiant man, a patriot, and a genius in his way, but he had his faults; they were the faults of the dark age in which he lived, a savage era in which mercy was an almost unknown word, and all the enemies of the Jews were supposed to be the enemies of God. He had the harsh cruelties of his time in war. He was a polygamist plus. Worse perhaps than either of these—after he had refused the crown, and given the Lord credit for the victory, immediately he turns about and makes a sacred image from the spoils of gold taken from Midian, and places it in his own city, a snare to his family and to the community. Every hero has his weak spot. Achilles was vulnerable in his heel alone, according to the mythical tale, but Gideon and you and I have weak spots in many other places. Oftentimes the moment of high purpose and great renunciation is followed by some folly that takes all the values from the sacrifice. Only as we walk with the God of all grace, whose ability is sufficient, shall we be able to keep out of folly and sin.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"POSSESSING OUR POSSESSIONS."

(Obediah 17.)

(1) In Christ.—1 Cor. 1:30, 3:21-23.
Justification by faith through grace.
Sanctification by faith through the operation of the trinity.
Reconciliation by death of His Son.
Glorification eternally with Him in the heavens.
(2) In Salvation and Accompanying Blessings. —Heb. 6:9, 10.
Victory in all things.
Peace and righteousness.
Joy in spiritual life.
Love for God and man.
Everlasting inheritance with the Father.
(3) In Heaven Itself Finally.—John 17:24-26; Josh. 1:1-3; Rev. 21:22.
All attending blessings God has prepared.
Fellowship of friends and relatives.
Personal mansions will be ours with celestial glory.

God the Father, the Son, and the Spirit will be our eternal joy, comfort and life.—J. T. Larsen.

ASKING IN MY NAME.

BY MRS. E. L. HOUSE.

"If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."—St. John 14:14.
Ask for salvation with a loving trust;
Ask for your children—He will give it; He must!
Ask, then, for purity, patience and love;
Ask, and, in asking, His promise you'll prove.
Ask, then, for holiness, joy and power;
Ask, and keep asking, for more faith every hour;
Ask for your pastor, your Church, and all;
Ask, for there is nothing too great or too small!
Ask, too, for missions, both home and abroad;
Ask that the workers may be all sent of God;
Ask for the nation, its leaders are men—
Ask God to save them, again and again!
Ask for your city, O God, will you save?
Ask that its leaders may be good men and brave;
Ask for the children to be taught in God's Word.
Ask all of this, through Jesus our Lord.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

OLD FRIENDS MUST PART.

Old friends are with us, but soon we must part. The Old Year has been a good friend to us, but they say that the Old Year is dying, and soon we may be together no more. If the Old Year leaves us, then the New Year is coming, and it will stay a good while, although we may go while it is here.

We say this year has been very good to us. That is doubtless true, but the incoming year will be good to us if we will but let it be. If we be the true children of God for the coming year, then He will make the coming year one of rare goodness and blessing to us. Has He not assured us that all things work together for good to them that love God? (See Rom. 8:28.)

If we be loyal and faithful to Him and His Word during the coming year, then we shall receive from Him many good things for the life that now is, and many more for the life that is to come. If we shall be disloyal to Him, to our fellow-men and to ourselves, then we must expect that the New Year will come to us freighted with many sorrows and afflictions. We shall reap what we sow.

On the night of December 31, 1923, the Old Year will leave us forever. No, it may be not so much as that, for many of life's habits may remain with us, and they will remain to bless or to curse just as the habits may be good or bad; but other things will leave us then forever. Certainly, our habits may remain with us, and if they do, they will remain to be a blessing or a curse. All will depend on the character of the habit. If it was a good habit, then it will remain to bless; if it was a bad habit, it will remain to curse us and to make the New Year harder than the Old Year was.

If you have one bad habit, then as you part company with the Old Year, throw it away and let it have a place in your life no longer. Do not discuss the matter of throwing it away, but do it at once and without discussion, for if you will stop to discuss the throwing of a bad habit away then it will out-talk you and you will lose; but if you will act at once, then yours shall be the mastery, and victory will crown your brow as the New Year comes in, and will give you a good start for the journey of the New Year. If you hold on to the bad habit, then it will be a weight around your neck for the whole of the New Year, and that will handicap your life and make it to partake of the habits you indulge. Hold to your good habits through the New Year, but let your bad habits go—and go forever, that you may be free from them. Keep all of the good habits you may have, for they will strengthen your life and its good purposes and enrich the days as they come and go. Do not keep a bad habit—let it go at once. Keep all of the good habits, and these will help you along life's journey.

GOOD NEWS FROM ONE ARMY.

In this day when so many seem to be going after new things, it is refreshing to get good news from the field, any part of the field. It does encourage us to know that one large field of troops is standing true to the truth. Especially is this true when that field is one of the largest in action. Its stand for the right counts for something in the great battle in which the Lord's people are engaged against sin and unrighteousness.

When we took up the Christian Advocate (Nashville) this morning, the first editorial in that paper was headed "Fidelity to the Standards." It struck us as having in it a meaning of importance. As we read, we soon saw we were right. The editor was taking a sort of retrospect as to the way the great Methodist Episcopal Church has shown its colors during the last year as to the great doctrines taught by that Church. The editor says:

"It is perfectly manifest that our Church is definitely set against rationalism, materialism, and destructive criticism. It will not tolerate in its ministry or its literature any infidelity to the Scriptures or the standards of Methodism. In every conference of the connection are consecrated men who would immediately prefer charges against any preacher who could be proved to have departed from the faith, and 'taught men so.' Considering this fact, it is notable that this year, so far as doctrinal soundness is concerned, the character of every preacher in our Church was passed without objections, but it does indicate that there is very substantial unity of doctrine and biblical interpretation amongst us. It is evidence that our pastors are endeavoring to keep "the peace in the bond of unity" and to make full proof of their ministry by bringing men to God and strengthening the kingdom of the Master. We are not rent and torn. We truly sing:

'We are not divided.
All one body we—
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity.'"

Then the editor goes on to say:

"The great body of our ministers and members are bonding their strength and souls to answer the mighty call of the world and the times and to save and heal, and lead a wretched humanity in the ways of righteousness and peace and back home to God."

That is a weighty statement to come from the chief editor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South. It is significant, too, that he is so outspoken as to the standing of the ministers in that great body in doctrine and biblical interpretation. It is encouraging to the rest of us who are trying to stand for the truth to know that so great a body of people as the Methodist Episcopal Church is practically a unit in doctrine and biblical interpretation—they are not being carried away by the blowing of the horns of new doctrines and new interpretations. We thank God that there is such substantial agreement in the Methodist Church as to their great doctrines and the interpretations of the same.

This is not a denominational question. It is entering all denominations and stirring up almost every brotherhood in the land. Some say we must not divide, that the Church must stand together. That is fine doctrine, but the trouble is that we are already divided. It is not a thing to be dreaded in the future—it is a thing which we are now confronting, a divided Church, only it is to become more so till we can get together on truth, for we verily believe that not only the great Methodist Church will not stand for the new teachings of this day, but we believe that the rank and file of the different denominations will stand together on the great and vital issues of the day in which we live. That there will be a division of the present denominations in this land. we cannot doubt; but we believe it will be a division of the many into two denominations or bodies. The modernist will go to themselves and the fundamentalists to themselves, until we have only two parts of Protestantism. One will be standing for the union of the people of God in doctrine and biblical interpretation; the other will be standing for the new ways of doctrine. The result will be a coming together of the great body of the people who are standing for the truth as we have it in Christ, and then there will be a union of the people who believe that they stand for no authority in religion outside of the man himself. When it reaches that stage, the Church of Christ will be nearer together than ever before since the days of primitive Christianity, when we had only one body. If this should be the result of the work of modernism, it will have done what the two branches together could not have done, for it will give us the Church standing together in Christ. May God help us and guide us aright to reach the ends which will best serve His kingdom in the world!

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN EDUCATION?

That is a question we believe ought to be answered in a very plain way. That is a phrase which has of late come much into vogue. We are in hearty sympathy with the thought, but we fear we shall get to use it so often that many may lose sight of its significance in its practical bearing.

As we see the phrase, Christian education ought to mean that whatever is taught is in harmony with the Christian faith, and that nothing is taught which may be contrary to the teachings of Christianity as set forth in the Bible. As we understand it, we do not mean that everything taught must be Christianity, but that everything taught shall be taught as in harmony and sympathy with Christianity. We teach mathematics in our schools and colleges, but in true mathematics there is nothing in harmony with infidelity or modernism, nor do we have anything taught that would in a way weaken the faith of any true believer. We teach history, but it must be in no way opposed to the Christian faith. We teach science, but require it to bow most respectfully to Christianity, for all true science and all true revelation must be in harmony, the one with the other, since the God of all truth is the Author of both science and Christianity. We teach philosophy, but it, too, must be polite when it comes into the presence of Christianity. It must at least be respectful and look up to Christianity as its superior. We teach astronomy in our schools and colleges, but we expect astronomy to be the handmaid of Christianity. The psalmist declared:

"The heavens declare the glory of God,
And the firmament showeth His handiwork.
Day unto day uttereth speech, and
Night unto night sheweth knowledge.
There is no speech nor language
Where their voice is not heard."

Of all the books which may enter into Christian education, the Bible, as the revealed will of God, stands at the head, and all others take a place under it. This is a mere hint at what we believe Christian education, to be at all worthy of the name, should be. Till such an ideal can be accepted and practiced in a school or college, we advise that it be not said to give a Christian education. This conception of a school or college which gives only a Christian education is by no means perfect. It may be added to or taken from, only nothing must be added or taken from which will tend to make the character of the institution or its work un-Christian, for when that comes to pass, we shall no longer have a Christian education, but an agnostic education, or an atheistic education, or an infidel education. We have no use or need for these kinds of education, as they tend to make the Church un-Christian and unworthy of the confidence of men and women who call themselves Christians. It is one thing to call oneself a Christian, but it is quite another to be a real Christian.

The Western Recorder recently had an article on Christian education, in which we find many good suggestions, but clip for the benefit of our readers, as follows:

Need for Christian Education.

Still another reason why we dare not fail to be true to the purpose of the founders of this institution is the fact that the world's need and cry challenge us to this endeavor. Just now, patriotic thinkers and writers are insisting that less stress be laid upon our material development and more on those spiritual forces, without which mere material development may be a curse rather than a blessing. We must learn anew that "righteousness exalteth a nation." Have we not had vividly brought before our eyes the fact "that nation that will not serve God shall perish." Yet Germany was a nation of scholars and specialists.

We need specialists, but we need all-round development. The expert or specialist is useful, but not always the most useful member of society. The mockingbird is a specialist, it is true, and so is the nightingale. But so also the tiger and the hawk. The tiger is an expert, a specialist in detecting the delicate shades of flavor in the blood of his various victims. But he is a most inconvenient and unsocial member of society. Such liberty is ruinous, is destructive.

Our greatest service, then, is to do our part in making real in the lives of the youth that the whole truth, the truth about God, as well as about things, such truth makes men free. "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Thus Christ calls forth our powers and through us reaches the world. He sets us free and through us sets the world free from ignorance, strife and all that is low and mean.

Educators See Want.

Not only are our political leaders calling for a religious training in our colleges, but leading educators see that once more it is a vital issue. Dr. Bosanquet writes: "No training that is effective will dispense with a direction of the mind to the positive values; to beauty, to truth, and to religion." Professor Muirhead says: "The main problem of the immediate future is to reinspire our educational ideals with the religious idea."

Never before was there such an opportunity for the Christian college. The world calls to us for men and women fully equipped for life's service, for men and women in the many professions and business who are well trained in head and heart. How we shall answer this call, face this challenge is certainly a matter of grave importance to each of us.

THANK GOD, THE OLD-TIME CHRISTIAN SHOUT IS NOT GONE!

There are, we regret to admit, some people who profess to be Christians, and yet they are ashamed to shout to the praise of God. In our college days, we had a dear friend, a young minister, who in the time of a great revival meeting in the college, said in our presence, after there had been a sort of floodtide in the interest in the meeting, and referring to a particular occasion:

"If it had been decent, I would have shouted." Though he was a dear friend, he shocked us with that statement. We have never been able to forget it as one of the most uncalled-for expressions we have ever known. Can it be indecent for a sincere Christian, in the moment of great victory and blessing, to shout the praise of God? We cannot believe it! We will not believe it!

We are glad to say, even though this young man felt it would have been indecent to shout the praise of God in such a moment of blessing as he claimed he had enjoyed, yet we are glad to say that shouting has not clean gone from the earth.

We find in the Christian Advocate (Nashville) the report of a great moment in the Memphis conference. It was to us, as we read it, an evidence that the old-time religion may yet be found in some places in the earth. We herewith give that report, and we ask that our friends will read it; and if they can detect anything in it that has in it the appearance of indecency, kindly let us know what it is, for to us it seems that it must have been a high-water mark in the proceedings of that conference:

The voice of Dr. S. A. Steel was ringing as clear as a silver bell through the beautiful auditorium of First Church, Jackson, Tenn., when the editor arrived on the afternoon of Thursday. Dr. Steel was giving the large congregation a description of the crucifixion scene and interspersing illuminating expositions of the last words and acts of the Saviour. At the evening hour the board of education had its anniversary, and Mr. John Wynne Barton, of the Methodist Publishing House, was the interesting and informing speaker. On Friday morning the conference experienced a baptism of the Holy Ghost. There were shouts and evidences of renewals in Christian life. Bishop Mouzon talked at the opening service on love, and melted his hearers into that spiritual fusion which always follows a near approach of hearts to the face of the Master. The special order of the morning was the report of the board of missions with reference to revivalistic plans. This report said that "the most urgent need of the Church is a revival of pure and undefiled religion" and called upon "our pastors and people to prepare for a real evangelistic campaign."

The report added: "A restless heart hunger is certainly evident where people turn to heed every voice that calls with a promise of help, however fantastic. * * * We recall the days of old when altars resounded with notes of joy sung by those who were made alive unto God in all their spiritual affections, when the testimony to the continued ministry of the Spirit in the heart and his control in the lives of our people was the one valid credential that we were a people of God. It was glorious that not only individuals, but whole congregations and a vast continental organization, could sing and speak and write in the joy of conscious deliverance from the guilt and power of sin. That was the wonder of the world and that was Methodism. * * * We call upon our preachers to be evangelical in their lives and evangelistic in their preaching and upon all our laymen to co-operate with them in this as the great Church program."

Further, said the report: "We determine, as far as possible, to bring this evangelistic program into complete accord with the vast and wondrously thought-out program of the Sunday School, not the caricature of the Sunday School as it must be if it issue from minds uninformed by the Spirit of Jesus, but that program as it would live and glow were our older people all saints in the household of God. We are convinced that the peculiar type of Methodist doctrine needs to reassert itself in a special evangelistic movement."

SCHOLARSHIP AND GOVERNMENT.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

No student of governmental affairs should fail to give careful study to the writings of Comte de Tocqueville, who came from France to visit America in 1831, and after some time spent here returned to prepare his famous book, "Democracy in America," which was published in 1835 and which at once established his reputation as one of the profound thinkers of his time. With the delightful manner of Montesquieu, he expresses the orthodox liberal ideas which prevailed for the greater part of the nineteenth century. John Stuart Mill, the great economist, was one of his followers. Tocqueville has the distinction of giving us the first well-digested account of democratic government in America. He writes an impartial story, being neither a devotee nor yet an opponent of democracy, but rather the philosopher coolly examining for the purpose of finding the facts and the truth. His books will long remain political classics, although he seems, from time to time, to be much surprised and hurt that men and nations do not always conduct themselves as they should do according to his theories. He sometimes forgot the truth expressed by the historian Hume when he said, "When a new government is established by whatever means, the people are commonly dissatisfied with it." It was humorously said by L'Estrange, "In elective government there is a tacit covenant that the king (ruler) of their own making shall make his makers (followers and supporters) princes." This dissatisfaction with their own doing may sometimes result as mentioned by John Locke when he says, "Self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends, and ill-nature, passion and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others."

It remained for the British jurist and historian, James Bryce, to make the first thorough study of American government and institutions from the viewpoint of a great constitutional lawyer and writer who had the sense of true historical perspective and balance. After some years as a London lawyer, Bryce was called to Oxford University as regius professor of civil law, where he remained for more than twenty years. As early as 1864 he won recognition by his work on "The Holy Roman Empire." In 1888 he published his monumental work, "The American Commonwealth," which has since been looked upon as a classic in its particular field. No wonder that in 1907 when he was appointed as British ambassador to this country that he was everywhere accorded a hearty welcome. It will be a long time before we have a finer and better treatment of American life and institutions than is to be found in "The American Commonwealth."

Governments are not easily changed; established rules are not easily overthrown. Thomas Jefferson was right in saying, "All experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed." Sir William Temple, speaking of the hesitancy to make any changes in established forms, shows the danger that attends such in these words: "The breaking down an old frame of government and erecting a new seems like cutting down an old oak and planting a young one. It is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade, but he who plants has no other benefit besides the pleasure of his imagination as to what the new will bring forth." Naturally, men move slowly in setting up new forms, and choose rather to make themselves believe as long as they can "Whatever is, is right."

"What constitutes a State?

Not high-raised battlements or labored mounds,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned;
Not bays and broad-armed ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Not starred and spangled courts,
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No—men! high-minded men!
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude—
Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights and, knowing, dare maintain."

—Sir Wm. Jones (1781).

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

On a recent Sunday evening, being held indoors by a physician's decree, I turned on the radio and heard two splendid sermons. Dr. Atkinson, who had come over to comfort a shut-in, was himself comforted by the two masterly discourses. If the inventor of the telegraph could exclaim "What hath God wrought!" what should be said in the presence of this marvelous invention?

You are seated comfortably in your home listening to a concert in New York. You turn a dial and it is a sermon in Pittsburgh. You turn again and Chicago thrills you with an organ concert. You turn again, and out from the great West, in far-away Minnesota or Nevada, come strains of eloquence and inspiration.

Men have only learned a few brief years since how to garner these treasures from the heavens, but since the morning stars first sang together, the airy space about us has fairly bulged with music and speech. Scientists tell us that the radio is in its infancy, and that its possibilities are inconceivable. We may well believe it. It does not yet appear what great things God has in store for us.

Before you can get Pittsburgh or any other broadcasting station you have to tune in, and thereby hangs a great moral truth. There are possible blessings all around us, but we are unable to appreciate them or even to be aware of their presence because we are not in tune with God. We cannot lay hold of the infinite resources of God unless we are right with Him.

There are continents of undiscovered truths projecting all around us, but we are totally unconscious of them. Mayhap, ten thousand years from now, some spirit in tune with God will discover them to the race, just as great-souled seers and prophets in ages past have laid hold on great revelations, thus enriching the lives of all that followed them.

The more I see of the radio, the more I am convinced of the reality of the spiritual world and of the unspeakable avenues of progress that lie before us in that blessed estate. We think the radio is something wonderful, but who knows but that in that larger world we may be everywhere at once? Of this we may be sure—eternity is replete with challenges to progress, and there will be plenty of opportunity in the procession of the ages there to grow in the knowledge of the divine. For in that spiritual estate, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.

I am not a spiritualist in the technical sense, but the ability of spirits to communicate with other spirits is, to my mind, a fundamental necessity. Did I not believe this, I would quit trying to pray. Did I not believe this, I would never again sit and wait for the divine impression as a guide in moments of crisis. Did I not believe this, I would deny the inspiration of Scripture, or the possibility of experiencing God. The room in which I write is filled with spiritual beings. I cannot see them nor do I hear them. Who knows but that some day spiritual seers will have mastered the ability both to see and to hear these spiritual beings just as in our day scientific men have extracted concordant melody from what was before just air? All the atmosphere round us we know now is a cathedral with angelic choruses resonant and inspiring. The radio has told us that. So is the airy space around us peopled with saintly spirits purified in the blood of the Lamb. Such is my soul's witness to the reality of the spirit life. Now it is a matter of faith, a faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. It will not always be faith. In God's good time, His children shall know.

I will now tune in the radio and extract the melody from the air I breathe.

W. A. HARPER.

THE CHRIST OF THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

BY REV. S. L. BEOUGHER.

Many admire the "Sermon on the Mount" a great deal more than they obey it. It is not a summary of Christian doctrine, but of Christian morals. It is not a gospel, or creed; but the law of the kingdom given by the King Himself. Our aim shall be in the treatment of this subject, to gather together the few scattered intimations that dropped from our Lord's lips in this discourse concerning Himself; in order to show that to accept the Jesus of the Sermon on the Mount at His own valuation, we will have to go further than we think toward accepting the Christ of John's gospel, of the epistles, and of the apocalypse.

Throughout the entire discourse, there breathes the air of unique authority. Many attempts have been made in recent years to trace the influence of Jewish tradition on our Lord's teachings and to show that His human development depended upon the circumstances in which He grew up; that he was like every other man, a creature of his times. But was this the broad outstanding impression which His teaching made upon His contemporaries, who perhaps knew as much about rabbinical teaching as modern scholars do? No; it was precisely the opposite. Originality was a sin in the schools of the scribes. Their whole ingenuity was directed to deducing consequences after consequence, from the admitted principles of early teachers; but here was a man that quoted nobody, that never argued, that did not base anything He said upon anything previously said by any one, but stood before them making this impression—that He was a teacher clean out of the rut in which the rabbi had long trodden; that He saw with His own eyes, and drew water out of His own well: "That He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." This man speaks to His listeners as if He were their Master, and our Master, and everybody's Master; with a royal tone, condescending to no vindication of His right to command, but with clear-cut, sharp, definiteness, laying His orders upon every human heart. He does not hide His own personality behind the truths He utters, as others have done, but thrusts it into the front; and the only vindication that He gives through all the sermon of the autocratic imperativeness of His tone, is not by referring to the elevation or self-evident reasonableness of His commandments, but "I say unto you." What right had He to plant Himself opposite humanity, and speak as if He had the authority to bid them, as His servants, "Go!" and they go; "Come!" and they come? If Jesus Christ is only one of a class with other moralists and guides, the peculiarity which distinguishes His teachings from theirs places Him beneath and not above them; for none have made the extravagant blunder, of claiming to be "one with the Creator." If Jesus is not more than man, He was the greatest impostor the world has ever known. Jesus Christ is and will remain an enigma to us unless we have found the reason for His authoritiveness in His divinity.

This statement in the sermon summed up our Lord's attitude toward earlier revelation: "I came not to destroy" (the law and the prophets) "but to fulfill." That refers primarily to the fact that He has discharged to the full, in His individual life, all the obligations which that ancient set of commandments laid upon men; that He had done all that Moses and the prophets had required, as God's organ, that man should do. Never a word drops from His lips expressive of that experience common to us all—the sense of imperfection, or the sting of remorse. He begins His course with "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." In the midst of it, He could ask: "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?" and assert "I do always the things that please Him." Christ thrust this challenge into the face of blatant atheism and infidelity two thousand years ago, and no man from the day until now has accepted His challenge. At last, He could say, "It is finished," and look back upon a life of uninterrupted and complete conformity to the will of the Father in heaven. What right had He to say that? Was He right or wrong in saying that?

If right, how came it that there has been a man in the world uninfected by the universal disease, and one heart in which there was no poison that has trickled into all others? The Sermon on the Mount craves for an answer to that question. The Son of the carpenter in a little village, asserted that He, standing in their midst, was the goal toward which the whole solemn march of progressive revelation through the centuries had been tending, and that in Him all the purposes and premonitions of that earlier revelation centered and were fulfilled.

The fulfillment of which our Lord spoke was also of a specific kind. He laid His hand on the law of Sinai, which He and His hearers believed to have come straight from God, and assumed the right to modify, expand, set aside and enlarge its scope. Nor is that all, for we find Him using the daring antithesism "It hath been said to them of old time." By Moses as mouthpiece of God, and now side by side with that, "I say unto you." So He makes the authority of His own utterances co-ordinate with those of that ancient law, and asserts that He, too, has the power thus to modify, to republish, and to enlarge, the very law of God Himself. What must a man have thought of himself who asserted that he was the realized ideal of humanity as God had willed it to be? He asserted that He was the pivot on which the world's history turned, the center to which all the rays of earlier revelation converged, and who dared to put His "I say unto you" side by side with Moses' "Jehovah hath said"? Answer the question. That is the Christ of the Sermon on the Mount.

In that sermon we find our Lord's attitude to the followers who He anticipated would gather around Him. He said: "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will show you what he is like. He is like a wise man that built his house upon a rock." In this text He demands from us absolute obedience and implicit trust. This Jesus, shut up in that little strip of country, surrounded by circumstances altogether different from ours, with no knowledge, so far as we are told, of deep things that philosophers have taught and argued about, long before the dawn of European civilization, industrial progress, and physical science fronted the world, in all its ages, in far-distant lands, and down the stream of time to the very end and to all idiosyncrasies of character, to all in every condition, dared to say: "If you build your life on my commandments, you will build upon a rock. Do as I bid you, and your being will be stable and eternal." He expects of His followers a devotion so entire that they will be glad to suffer even unto death for His sake. "Blessed are ye when men shall persecute you"; "rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." What reason is there for a man's yielding up thus to the Lord? Simply that He demands it, and He tells us that we shall be wise if we fling away our lives for His love. And men have done it by the thousands; and the noble army of martyrs has proved the truth of this gracious promise, when they have admitted the rightfulness of that solemn demand. Why should the Christ of the Sermon on the Mount expect men to go to death gladly for His sake? Because the Christ of the Sermon on the Mount is "the Lamb of God" whose sacrifice taketh away the sin of the world."

He promises that His followers shall receive an illumination and a perfecting which will make them the light and the salt of the earth. That is to say, He knows Himself to be able to touch the deadest into life, to kindle the darkest into flame, turn the most putrid into soundness itself. The man that makes these claims, that expects this sacrifice, that holds out these promises is the Christ of the Sermon on the Mount.

Our Lord reveals Himself as the future Judge of mankind in these solemn words: "Many will say unto me in that day: Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? And I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me all ye that work iniquity." Whatever drapery there may be about the general judgment as set forth in the New Testament, there are two facts which stand out very prominent—first, that there will be a judgment beyond the grave; second, that Christ is to be the administrator of that judgment. Do you believe that He is able infallibly to appreciate character and absolutely and irrevocably to determine the fate of every man? He made this statement in the Sermon on the Mount, making these claims for Himself, and they were countersigned by a voice from another mount, where He was transfigured before His disciples: "This is My beloved Son; hear ye Him."

Graham, N. C.

A TEACHER OF PATRIOTISM.

There are few, indeed, among our people, even among the most enlightened, who know how great a share The Youth's Companion has had in cultivating a fine spirit of patriotism in our land—the kind of patriotism which means: Our country; not wrong, but right! It was this weekly that started the movement for putting the flag on every schoolhouse in the United States. It formulated the well-known Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag, that is repeated today in almost every classroom in America. It is now running a series of patriotic covers, picturing in color the striking events in the nation's history, painted by the best historical illustrators in the country, pictures that will greatly help in fixing the memory of events, that so often seem merely disagreeable memory chores in the school history.

There are other things of which The Youth's Companion is proud in its long and honored service. For generations, it has stood for the cleanest and best in periodical literature. It boasts, and the writer knows with what justice, that nothing printed on its pages ever remotely suggests the need of a censor. It occupies a unique place in American journalism. President Coolidge has said that "the destiny of America, the greatness of service lies around the hearthstone." The Youth's Companion is guiding that destiny in its chosen field as a great family paper.—The Christian Register.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Thanksgiving offerings have been coming in very nicely. We hope to get every Church that has not made an offering to make it at once and send it in. Let your Church be on the banner list. We will close our books for the year in January. We are anxious to get in all offerings for this year before we close.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Mrs. N. M. Crowder, LaGrange, Ga., 1 quilt; Mrs. Fannie Guill, Ingram, Va., 1 pair shoes; Franklin, Va., S. S., 1 box presents, 1 bag peanuts; First Christian S. S., Norfolk, Va., 4 boxes presents, 52 lbs. candy; North Christian Church, New Bedford, Mass., 2 boxes presents, 1 box clothing; Mrs. C. W. Johnson, Urbana, Ill., presents for children; Mr. H. E. Pearce, Franklinton, N. C., 1 box presents; kindergarten children, Episcopal Church, Burlington, N. C., fruit, etc.; Henderson Christian Church, O'Kelly's Bible class, 1 bbl. flour; Wellon's Bible class, 1 bbl. flour; Busy Bee class, Olive Hill Church, Neb., 1 quilt; W. W. Brown, Burlington, N. C., 6 turkeys for Christmas dinner; Mr. Spencer, for Co-Operative Mills, 400 yds. outing; Rev. and Mrs. Geo. Sites, Monticello, Ind., 1 box clothing; Episcopal Church, Burlington, 1 box toys, oranges, apples; Greensboro Church, "white gifts"; New Providence Church, Graham, N. C., fruits, candies, etc.; Mrs. Mary Brinkley, Driver, Va., 1 box Christmas toys; Dixie Mills, Burlington, N. C., 1 bbl. flour; Circle 1, Burlington Church, 2 boxes oranges.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JANUARY 3, 1924.

Amount brought forward	$20,060.78

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

North Carolina Conference:
Raleigh	3.74
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Dendron	9.65

Thanksgiving Offerings.

Shallow Ford	$ 8.00
Mrs. J. L. Barksdale	2.00
Bethlehem, Ea. Va.	19.18
Youngsville Church	8.22
Youngsville S. S.	7.20
J. A. Dunlap	2.00
F. L. Durham	1.00
Berea Church, Nansemond	31.64
Good Hope Church	4.21
Good Hope S. S.	2.60
Hebron, Va.	11.11
Christian Temple, Va., Ladies' Bible Class	30.00
Dendron, Va.	33.53
Mrs. W. L. Clemmins	1.00
Liberty, Vance, N. C.	35.00
W. H. Etheridge	5.00
First Ch. & S. S., Norfolk	80.00
Jr. Philathia Class, Suffolk	5.00
Lebanon Church, Ohio	11.15
Mrs. Amanda, Shelley, Ind.	5.00
A. S. Dunn	5.00
Oak Grove Church, N. C.	10.85
Windsor, Va.	55.00
Lebanon Church, N. C.	50.00
Mt. Gilead, N. C.	10.00
Damascus, N. C.	15.00
Wake Chapel Church, N. C.	60.00
Lee's Chapel Church, N. C.	5.40
Hank's Chapel, N. C.	7.00
Liberty Church, N. C.	7.18
Johnson's Grove, Va.	7.00
Mrs. I. W. Johnson S. S. Class	3.00
Pisgah S. S., Ala.	3.50
Mrs. Emma Scott	2.00
Semper Fidelis Class, Suffolk	10.00
J. H. Massey, Durham, N. C.	15.00
Reidsville S. S.	9.38
Christian Light, N. C.	18.00
Sigma Phi Beta, Elon College	11.50
Suffolk, Va., Class 7	3.25
Palmyra S. S., Val. Va.	5.20
Elon College Church	65.60
Philathia Class	25.00
By friends	9.40
Antioch, Val. Va.	8.16
Apples Chapel Ch. & S. S.	19.17
Mrs. J. A. Stiers	1.00
New Hope, Val. Va.	1.00
Raleigh, N. C.	31.45
	776.88

Special Offerings.

J. L. Andrews, support children	$ 10.00
O'Kelly Bible Class	10.00
	20.00
Grand total	$20,871.05

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

REV. M. B. SLOAN.

Father Time's clock soon will strike a New Year,
And so loud that all the world can hear.
He must, of course, make one stroke more,
As this will be nineteen twenty-four.

This year's book will have similar pages
As others have had in past ages;
All of them are blank and unspotted,
To be written upon unblotted.

Our loved nation is one year older,
And in many ways is much stronger;
But still there is room for improvement—
Not in laws, but in law enforcement.

All laws are good whenever obeyed,
But good laws are bad when disobeyed;
Love for our homes and our country dear
Calls for enforcement the coming year.

SOME GOOD THINGS.

Just a few days ago, Bro. E. W. Beale killed a nice lot of hogs, and remembered us with the freshes. A few days later, Bro. Hurley Joyner, of the Johnson's Grove Church, gave us a nice bag of potatoes. Then a brother and sister of a Baptist Church gave us a turkey for Christmas. In a day or so a member of another Church gave us a ham. On the next day, Bro. Elihu Lankford and wife, of Mt. Carmel, gave us a nice piece of butter. And on my return from Walters of the same day I found that Sister Nannie V. Bradshaw had brought us another ham. Many thanks for these good things to eat. The writer was once a farmer and enjoyed tilling the soil and caring for the stock, but as God has called me from that to preach the gospel, encourage the Christian, and try to get men saved by preaching to them Jesus, I have not time for these things as much as I once loved them. So these things are very much appreciated, not only by the pastor but by his wife also.

Praying God's richest blessings may rest and abide with each and every one, I am yours in the Master's service, ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Walters, Va.

WANTED—PUPIL NURSES.

Three vacancies in Standard No. 1 Hospital. One hundred per cent of graduates have passed State board. Liberal allowance per month given. Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$304.46
Christmas offering:
Mrs. E. R. Cox	$ 5.00
Henderson Church	18.10
Winchester Church	21.60
	44.70
Total	$349.16

We are grateful to every Church and individual who sends a dime or a dollar for this needy and deserving work. Will pastors or Church treasurers please send the offering as soon as taken, as we wish to forward the funds without delay.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

Elon College, N. C.

NOT TOO LATE TO HELP.

Many of the Churches have not had an opportunity to take the Christmas offering for relief and reconstruction work in Japan. It is not too late to take this offering, for many of the Churches have not had a preaching service since the call and the need were laid before the people. It is devoutly to be hoped that every pastor will give every congregation the opportunity to make a free-will offering to this most worthy and meritorious cause. The Japanese have greatly appreciated what has been done for them, but the work of rebuilding and restoring to former conditions before the earthquake has just begun. As stated previously, it is estimated by our General Board that it will take $50,000 from the Christian Church—North, South, East and West—to do the work necessary for relief and reconstruction. It will certainly hurt no congregation, but will help all to have this matter laid upon the hearts of the people, and give them an opportunity at least of making some contribution. All amounts received will be acknowledged in THE SUN, as well as receipted for. Several of the Churches have requested envelopes and folders; however, many are taking the offering without envelopes. In any case, give the opportunity to make the free-will offering during this period when the birth of our Saviour is being celebrated, and in making the offering they will further His work and build up His kingdom in the world. Thank you, brethren and friends.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

OUR GREENE COUNTY PASTORATE.

It seems a most happy incident that Rev. A. R. Flowers, who was last year located at Dendron, Va., has become very much interested in our Greene County, Va., pastorate, with Mt. Olivet Church as center and source of encouragement. This Church, under the leading of Bro. Flowers, assisted by Rev. B. J. Earp, has experienced a very gracious revival. The congregation now feels that it must either build the Church constituency and more Churches nearby, or eventually lose what they have done. Under date of December 23rd, Bro. Flowers writes: "Mt. Olivet is by far the most wide awake Church that I have been connected with since I came into the Southern Christian Convention, and I am under promise to spend the spring and summer with them, in the hope of effecting an organization that will justify the locating of a pastor at Dyke, Va. Land has been donated for the building of a parsonage and a few hundred dollars have already been subscribed. I went to two other points and preached to the people recently, and was very much gratified with the interest manifested."

The mission secretary assisted Rev. W. C. Hook, who was pastor at the time, dedicated Mt. Olivet last summer, and found a very zealous and wide-awake constituency supporting the Church. There is great prospect for our work in Greene County, Va., and we are most happy that Pastor Flowers and Mt. Olivet are proposing to lead the way. God bless and speed them in this most worthy work of winning souls and building up the kingdom of our Lord.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Amount subscribed	$533,911.70
Amount paid to Dec. 1, 1923	102,327.77
Goal for May 1, 1923, to collect 40 per cent of total subscription	213,564.68

The fund is distributed as follows:

	Per Ct.
For missions	40
For education	40
For THE CHRISTIAN SUN	5
For the orphanage	5
For superannuation	5
For religious education	3
For Southern Christian Convention	2

This is subject to change by the Southern Christian Convention. The only change I remember was to provide for CHRISTIAN SUN deficit before making distribution.

J. E. WEST,
Chairman.

Principles of the Movement.

The Men and Millions Forward Movement stands for—

1. Jesus, the Head of the Church.
2. The Bible, the only creed.
3. Christian, the proper name of Christ's followers.
4. Christian character, the test of fellowship.
5. The liberty of conscience for every man.
6. The union of Christ's followers.

Its funds are to be devoted to these purposes:

1. Missions, home and foreign.
2. Christian education.
3. Ministerial education.
4. THE CHRISTIAN SUN.
5. Our orphanage.
6. The Board of Religious Education for the promotion of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.
7. The care of our aged ministers, their widows and orphans.
8. The support of our Convention.

What is my part in the greatest movement of Christian history?

J. E. W.

THE NEED OF THE MINISTER.

BY REV. JAS. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

The subject chosen does not necessarily imply a criticism. Being a preacher, I have made the subject personal, and assumed there is implied a dissatisfaction.

Dissatisfaction is always the first step in improvement. I am dissatisfied, and my need is expressed in the terms of this dissatisfaction. The remedy is in aspiration plus effort, and the effort may be work or it may be faith or it may be a combination of the two.

My need is a deeper realization of the Christ. I need to know Him so intimately that His influence will be recognized by me as greater than any other and all others. Father and mother were, wife and children are dear to me, but He is to be dearer. Friends are all about me, but His is to be my chiefest companionship. Powers I have, but He is to be my support. Faculties I have, but He is to inspire each and all.

I can conceive my need met when I am absolutely consecrated to Him. When Christ finds every door of my soul open to Him and every soul window open toward Jerusalem, He will speak peace and power to my life.

It is not how to accomplish tasks and duties, but how to escape them long enough to worship in quiet and undisturbed, alone with my God as I find Him and see Him in my Christ.

Every problem which baffles me is solved in Him. Every characteristic which hinders me is lost in Him. Every conception which bewilders me is cleared in Him. Every prejudice which limits me is dissolved in Him. Every antipathy which grips me is unloosed in Him. He is my need.

When I first considered the subject, I thought it might be knowledge, or training, or initiative, or experience, or time, or strength that I needed. But analysis soon disclosed that that which I, as a preacher, most need is an experience of Christ which will bring me intimately into relation with His deeper and richer aspects. I need to have the mind, the heart, and the spirit of the Christ who served to the uttermost, who loved to the uttermost, and who gave to the uttermost.

Oh! to partake more abundantly, to drink more deeply of His infallable wisdom, His unquenchable compassion, and His unfathomed love.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not Christ, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

Though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I am trained with all training and have not Christ, I am nothing.

Holland, Va.

[NOTE.—This paper was read before the Ministerial Association, Norfolk, Va., at its December meeting. The brethren were so impressed with its value that they asked for its publication in The Christian Sun.]

In this day of many minds, it is good for us to stop for a while and think over some of the things in which we may have been mistaken. This is, we believe, the age of the Spirit, but a great many in the Church, as well as in the ministry, do not seem to feel called upon to lay much stress on the work of the Spirit. Let us stop a moment and think over the facts, and it may be that we shall soon see in a clearer light, much as the Pentecostal Herald was seeing the question when it penned these lines: "The Holy Ghost reveals Jesus.—He makes the Lord Christ as real to the soul upon whom he falls in divine baptism as Jesus was real to John when he laid his head upon the bosom of the Master or to Peter when he leaped overboard and swam to Jesus on the shore. Jesus Christ becomes a tremendous and glorious fact, a living and powerful personality to those who receive the baptism with the Holy Ghost."

We like our preacher fine, but he don't seem to make us work. Some of our members think it might be well to change and get a pastor. Our preacher is busy—too busy to write anything for the Church paper. He hasn't said anything good about his field the whole past year.

THE MODERN WAY vs. THE OLD PATHS.

By Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D.

[Delivered before the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, in its late session at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., and published by request.—Editor.]

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, we will not walk therein."—Jer. 6:16.

The scene is that of a traveler who has come to the opening of the ways, or else he has lost his way, or got out of the right way, that he has been traveling.

To all such, the word of the Lord saith, "Stand ye in the ways, and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

The old paths referred to are the paths walked in by those who adhered to Jehovah and obeyed his commands. The bewildered, lost, or out-of-the-way traveler is enjoined not only to ask for the old paths, but also for the good way and to walk therein. He is bidden to stand in the ways, to see, to ask. He is to see for himself and to inquire of those who know the way.

Israel had gone wrong; had got out of the way by departing from God's commands; and the only way to get right was to get back to God and obey His commands. Get back to the old paths of truth and righteousness and walk therein.

The world has gone wrong as Israel went wrong—by parting from the commands of Jehovah—and the only way to get right is to get back to God and obey His commands.

There are forces at work in our civilization which threaten its destruction. They are seen in the decadent home, the divided Church, the clash between capital and labor, the disregard for law, and in the general unrest in all walks of life.

We are told that Europe is struggling between hope and despair, and that in the struggle is becoming materialistic.

There is a conflict on today in organized Christianity which strikes at its very foundations; besides the forces without which seek its utter destruction. This conflict in organized Christianity is seen in the controversy between the fundamentalists and the modernists or liberalists. If the Church has not got out of the old paths; if she has not departed from the commands of God—she has certainly come to the opening of the ways, and it behooves her to stand in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein.

The safety of the individual and the world lie in the establishment of Christ and Christianity in the heart and lives of men; and the Church of the living God is the only organized body on earth for the accomplishment of that purpose. Hence, the importance of knowing the truth, of being right, and forging ahead.

The controversy now going on within the Church between those who profess to be Christians, between the fundamentalists and the liberalists, is very pathetic and destructive to winning souls to Christ. It has confused many people, and doubtless turned many from the Church.

The views as set forth by the liberalists regarding the inspiration of the Scriptures, Christ, His mission and work, and the mission of the Church has shaken, unsettled the faith of many, especially in schools, colleges, and universities, in the old paths wherein saints of God have marched to glory.

Let us hope that the quarrel is at its height; that it will soon be over; and that out of it good will come. But that good day is not yet at hand: for at present, the essentials as set forth by the fundamentalists and the liberalists are as far apart as the poles of the earth.

Fundamentalism is belief in the fundamentals; that is, belief in those things that serve as the foundation or basis of a system or belief as truths, law or principle—a primary and necessary truth. In religion, it has reference to the foundation, basic truths, essentials, upon which religion is founded.

The essentials of fundamentalism, varying somewhat in its adherents, as they approach or recede from the clearly defined line of separation which divide them and the liberalists, may be stated in a general way, as follows: belief in God the Father; in Jesus Christ His Son, and in the Holy Spirit, the Comforter; in the inspiration of the Scriptures; the trinity; the virgin birth of Jesus Christ; His deity; the personality of the Holy Spirit; the vicarious atonement of our Lord and Saviour; the new birth; the resurrection of the body; the second coming of Christ our Lord; everlasting life of both the righteous and the wicked—the one saved; the other lost.

The fundamentalists at least believe something and know how to state it and are not ashamed to confess their faith.

Liberalism is the principle or method of liberalists in religion, politics and other things. In religion it has reference to the liberty of thought, speech, and action. It stands out opposed to conservatism and fundamentalism.

The essentials of liberalism varies also in the teachings of its adherents as they approach or recede from the clearly defined line of separation which divide them and the fundamentalists; but in a general way the essentials of liberalism may be stated somewhat as follows: That the basic truths of Christianity is a Christ-like mind and heart. It says that the world needs the message that Christ came to give—the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; the indwelling life of Christ's sacrificial life; the coming of the kingdom of God; and the value of the Church for the accomplishment of the divine purpose in the world—and not discussions as to an inerrant Bible and the virgin birth, or any particular theory of the atonement, literalist formula of the Lord's return.

It claims that the old-time religion needs to be reconstructed to suit modern needs and ideas. It says that the world is going forward and that the old-time religion which believes in conviction of sin, repentance, and the new birth as taught by the strict fundamentalists need to be reconstructed so as to meet the needs of modern thought and progress. They herald Christ through education.

It is easier to state what liberalism does not believe than it is to state just what it does believe. It is such a progressive something that its beliefs may change overnight, or with the wind or tide. Liberalism does not believe in the old paths as interpreted by fundamentalism. A striking contrast.

Fundamentalism says that liberalism is a philosophy pure and simple, and that its exponents are disciples of Descartes and Darwin; that they look upon the Bible as an evolution, that they seek to develop the naturally good in man and trust to education and environment for redemption; that they make inner consciousness the court of last appeal. Fundamentalism say liberalism denies the Christ of the New Testament; and that the present quarrel is not about science, mediaeval dogma or theories about Christ's second coming; but a protest against a doctrine and preaching that dishonors Jesus Christ and robs the world of its only hope of salvation.

Fundamentalism says the real issue between fundamentalism and liberalism is supernaturalism against naturalism, or reversely stated, naturalism against supernaturalism.

Fundamentalism says that supernaturalism is right, according to facts supported by critical and historical science, Christian history, and Christian experience. There are fundamentalists who say that we are right or we have no Bible.

Liberalism says that Christianity as interpreted by the fundamentalists is of the school of the scribes and Pharisees; that it is sterilizing; that it knows no progress. It says liberalism is of the prophets and the apostles; and that fundamentalism is contrary to the teachings of Christ. It says liberalism has faith in human progress. It says fundamentalism has no perspective; is a dogma of partialism and pessimism; that it is non-creative, non-ethical, non-spiritual, and that its program is essentially illiberal and intolerant.

There are liberalists who say that fundamentalists are convinced that the salvation of the world depends upon adherence to such doctrines as the trinity, infallible inspiration of the Bible, the virgin birth of Jesus; while they say liberalists are convinced that the salvation of the world depends upon expressing the spirit of Jesus in the life of the individual and the life of society.

There are fundamentalists who say of the liberalists, put the evil leaven out; be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

There are those who say that fundamentalism and liberalism should part company; that there should be a new alignment, and that such an alignment should be along the line of whether people accept the Bible as the Word of God or do not accept it as such. On the one side of such an alignment they would place those who accept the Bible as the Word of God, and on the other those who do not accept it as such.

There are those who say let those who hold to the rationalistic or liberalistic view go away to themselves and let the evangelical Church keep her soul clean and maintain her heritage and truth.

Some say there is no middle ground, for in fundamentalism and liberalism are two world views—the one, they say is static; the other, growing, evolving.

Others say the religion of the fundamentalists is the great redemptive religion known as Christianity; while liberalism, they say, is naturalistic, agnostic. They say liberalism which denies the authority of the Scriptures, the deity of Jesus Christ, the reality of the atonement for sin, has no right to the name of Christianity.

There are people who seem to think that separation is not necessary. They say let fundamentalists and liberalists work together for the advancement of the kingdom. One writer says there is room for both in the Church, and that each needs the other.

What do laymen think of the controversy between the fundamentalists and the liberalists? One layman tells us that fundamentalism is at least strong, if it is blind. Liberalism, he says, is a coward at heart, and that the logical outcome of such doctrine is scientific materialism; and that the logical outcome of fundamentalism is absolute blindness in the light of supernaturalism.

One says I have no interest whatever in the controversial aspects of religion; while another says religion is fundamentally emotional, not an affair of the reason; while yet another says, stop your fighting and unite in fighting the enemies of Christianity. Some deplore the controversity; others are pained over it, while others think it ought to be founght out to a finish.

The special points of attack by liberalism against fundamentalism seem to be the inspiration of the Bible; the virgin birth of Jesus; the atonement; the new birth, and the second coming of our Lord.

Liberalism tells us that the Koran is regarded by Mohammedans as having been infallibly written in heaven before it came to earth, and that all the ideas which we dislike in the Koran are somewhere found in the Bible and that the Bible has in it things for which we send missionaries to the Mohammedans; that the faiths of Buddha and Zoroaster say they were superhumanly born; that even Pythagoras, Plato, Augustus Caesar were called virgin-born; and that neither John nor Paul distinctly allude to the virgin birth.

What has all this to do with the inspiration of the Scriptures and the virgin birth of Jesus Christ but to create doubt and to discredit the inspiration of the Bible and the virgin birth of Jesus?

The liberalists say Christ is coming, but they think not of His external coming on the clouds, but of His will and principles being worked out by God's grace in human life and institutions.

They seem to have no room in their thinking for the superhuman, for the new birth, nor for the atonement.

Many schools, colleges and universities are honey-combed with liberalist teachings. Some pulpits are filled and others are being filled with liberalist preachers; and there are those in high places of the Church that are liberalists in their views and teachings.

I know not why liberalists are so anxious to take away the Christ we have known, who loved us and gave Himself for us and saves us from our sins when they have not a greater Christ unto us to give; but a lesser one.

They take away the Christ of the virgin birth, and for Him substitute a Christ of a human father, just as human as your father and my father.

They take away the Christ of the vicarious atonement and leave us no one whose blood cleanseth from all sin.

They take away the Scriptures written by holy men as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and tell us that the Bible is an errant Book.

They take away the Christ of the new birth and proclaim a Christ through education, and not the Christ through a broken heart, a contrite spirit, and new birth.

They take away the Christ of the second coming, in like manner as He went, and substitute therefor no being whatever; but His will and principles being worked out.

Liberalism, in its teachings, takes away the Christ we have known and loved, and does not tell us where to find him; but Christ lives and reveals Himself to those who are His.

What Needs to be Done?

What needs to be done is for those who have lost their way—who have got out of the way—to "Stand in the ways and see and ask for the old paths where is the good way, and walk therein." Get back to God. Adhere to Jehovah and obey His commands. Get back to the Christ of the New Testament; hear His voice and follow Him. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:20.

Build upon Christ the only foundation. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. 3:11.

We need to confess Jesus Christ as did Simon Peter—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." We need to see Jesus Christ and to know Him to be more than a John the Baptist, an Elias, a Jeremiah, or one of the prophets. We need to know Jesus Christ as the Son of the living God who will build His Church and against which the gates of hell shall not prevail.

What needs to be done? Get back to God; turn to Jesus Christ, the Master, Teacher, Leader, and Saviour. We need to come to Jesus with broken hearts, confessing our sins and ask His forgiveness. We need to accept Jesus as our Saviour and follow Him wherever He may lead us. We need to love God supremely, and our neighbor as ourselves.

The world needs to be regenerated—born again. If regenerated, if born again, then we will know that whereas we once were blind now we see. If thou wouldst know Jesus, do His will.

In such a struggle and conflict as we are now passing through, nothing can save the day but the spiritual. The struggle in its final analysis is between belief and unbelief; between truth and error; between righteousness and unrighteousness. It is an age-long struggle, and truth and right will win.

"Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers.
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid his worshipers."

It may be that fundamentalists will have to enlarge their vision if they would get nearer the great loving heart of Jesus Christ; and I am sure liberalists will have to recast much of their thought and speech about the man Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, and the way of salvation, if they would come near the blessed Christ and know Him in His fullness. Jesus Christ is "the way, the truth, and the life." "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

I may not be able to divine fully what the final outcome will be in the crisis through which the Church is now passing, but I have faith to believe that it will be a great victory for truth as it is in Christ Jesus; and that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, will ever stand supreme among men; and that His worship will grow young with the ages, regardless of what men may say as to who and what He is. The clouds may be ominous; unbelief may strike at the very foundation of Christianity; the future may be dark and unknown—

"Still behind the dim unknown
Standeth God in the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own."

The open Bible, the freedom of thought and speech and action without faith will not remedy our ills nor settle our quarrels; but faith, unquestioned faith and obedience to Jesus Christ, and loving and faithful service to God and man, will usher in that golden day of peace and rest and good will for which we long. What we need is more education, and preaching, and living based on the plain teachings of Jesus Christ. What we need is to know Jesus Christ and to live as He lived.

Let those who search for truth, let all mankind, be honest with God, with Jesus Christ, with truth, with themselves; and seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit in all things; and none need fear the final result of the present conflict.

I fear not for truth; but I do fear for ourselves and for others while we wrangle. Yet, believers must ever stand for and defend the truth as it is in Jesus. Jesus says: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciple indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

I plead for truth wherever found, whether in the Book by inspiration, written as holy men were moved by the Holy Spirit, or in the book of nature written by the Creator.

I plead for truth, not theories, not uncertainties, unestablished claims of science; but for truth in every realm of thought and action. But in all of our research and investigation and erudition in the home, in the Church, in the school, in the pulpit, and in the pew, let us not deny Jesus Christ the Son of the living God, lest we be found with a like feeling of Romanes, or even a worse, when he said in his negation of God: "I am not ashamed to confess that with this virtual negation of God the universe to me has lost its soul of loveliness; and although from henceforth the precept to work while it is day will doubtless gain an intensified meaning by the words that "the night cometh when no man can work," yet when at times I think, as at times I must, of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of that creed which once was mine, and the lonely mystery of existence as now I find it—at times I shall ever feel it impossible to avoid the sharpest pangs of which my nature is susceptible." Thus wrote one who had lost his way, who had got out of the old paths.

In conclusion, let me urge the Church to try the religion of Jesus Christ, and she will find rest; and so may each and all.

In our homes, in our Churches, in our schools, in the busy marts of life where men and women toil and suffer, wherever we have opportunity, let us tell the wondrous story of Jesus Christ and how He came to seek and to save.

"Tell me the old, old story
Of unseen things above,
Of Jesus and His glory,
Of Jesus and His love.
Tell me the story simply,
As to a little child,
For I am weak and weary
And helpless and defiled.

Tell me the story slowly,
That I may take it in—
That wonderful redemption,
God's remedy for sin.
Tell me the story often,
For I forget so soon,
The early dew of morning
Has passed away at noon.

Tell me the story softly,
With earnest tones and grave;
Remember, I'm the sinner
Whom Jesus came to save!
Tell me the story always,
If you would really be
In any time of trouble
A comforter to me.

Tell me the same old story,
When you have cause to fear
That this world's empty glory
Is costing me too dear.
Yes, and when that world's glory
Is dawning on my soul,
Tell me the old, old story:
Christ Jesus make thee whole."

Burlington, N. C.

THE WINNING OF THE FAR EAST.

This comprehensive discussion of the complex and vital problem of the Far East will command widespread interest because of the first-hand information gained by Mr. Gulick on his two special missions for the Federal Council of Churches. Dr. Gulick bore messages of good will to China and Japan, and had unequaled opportunity for gaining intimate knowledge of conditions and international attitudes. His book reveals the great problems facing the Eastern nations, and through them the entire world. Some of the opportune questions considered are the effects of the great earthquake in Japan; the consciousness of rights by the laboring classes; the spread of communistic ideas from Russia; the industrial, intellectual and political revolutions in China; suspicion of each other and of the Occident by China, Japan and Korea, and other matters which have the most significant relation to the peace of the world. Net, $1.35.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

January 13, 1924.

The Long Sojourn in Egypt.

Genesis 37-50 (Print 47:1-12).

Golden Text: "Jehovah will keep thee from all evil; He will keep thy soul."—Ps. 121:7.

Where in all the world of literature is there anything like these stories! Take for instance the stories in the chapters (25-36) that form the connecting-link between last Sunday's lesson and today's lesson—the stories of Isaac, the well-digger and the man of peace; of Jacob, his crafty, scheming, ambitious, and all-too-unscrupulous son, and of all the thrilling experiences which he had, including a flight from home, a vision of God, a sojourn in another land, his love affairs, his wrestling with an angel, and his reconciliation with his wronged brother; of Esau, the careless, shiftless, and tragic figure—the man who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage and thus became the type of many people today; of the interesting and very human interplay of the primitive emotions of these men as they dealt with one another and with Jehovah. Time would fail me to tell of the lessons that could be drawn from these gripping tales of old.

And then we come to today's lesson as recorded in chapters 37-50. Joseph is the central figure here. He was the boy with the coat of many colors and an ambitious idealism. Read of his experiences as a pampered son, as the victim of a cruel plot, as a slave in a strange land, as a man of authority and business cumen, as a forgiving brother and a devoted son—experiences that have been so vividly and graphically told that after centuries we can feel the heart-throbs in them. For sheer beauty and power of appeal, there is nothing to be compared with them except the stories of the Master Teacher Himself, and we should read them again and again, if only for their charm and beauty.

But they are more than stories to be read, or pictures to be looked at. They are truths to be studied, pondered, and obeyed. And he who reads should "Think on these things" and hide them in his heart that he might be thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

For over and above all their incidental truths—and there are many of them—there runs through all these stories as a central theme God's plan for His chosen people and His chosen land. These stories reveal the out-working of that great purpose. They are the details of "that far-off divine event towards which the whole creation moves." God was making history in those days—and in these.

We have already seen how God called Abraham out of Ur, and later Haran, in order to make him and his seed a blessing to all the world. We followed him through his experiences of those momentous years. The road was not always smooth, nor was the way always clear, but "by faith" Abraham went on, not knowing whither he went, but being assured by the inner voice that in due season he should find a city which had foundations, whose builder and maker is God. And then we saw how he died, not having received the promise.

It is a long way from Ur of Chaldee to Canaan, by way of Egypt, especially when counted by years. And there was a deal of difference between Abraham, who was the friend of God, and some of his descendants, for example Jacob. But a thousand years are but as a day with God, and men, even men like Jacob, are but clay in the potter's hands, which can be fashioned into the chosen vessels of God if they will but hold on till they receive the blessing. Then they shall have power with God and with man, and shall prevail. And even though we find the chosen people in today's lesson in a strange land, they people in today's lesson in a strange land, they are still in the purpose of God. Their long sojourn in Egypt—they were not in Egypt itself, but rather on the edge—was for training and discipline. They had much to learn and to become before they could go up to possess the land. And back of all these experiences there was a wise Providence, which was and is and evermore shall be. Let him who reads see in this lesson the strange ways of God with men.

Some Lessons for Us.

1. All things work together for good to them that love God, to those who are called according to His purpose.
2. God exalts men in order that they may exalt Him.
3. Public office is a public trust.
4. One great test of character is our attitude toward "our poor relations."
5. "He that is faithful over that which is least, shall be ruler over much."
6. Our sins have a way of finding us out—and at the most undesirable time.
7. "Honor thy father."
8. A man need not be ashamed of his occupation, however humble, if it is honest. Shepherds were an abomination to the Egyptians, but the sons of Jacob said they were shepherds.
9. The man who is engaged in doing big things—or even little things in a big way—for God, has no place in his heart for petty grievances or an unforgiving spirit.
10. God's plans are usually carried out by man's co-operation; they may be carried out in spite of his opposition.
11. "Love never faileth."
12. God was with Joseph, for Joseph was with God.
13. Many of us must sojourn long before we can receive the blessings which God has for us.
14. One of the best ways to forget our own troubles is to help some one else who is in trouble. (When Joseph was in prison, he served his fellow-prisoners.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

January 13, 1924.

Topic: In His Steps. 1. How and When Jesus Prayed.—John 17:1-26.

How and when Jesus prayed! Did Jesus pray? Why, He was the Son of God, was He not? And He claimed that He represented the Father, and that the Father had given all things unto His hands. Then, why should He pray!

Now, the undeniable fact is that Jesus did pray. There are at least twenty recorded instances in the gospels of Jesus' prayers or praying; we may be sure that these were not all. If the gospels teach anything, they teach that Jesus was pre-eminently a man of prayer.

This means two things. It reveals, first of all, the necessity for prayer. If there was any man in the world who could, from the human point of view, done without prayer, it was Jesus. And yet He prayed often and much. If the Son of God prayed, surely there is need for us to pray. Indeed the fact that Jesus prayed signifies just this: the better or more spiritual a man would be, the more urgent is the need for prayer.

In the second place, the fact that Jesus prayed reveals in a deeper way the nature of prayer. Prayer for Jesus meant more than asking God for things. It meant friendship and communion with God. The supreme object of prayer was not God's gifts, but God Himself.

If we are to follow "in His steps"—and Christian Endeavorers are pledged to that high and holy task—we, too, must know how and when to pray. And here, as elsewhere, Jesus is Master, Teacher and Example.

How Jesus Prayed.

1. Informally.—Jesus did not use high-sounding or "flowery" language; neither did He adopt a sanctimonious attitude. He talked informally and spontaneously with the Father under all circumstances. But there was always an element of reverence and a sense of reality about His prayers. Some Christian Endeavorers say they cannot pray in public. And yet they talk to their fathers and mothers and friends in public. Why not do as much for the Father? We are not heard for our much speaking or for our rhetoric. Prayer is more a matter of spirit than of mere words.

2. In Secret.—Jesus had times when He got away from the crowds, and even from His disciples, and prayed in secret.—Matt. 14:23; Luke 5:16. He has told us to pray in secret. No matter how much we pray in public, we need to go into the inner chamber and shut the door and pray in secret.

3. Earnestly.—Jesus prayed in such a way that His disciples wanted Him to teach them how to pray.—Luke 11:1. On another occasion, great drops of sweat, as it were of blood, stood on His forehead. Prayer meant something vital to Jesus. How cheap some of our praying is!

4. Confidently.—Jesus prayed in faith believing, and He has commanded us to pray in the same way.—Matt. 21:22.

5. For Others.—Jesus prayed for Peter, for His disciples, for all those who should believe on His name—always for others. How narrow are our prayer interests as compared with His!

6. In Submission.—"Not my will, but Thine be done" was the spirit in which Jesus prayed. He did not seek to change God's will, or sought to bring His will into harmony with God's will.

When Jesus Prayed.

1. Early in the morning. Jesus kept the quiet hour, and He kept it in the morning.—Mark 1:35.
2. Before eating. Jesus always "said grace."
3. Before undertaking anything concerning the kingdom. Before He entered upon His ministry, before He chose His disciples, before He went to Jerusalem—always before a crisis.

A Few Questions.

1. How much time did you spend in secret prayer in 1923? How much do you plan to spend in 1924?
2. Is there a difference between praying and saying prayers?
3. Is a prayer list a help or a hindrance?
4. Does your home have a family altar?
5. What is the advantage or disadvantage of having a regular time for prayer?
6. How wide is the circle of interest of your prayer?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THOUGHTS FOR THE LAST DAY OF THE YEAR.

"Whither shall I flee from Thy presence?"—Read Psa. 139:7-12.

There is in this universe a strange element which fills all space. It is called ether. No man knows what it is, yet no man can escape it. So it is with God, who is the universal Presence, the spirit that filleth all things. David recognized this mysterious presence as one who knew when he sat down and when he stood up, the word on his tongue before he spoke, the thought in the making. He made a daring experiment to try and escape God. First he tried height, but he found that a man cannot get too high for God. Then he tried depths at the lowest, and there he also found God; then he exclaimed through sheer exhaustion, "Whither shall I flee from Thy presence?" It is the story of man's past experience, of which we are reminded in the parable of the coin and the sheep, and lived out by Christ Himself on earth. It is a story of Christianity and experienced by Paul when on the road to Damascus. It is the story of God's presence with us always, which sooner or later finds out and searcheth all hearts.

There is nothing that pursues us like the past. Wrong-doing will hound us like a ghost and bring us to grief. Right will bring its fruitage in triumphant glory. Let us see what our past has been and make the future again.

Prayer.—Dear Father, may we learn from the past what are the unsearchable riches of God, and how He searches all hearts. Out of the past and our own love for Him and righteousness, may both the young and the old submit their ways to Him. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FOLLOWING JESUS.

"Let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me."—Matt. 16:24-26.

Imitation is one of the great forces in all education. The power and desire to imitate gives us our fashions in clothes, our schools of art, our social customs.

It was rather an unusual thing for Jesus to propose to men that they follow Him. Yet in His day, men willingly left all and followed Him, and even to the end of their lives were happy in their choice. Today, men are doing the same thing. They are making a voluntary choice of following Jesus, and counting themselves happy that they have selected that way of life. What Jesus said and was meets a response in my soul. Who would not like to be the follower of Him who healed the sick, taught the ignorant, aided the needy, strengthened the weak, and in every way gave Himself unselfishly to acts of love? There is nothing in all the world which satisfies the desire for adventure as does following Jesus Christ. Make this your New Year resolution.—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

WEDNESDAY.

THE LIFE I SHOULD LOVE.

"And Simon He surnamed Peter."—Mark 3:16.

His first name meant an uncertain sort of hearer; his second name meant a rock. And the Lord deliberately displaced the weaker name and supplanted it by a stronger one. "Simon" was a man of fickle impulse, undependable, slipping out of one's grasp like a handful of sand. "Peter" was rock, granite, invincible as the everlasting hills. I wonder how the sand felt the first time it was called rock! Oh, how should I feel if the Lord were now to appear and address me by that tremendous name?

And so we find our Master continually addressing people in the brilliant titles of their new names, the names which indicate their brilliant possibilities and ther coming achievements. "Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth." "He also is a son of Abraham." When the Lord gave a man a new name, it was a call from the heights. And how inspiriting it would be! It would rouse like the sound of a bugle. Surely Simon would pull himself together when Christ called him Peter.

And this is how our Saviour thinks of thee and me. He thinks of us now as though we were perfected. And His grace will bring us into the very perfection which we seem to wear in His holy love. We are called "children of God," "children of light," "heirs of God," "joint heirs with Christ," "Saints of the household of faith." How greatly He thinks of us!—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

THURSDAY.

TUNING THE HEART.

"Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh."—Matt. 12:34-37.

There is an old verse in the Proverbs which says: "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." The marginal reading puts it more pointedly: "Keep thy heart above all that thou guardest." Our Bible proverb-literature represents the concentrated common sense of many generations. This particular verse is in harmony with the teaching of Jesus about "the abundance of the heart," and it suggests the haunting phrase in the old hymn—

"Come, thou fount of every blessing,
Tune my heart to sing thy praise."

When our hearts are entrusted to God's keeping, all "the issues of life" are safe and truthful. We know when we have obeyed His call. We understand what Paul meant when he said, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Every time the orchestra plays, the instruments must be tuned. So must your heart be tuned, if your life is to play its part in the orchestra of the world and of heaven. Every morning it needs tuning for the day; every Sunday for the week; in youth for life; in emergency for the great task.—Rev. Ernest Bourneur Allen.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

FRIDAY.

THE TESTING OF A SOUL.

"Hast thou considered my servant Job, and there is none like him in the world."—Job 1:8-9.

Satan replied substantially: "Job is paid for serving Thee. Thou hast given him wealth and honor and power. He serves Thee for what he gets out of it." If that were true, Job was serving himself, and not God. What a withered soul Job had if he served God for what he got out of it! He had become a cash register. His only purpose was to hold and record money. Aspiration, love, self-sacrifice all gone, there was left only the click that records the coming and going of the symbols of what men call wealth.

Did Job join the Church because it would multiply his camels and his sheep? Did he spread out his hands toward God, pretending to pray, that his clothes might be heavy with silver? Satan found out the truth of it. In Job's soul was the same glorious worth that outpoured from later saints and prophets. "Though the fig tree shall not blossom, the fields shall yield no meat, there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

"What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life?"—Rev. J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SATURDAY.

WHAT IS REAL CHRISTIAN SERVICE?

"For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward."—Mark 9:40-41.

What is Christian service? We go to Church on Sunday. We return to our homes, and next day go about our business. There comes over us at times a burning desire to do something, to serve in Christ's name. We look about for a task for which we are qualified. The first thing that presents itself is teaching a Sunday School class. We are quite sure we cannot do that successfully. Down the whole line of so-called religious activities we run and find ourselves seemingly good for nothing. Depression settles down upon us.

Coventry Patmore said that the saint did very much the same things as others, but that he did them from a different motive. Ostensibly, the Christian may not do far differently from others, but there should be a vast difference in the motive. Real Christian service which you are called to render may be in connection with the institutions of religion and it may not. Religion is a life to be lived. Your service—true Christian service—is to live that life. We cannot get away from the words of the Christ about the cup of cold water.—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we pray for all those who by the toil of human hands, not only make others happy but make life possible for the body. Crown all who serve the Lord even in the smallest of things, with the noble crown of Thy blessing to the human race. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

Notwithstanding Sabbath desecration, by its many curses, it is a notable religious gain that our Sabbaths are not as they were a century ago. All along the line of living, from the scientific to the religious, new values have been set on life, until we can say that, to a large extent, whatever is for physical betterment is good for the soul. Therefore, being filled with the Holy Spirit and actuated through motives which are in our Saviour, we need not repress everything that does not take the form of worship. It is the things that destroy our better self and higher existence that is harmful and should be repressed.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we humble ourselves before Thee at the beginning of this day, praying that we may be endowed with wisdom from Thee to discern between good and bad and spend our Sabbaths not only in worship, but in developing our lives in harmony with Thy infinite spirit of love and perfection. Amen.

This week, two persons sent in, with their renewals, two new subscriptions each for the year. How easy it would be to practically double the mumber of readers of THE SUN if half of our present number would resolve to do as the two above! Here is what is said of another religious paper: "Reports showing that the circulation of the ——— had been more than doubled during the last year, and that it is in a healthy condition, were read."—MANAGING EDITOR.

THE FINAL TEST OF A CHRISTIAN LIFE

By S. L. Beougher.

Lest I be branded as a religious heretic, I step forward with following answer to the question asked at the foot of my article entitled "A Christmas Message." In it I made this statement:

"The final test of a Christian life is not the worship of God, but always the love of man for man."

Editor's note: "Is this statement in harmony with Matt. 22:36-40? Which in substance reads: 'The love of God is the greatest commandment, and the love of man is next unto it; on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.' "

Notice, I said nothing about the love of God, but the worship of God. If I had had the love of God in mind, and so stated it thus, it would still be in absolute harmony with Matt. 22:36-40, for there can be no love for God which is unattended with love for man. If the message of Him whose birth we celebrate at Christmas teaches us one thing above all others, it is not that we shall try to do for Him as a person, but that we shall seek to do for one another, which is in complete harmony with His own statement in Matt. 25:34-48. Since God the Father never manifested Himself in this world in bodily form, and since Jesus is no longer here in human flesh, we have no opportunity to give Him meat, or water, or clothing, or medicine, or consolation, or any kind of spiritual help; but we can supply to the fullness of our capacity the needs of God's offspring—our brother-man, Christ's brother-man. In this declaration of Christ's we have the highest expression of Christian service to our fellow-men, and in turn to Christ our Lord, blessed with the grandest reward. "Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Then shall the King say unto those who have thus served: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; enter into life eternal."

I am sorry that the proposition was misinterpreted, or the truthfulness of the statement was questioned. It might be more plainly stated thus: The highest test of the Christian life is not in the worship of God in the sanctuary or out of it, but in the expression of loving service rendered to the world for whom Christ died. Everything in this world is tested. Disposition is tried in the home; character is tried in business; principles are tried in society; Christianity is tested by the stern realities of life in our noblest efforts to apply the Golden Rule. In this world, good and evil have a chance to master each other; evil tests goodness itself. The test of the strength of the giant oak is its resistance against the mighty winds in the open country, and not in its protected condition while surrounded by the dense forest. The Christian life does not undergo its final test in the worship of God surrounded by the most favorable conditions, but in its service to the race.

Worship is an act of paying divine honor, reverence, respect, homage and adoration to God; but prayer, Bible-reading, Church-going and the taking of Communion are not acts of devotion. Actual religion does not lie in these, but in the quality of life these create in us. If these things do not create new life in us, it makes little difference whether we do them or not. The man was right in his reply to the deacon, who asked him as he entered the Church whether he had come to serve God, when he said, "No; I have been serving God all week; I am come to worship Him—come to get another supply to equip me for service through another week." The time was—and not so long ago—when God's service was supposed to be incompatible and unworkable with what were described as secular or mundane affairs. Even today "divine service" and "divine worship" are held by many to be synonymous terms, associated almost exclusively with Churches, chants, sermons, offerings. Divine service begins in divine worship, but it is not the end of it—it is only the beginning. If these gracious ministries have meant anything to us, we will turn about to find an outlet for the inspiration of our worship, and we can find it in real Christly service for and to our fellow-men.

The process of seeking in the world the means of fulfilling Christ's purpose to and for mankind is rapidly enlarging our sense of old phrases and our understanding of new opportunities.

It will be a new day for the Christian Church when any minister or layman shall be free to divulge the inspiration of his soul in the pulpit or out of it, in print or out of print, when in complete harmony with the cardinal principles of our great free Church—Christian—without somebody assuming authority to insert a question mark after it. Every person must stand or fall upon the merit or demerit of the doctrine he teaches before the Christian communion. My fear is for him and not the Church. No man has ever broken any of God's eternal laws; but God's laws have broken him when he transgressed them. If the theory of progressive revelation be of God, to meet the needs and demands of this new age, it cannot be overthrown; but if not of God it will speedily come to naught. If any man can cause to shine any clearer light upon the "mysteries of godliness" (1 Tim. 3:16) than has come to us through the past twenty centuries, I am one who will welcome it, for God knows the wisest of men have known but little. If any man, through clearer thinking and inspiration, can give to the Church a more practical and workable program—one that will reach and save the masses of mankind for time and eternity; one that will reach all man and all the man; one that will be absolutely proficient in the carrying out of the great commission; one which will put all of the meager successes of organized Christianity for the past nineteen hundred years to shame—again I say: God knows I will receive it and enter into the program whole-heartedly.

I am not an alarmist, neither am I alarmed; for if the fundamental doctrines held sacred by the organized Orthodox Church (Denominational Protestant Christianity) be the doctrines and the teachings of the Bible, and not mere theological of them, as conceived by men, they cannot be overthrown, for the world shall pass away, but God's word will abide forever. As for myself: "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that Christ is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

Graham, N. C.

[NOTE.—We are glad our brother has made himself clear that the love of God is the foundation of all true love and of all true service.—Editor.]

CHRISTMAS EXILES.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Those of us who find ourselves at Christmas time at home, and in our native land, may well give a thought to those thousands of exiles who are this day far from the firesides they love so well; those "who go down to the sea in ships, and do business in great waters," the scattered sons and daughters of earth who find themselves in remote places when the Christmas day dawns. In every land and country there are many who will be today thinking of the season's joys, and longing to again be partakers with us.

Rudyard Kipling had these people in mind in one of his poems called "Christmas in India." It will be remembered that Kipling was born in India, where his father was the curator of the Labore Museum, but distance had never killed his love of homeland and kindred.

Christmas in India.

Dim dawn behind the tamarisks—the sky is saffron-yellow—
As the women in the village grind the corn,
And the parrots seek the riverside, each calling to his fellow
That the day, the staring Eastern day is born.
Oh, the whitedust on the highway! Oh, the stenches in the byway!
Oh the clammy fog that hovers over earth!
And at home they're making merry 'neath the white and scarlet berry—
What part have India's exiles in their mirth?

High noon behind the tamarisks—the sun is hot above us—
As at home the Christmas Day is breaking wan.
They will drink our healths at dinner—those who tell us how they love us,
And forget us till another year be gone!
Oh, the toil that knows no breaking! Oh the Heimweh, ceaseless aching!
Oh, the black dividing sea, and alien plain!
Youth was cheap—wherefore we sold it; gold was good—we hoped to hold it,
And today we know the fullness of our gain.

Black night behind the tamarisks—the owls begin their chorus—
As the conches from the temple scream and bray.
With the fruitless years behind us, and the hopeless years before us,
Let us honor, O my brothers, Christmas Day!
Call a truce then to our labors; let us feast with friends and neighbors,
And be merry as the custom of our caste:
For is "faint and forced the laughter," and if sadness follow after,
We are richer by one mocking Christmas past.

—Rudyard Kipling.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

By Howard W. Pope.

As New Year's Day comes round once more,
We stand like tourists on the shore.
Before us lies an unknown sea,
Which one should sail quite carefully;
A rock-bound coast may lie ahead,
Or mighty tempest which men dread;
Or deadly calm or long delay,
When one has not the heart to pray.

But on one thing we can depend—
Our Captain is a mighty Friend;
He knows our ship from stem to stern,
Nor has He anything to learn!
He walks the sea whene'er He will,
And bids the angry waves be still;
He holds the tempest in His hand,
And nought can harm His little band.

Let no one dare to sail this sea,
Which leadeth to eternity,
Without Christ Jesus as his Friend,
To guide him safely to the end.
And when we reach the other shore,
Which is our home forevermore,
Let one and all rejoice and sing
Eternal praises to our King.

A difficult problem, squarely met, is never as bad as it looks; but a problem put off keeps growing like a snowball rolling downhill.

TRIAL OFFER TO YOU.

Only 25c for Ten Weeks' Trial Subscription to Youth's Companion, America's Great Family Magazine. (Regular Price $2.50 a Year.)

This liberal offer does not pay unless it leads you to become a regular subscriber. But when you have read these ten splendid numbers you will not wish to be without this great National Family magazine.

The thrilling Indian serial, "Buffalo Horn," by Frank C. Robertson, ten chapters, begins February 14th. If sold in book form, would cost $1.50 or more. You get also "The Pearls of Quohoggar," a serial in four chapters, by C. A. Stephens, the dean of Companion story writers; thirty or more interesting short stories; and articles to interest all members of the family, and instruct them as well.

The Youth's Companion is appreciated and enjoyed by the old as well as the young. It is always clean, patriotic, interesting and instructive.

It does make a difference what your family reads. The Youth's Companion affords the best of interesting, clean fiction, able editorials, special contributions by leading world workers, the doctor's corner, household helps, special pages for boys, for girls and for children. You will be immensely pleased. Send 25c stamps for ten weeks' trial subscription to

PERRY MASON COMPANY,
885 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

DOUBLE WEDDING.

A most beautiful double wedding took place on Thursday, December 20th, at 6 o'clock, in the Carsley M. E. Church when Mary O'Lean Baird became the bride of Alonza Clyde Cofer, and Essie Deane Nunnally became the bride of Raymond Francis Cofer.

Mrs. Dennis Cofer presided at the piano, playing during the time the people assembled. Miss Bessie Ford sang "I Love You Truly" just before the ceremony. Then the wedding march was played from Lohengrin.

The brides were dressed in white Canton crepe dresses, with veils caught with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white rosebuds.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fletcher Osborne, pastor of the Carsley M. E. Church. The ring ceremony was used. The many friends of the brides and grooms wish for them a long, happy and prosperous life.

CHANDLER—HADLEY.

At the home of the writer, Burlington, N. C., December 14th, 1923, Mr. Jennings Chandler and Miss Verna Hadley were united in marriage by the writer.

They were accompanied by a few of their many friends, who vied with each other in hearty congratulation and good wishes.

May rich blessings attend their pathway. P. H. FLEMING.

NEWLIN—ROBERSON.

On December 23, 1923, Mr. Garland Newlin and Miss Velna Roberson were united in marriage at the home of the writer, Burlington, N. C.

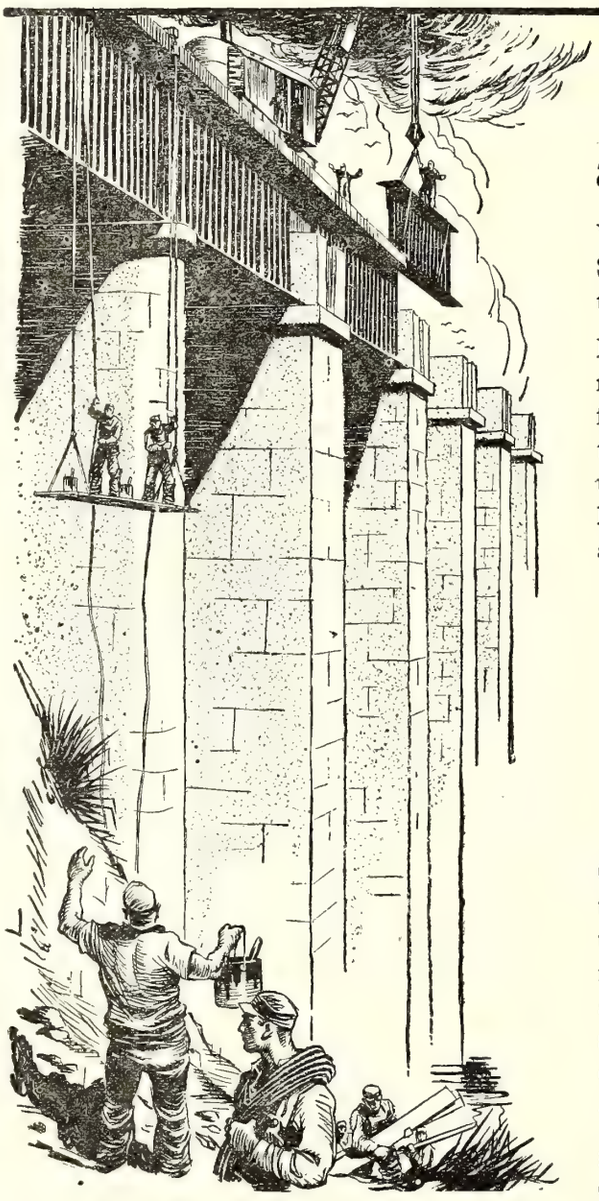
They were accompanied by friends, who witnessed the beautiful rite and wished for them, with many others of their many friends, a happy and a prosperous life. The writer officiated.

P. H. FLEMING.

DAVIS-WAGNER Business College
NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. CATALOGUE FREE.
114 W. MAIN STREET. NORFOLK, VA.

MR. H. T. LePAGE, June 14, 1919.
Toronto, Ont., Canada.
My Dear Mr. LePage:
I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from. Yours cordially,
REV. BERNARD P. SMITH,
Pastor Christian Church, Kinston, N. C., U.S.A.
15,000 Churches Using Them

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South

Building a greater Southern

We are handling more traffic on the Southern Railway System this year than ever before.

Not only are our 60,000 employees more efficient, but we have provided for them better tools to work with. In the past two decades, by the continuous investment of new capital, we have increased our productive capacity as follows:

- Average pulling power of locomotives has increased 54%
- Total pulling power of all locomotives has increased 182%
- Average capacity of freight cars has increased 31%
- Total capacity of all freight cars has increased 90%
- Train load was increased 122%

Greater terminal capacity, more road trackage, heavier roadbed and structures, and other betterments that must accompany increased train capacity have been provided in this same period of intensive development of our facilities.

We have constantly before us a program of productive improvements, calling for the outlay of many millions of dollars, and, with faith in the destiny of the South, this program will be prosecuted as rapidly as new capital becomes available.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

MRS. ALICE MITCHELL ADAMS.

An Appreciation.

BY REV. W. T. A. HAYNES.

Mrs. Alice Mitchell Adams, wife of Hon. Samuel L. Adams, of Cluster Springs, Va., passed to her eternal reward on September 25, 1923. For fifty-six beautiful years, she walked with God, and then she was not—for God took her. Mrs. Adams was blessed with a noble parentage and Christian training, and she seemed to have embodied all that was best in the heritage that befell her. She had a graceful and beautiful form, a benign and winsome face, a charming, magnetic spirit, a tender and loving heart, a chaste and Christ-like soul. No one who was fortunate enough to have known her can forget her open, friendly countenance, her warm and cordial greeting, her hearty and genuine hospitality. She was a dutiful daughter, a loving wife, a devoted mother, a considerate neighbor, a sympathetic friend. She made friends, not enemies, all the days of her life, and now that she is gone, her memory will continue to be as ointment poured forth, as long as her friends and loved ones live.

Lives like this one, characters like she developed, are a continuous revelation of the matchless possibilities of a human spirit, under the continuous influence of the redeeming love of God made known to us in the face of Jesus Christ. Contact with such spirits stirs our noblest sentiments, and awakes in our hearts the hunger and thirst to be pure, even as he is pure.

As saints like this one are being gathered home, one by one, the realm of the redeemed becomes increasingly fascinating, the eyes grow dim with tears, and the tug at the heart-strings becomes stronger, as we think of the home and the friends over there. And instinctively we adopt the words of Cardinal Newman as our own:

"Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home;
Lead Thou me on!

"So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still
Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since and lost a while!"

Portsmouth, Va.

DUNCUM.

Mrs. Dorann Duncum, aged eighty-eight years, and widow of the late James Duncum, a Confederate veteran, died on December 21, 1923, near Virgilina, Va., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Morris. She was a member of old Union Church, near Virgilina, and a consecrated Christian woman. She is survived by two daughters and one son. A large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives were present at the last sad rites, which were conducted by the writer. She was probably the oldest member of Union Church, and her Christian example will be an influence for good in the community for years to come.

D. C. GOLLODAY.

Elon is Building for the Future

Library Building — Auditorium — A GREATER ELON — Administration Building — Religious Activities — Science Hall

Our College is erecting these new buildings. Fire makes it necessary to do so.

Many Churches have already sent in their "College Day" offerings. How little can yours give and please God?

The Convention asks you to average one dollar per member. Are you a slacker or a worker?

Send your contribution to Dr. T. C. Amick, Elon College, N. C.

We are counting on you.

W. A. Harper, W. W. Staley, E. L. Moffitt, W. S. Long, J. G. Truitt,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

WINTER EXCURSION TICKETS
TO
RESORTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST

PLAN YOUR WINTER TRIP NOW.

Consult Ticket Agents, or
F. H. Poston - - Division Passenger Agent
809 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

FRECKLES
Quickly and Easily Removed During Winter Months With Othine--Double Strength

Why not rid yourself of those unsightly deep-seated freckles while the sun is not so active? Get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your drug or department store and apply like ordinary face cream. Thousands for over 15 years have gained a beautiful clear complexion by this simple, easy method.

At the same time Othine imparts that natural glow and color so much desired. Many use it every night in the year in place of cold cream and secure greater satisfaction.

Always ask for the double strength Othine—willingly sold on the money back guarantee.

THROAT IRRITATIONS
Throat irritations quickly disappear when you take Brown's Bronchial Troches. A dependable remedy—not a candy. Used for more than 70 years by singers and public speakers. Promptly relieves hoarseness, loss of voice, coughing. At all druggists. JOHN I. BROWN, & SON, Boston, Mass.
General Sales Agents:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York..London..Toronto
BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH AND VOICE LOZENGES
IN 5 AND 25 CENT PACKAGES

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

PELOUBET'S
Select Notes
By AMOS R. WELLS, Litt. D., LL.D.
Golden Anniversary Volume
For half a century this Sunday School Commentary has been the constant helper of millions of Sunday School teachers, and the 1924 volume finds itself at the very pinnacle of its usefulness and popularity. A sale of over three million copies is a record which speaks for itself.
Send for the first lesson of 1924
Price $1.90 net $2.00 delivered
W. A. WILDE COMPANY
120 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

ROGERS.

Bro. N. M. Rogers was born June 25, 1856, and died December 7, 1923, age sixty-seven years five months and fourteen days. He leaves a devoted wife, four sisters, and two brothers. He was married to Miss Elizabeth King, January 8, 1880. He joined New Hope Christian Church in 1883, and was elected deacon soon afterward. Bro. Rogers had been in feeble health for some time, not able to do any manual labor for the last year, but strong enough to get around and attend his Church almost regularly until the end, which came very suddenly. However, as his physical strength declined, it was very apparent that he grew stronger in the Christian graces.

His latter days were victorious ones, and his death was triumphant indeed. Truly, New Hope Church has lost one of her best members. Those who are true to God will meet him one day in the home above. J. E. FRANKS.

Japan's loss by the earthquake, at first figured at three billions of dollars, has been scaled down to about one billion.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c. for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0778x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0778x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5⅛ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"

1536 East Broad Richmond, Va.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1924. | NUMBER 2.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Non-Jews Able to Speak Hebrew.—

Nowhere but in Palestine will we find non-Jews able and willing to speak modern Hebrew. It is a singular tribute to the position the language has obtained to meet an occasional Englishman who can use it for simple conversation. Such persons have a warm sympathy for all things Jewish, and move generally in Jewish circles. In some cases, their children attend Hebrew schools.

Uncovering the City of David.—

Confirmation of the discovery of traces of the ancient city of David comes from Professor Robert A. Macalister's expedition at Jerusalem, and he believes he has found the remains of the "Millo," which is mentioned several times in the Bible accounts of the fortifications of Jerusalem, and which long has puzzled commentators. It is hoped his excavations will bring to light much information about the ancient city.

Gets News Near North Pole.—

Captain Donald B. MacMillan's exploring party aboard the steamship Bowdoin is only 760 miles from the north pole, but the long Arctic night has lost its old terrors, since by radio they are able to get the news of the world each day from several stations, and can even pick up amateur stations in the Eastern United States. The Bowdoin uses a short wave-length, but has been able to talk 5,000 miles to Hawaii.

German Missionaries.—

The first three German missionaries to return to Africa did so after receiving the authority of the British government. This was done very recently. They did not have money enough to take them back to their former field of labor, which they were compelled to abandon by the coming of the World War. It is interesting to note that a sufficient amount of money was furnished them by the Scottish Missionary Society, and their salaries guaranteed for the first year. If this is not Christian co-operation, we are unable to recognize it.

University in Jerusalem.—

Preparations are being made in Jerusalem on the initiative of the Latin patriarch of Jerusalem, Mgr. Barsalina, for the establishment of a university, under the auspices of the Latin patriarchate. It was opened in October, and has enrolled 200 students. The prospectus shows three general courses to prepare students for later specialization in work leading to any one of the four degrees in language, medicine, law or agriculture. Instruction will be in Arabic. The prospectus states that the Palestine Patriarchal University has been founded with no political purpose, but with the sole intention of giving the youth of Palestine a sound education. Its doors are open to followers of any creed or faith, and the rector of the university is to be an Arab by birth and by language. The fact that a papal legate has been appointed to Jerusalem, and that recently a great procession mustering the full force of Romanism in the Holy City, including the high Church dignitaries, hundreds of priests, monks and nuns, and thousands of school children and students paraded the streets, together with the known activities of the Vatican, leads careful onlookers to believe that the university is but part of the plan of Rome to secure control of the situation in Palestine, and block the Zionist program.—Alliance Weekly.

Marvel on Marvel in Tomb of King Tut.—

The farther Howard Carter proceeds with the dismantling of the great wooden canopy in the mortuary chamber of Tutenkhamun's tomb, the more interesting its disclosures become. Upon visiting the tomb today, the correspondent found the whole roof of the outer shrine removed, as well as the great linen pall sewn with golden rosettes, that hung over a rack so as to surround the second shrine. The sides of the outer shrine still remain, and one is able to get an idea not only of the prodigious size of the exterior shrine, but also of the remarkable dimensions of the second.

Were the second shrine and its as yet secret contents bodily removed, one would find oneself standing in a marvelous golden chapel, namely the outer shrine, large enough to contain a good-sized altar. The walls are exquisitely decorated with hieroglyphics, lightly incased in dull gold and framed by three broad black lines. The simile of the chapel is strengthened by the appearance of the "Ankh" symbol—the so-called key of life—which is painted in the outer shrine where an altar would stand.

The second shrine is itself worthy of Tutenkhamun, the magnificent. It is all in good color, dully yellow on the sides, but gleaming on the lintel, and the two doors are like plates of reddish metal. The roof has the same graceful curve at the top of the outer shrine, and the lid is ornamented with a curious but most decorative checkerboard design of black and gold.

In the Valley of Jezreel.—

In the ancient Valley of Jezreel, in Palestine, which was once a populous and thriving region, and the center of numerous events of great historic importance, Jewish-American capital and energy are attempting to restore the ancient prosperity by means of an extensive agricultural and urban development. In line with this program, the American Zion Commonwealth announces that its board of directors has adopted a plan for building a Garden City on a tract of land, which it owns in the valley, not far from the colony of Balfouria, and near the railroad station of Afule.

The Garden City is already being laid out by engineers of the Commonwealth, and in its first compass, it will be planned for a population of about 5,000. The Garden City combines the compactness and social opportunities of the city with the outdoor life and occupations of the truck gardener. Each householder receives a plot of one and a quarter acres, and, while engaged in the ordinary occupations of the town-dweller, derives a part of his income from the cultivation of his land. Within the past two years, eight new settlements have sprung up in this valley, sometimes called the Plains of Esdraelon, and the most competent observers of the course of colonization effort in Palestine predict that the valley will continue to be for some time to come the principal ground of Jewish colonization effort in Palestine.

Probing in the Sands of Sodom.—

The modern man will not leave the dead past alone. We learn that some American scientists and archaeologists are preparing to explore the cities of the plains in Palestine in search of the exact location of Sodom and Gomorrah. We do not know the incentive that is behind their efforts. If we remember correctly, those are the last cities in history that one would want to dig up and uncover for fear of the stench. But you cannot restrain the curiosity of the modern man. Now that he has done so much in the field of digging up cemeteries of the past, he now turns to those cities which were caught in the great incinerator of the ages and sent into oblivion. Dig up Sodom. Uncover Gomorrah. Something interesting about such an undertaking. Even romantic! Wonder what will be found? Their names recall the story of Lot and his wife and the great magnanimity of Abraham, the friend of God.

We believe that since Dr. Kyle, of Xenia Theological Seminary, and Dr. James Montgomery, president of the American Schools of Oriental Research, are engaged in this enterprise, the motive is for the support of Christian faith. They are to make an effort to find a way back into the Abrahamic world and discover the foundations of that wonderful story, so that it may be removed from the field of myth and permanently located in that of history. But there are many things involved in that undertaking. It is in safe, even consecrated, hands. The world will watch for reports of their efforts. Biblical scholars will especially be interested. Locate Sodom and Gomorrah of those ancient days and something has been done to solve a number of problems that have arisen in the field of biblical scholarship during the past hundred years.—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

It looks natural to have the "Suffolk Letter" appear weekly again. Our many readers will rejoice that Dr. Staley is able to write again his usual weekly letter to THE SUN.

Rev. P. T. Klapp has recovered from his late illness and is able to look after his pastoral work. We are sure that his many friends will be glad to have this good news from him.

We deem acknowledgment should be made in this public way that many subscribers who were in arrears are not only paying up, but paying their renewals in advance. A prosperous year to all.—MANAGING EDITOR.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, late pastor of the First Church, Greensboro, is now pastor of the First Christian Church of Fall River, Mass. His address is 500 Pine Street, Fall River, Mass. We wish our brother great success in his new field of labor.

The New Year has already entered its race for 1924. Soon it will pass out, and 1925 will follow, and soon that will be gone, and with it many who are now living. Get ready for such a day as ye think not the summons will come and we must go. Be ye also ready.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., spent Christmas with the Masonic Home in Greensboro. He did not get home to spend his ninety-eighth birthday with the people at Elon College, but we expect him in a day or two later. By the time this note is read, it can be said that he is in his ninety-ninth year. Not many others in the old North State, or any other State, can say as much. The Herald of Gospel Liberty gives, on its first page, a picture of Dr. Wellons and quite a notice of his life-work.

It is the period of resolution, but each good resolution is based upon the recognition of either a fault or a failure, and is to be judged accordingly. If we are wise, and if we are asking help from the Lord of our being, we will pledge ourselves to better work, more faithful attention, a steadier purpose, and a greater patience in the months of the New Year.—Christian Intelligencer.

Dr. D. A. Long is in Florida in the beautiful sunshine. Even in North Carolina, the weather is warm, but we are daily looking for the gentle winds to take on the motions of a blizzard, and we shall have to wait a bit to report on the weather after the cold winds arrive. "Old Probabilities" say that these cold winds are due here tomorrow (January 1, 1924).

We pity Bro. Kerr, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. He says he cannot remember all the ministers who have D. D. to their names, and so sometimes he fails to give the brethren the honors due them. Well, now that is a pity! but we are more sorry for the man who may complain because his extra D. D. are left off than we are for Bro. Kerr, because Bro. Kerr can stand the complaints, but we do not see how a man who growls because his extra D. D. are left off can be made more comfortable, so far as Bro. Kerr's forgetting them may be concerned. There is a cure for them, Bro. Kerr. See Job 32:21, 22.

Many people will not agree to live without a form of godliness, but while they adopt the form of godliness, just because it is customary, they hate the power of godliness because to have it they are compelled to deny the self-life, and that is just the trouble with most of us. We would like to be saved and happy, but we do not wish to give up one thing that we love, or to deny ourselves of one selfish pleasure because we think that is happiness. It is happiness only in the seeming, for a little later we shall be compelled to see that the self-life was the life of ruin.

Paul tells us that the devil transforms himself into angel of light that he may deceive us. And some one else has said that the enemy of the soul, instead of appearing with the sword of persecution in his hand, walks about with the cloak of profession on his shoulders, and by so doing gains decided advantages over the weak and weary ones. God help us all to walk with Him this year, for when we walk with God, the devil will not bother us so much, and for the reason that he cannot walk with God, for He cannot stand to be associated with God. Try walking with God for the New Year.

Do you know yourself? Maybe you do, but most likely you do not. Vain man! How little do you know of your real condition and character! Had you thought that you may be but the tool of Satan, used only by him in his purpose to counteract and offset the purpose of God in your own salvation? You may have a splendid intellect, a most commanding genius, an indomitable energy, but if these be not under the control of the Holy Spirit, you are but so many instruments of evil in the hands of Satan to carry forward his dark designs in your damnation. Will you stop and think before you go another step?

We are having many troubles nowadays for which we know of but one remedy, viz: to live in a spiritual way much with God. When that is truly done, we shall find deliverance from many of our troubles. Better try it; it is just what we need in most of the cases of trouble. Study His Word and be much in real earnest prayer, and we believe new light and new joy will come. Just to do so for one or two days, or weeks, is not enough; just keep it up day by day, and week by week, and month by month, and year by year, till the journey is ended. That will make a life of peace and happiness. Try it; it will insure you a different life from what you have been living in separation from God.

A writer, who was preaching a sermon on the Armistice Day, made the following wonderful statement in speaking on "A Christian Crusade Against War," said:

"Sometimes when a man talks against war, he faces in rebuttal a question such as this: 'Wouldn't you go to war to protect the weak?' The answer seems plain. A modern war to protect the weak —that is a grim joke! Look at the facts of the last war. This is the way it protected the weak —10,000,000 known dead soldiers; 3,000,000 presumed dead soldiers; 13,000,000 dead civilians; 20,000,000 wounded; 3,000,000 prisoners; 9,000,000 war orphans; 5,000,000 war widows; 10,000,000 refugees. What do you mean—modern war protecting the weak? The Turks have slaughtered Armenians with an abandon and freedom not known before, since we fought a war to protect the weak. This is the conviction that grows in modern minds—war is no way to protect the weak. A world court might help to protect the weak. A league of nations might protect the weak. An international mind, backed by a Christian conscience that would stop the race for armaments and forbid the nations to resort to violence—that would protect the weak. But there is no covering for the shame of a man who stands on the corners of the street today and talks about modern war protecting the weak. It is the weak who die by millions in every modern war."

When Pharaoh was put to his wits' end as to what to do with Israel, Moses told him to let Israel go, and then he said he would, but they must not go "very far." That was a sharp trick on the part of the devil. They might go, provided that they would not go very far. If they went very far he might not and most likely would not get them back again. The devil was after keeping them within his reach. And that is what he is doing with thousands of men and women who have it in mind to seek and serve God. The wicked one is saying all right, but you must not go "far away." Stay close to the wicked one and you may go where you please, only you must not get far away from me—since far away from Satan always means close to God, while far away from God means close to Satan. Reader, where are you? Are you far away from God and therefore close to Satan, or are you close to God and therefore far away from Satan? You decide which is your location. Which one are you close to, for you cannot be close to both?

The North Carolina Christian Advocate recently said: Booker T. Washington took great pleasure in telling the following story about the Alabama darky: "On one hot day in July, when at work in a cotton field, he suddenly stopped, and looking toward the skies, exclaimed, 'O Lawd, de cotton am so grassy, de work am so hard, the hours am so long, and the sun am so hot, dat I b'lieve dis darky am called to preach." Others beside this Alabama colored man have the same notion of the Christian ministry. They think that it is a nice, clean, easy job, with little to do but wear good clothes and eat chicken. Perhaps the greatest discovery that a young man makes when he enters upon the work of the pastorate is that the task is so much more difficult than he had ever dared to dream that it could be. But the Christian minister who takes his work to heart, and no man is worthy of the name who does not lay the burden upon his heart, learns with St. Paul that "the care of the Churches" constitute the very crown of his sacrificial service. But he should, and the true minister of Jesus Christ does, glory in all this. His meat and his drink is to do the will of his Heavenly Father.

CANNOT THROTTLE TIME AND TIDE.

Does the following statement apply to you? It is from an exchange, but none the less may it be applicable to you. First, see if it applies to you, and then when you have gotten your portion of its thought, you may pass it on to another, for it is worthy of a wide reading:

We write it 1924. The days of our years fly like a weaver's shuttle. But there is no way to stop them. We can refuse to tell our ages; we can turn back the hands of the clock; but no such devices can stay the movement of time and of the tides. Even monkey glands have not yet disturbed nature in its age-long obedience to the passing years. The multitudes, like Ponce de Leon, have sought the fountain of youth, but, like him, they have failed to find it. Powder puff, lip sticks, bobbed hair and bobbed skirts do not deceive Father Time. He has been here too long for that. He is a wise old chap, whose delight is to puncture pretense, and to fling all things that are false upon the scrap heap of the eternities. Only the true, the beautiful and the good can, with confidence, defy the passing decades, for the eternal years of God are theirs.

SHORT NOTES ON BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

The First Books of Kings, or Royalty in Its Glory.

Kings were given to Israel because they insisted on being allowed to be like other peoples. Other nations had kings, and Israel demanded that they, too, might have kings. This First Book of Kings sets forth the doings of royalty in the first stages of its glory. Till the date of the First Book of Kings, Israel had had only two kings, viz: Saul and David. Through sin, Saul walked the downward way to ruin, taking his own life and dying in shame. David was his successor, and came to the throne under the special favor of God. This First Book of Kings tells us of the old age and death of David, of the succession of Solomon to the throne of his father David, of the glory of his reign, of its magnificence, of Solomon's wisdom, of the building of the temple, of the death of Solomon, of the succession of his son Rehoboam, and of the division of the kingdom, when Rehoboam continued as king over two tribes of Israel while the ten tribes formed a new kingdom over which Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, became king. Thereafter, there were two kingdoms—the kingdom of Judah and the kingdom of Samaria—over which Ahaziah reigned. Of course, there was much strife among the people, and in the midst of it a new prophet appeared. The First Book of Kings includes the mighty ministry of the prophet Elijah. Those were stirring times for these new kings and their kingdoms. In the midst of this situation, Elijah appeared with a great message for the people. It was his to rebuke the wrongs of that day and set these leaders right.

On the death of David, it was that Adonijah attempted to usurp authority by seizing the reins of government, but the mother of Solomon was too attentive to the matter, and was too quick for Adonijah. She worked the situation till Solomon was made king and Adonijah was defeated. Under Solomon, royalty came to its best, and then to its worst, for it was not a great while till his kingdom came to its downfall through his sins, through his extravagance, his idolatry and heathen wives, and the kingdom came to wreck and the divisions end in captivity and dispersion. How have the mighty fallen!

The First Book of Kings is divided into seven parts, as follows:

1. The ministry and translation of Elijah, the Tishbite.—He was a strange character, but a powerful man of God, and though usually very brave, seeming not to fear the face of man, yet there were times when he seemed to despair and showed "the white feather." His coming was strange, but his going away was even stranger, for there appeared a chariot of fire and horses of fire, and Elijah went up to heaven in a whirlwind.—1 Kings 1:3-11.

2. The ministry of Elisha from the translation of Elijah to the anointing of Jehu.—Elisha was indeed the successor of Elijah, as was attested by the descending of Elijah's mantle upon the shoulders of Elisha. Thus commissioned, he was a shining light in Israel through his ministry. Few men, though commissioned of God, ever maintained a fairer record than Elisha.—1 Kings 2:12, 9:10.

3. The reign of Jehu over Israel, who was anointed King of Israel by a messenger sent by Elisha, in accordance with directions given by Elijah.—God used him to break the power and destroy the wicked house of Ahab. On the way to Jezreel, he was met by men from Joram, who were sent to ascertain Jehu's designs. He charged Joram with his sins, and then shot him dead.—1 Kings 21:1-24. Jehu then rode on to Jezreel, and by his order the prophecy regarding Jezbel was fulfilled—1 Kings 21:23. Jehu exterminated the family of Ahab, and slaughtered the priests of Baal. While Jehu was used of God to do some great work, yet he was of a tyrannical spirit and fell into idolatrous practices. He fell after ruling for twenty-eight years, and was succeeded by his son Jehoahaz. When a man turns away from God and goes into sin and lives in it, no matter how useful he has been, God brings him into judgment.

4. The reign of Athaliah and Jahoash over Judah.—Athalia was a granddaughter of Omri and a daughter of Anab and Jezebel. She married Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat. After the death of her husband and son, she seized the reins of the government of Judah and undertook to make herself secure by murdering the entire royal family. Her grandsom, Joash, was saved by the thoughtfulness of Jehosheba, his aunt, and six years later he was brought from his hiding-place and crowned by the high priest, Jehoida, and at the same time put Athalia to death. Alas! for the cruelty of people who had authority in ancient times. Indeed, the same remark may be made with reference to men having complete authority today.—1 Kings 11:1-12.

5. The reigns of Johoahaz and Joash over Israel and the last ministry of Elisha.—The sun of a golden age was setting, so far as the kingdom was concerned. The most wonderful career of man must come to a close. Even Elisha, the prophet of God, who had been so faithful, must come to the end of his usefulness and fruitfulness.

6. From the death of Elisha to the captivity of Israel.—After all of the blessings of God showered upon Israel, her sins sent her into captivity and shame. Sin is the despoiler of every life that is ruined. When Israel was loyal and faithful to God, they never knew defeat, but when Israel went into sin and followed it, then not only punishment came, but captivity and the destruction of their land came.

7. The coming of Hezekiah to the throne brought a buoyant state of mind to these people.—The captivity of Judah soon followed, and Judah's light soon went out. It is always so; that is, where sin is persisted in, there the judgment of God will speak in rebuke, and all men know that the rebuke of the people of this day was due to their sins. We have never known it to come to pass that where the people of God have power to do the right, but turn to the wrong, judgment soon comes, and the man who dared to go wrong must pay for the evil which he wrought.

The events of the First Book of Kings, Archbishop Usher says, cover 118 years.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH AS A BAPTIST SEES IT.

The Daily News (Greensboro, N. C.) gives a report of a sermon on "The Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ," by the Rev. J. Clyde Turner, of the First Baptist Church, during the late Christmas holidays. The Church had reached and passed the 1,000 mark in its membership. The pastor took as his subject, "Immanuel." The text was Isa. 7:14: "Therefore, the Lord Himself shall give you a sign: Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." With this text, Matthew 1:23 was used: "Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us."

Dr. Turner read the story of the virgin birth as given by Matthew, and said: "These words were written about 700 years before the time of Christ. The kings of the north had conspired to overthrow Judah and make Judah tributary to them. The king asks Isaiah for a sign, and Isaiah replies: 'Therefore, the Lord Himself shall give you a sign; behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel.' These words written 700 years before Christ pointed right down to Bethlehem, where the Messiah was born. The words of Matthew are a literal fulfillment of the words of Isaiah."

"These words," said Dr. Turner, "picture several things about our Lord's coming to earth.

"First, the truth of the virgin birth of Jesus. The versions in both Matthew and Luke bear this out. Under the power of the Holy Spirit, Mary was to conceive and bear a son.

"There are those who deny this. They say it is mysterious and contrary to nature, and they cannot understand it. They cast it aside. If the story of the virgin birth is not true, the foundations of the Church are unsound. There is a mystery about it. There is always something mysterious about birth. How can the Spirit of God get down to the human soul and bring about such a change that the soul is born again? There is mystery about it, and it is beyond the power of the human soul to understand it.' The virgin birth of Jesus is one of the foundation-stones of the Church.

"After all, how can the virgin birth be explained? From the time of the Garden of Eden the race had been corrupt. How can a corrupt race bring forth a virgin birth? It can no more do that than a corrupt tree can bring forth good fruit.

"Second, the deity of Jesus Christ. 'Thou shall call His name Immanuel, which being interpreted means God with us.' Jesus Christ had come to earth to live with men.

"There are the theolcgians who deny this and strip Jesus of His deity. But they shall cry out and not know where their Lord is. There is no man who can explain the transforming power of Jesus Christ. A man who has experienced the transforming power of Jesus in his own soul will not deny the deity of Jesus. It is not hard for that man to believe the deity of Jesus.

"Third, the mission of Jesus, 'God with us.' Why did Jesus come down to earth and spend this life? That He might save men. It was not because of something attractive in man, but that he might save man in his sin and shame. The young missionary today who breaks away from home and loved ones to go to China does not do that because there is something attractive in the Chinese, but to save them in their sin and shame. They go to get down beside the human soul and save it from its shame. It means a mission of salvation and love.

"God's blessed companionship. 'God with us.' It was a divine companionship of Jesus with men on earth. He is today as near in spiritual presence as he was in physical presence nineteen hundred years ago. 'Lo, I am with you always.' There is never a time when Jesus is not with His child. Our Saviour is with us in joy and sorrow. He is with us all the days, days of sunshine, of storm and adversity. His companionship is constant. It is abiding unto the end of the world. Friends may leave us. Loved ones may forsake us. But Jesus is with us to the end. That truth has been the strength and stay of many a man in adversity.

"Fourth, God with us means victory. We can only face the trials of life with the strength of Jesus. When the burden becomes so heavy we think we cannot bear it, God's presence will lift it. With God's presence we can bear any burden. The divine companionship of God with the Church is the one hope of God's Church. Victory is ours because God is with us."

This year is going to be an interesting Church year. Subscribe for The Christian Sun.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

ARE WE READY FOR THE QUESTION?

Recently Dr. Harper, in one of his Elon Letters, outlined a new plan for financing the Southern Christian Convention, its Conferences and its Churches. Dr. Harper called it the "Budget System," claiming for it much better results than we can get from what we now have.

If the plan will bring better results than what we have, and keep within the bounds of the Lord's way of giving, we believe we should give it a fair trial and a just test, but we should not adopt it without studying it and making up our minds to give it such a test. Let a few of our leaders give the plan a close and careful study and then give to our readers the results of that study, and so induce all of our people to study it, thus enabling them to adopt it intelligently. The advantage in thus adopting a new system after this method is that we shall have our people behind it, giving it a hearty and wise support, or not support it at all. We might adopt it possibly in some other way, as, for instance, let a few men carry it through without giving the people a chance to understand it, and in that case we could hardly hope to have a hearty support behind it, and if it succeeded at all it would be in a sort of half-hearted way, in which, in the end, would mean failure largely, if not wholly.

While money is by no means the most essential thing in the work of the Church, we are compelled to admit that it has an important place in the work of the Lord. If there be something better for the cause than what we have, then we want to discover it and make use of it for the furtherance of the cause. If the "Budget System" can add to our success as a Church in promoting the best interests of the Lord's cause, then let us have it. On the other hand, if the "Budget System" be not what we need, then we must not undertake it. But how can we find out if it will be of special advantage to us as a people?

The best way we know is to have the question openly discussed through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If it has real value, let some one who knows point out its vulnerable points and also its points of strength, and so show the people just what the proposed system is. Let this be done dispassionately and clearly, and when the people are satisfied that it is a good thing, we believe they will adopt it with a hearty good will, and when they have so done, they will work it well and so give it a chance to be a success among us.

What we are seeking to accomplish is to increase the interest of our people in the work of financing the Christian Church in its efforts to do the Lord's work. What we need to know now is this: Is Dr. Harper's plan just what we need?

We do not feel competent to decide this question, and we do not know that any one man among us is capable of deciding whether it is what we need or not. We believe a better way will be to ask various brethren to discuss the matter on its merits, each one for himself, and so enable our people to reach a decision as to the value of the "Budget System." Is the budget plan, as outlined by Dr. Harper, best for the work of the Christian Church? If it is, let it be shown so. If it be not best, then let it be shown and a reason given. That will help our people to decide the matter.

We now ask the following brethren to discuss this question openly, fairly and plainly, that the common people may have a chance to study it for themselves: Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., Col. J. E. West, Dr. J. W. Manning, Judge J. F. West, Dr. J. G. Holland, Rev. H. W. Elder, President M. W. Hook, Dr. W. P. Lawrence, B. D. Jones, J. A. Williams, Rev. A. W. Andes, Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., M. W. Hollowell, Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Hon. E. E. Holland, and any other brother or sister who may feel disposed to do so. Let us have the matter fully discussed between now and the next meeting of the Convention. We do not speak for Dr. Harper, but we feel safe in saying that he desires a free, open and brotherly discussion. He will not be offended if you do not agree with him, for he knows it is important to have the matter wisely decided before attempting to put it into practice.

The following paragraphs will present the matter of the "Budget System" clearly. We publish it here, that no one may decline to discuss it because he has not the plan before him. The following is the "Budget Plan," as Dr. Harper sees it. Make your discussion as brief as you can to present your views clearly. Send in what you write as early as you can, but not later than February 1st. The following is Dr. Harper's plan as written by himself:

FINANCIAL PLAN FOR CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) Organization.

A Convention budget secretary on salary, responsible to a board elected by the General Convention of the Christian Church.

A regional budget secretary for each of the five regional Conventions on salary, responsible to a board consisting of the budget secretaries of the constituent Conferences preferably, but not necessarily the regional Convention electing in any case.

A Conference budget secretary for each Conference on salary if possible, responsible to a committee or board elected or appointed by the Conference.

A local Church budget secretary for each Church, responsible to the Church through a budget or finance committee.

(2) Administration.

The amount to be raised for benevolences will be determined by the General Convention, and the percentage of distribution be fixed by it.

It will be allotted to the regional Conventions on the basis of numbers, value of Church buildings, salaries paid pastors, and previous record for giving. The regional Convention will accept, modify or reject the allotment, and in turn pass it on the agreed basis down to the Conferences.

Each Conference will accept, modify or reject and pass on down to the local Church.

Each local Church will accept, modify or reject, pay quarterly, using every-member canvass and envelope method of collection.

Each Conference and each regional Convention will be allowed to retain for its own purposes an agreed percentage of the money raised.

Department and other field secretaries will have administrative duties and co-operate with the budget secretary in the preparation of educational literature.

The budget secretaries of the various organizational units will co-operate completely with the budget secretary of the General Convention and with each other.

(3) Education.

The budget secretary of the General Convention will be empowered to apportion the year to certain periods of education in the various enterprises and to pass on literature and other information to the organizational units as outlined above.

During the several periods of education, the offering in the local units will be made through the budget by envelopes, "with our minds fixed on foreign missions" or some other enterprise, as the case may be.

(4) Policy

Special offerings are not to be asked, except with the approval of the officials of the organizational units.

General canvasses are not to be allowed under any circumstances.

By special agreement, the orphanages may, if they desire, use Thanksgiving and Easter for offerings.

Colleges and other Church institutions are not to be allowed to solicit funds except in relatively large amounts.

VERDICT OF THE BRETHREN ON RECEIVING AN APPLICANT FOR MEMBERSHIP TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN of December 20, 1923, the editor of that paper requested certain brethren to say what they would do, as pastors, if a man were to offer himself for membership in one of their Churches and at the same time should make it clear that he believed in Jesus as only a good Man, but not as Saviour from sin; not as in any unusual sense the divine Son of God; not as having power to save from sin; he does not believe in the inspiration of the Bible, nor in the supernatural in Christianity, nor does he believe that God, for Christ's sake, will forgive the sinner of his sins; that he does not believe in miracles, etc.

Replies have come from four of the brethren to whom this request was made. These four seem pretty clear. They would not admit such a man to membership in one of our Churches, and we think they are right. A man who rejects the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity, we think, has no business in the membership of the Church of Christ.

In the request made, we were not setting up simply a man of straw to be knocked down as a display. It seems that some think there could be no such a man to be found in this day of light. In this, we think there is a mistake. Among our modernists there are numbers of educated men who seem delighted to make it appear that they do not believe in the virgin birth of Christ, nor in His deity, nor in His atonement, nor in the supernatural in Christianity, nor in the inspiration of the Scriptures, etc. Our Unitarian friends even declare that they believe in Salvation by character. Of course that leaves salvation through the blood of Jesus out of the question. No, we have no man of straw, but the person represented in our questions was designed to represent men now living and calling themselves Christians, yet repudiating almost every essential in the Christian faith. We desired to know if the Christian Church would receive such people in their fellowship. We did not see how they could, and yet we wished to assure ourselves of the fact.

Of the seven brethren who were named, we have three answers, and they are as follows:

Dr. Barrett Gets His Answers.

In THE SUN of December 20th, received today, December 22nd, Dr. Barrett says my reply to the following questions must be in his hands by December 24, 1923, for publication. (I am grateful that our good editor gave me two days of grace; however, I only want two minutes.)

I copy Dr. Barrett's questions in his own language: "If next Sunday you open the doors of your Church for the reception of members, and a number of candidates for membership come forward, among the number thus presenting themselves is a man of more than ordinary intelligence; when the pastor asks him if he believes in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, he boldly answers, 'I do not'; when you ask him if he does not believe that Jesus is the divine and only begotten Son of God, again he answers, 'I do not; I believe that Jesus was a good Man, but no more the divine Son of God than are all good men, neither do I believe that He came to save sinners from their sins'; again you ask Him if he believes the Bible is the inspired Word of God, and he just as promptly answers, 'I do not, I believe the Bible is a human document, and like all other human documents, it has in it many errors.' But let us ask this man one more question. It may be that his answer to another question which we ordinarily ask candidates for membership will enable you to let him in on a close squeeze. Turning to the candidate, the pastor says: 'Brother, let me ask you one more question. Do you believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven your sins? again he answers just as promptly, 'I do not; I believe that I am saved by my own good conduct and works.'

"Now, will you tell us if, in answer to these questions, such answers should be given, would you favor receiving that man into your membership and fellowship? We do not wish any protracted discussion, we do not wish any ifs and ands, but a simple answer to the question—would you accept such a person for membership in the Christian Church, or would you reject him? Replies are to be limited to 200 words."

My Answer—

Why 200? Fifty will do. Positively, candidly, truly as my soul liveth and I know my own mind, I would do neither. I would summon an officer of the law to take charge of a man who was either mentally unbalanced or who was seeking to disturb public worship in the house of the Lord.

But since our beloved editor asks his question six times, may I have space to answer it twice? Rather than receive a man who would commit a sacrilege like that, while he was yet in the act of it, I would resign my credentials as a Christian minister, and I believe every Christian minister would do likewise, unless he wished to be classed with an idiot or a knave who tried to join a Church by denying all that the Church stands for.

But our editor asks another question, viz: "Tell us what the Christian Church should do in such a case, according to its principles, accept such a candidate for membership or reject him?" If my heart discerns the principles of the Christian Church, it should do neither, certainly not on the occasion when such a sacrilegious performance took place, but it should endeavor to start a revival then and there by going to its knees and devoutly praying our Heavenly Father that He would have mercy upon this poor sinner and save him, through the very name whom this blasphemer has held up to denial, to ridicule and to scorn.

Lovingly yours to serve,

J. O. Atkinson.

In Answer to the Editor's Query.

The preaching done from my pulpit is of such a nature that I think it is well-nigh inconceivable that any intelligent person would ask for membership into the Church of which I am pastor and expect to answer the questions as per your editorial. I should say, "My friend, I am very sorry I have allowed you to come this far without a private conference with you, for I desire to be very kind, but as the pastor of a Christian Church—a Church with Christ its Head—I cannot give you the hand of Christian fellowship, which you, upon your own admission, do not desire; nor can I receive you as a member of this Church. I am glad to welcome you to our midst as a seeker after truth, and I desire your attendance upon our services here. I believe you appreciate candor and kindness and that you will give me the privilege of a conference at the close of "this service." I believe there are only a few people who could not be profited by a careful sounding-out on just what they do actually believe, and a belief in Christ, though doubting perhaps somewhat is a mighty fine thing to welcome into any real wide-awake for Christ's Church. John G. Truitt.

Norfolk, Va.

I Answer.

In The Christian Sun of December 20th, Dr. J. P. Barrett, editor, asks certain of us to answer a question which he propounds regarding the admission of a man into the denomination known as Christian, who says he does not believe in Jesus Christ as the Saviour; does not believe the Bible is the inspired Word of God, and does not believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven his sins.

In reply, permit me to say, in love to all mankind, believers and unbelievers, that in the name of Him whom I serve and the Church whose vows as a member and a minister I have taken, that I could not receive into the Church, which takes the Lord Jesus Christ as its only Head, and the Holy Bible as its rule of faith and practice, one who says that he has not repented of sin; that he does not believe in Jesus Christ as the Saviour, and who does not intend to shape his life in accordance with the teachings as laid down in God's Word for Christian living.

He who comes asking membership in the denomination known as Christian, upon profession of faith, should come repenting of sin, accepting Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and with the desire and purpose to lead a Christian life. To all such, the Church extends a hearty welcome and her doors are always open.

And yet, if a man should come, and I could not receive him, and he should go away, I verily believe that my heart would still go out to him in great love. P. H. Fleming.

Another Answer.

Dear Dr. Barrett:

In reply to your question recently asked through the columns of The Christian Sun as to whether I would receive a man into the fellowship of the Christian Church who believes the Bible merely a human document, who denies the divinity, the Sonship, and the Messiahship of Jesus Christ, and who does not believe in redemption from sin through the blood of Jesus Christ—permit me to say, I would not, because I could not. I could not, because of my love for and allegiance to Jesus Christ; I could not, because to me such a confession is absolutely opposed to every essential element of Christianity; I could not, because I have taken an oath to adhere strictly and faithfully to the principles and government of the Christian Church. The principles of the Christian Church make Christian character the test of fellowship and of Church membership. To me, Christian character means the character of an individual redeemed and regenerated by the power of the blood of Jesus Christ, whose life is dedicated and consecrated to the service of Jesus Christ, and whose life is energized by the power of the Holy Spirit Christ promised to send.

The above outlines and sets forth my position and belief, and I trust answers your question.

Yours very truly,

Stanley C. Harrell.

Durham, N. C.

Some may think that there are no such men or women who would ask such questions or make such a profession of faith, but he is mistaken! There are men who profess to believe such things, and they are not idiots, as one brother intimates. On the contrary, they are men of high intelligence, but they have departed from the faith of their fathers and from the teachings of the Bible, till they feel free to disregard all authority in religion and do just as they fancy it might suit them.

I had recently heard some of our brethren, after telling what a modernist is, say that we could work together. I do not believe I can either please or honor our Lord by working with a man who does not believe the virgin birth of Jesus nor that He is a Saviour from sin, nor in His atonement, nor in the inspiration of the Bible, nor in the supernatural in Christianity, nor in His power to work miracles, etc., and I asked these questions simply to put the matter to the test, and not through merely idle curiosity. I desired some expression of the attitude of the Christian Church, and I have it in some limited degree. If the four men who have spoken represent the Christian Church—and I think they do—I feel sure that the great body of our people will not work with any such persons as indicated.

The plea of the modernists is not to divide. A thousand times would I dislike to divide; but if it must be union with people who deny the fundamentals of Christianity, then I will withdraw fellowship or refuse to extend fellowship to such persons, and I cannot do it because they deny my Lord and Master. Again, let me repeat that I am willing to tolerate an interpretation, so long as it is Christian, but I am not ready to tolerate any man who denies or repudiates the Bible as the inspired Word of God, together with a renunciation of the fundamentals of Christianity. I am as wide as the Bible in my fellowship, but beyond that I cannot go.

WHAT ABOUT A NEW THING?

New things are attractive, no doubt about that! Since the days of Paul it has been true that many people like to spend their time in hearing or in telling of some new thing. Newphobia is not a good thing. At least it is not in a general way. A new thing should not be accepted or rejected just because it is new. A new thing may be a good thing, notwithstanding its newness. The same is true of old things. But it is better to make sure that a new thing is true before you accept it as true. A new thing may be true, and the same is true of many old things. The basis of its value is not its newness, and not in its oldness, but in its trueness.

John Burroughs is quoted as having said: "What is true in Christianity is not new, and what is new is not true." Who said to the contrary? As a clever bon mot, the above generalization will pass. But it need not hurt the feelings of any disciple of Jesus. The credulity of the gospel rests not in its novelty, but in its essential and invincible truth. It may be said that all truth is old—older than the hills; as old as God. There was nothing new in the multiplication table when man first used it. Kepler's laws were not new when he discovered and gave his name to them. The principles of conservation of energy and correlation of forces are not modern—merely tardily hit upon. Jesus did not base upon the originality of His utterance His right to be heard and obeyed. All that He taught and enjoined was in the Old Testament, explicit or implicit, or in the very structure, and rationale of life itself. "Before Abraham was, I am," he said of Himself. So might He have said of the truths He proclaimed. They are better than new—they are eternal.—George Clarke Peck.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America held its annual meeting in Columbus, Ohio, December 12-14, 1923. The council meets quadrennially. It may be well to remind ourselves that the Federal Council grew out of the Interchurch Conference held in New York City in 1905, and perfected its organization in Philadelphia in December, 1908. The council is composed of accredited delegates from twenty-nine Protestant denominations, and represents 20,000,000 members. More and more, it is understood that the Federal Council is the agent through which the denominations co-operate in the performance of tasks too large for single denominations. Cordial relations exist and co-operation works in a way that prevents the friction and misunderstandings that otherwise would cripple the doing of the big tasks of the kingdom. No single denomination loses its autonomy, forsakes its creed, or surrenders any vital thing in its activities; but such tasks as international relations between the Churches can be co-ordinated only by co-operation of all denominations.

Members of the Christian Church present at this meeting: Martyn Summerbell, J. F. Burnett, Omer S. Thomas, J. F. Peters, McD. Howsare, W. W. Staley.

The annual meeting of the executive committee was considered the best ever held. Including members of the committee, invited guests, and friendly visitors, there were 300 prsent, and among them a few splendid women. Three meetings were held each day. Almost every phase of Christian work, at home and abroad, was discussed wisely and earnestly. Denominational problems had their share of consideration and suggestive solution. Missions, evangelism, social service, Christian education, Christian citizenship, Christian international life, methods for co-operation with Eastern Churches, the future program of the council, were diligently considered by eminent ministers and laymen in the most catholic and Christian spirit. Denominatoinal differences were conspicuously absent, and most earnest effort put forth to solve questions of national and world-wide importance. From start to finish, unity characterized the proceedings, and spiritual aims seemed to dominate the thought, speech and attitude of the hundreds of men from twenty-nine communions. In other words, kingdom interests loomed above denominational interests. To that extent, the prayer of Jesus, "that they all may be one," has already been answered in the Federal Council.

The great problem is to get this attitude, and this spirit of co-operation, down to the 20,000,000 members represented by these leaders. That task is difficult, but not impossible; but it will take a long time and patient effort. Not more than ten per cent of the members of the Churches even read the denominational papers; and it will take a long time to beget in the members of the Churches the same spirit that sixteen years have wrought into the mind and heart of the members of the Federal Council; but it is increasing.

Temperance found its way into the American citizenship by a long and tedious period of education. Church leaders felt the need first, then the members felt the need, and these two forces finally reached the judgment and conscience of statesmen, and the eighteenth amendment was the result. Now, the council preaches the doctrines of law enforcement, and that will finally reach the conscience of the American citizenship, and special appropriations of millions of money and an army of prohibition agents will not be necessary to secure obedience to law. State-wide prohibition could not stem the tide of intemperance; it required nation-wide action to make the law control. Single denominations cannot deal successfully with international religious questions; it must be done by federated co-operation.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

The papers of North Carolina, on January 1st, carried a unique and heartening announcement that Mr. J. B. Duke was considering the gift of a magnificent public hospital system for the State. Briefly stated, there is proposed a central State hospital, properly equipped and liberally endowed, where research work of a most professional character can be carried on, and with a staff of experts fully qualified to handle cases passed on to it from the county hospital units. There is similarly to be a county hospital for each of the State's one hundred counties. All these hospitals are to be community controlled, open to all reputable physicians, and at the service of rich and poor alike, liberal provision being made for charity patients and charges for all being held to the minimum. It has been confidentially known for some time that a careful study and investigation of the State's hospital facilities was under way. The purpose of the survey was not known.

Mr. Duke is not the man to do things by halves. Whatever he undertakes is thoroughly thought-out and consistently planned. In the three great industries which have felt his masterful hand—tobacco, cotton manufacturing and power production—these characteristics of a supermind appear in splendid contrast with pigmy-minded critics that have undertaken to assail him and his methods and to impugn his motives.

Mr. Duke is one of the major men of this generation. Had he entered politics, he would have achieved the presidency. Had he entered the ministry of his Church, he would have been their leading bishop. But he chose to enter business. Business is a Christian enterprise when pursued according to the principles of the Christian faith. Some men must make money, or the affairs of the kingdom will languish. The Church must teach big business men to accumulate fortunes according to the ethics of Jesus.

And then the Church must teach them stewardship in dispensing their wealth. Mr. Duke may not, according to the judgment of some, have employed Christian principles throughout in amassing his great fortune, but he is certainly actuated in its distribution by considerations of Christian stewardship growing out of a deepening sense of Christian brotherhood. His special charities have been colleges, veteran preachers, old people, colored people, orphanages, and now public health. The man's heart enlarges with each new accession of service undertaken.

Jesus was intensely interested in the health of men. His miracles were largely those of healing. There is no doubt but that He gives hearty approval to the proposal of one of His servants to provide instrumentalities of healing for the millions of a whole Commonwealth. No charity comparable with this in its beneficence was ever before undertaken for any people. It but reveals the growth and enlargement of the spirit of Christ, as men of action apply it in practical undertakings as an expression of their gratitude and allegiance to Him.

Mr. Duke has certainly proposed an excellent New Year gift to his fellow-citizens of North Carolina and to his brethren in Christ as well as to Christ Himself. We hail this magnanimous proposal with cordial approval and as the harbinger of a brighter, better day for the Church and kingdom.

W. A. Harper.

JANUARY—THE MONTH OF BEGINNINGS.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Janus, the Roman god, was supposed to preside over the beginnings of all matters; hence, the appropriateness of naming the first month of the year after him. This name, Janus, is masculine of Diana (Jana), and in the mythology of the Italian deities was first the god of day and light, and later came to be known as the god of the origin of all things. He was supposed to be double-faced, and, as doorkeeper of heaven, looked both forward and backward. The offerings to the god were usually meal, salt, and wine, all of which must be new. The Anglo-Saxons knew this month as Wulfmonath, for at this season wolves became so hungry that they came into the cities. Mommsen, the historian, says of Janus: "He was the spirit of opening." In ancient Rome the arch known as the Janus geminus stood at the end of the Roman forum and faced east and west. Livy tells us that it stood open in war, and was only closed in peace, and before the Christian era was closed only four times. It was a Roman custom to keep the doors of their homes always open while members of the family were away. His double face is found on early coins. Cook, in the Classical Review, takes the position that Janus is only a form of Jupiter. Janus was sometimes represented as three-headed, or even four-headed, and even the pre-Latin or aboriginal inhabitants of Rome held this god in high esteem.

Geoffrey Chaucer, in his Canterbury Tales, 1388 A. M., gives in the "Merchant's Tale" the story of the love of January an old man of sixty years or more, and his wife, May, a fair young maiden, and tells how on one occasion Damyan, a young and lusty squire, was embracing May and was seen by January; but May persuaded January that his eyesight was so bad that he had not really seen what he had supposed he was looking upon, and January, out of his love for May, decided that indeed his eyes had deceived him.

January 1st begins the four thousand six hundred and twenty-first year of the Chinese era, the 2,423,786th day since the beginning of the Julian period, and January 14th marks the 2,677th year since the foundation of Rome. The chief festivals of this month are New Year's Day, Epiphany, Twelfth Day, and the Feast of the Circumcision. Mars, Jupiter and Saturn are the chief morning stars this month, and Mercury and Venus chief evening stars.

In reminding ourselves of the thirty-one days of January, we are recalling the common rhyme found among the Friends of Chester County, Pa., which runs as follows:

> Fourth, eleventh, ninth, and sixth,
> Thirty days to each affix;
> Every other thirty-one,
> Except the second month alone.

In writing for the Children's Almanac, Henry W. Longfellow says:

Janus am I; oldest of potentates!
Forward I look, and backward, and below
I count—as god of avenues and gates—
The years that through my portals come and go.
I block the roads and drift the fields with snow,

I chase the wild fowl from the frozen fen;
My frosts congeal the rivers in their flow,
My fires light up the hearths and hearts of men.

Edmund Spenser, in his "Faerie Queene," draws one of the best pictures of winter that we have in literature:

Lastly came Winter, cloathed all in frize,
Chattering his teeth for cold that did him chill,
Whilst on his hoary beard his breath did freeze.

James Thomson, writing of winter in his well-known poem, "The Seasons," exclaims:

> See, Winter comes to rule the varied year;
> Sullen and sad, with all his rising train—
> Vapors, and clouds, and storms.

It is natural at the year's beginning to make resolutions—we remember the years now gone; the work still undone; the dreams that still lure us on our way. To overcome the daily wear and ear of life, and the friction of the conventional and the ordinary, we need the impulse and uplift that come from high resolves. The pull of friction will stop the finest machinery man has made; the friction of daily demands will kill our best intentions, unless helped by high resolve continually. Custis tells us that when General Henry Lee said to Washington, "We are amazed at the amount of work you do," that Washington replied: "I rise at four, and a great deal of my work is done while others sleep." Benjamin Franklin reminds us, "Dost thou love life? Thou waste not time, for time is the stuff that life is made of." In Montaigne's essays we find this happy thought: "It depends upon your will, and not upon your life, to have a sufficient number of days. It is the well-husbanding and improving of time that gives you longer days than the ordinary." In the ninety-third paper of his Spectator, Joseph Addison writes: "We all complain of the shortness of time, saith Seneca, and yet we have much more than we know what to do with. Our lives are spent, he says, in doing nothing at all, or in doing nothing to a purpose, or in doing nothing that we ought to do." Writing to his son in 1748, Lord Chesterfield says to him: "What I do regret, and shall ever regret, is the time, while young, I lost in mere idleness and in doing nothing. * * * Every moment may be put to some use, and that with more pleasure than if unemployed." In Abbott's life of Napoleon we have a story in which a handsome young woman reproached Napoleon for showing her so little attention, to which he made reply: "Ah, my good woman, had I passed my time in your delightful company instead of in study of military matters I should not now be in command of the army of Italy."

Poor Richard says: "At the working-man's house, hunger looks in, but dares not enter; nor will the bailiff or the constable enter: for industry pays debts, but despair increaseth them." And again, "Industry makes all things easy; and he that riseth late must trot all day, and scarce overtake his business at night. Laziness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes him." L'Estrange reminds us, "A plodding diligence brings us sooner to the journey's end than any fluttering way of advancing by starts. We may mistake the gratuitous blessings of Heaven for what is simply the fruit of our own industry." It is simply amazing what may be accomplished in short periods of time well used and carefully improved. Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, the eminent president of Columbia University, some years ago in an address, mentioned one year in his own life when he set in motion certain advances that had resulted in wonderful progress along many different lines in his chosen field of educational effort.

While Pliny the Younger was right in his well-known saying, "Longissimus dies cito conditur" (the longest day soon comes to an end), yet is it also true that the shortest day may be filled with great attainments if properly used. Ovid reminds us, "Utendum est aetate; cito pede labitur aetas" (we must improve the moments, for they move with rapid foot). We have the immense labors of many men to encourage us to feel that if well directed the years may be filled to abounding fullness with great achievements.

In this spirit of meditation and high resolve, then we come to open the volume labeled "The New Year, vol. 1924 A. D.," a book of opportunity divided into twelve chapters and covering 366 pages.

Let this suspicious morning be expressed
With a white stone distinguished from the rest,
White as thy fame, and as thy honor clear;
And let new joys attend on thy New Year.
—Dryden.

Let fame that all hunt after in their lives
Live registered upon our brazen tombs,
When spite of cormorant devouring time,
The endeavor of this present breath may buy
That honor which shall bate his scythe's keen edge
And make us heirs of all eternity.
—William Shakespeare

DR. LONG'S ANSWER.

[Read this article in connection with editorial following second column on page 5.]

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

You ask me to tell you what I would do should one apply for membership in our Church who should deny that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world, and deny also the inspiration of the Scriptures. In other words, should give a negative answer to the questions we usually put to candidates who apply for membership in our Church. My answer is very readily given. I would not receive such into the fellowship of the Church, for such persons are not Christians.

Christians believe that Jesus Christ is just what He claimed to be, and what the Scriptures plainly tell about Him, His birth, His teachings, His miracles, His life, death, resurrection and ascension. All took place, not in secret, but openly, and witnessed by many people—friends and enemies.

In addition to this, the teaching of Jesus, the Gospel, has changed every land it has entered, transformed every one who has received it. Every intelligent and observant individual will acknowledge that no other system of teaching, whether presented as religious or scientific, has ever, at any time, so impressed the minds of men and changed them morally, socially and spiritually as the Gospel of the Son of God.

All true Christians believe in God as our Heavenly Father. Now, would He not be a very unnatural Father if He should not condescend to speak to His children? Christians believe that He has spoken to them, and they believe that the Scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments contain His message to His children.

Wicked men would not write such a Book as the Bible, which condemns them in every chapter; good men could not write such a Book and claim it to be God's Word. We believe, therefore, that "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Respecting the particular manner of divine inspiration, there are two opinions:

1. That the Holy Spirit inspired the thoughts, but the writers were left to express themselves in their own words and phrases, and were so guided that they were kept from error.

2. That every word was suggested to them by the Spirit of God, and the writers did nothing but write. This is verbal inspiration. Both views secure the Scriptures from error. God may speak in as great a variety of styles as the thirty-five different writers of the sixty-six books of the Bible.

In conclusion, I would remark that all speculative controversies and discussions concerning the Bible and its teaching that have no relation to practice are harmful rather than helpful.

W. S. LONG.

Chapel Hill, N. C.

GRAHAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

During the past year our Church has "blossomed" and borne some fruit, and from now we are hoping for more fruit and an abundant ripening.

Systematic work in all phases and departments is the only modern progressive development of any business. Is not the Church the most wonderful business we have to attend to? If a Sunday School and Church are well organized, the work will be so well distributed that no one will be burdened, and all will have a part in the Master's work.

In September we began an organization of a graded Sunday School. We have accomplished much within a few months, and are very much encouraged. Our Sunday School is increasing each Sunday. We had a delightful pageant given by the Sunday School for our Christmas program. The stress on the Christ spirit is more beautiful each year—"It is more blessed to give than to receive." We thought it quite remarkable to have used in our pageant the majority of children from each class, from beginners through the junior class.

Mr. Beougher has given us two splendid sermons on the fourth and fifth Sundays. His subjects were particularly fitting on these days, being "Christmas Chimes" and "Facing the New Year."

MRS. JOHN J. HENDERSON.

DR. FLEMING IS POUNDED.

Members and friends of the congregation of Union and Haw River Churches remembered us very kindly at Christmas time. An automobile truck drove into our back-yard and unloaded a valuable contribution, and with it came cards of Christmas greeting and good wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year. On Christmas Eve, an automobile drove up to our home, having in it valuable gifts from members of the Haw River Church. Four packages were received from members of Haw River Church prior to Christmas Eve. These tokens of appreciation and helpfulness are much appreciated, and the good will expressed in them is very helpful.

P. H. FLEMING.

Burlington, N. C.

GENEROUSLY REMEMBERED.

On the approach of the Christmas season, Mrs. Newman and myself were most graciously remembered with a check of $201 from the Church, students, faculty, workmen and citizens. As the givers constitute practically the entire community and their names were not given, we take this public manner to record our highest appreciation of such a magnanimous gift and our heartfelt thanks to each one who shared in the generosity. Our prayer is that we may prove more worthy of this beneficence and that our kind Father may measure out to each and all His own reward.

N. G. NEWMAN.

Elon College, N. C.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

AN IMPORTANT FOLDER.

At the request of Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, chairman of our Mission Board and of the Men and Millions Movement, the mission secretary last week sent to every pastor and to the captains and women leaders in the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention a printed list of all the total amounts each Church pledged originally to Men and Millions, and the amount each Church has paid to November 30, 1923. This list, as printed, will let every Church know exactly its obligation to the movement and how far it has met this obligation to the date named. This was done in order that individuals and Churches might know the task yet before us and the challenge to seek the accomplishment of this task. Many have written and many more have told the secretary personally that they would pay their pledges at the earliest possible and convenient date. It is hoped that the pastors and captains in the Churches will make known to each congregation the amount pledged and the amount yet to be paid, so that all may give this important matter their serious and prayerful consideration.

We all know the merit of the movement and what it will mean to the Church to carry out the intents and purposes of the same. Shall we not, in the light of the facts now before us, make a desperate and determined effort to pay these pledges to our Church and to the kingdom of our dear Lord? If there is an error on the part of any Church or individual, it will be cheerfully investigated and corrected.

We are doing all we can to carry forward this movement in the spirit of Him who founded the Church and who gave His life that His Church might live and grow and prosper in the world.

Cordially,
J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

AMOUNT PAID TO MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT DECEMBER, 1923.

North Carolina Conference.

Damascus	$ 5.00
Union Ridge	2.00
Wentworth	15.00
Parks Cross Roads	10.00
High Point	3.50
New Lebanon	5.00
Franklinton	305.00
Pleasant Hill	1.90
Pleasant Grove	20.00
Elon	132.50
Burlington	140.80
Poplar Branch	30.00
Shallow Well	23.20
Burton's Grove	32.50
Moore's Union	16.00
Danville	10.67
Zion	12.00
Liberty, Vance	20.00
Morrisville	10.00
		$ 795.07

Eastern Virginia Conference.

Mt. Carmel	$ 15.00
Oakland	78.00
Damascus	2.00
Johnson's Grove	21.50
Spring Hill	15.00
Barrett's	5.00
Rosemont	51.77
		188.27

Valley of Virginia Conference.

Harrisonburg	$ 10.00
Palmyra	1.00
Joppa	3.50
Mayland	2.52
Linville	5.00
		22.02

Alabama Conference.

Wadley	$140.00
Pisgah	5.50
Mt. Zion	1.00
		146.50

Church Not Given.

W. J. Massey	$ 10.00
J. F. Wellons	25.00
Mrs. M. A. Vestal	1.00
Miss Sutton	.46
		36.46
Total for month		$1,188.32

The above amounts were paid to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston, Elon College, N. C., on December collections. January closes the third quarter of the year and should show increased offerings. Gratefully and sincerely,

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Collections to December 1, 1923, $106,662.77. Eighty per cent should be collected by May 1, 1924, but let us set our goal by that time at an average of 40 per cent, which would amount to $213,565. We need an average of twenty thousand dollars per month—over four times our collections for November. As some Churches will fall under 40 per cent, some must go 50, some 60, some 70, and some 80 per cent.

The following Churches, by Conferences, have paid over 40 per cent of the amount subscribed:

Eastern Virginia:	Subscribed.	Paid.
Waverly	$ 7,718.00	$ 4,345.10
Suffolk	50,604.00	23,226.37
Valley of Virginia:
Timber Ridge	455.25	396.25
Antioch	1,945.20	928.90
Washington, D. C.	1,249.80	611.20
Bethlehem	680.00	352.50
Lineville	1,180.30	478.30
Concord	590.00	252.85
North Carolina:
Oak Level	375.00	371.00
Ebenezer	337.50	245.48
Damascus	756.50	348.70
Sanford	5,165.00	2,185.00
Mt. Auburn	5,715.00	2,368.00
Morrisville	655.00	265.50
Shallow Ford	360.00	241.35
Alabama:
Mt. Zion	125.25	165.40
Georgia and Alabama:
(None.)

The following Churches have paid, by Conferences, over 25 per cent of the amount subscribed:

Eastern Virginia:	Subscribed.	Paid.
Wakefield	$ 2,927.00	$ 1,120.46
Ivor	1,600.00	510.00
Liberty Spring	10,946.00	3,403.20
First, Norfolk	9,773.00	2,958.74
Valley of Virginia:
Joppa	300.00	109.00
Mayland	912.60	256.53
Mt. Olivet "G"	614.50	178.58
New Hope	1,997.00	612.11
Newport	693.20	260.76
Dry Run	571.20	197.50
North Carolina:
Bethel "S"	1,121.00	337.90
Bethlehem "A"	1,217.00	318.00
Ether	462.50	160.00
Haw River	1,249.00	437.31
Henderson	4,860.00	1,416.40
Hines' Chapel	1,467.00	430.40
Mt. Zion	1,205.00	409.00
New Lebanon	2,215.00	558.25
New Providence	1,772.00	514.15
Park's Cross Roads	1,626.00	423.75
Pleasant Hill "A"	986.00	280.30
Raleigh	3,502.20	1,344.60
Union	1,076.00	462.07
Alabama:
New Hope	1,645.25	510.00
Wadley	2,165.00	735.50
Georgia and Alabama:
(None.)

Churches have subscribed, by Conferences, as follows:

Eastern Virginia	42
North Carolina	92
Valley of Virginia	22
Alabama	18
Georgia and Alabama	16
Total	190

Number of Churches, by Conferences, that have paid nothing are as follows:

North Carolina	11
Alabama	3
Georgia and Alabama	2
Total	16

These sixteen Churches can pay something on their pledges. I don't believe that every member of these sixteen Churches is unable to pay anything. Will the presidents of the Conferences, the pastors of these Churches and the captains collect something in each of these Churches? Where are the Sunday School teachers? How did you apply the lessons of the last quarter? They were all missionary. They taught that you should pray, go, and send. If you will pray for missions and missionaries, God will open your heart to give something. If you don't go, the only way to send is to give smething to missions. With the exception of Christian Sun deficit, 40 per cent of Men and Millions fund goes to missions. It is time to put in practice what we teach.

Sixteen Churches have paid over 40 per cent of amount subscribed by them, and the most of these will go to 75 or 80 per cent by May 1, 1924.

Twenty-six Churches have paid over 25 per cent. Some of these, like Wakefield, New Port, Haw River, Raleigh, Union, N. C., New Hope, Wadley, and others are in sight of the top, and will soon go over and be in the 40 per cent class.

Several of our Churches have paid 20 per cent, and by a little hustle can go over the top. Practically all of them, by an intense drive of exhortation, prayer and giving, can go over the top by May 1, 1924.

Speaking frankly, I have been astonished and grieved at the attitude of most of the mission Churches and mission points. These Churches drain the Conference and mission boards of all their resources, and when the very existence of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is dependent upon the payment of Men and Millions pledges, these Churches, as a rule, are apparently indifferent to their obligations. To say the least, it is discouraging.

Then, again, I am somewhat disappointed at the attitude of many of our leading Churches. Their names have long stood for what is holiest and best, for progress, for piety, and for loyalty to the Christian Church and all its enterprises. They have always been leaders. We miss their names in the lists published in this article. They have always responded to individual calls for missions, Elon College, education, CHRISTIAN SUN, superannuated ministers, orphanage, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, and the Southern Christian Convention, but do not seem to have grasped the fact that Men and Millions takes all of these at one time. A citizen of a State does not simply contribute to the support of one department of government and claim that he is patriotic and loyal to the government. How can a citizen of the kingdom of God justify his position in not supporting all the work of the kingdom? Think on these things, pray over them and ask the Holy Spirit to guide you in reaching a conclusion as to your duty. I beg every reader to study carefully these figures and say a good word for Men and Millions every time you have an opportunity.

It is fair to note that some Churches did not subscribe their full quota, as nearly every Church (if not every one) in Eastern Virginia Conference did, but I am now dealing with pledges, which are individual, and not taking subscriptions. Regardless of amount of total subscriptions made by Churches, the important thing now is for every individual to meet his or her obligation as far as possible.

J. E. WEST,
Chairman Mission Board.

FOR DECEMBER, 1923.

Timber Ridge, High View, W. Va., $1.24; Rock Stand, Roanoke, Ala., $2.75; Reidsville, N. C., $5.77; Rosemont, Berkley, Va., $5.80; New Providence, Burlington, N. C., $3.81; Wadley, Ala., $1.76; Citizens, Elon College, N. C., $6.30; Richland, Ga., $1.06; Linville, Va., $2.30; Leaksville, Va., $2.65; Hines Chapel, McLeansville, N. C., $2.93; Berea (Nansemond), Driver, Va., $5; Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C., $4.15; Liberty, Vance, N. C., $4.46; Durham, N. C., $10.79; Morrisville, N. C., $2.26; Raleigh, N. C., $2.50; Roanoke, Ala., $2; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., $3.66; Antioch, Harrisonburg, Va., $3.80; Ramseur, N. C., $3.30; Shallow Ford, Elon College, N. C., $8.52; Timberville, Va., $2; Burlington, First Church, $217.37. Total, $306.18.

We are grateful to these good Sunday Schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall be greatly increased during the year 1924, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home, in Carroll County, Virginia, and abroad, in Japan.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Secretary Missions.

WHY FAITH GOES ON.

BY REV. G. H. COMBS.

(In Christian-Evangelist.)

The following article is by the Rev. G. H. Combs, and is very interesting and helpful. Did you ever think it out to the end as to why faith goes on with its work, successful or not successful? If you have not, this article will likely start you on that task; and if so, it may be very helpful to you. Do not read it hurriedly, but take time to read it thoughtfully.—EDITOR.

What is the secret of faith's endurance? How does it carry on by day, by night, in calm, in storm? One answer is that faith sees and foresees that life's rebuffs are not only the necessity of life's tuitioning, but of faith itself. That hindrances are helps. That weights are wings. Faith may long for fair weather, but if storms shall come and dark days swoop down, faith knows that storms are teachers and dark days have their mission. It recognizes that only through oppositions does progress come. What makes walking possible? The resistance of the air, the pull of gravity. How can a fish swim? Through the resistance of the atmosphere. The bird could not fly in a vacuum. What sends the ball straight, swift from the gun's mouth? The compressions and hindrances of the gun's barrel.

When, a year ago, I planted an apple orchard, I cut back severely the trees. This summer the growth has been more rapid because of that very pruning, yet once more must the shears do their work. To set back the trees is to advance the trees. We have a piano in our house sadly out of tune. Some day—when I am away from home, I trust—the piano tuner will come to put it right, and what agonies of twistings and wrenchings and poundings must it endure to become the voice of harmony! If the piano could feel, it would resent such torturing.

If it could reason as well as feel, it might wince in the process, yet be glad for the pain.

Now, life seems sometimes three parts pruning or tuning, but pruning and tuning are for life's good. Just now among womenfolk there is a craze for smooth and lineless faces, sometimes submission to surgival processes that by snipping off the skin here and there or by the injection of paraffin or something akin to it makes wrinkled faces smooth as a billiard ball. And as characterless! A face without lines in it is no more attractive than an eggshell. And like face, is soul. Welcome the chisel and its marks. For chiseling is strength and chiseling is beauty. If you are looking for a jinrikisha road over an asphalt road, do not seek faith's way—that way is ofttimes rocky and sometimes steep. But it leads to the hill-top.

Faith goes on because it sees that for others' sake as well as for its own it must go on. Moses endured because he knew that with his endurance was linked the fortunes of his people. If he failed, they would fail. He must carry on. Faith sees life as a whole, humanity as a whole, sees how all are bound together, how through the fidelity of one the many may be saved, how through the falsity of one the many may be lost. I have stood in factories where the manufacture of an article was a continuous process, passing from hand to hand, from man to man, and have seen how the slowing up at one point meant the slowing up at all points, how stoppage at one place meant stoppage at all places. When the time comes for a man to do his bit he's got to do it, literally for the sake of the whole works. Always, always the eyes of others are on you, the fortunes of others are in your keeping. Health not robust? Can go on only through prick of spur? But others are similarly unfortunate. As you bear yourself, so will they bear themselves. Click your teeth together then, deep-rowel your sides, go on. You have lost your money. So have many others. If you despair, they will despair. If you take heart and begin again, so will they.

Clear away the ashes then and lay new foundations for others' sakes as well as for your own. A great sorrow has come into your life? a wife in her coffin, a daughter dead? My friends, you are not alone; there are many homes so shadowed. Bear, then, in nobleness, your grief, that you may help others in nobleness to bear their griefs. Such sorrow came to the great London preacher, Joseph Parker. His wife, whom he almost idolized, was taken. He felt that he could never preach again. Then there came to him this saving vision of others. An example, as he had tried to be in other ways, should he fail in this? If he cowered, others would cower. If he gave up, others would give up. It was not to be thought of. He would go on.

Life isn't a solitary affair. It is profoundly social in its reaches. No doubt the thought of the "Churches" stayed even the great soul Paul in many a crisis hour. How strengthening to know that others lean upon us. How much richer the life of the mother through her consciousness of children's dependence.

Faith goes on because faith sees its reward not only along the way but at the end of the way. There is no need to answer those who cavil at the notion of rewards; who say that this is a base motivation. God has so fashioned us that the hope of reward—some kind of reward—is instinctive in every human breast. Some of life's rewards are noble, some ignoble, but rewards of some kind we seek. The trouble is not that we seek rewards, but that we frame programs of life that may have rewards sprinkled literally along the road, but has nothing at road's end. One would be an athlete, say. Are there rewards along the way? Certainly! Good health, singing blood, springing step, ripples of live muscle beneath satiny skin, contests, huzzas, prizes—rewards these. But is there any satisfaction at the end? Will ribbons of blue and silver cups give strength and solaces when the last particles of sand are slipping out of the hour-glass?

Ambition of scholarship, of professional attainment, is not that rewarding? For a season, yes. But to the end? Is knowledge sweet on the lips of the aged? When a king is old, can he make a staff out of his sceptre?

Faith goes on because faith sees the invisible. A single illustration must suffice—let Ruskin furnish it. What do you see when you see mud? Why mud, of course! But Ruskin saw more than mud in mud. An ounce of slime on a beaten way, in the outskirts of a manufacturing town—of what is it composed? Clay, soot, sand, water. Is that all? Not to Ruskin, seeing the invisible. That clay, separated from its fellows, becomes white, becomes clear, becomes hard, becomes a gatherer of the "loveliest blue rays"—a sapphire. That sand becomes also hard, white, becomes the reflector not only of "blue rays, but green, purple, red rays as well"—an opal. That soot becoming hard too, "obtains the power of reflecting all the sun's rays at once in the vividest rays that any solid thing may shoot"—a diamond. That drop of water "purifies itself and proceeding to a more perfect consistence crystalizes into the shape of a star." And so we have at last not a bit of soiling mud, but "a sapphire, an opal and a diamond, set in the midst of a star of snow."

Beautiful! Yet not more beautiful than the many visions in the realms of the invisible, not more beautiful than faith feeding upon these visions itself becomes. Beauty and yet such power, too, as swings in seas of suns. No wonder that with such giant strength faith falls not by the way, but goes on and on to press at last the treets of gold.

Kansas City, Mo.

Had you thought of it in this way? He that believeth not on the Son shall not see life. See John 3:36. It is believe on the Son or not see life! In your case, which shall it be?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

BEWARE THE WRONG STEP.

"For what doth it profit a man to gain the whole world and forfeit his soul."—Mark 8:36.

You know that it is not lawful, but it will bring a big financial return and you are considering it.

If you can keep out of the grasp of the law, you think it will not matter so much if you do go ahead with your scheme.

Others have procured property in the same way, and did not get caught at it, and why not you?

If you dare to acquire valuable possessions with such dangerous lines of thought as your inspiration, you are taking a wrong step.

Such reasoning smothers your conscience, and the one wrong step is bound to tear down, in a day, perhaps, every prop of respectability you have been these many years in constructing.

If the other fellow goes crooked, you go straight.

It is not what others do, but what you do yourself, that you are judged by, so look at things as they are.

You may escape, and some others have been dangerously near to being found out and have escaped, but the day of reckoning is bound to come.

If you do not live to see it, think of your family, the disgrace to them.—Copyright, 1923, by International Feature Service, Inc.

Prayer.—(Led by any of the circle.)

TUESDAY.

DENYING ONE'S SELF FOR THE VICTORY.

"We must strip off every handicap, strip off every sin with its clinging folds, to run our appointed course steadily, our eyes fixed on Jesus as the pioneer and perfection of faith."—Mark 8:35 Mod. Sph. Moffat.

"Whosoever loses his life for my sake and the gospel's will save it."—(Version as above.)

Pat O'Brien was escaping from a German prison during the war. At first he carried a pack with a few pieces of clothing, toilet articles, pictures and souvenirs. He soon found that his load was too great, so piece by piece was discarded until nothing was left but barely enough clothing to cover his body. He stripped himself of everything to win his race, back to his buddies in the U. S. lines. This unloading was necessary. He reached them after weeks of travel, tired and footsore (often passing within a few feet of a German sentry), with nothing of his posessions but a few tattered rags hanging to his body. But he won and he was happy.

This is what Paul says we have to do to win the Christian race— strip of everything that hinders, that we may win. Sacrifice is necessary to the winning of anything. We deny ourselves many things we would like to have in order to make ends meet, or we will go into bankruptcy and be ruined. The same is true of the soul. It is indeed a narrow and limited way, and yet Christ did not think it so because it leads to a larger, greater and more glorious life. The secret of happiness is daring to subordinate our lives and personal pleasures to an institution or a cause—to be able to lose sight of petty aims and selfish interest in the joy of manly service.

Prayer.—(Led by any of the circle.)

WEDNESDAY.

RATIONAL LIVING.

(For your meditation, read Phil. 4:8-20.)

It is being said that people are very irrational. Rev. Studdard Kennedy, in an address to the Students' Volunteer Movement's recent convention at Indianapolis, is quoted as saying: "Half of the people are not fit to think for themselves." His explanation is that they are so proud, passionate, conceited and selfish that they see everything with a bias and a "big I." We have no statesmen today because of this fact. Men do not realize that religion and worship are the heart of knowledge and character, and that the latter should be the supreme end in view. An intense search for truth, and an unwavering endeavor to establish the right and the good in everything, is as much a matter of heart-beats as it is of brain ability and personal gain. Clever selfishness and conceit is cursing our nation. Men want to be heard, and when others are talking, instead of listening for truth and right, they are planning what they will say next. We are not out to learn truth, but out to air our own half-baked and half-matured ideas. We should not be in a combat of wits or self-preservation, but we should be seekers after truth and right and the upbuilding of character.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we praise Thy holy name, that we have not been cut off in our iniquity. Take away our sins, wash us and make us clean, and kindle in our hearts the fire of the holy spirit, and we pray Thee to make ours to be hearts of love that shall delight only in character. For Christ's sake, we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PURITY AND VISION.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

The pure shall see God.

We know a great deal about this world, but our knowledge has come through our manner of living. For instance, we come to know the glory and beauty of the natural and material world through our habits, manners and environment. In other words, man's conduct registers in his character, and this gives him an understanding of things around him. Consider the moral and the religious life. It is well known that evil blinds our eyes to truth; righteousness clarifies. Ruskin the poet expressed it well in the following lines: "There is no fault nor folly of my life that does not rise up against me and take away my joy and shorten my power of possession, of sight and of understanding; and every past effort of my life to be good, every gleam of righteousness and good in it, is with me in my grasp of this heart and its vision." A. Kempis said: "Purity and simplicity are the two things with which man soars above the earth and all temporary nature. Purity is in intention and affection. The simplicity of it turns to God. It's purity that unites us with and ennobles us to Him." We know a lot—something about everything—but so many refuse the medium whereby they may see and know God—purity.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who hast chosen us to share with Thee of Thy bounty, forgive us of our sins, strengthen our purposes to be pure, and bring us to Thy glory. Through Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LET US PRAY.

Our Father, we thank Thee for the common blessings of every-day life, for daily light, for the food of Thy bounty, for strength to work, for the love of friends and for the eternal blessing of forgiveness and redemption. We confess our wrong-doings and pray for forgiveness.

As we approach the altar, grant unto us a full resignation of soul, an humble and cheerful spirit, a strong faith, a perfect trust in Thy purpose for us, a clean mind, a forgiving spirit, and give unto us the assurance that all is well with God's obedient children. Give us understanding that all of earth's evils and sorrows cannot destroy nor dim the vision of Thy children who seek for and follow Thee.

Oh! thou Divine Spirit, who, in all events of life, are knocking at the door of our hearts and pleading with us to be righteous and pure, help us to respond to Thy call. We would not drift blindly and recklessly into pitfalls and into ultimate failure, nor would we be driven to do Thy will unwillingly, nor to fulfill Thy laws unintelligently, nor would we obey Thy mandates unsympathetically. But, dear Lord, we would regard our lives as a gift from Thee, and even that which seems hard to us and all wrong, as disguised blessings.

So, dear Father, open Thou our hearts today to holy worship, and every step of the way give us understanding and complete inspiration. At all times—morning, noon and night, fall, winter, spring or summer—whether Thou comest in sunshine or rain, oh, may we receive Thee joyfully, knowing that Thou art more than sunshine, and that it is Thyself that is the compensation of the rain and everything else. Thus shall we see Thy goodness in our daily bread, Thy spirit in the comforts of life, and in this learn how to follow Thee in all the other experiences. Amen.

SATURDAY.

PRESSING ON.

*"Forgetting what lies behind me, and straining to what lies before me, I press on * * ."—Phil. 3:14 (Modern Speech).

Paul had a lot to forget, for his past was awful in regard to Jesus Christ and his fellow-man; but he buried his past and clung to Christ for his present and future. If it is allowed, our past will reach out and grip our present with throttling grasp, choke us to withering blight and paralyze all that is good in us. Everything we do stakes out territory and exercises power over our habits. Paul had a past that was enmity to all that was in the name of Jesus Christ, and this included murder; but being converted, he put it all out of his mind and refused the tyranny of even the thought of it. He launched his all on Christ, who saved the people from their sins. And you?

Prayer.—Our Father, grant that we, like Paul, may be more than conquerors over all that makes war on our souls. Knowing that Thou dost forgive, help us to forget and to press on unto perfect peace in Thy presence, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

Keep Sunday unto the Lord. The grind and strain of the business of the week demands it. It undoes us, strains our nerves and retards our abilities and efficiency; produces lost balance which needs to be restored. We become much like a violin out of tune. We need to be restored to harmony. We need the tuning of body, mind and spirit to the degree of health and harmony with God. The body has grown tired, the blood has become poisoned, nerves frazzled out and the mind neglected; the soul has been unfed. Sunday is a day of restoration and harmony. Keep it as such. And whatever restores is consistent with the holy day.

But bear in mind that the soul is neglected infinitely more than the body. We take care of our body by eating and sleeping and giving it recreation. We care for our minds by reading and conversation, all of which renews the body if not indulged to excess. But the poor soul goes almost unthought of. Sunday is the soul's day. It has been set aside supremely for the culture of the soul. The Church, divine worship, waiting on God is the supreme food for this soul. Without it, it will fade and die and the Sabbath will have lost its meaning.

Prayer.—Our Father, stretch forth Thy hand unto us; hold forth Thy light before us, recall us from our wanderings; hold us close to Thee and send us forth today for the right use of its opportunities. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

HE PROPOSES TO DIVIDE.

The daily papers of January 1st bring us the news that the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, of New York City, a noted modernist, has made a proposition to have the Church divided. On the one side he wishes all the modernists to get together, and on the other side he wishes all the fundamentalists to get together, and thus we should have all Protestantism divided into two branches. Many look with disfavor on this proposition and wish the Churches to stay together; but the fact is, they are not now together. We are divided into hundreds of denominations, and really it seems to us it would be an improvement upon the present divided state of Christendom to have the Christian people of this day divided into two branches, rather than hundreds. Why would it not be a gain to have it so? We are for union, so far as truth can approve. Seven or eight years ago we said in public print that this very thing will come, and now it is proposed by one party in the modernists' ranks. No doubt there will be many who will side with him. For one, we regret any necessity for division, but it is bound to come; but this division will be more of union than the present situation, for whereas we now have more than a hundred divisions in the Protestant Church, then we should have only two, and two bodies of denominations will be better than more than one hundred! As a matter of fact, it is useless to oppose this division, for it already exists. We must cure it or recognize it. A division of Protestantism into two bodies will certainly be much nearer Christian union than to have, as now, more than the hundred bodies. Much as we regret division, we see that the division of the modernists and the fundamentalists already exists, and we must do one of two things, viz: cure it or recognize it. We would be glad to cure it if possible, but we doubt that it can be done; and if it cannot be done, then we must recognize it. That the two factions of Protestantism now exists, we cannot deny. As we see it, it is not a question of dividing the Church, for that has already been done, but it is a question of bringing peace to the Church. The modernists cannot accept the working truths of the fundamentalists, nor can the fundamentalists accept the teachings of modernism. This being true, as it really seems to be, division is inevitable.

One thing Dr. Grant proposes that we cannot agree to, and that is that the modernists shall be called progressives, and the fundamentalists shall be called non-progressives. Oh, no, Mr. Grant, we can agree to no such proposition! The fundamentalists do not accept the name of non-progressives. Oh, no; they are as progressive as are the modernists, only they insist that we shall be progressive according to truth, as set forth in the revealed will of God—the Bible. You have chosen to be called modernists. All right, stick to your name; we have no objection to that name. The fundamentalists have chosen to be called fundamentalists—now, what have you to do with renaming them by a name they do not choose to wear?

As we see it, to shift the names of the two bodies is unfair. The modernists named themselves modernists, and we have not objected. The fundamentalists named themselves fundamentalists, and we have no disposition to rob them of the name they chose for themselves. As we see it, it is not a matter of progress or non-progress. It is rather a matter of truth and error. Therefore, it would be an injustice to shift the name from the one to the other, seeing it is not a matter of progress or non-progress.

If there is anything worth standing for, it is truth. If the fundamentalists are standing for truth, as we believe they are, then the modernists must be standing for the opposite of truth.

Let us say again, for perhaps less than the one hundredth time, that we do not insist that our views must be accepted to have fellowship together, but we do insist that the Word of God must be accepted, for if we discard that, then we have nothing to which we may tie our faith. What we do insist on is that we shall accept the Bible as fundamental and essential. After that, we may differ as to interpretation, so long as the interpretation is Christian, and we may have fellowship one with another. Your interpretation may differ very much from mine, but if it is Christian in thought and spirit, we dare not rule any man or woman out of the Church of Christ, but the minute the Bible is ruled out and not allowed to stand as the standard of Christian teaching, then we drop out and cannot give fellowship to a teaching which repudiates the Bible and gives an interpretation which is not Christian.

THE NEW YEAR.

A brother editor, in a neighboring city, has said some things that may be helpful to our readers. We are, therefore, transferring his short article to our columns. Will you read and heed his words on "The New Year?" He says:

"The king is dead—long live the king," was proclaimed in France at the death of one kind and the ascension of the other. Few looked back and remembered the dead, but looked forward with earnest expectation of blessings yet to come.

In the same way, we turn our backs upon the year that is dead, and with hope greet the New Year.

What it has in store for us we know not. Hope that springs eternal in the human breast, looks forward with expectancy that the days to come will be better than the days that are gone.

If we lay aside the element of hope, there is not much in the present upon which to base a belief in any improvement.

Patrick Henry, in his famous speech that helped to kindle the Revolution, said, "I know no way of judging the future but by the past."

The past, especially these recent years, does not hold out much promise of better days. Never in the history of the world has it been in a more deplorable state.

Successive waves of crime sweep over various sections, openly defying the laws of the land. Bandits in open daylight re-enact scenes that remind us of the West in early days.

In the religious world, with which we are peculiarly concerned, the outlook is worse than it has been for years.

In every denomination there is doctrinal strife, and the cleavage between the liberals and the conservatives is growing steadily wider.

Though in our own Southern Church we are outwardly harmonious, yet no one can foretell when the storm will break out amongst us.

Notwithstanding our doubt as to what the New Year will bring us, we welcome it, knowing that the Great Governor of the universe has planned every life and has promised to be with us alway, even to the end of the ages.

But for our faith in the inspired Word and its promises, we would be, of all men, most miserable.

Arabs Property-Holders.

At the present time, 97 per cent of the freehold property of Palestine is in the hands of Arabs, and not of the Jews. Much of the land is the property of the government, though this is the least productive. The greater portion of the freehold land is owned either by the small peasant-proprietor or the rich absentee owner of a large estate. One-fifth only of the land is under cultivation, and that in the most primitive fashion, while the remaining four-fifths remain idle and unproductive, contributing nothing to the wealth of the country. The fellahin are either too poor or too devoid of ambition to trouble themselves about new methods of agriculture, while the big landowner, who, as a rule, farms out his land to peasants, feels that the land, usually a family heirloom of many generations, brings a good enough return, as it requires little expenditure of money or labor. The purchase of the land by the Jews will not only work no harm to the native population, but will actually accrue to the benefit of all concerned by increasing the productivity of the soil and raising the general standard of living.

Denying Great Truths.

The war against the Wesleyan doctrine of holiness—one of the greatest factors in bringing Methodism into existence—has been a forerunner of this skeptical movement which is flooding the Church and the nation. Men who denied the cleansing power of Jesus' blood, prepared themselves to deny the virgin birth of Jesus and the necessity of a blood atonement. They had to contradict so much Scripture to get around the baptism with the Holy Ghost in sanctifying power that they were fully prepared to deny the inspiration of the prophets, the plain teachings of Jesus, and the writing of the apostles. Having grieved the Holy Spirit away from them, they educated themselves "to deny the Lord that bought them"; now they are ready to betray the Church, to destroy the faith of the people, and to lead the young people into a wilderness of skepticism. They will go from one unbelief to another; they will descend step by step into the gloomy regions of infidelity. They will hate, betray and, wherever possible, persecute true preachers of the gospel. They will go to the judgment with the blood of countless souls upon their garments.—Ex.

The Presbyterian Record announces a new Bible for the New Year. And then he asks: Where can I get a copy? Take the Bible you have, and read it carefully, thoughtfully, prayerfully every day, and you will know. For the new kind of Bible, the only kind worth while for the New Year, is the "used" Bible, the "read-every-day" Bible, the "prayed-over" Bible. This is the only kind of Bible that can light life's pathway.

Some one has said that there is nothing real, nothing solid, nothing satisfying, but in Christ. Outside of Him "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

January 20, 1924.

Topic: "Moses Called to Deliver Israel."—Ex. 1:1-12:36. (See Print Ex. 3:1-12.)

The lines had fallen unto the Israelites in hard places. And this, in spite of the fact that they had multiplied and had learned some valuable lessons. For during the four hundred years that had passed since the time of Joseph, many important changes had taken place. Egypt had been overrun by the Hyksos, or "Shepherd Kings," for a long time, and when finallly a strong native dynasty had arisen and had driven the foreign invaders out of the country, there had been a reaction against all outsiders. Further, the new Pharaohs had no interest in either Joseph or his descendants, and they proceeded to enslave them and to exploit them. One of these pharaohs was a great builder, and he impressed the Israelites into the service of making bricks for his building operations. The hours were long, the work burdensome, the taskmasters heartless. The fortunes of the chosen people seemed at the lowest ebb, and the chosen land seemed only a mirage of the hot desert sands.

But God was standing within the shadow, "keeping watch above His own." He had seen the afflictions of His people that were in Egypt; He had heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters; He knew their sorrows, and He was planning to come down to deliver them out of the hands of the Egyptians, and to bring them unto that land, that good land, flowing with milk and honey. But He was to work in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, for this was to be done by a man, or rather by God through a man. There was a man sent from God named Moses, and it was through this man Moses that God was to deliver His people from Egypt.

The lesson today concerns itself with that man Moses. It tells of his birth and of his extraordinary experiences as a babe hidden in an ark along the river's bank, of his discovery and adoption by Pharach's daughter, of his education and experiences at the court, of his identification with his fellow-men, and his rash act in a vain endeavor to free them, and his consequent flight, of his marriage and long sojourn in a strange land, of his call and response, and of his dealings with the proud and hard-hearted Pharaoh, involving as it did miracles and wonders, and finally of the departure from Egypt. Here is material enough for an instructive, thrilling and inspiring "six (or sixteen) reel" scenario. How can we hope to present it in a half-hour period on Sunday!

The emphasis is apparently placed on the call of Moses by the lesson committee, for only that part of the lesson is printed. And it is as it should be, for it was the greatest event in Moses' life. It was the climax of all that had gone before, and it was the key to all that followed. As in the case of Isaiah, it was the event that gave meaning to his entire life. It was because Moses had a vision of God, and because he was not disobedient to that heavenly vision, that human and divine history was written in imperishable letters in the human race. Teachers might well emphasize the meaning of this event and of its significance, both for Moses and for us. The lesson affords an excellent opportunity to help young people to interpret "a call."

A Few Teaching Points.

1. God always has a vision for those who have open eyes, and a message for those who have open ears and hearts.

2. God's messages and visions often come in the common-place activities of life.

3. God delivers His people through men.

4. Human needs constitute a call.

5. God identifies Himself with His suffering children. We serve Him by serving our fellowmen.

6. There is a wrong way to do a right thing. Moses was earnest and zealous when he killed the Egyptian, but God's way was not the way of force.

7. A great work demands great preparation. Moses spent forty years in preparation.

8. Opportunities come to those who have the right spirit.

9. "These opportunities usually lie along the ordinary path of life."

10. The great question when God calls a man to a great work is not "How dare I assume such a great responsibility?" but "How dare I evade it, since God has called me to it?"

11. Take time to be holy. Think on these things. Moses did a lot of thinking out there in the solitude. There must be time for the quiet hour in the fruitful life.

12. God is with those who undertake His program. "Certainly I will be with thee."

13. Those who would be of largest service to God must be willing to put love of ease and self-preferment last.—Heb. 11:24, 25.

14. God is a living Presence, not an abstract principle.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

January 20, 1924.

Topic: "Gospel Triumphs in Japan."—Acts 10:34-48.

The story of Christian missions in Japan is a dramatic mingling of tragedy and triumph. I have just read a part of that story in two books on Japan which I have, and my heart burned within me as I caught something of the spirit of faith and courage and indomitable will of those early pioneers who made possible the gospel triumphs in Japan. I would that I had the time and the space to recount the thrilling and romantic, yes and tragic, experiences of those devoted followers of the Master who "had the leaven in the lump" and planted "the mustard seed," and thus made possible the splendid victories of the gospel of the Son of God. But I can do no more than give a mere outline of these history-making events.

The story begins with Xavier, a pioneer member of the Jesuits, or "Society of Jesus," who landed at the southern tip of Japan in 1548, and who labored for two years with but little success, for the people were very suspicious of any outsider. But Xavier did secure a few converts, among them a young prince, who was so impressed by a picture of Mary and the Child Jesus that he fell on his knees and commanded all his followers to do likewise. And these converts were so zealous of the faith that by the end of thirty years they had multiplied into 150,000, and within fifty years to 500,000. Their faith was lacking in depth, however, and when opposition arose, many of them recanted and went back to their old religion. There was a great military faction which ruled Japan between 1570 and 1620, and this faction set about to exterminate the new religion. In 1587 a national decree was issued, ordering the expulsion of all foreign priests and the closing of all Churches. Again, in 1614, another decree was issued, ordering all members of the religious orders, whether foreign or Japanese, to be deported; and finally, in 1638, after quelling a rebillion in which 37,000 persons were massacred on account of a so-called Christian rebellion, the rulers erected over the ruins of a castle a stone with this inscription: "So long as the sun shall warm the earth, let no Christian be so bold as to come to Japan; and let all know that the King of Spain himself, or the Christian's God, or the great God of all, if He violate this command, shall pay for it with his head." Thus what gave promise at first of being a great Christian movement, seemed to have ended in complete failure.

But God's plans are not so easily thwarted, and as soon as foreign residence was permitted accordiny to the treaty growing out of Commodore Perry's visit, missionaries pressed in. They faced a formidable array of obstacles—lack of knowledge of the language, suspicion, imperial decrees against Christianity, civil war—but these missionaries were men and women of stern stuff, and none of these things moved them. They translated the language, wrote dictionaries, preached and taught, and endured opposition and even persecution with a spirit like unto the Son of God. The stories of some of the missionaries read like unto the Book of Acts. Any one who reads them can never doubt that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation, to the Jews and also to the Japanese and to us. (Read Chapter V in Fisher's Creative Forces in Japan for some striking examples.) And yet, after thirteen years' effort, these missionaries had only ten Japanese converts who had received baptism. The seed had been sown, however, and within a few years there were a large number of Christians, and Christianity made rapid progress. And then, about 1889, a sharp reaction set in, due to resentment toward foreigners, the shallow nature and nurture of the Japanese Christianity, the inroads of extreme and untested "German higher criticism," and the rather hot-headed demand of certain Japanese Church leaders for independence of the missionaries. But there was a vital element in Japanese Christianity, and with the opening of the twentieth century the whole Christian movement seemed to turn a sharp corner and to enter upon a pathway of steady growth.

Some of the triumphs of the gospel in Japan are as follows:

In 1864 the first man, and in 1869 the first woman, were baptized into Christianity. Now there are 120,000 Christians in Japan.

In 1872 the first Christian Church (a Protestant Church) was organized in Yokohama. Now there are 1,350 Churches and over a thousand more places where Christianity is regularly preached.

Sixty years ago, Japan's only hope of learning Christianity was through foreign missionaries. Now there are over 4,000 native Japanese Christian workers of all sorts, many of them with the best training.

The Japanese Christian Churches are doing missionary work among other peoples—the Koreans, Formosans, Marshall Islanders.

The Sunday School enrollment was 64,910 in 1905; it was 170,169 in 1921. And the World's Sunday School Convention met in Tokyo in 1920. (The emperor and empress gave $25,000 toward the expenses of the convention.)

Christian school, Christian literature, Christian student pastors, Christian kindergartens, Christian hostels (a home or social center where a few Christian students live) are other examples of gospel triumphs in Japan.

What man has done, men can do. And these triumphs are but challenges to greater efforts, especially in view of the pressing need in Japan caused by the terrible earthquake. What is your Church doing? What is your Christian Endeavor Society doing?

THE CROWDS ATTEND.

The Virginian-Pilot (Norfolk, Va.), December 24, 1923, says:

Nearly 100 persons participated in the Christmas pageant, "The Star Shone," presented last night before a large audience in the First Christian Church. The pageant was a portrayal of the birth of Christ, and was highly impressive, according to persons who witnessed it.

Leading characterizations were taken as follows: The story as revealed by prophecy, Mrs. Edward Jones; the story as revealed by history, Miss Ruth Tillige; Rabbi Nathan of Bethlehem, Rev. John C. Truitt; Joel, his servant, Lee Hanbury; Benjamin, his son, Charles Mumford; shepherds, A. L. Granger, Shelby Ballard, Howard Cannon and Oliver Hanbury; wise men, T. L. Fulcher, J. S. Kagey, and J. T. Steele; the rabbi's wife, Miss Edna Pierce; Marcus, a Roman soldier, Paul Kagey, Tullius, a Roman soldier, Guy Beal.

Costumes worn by the characters were in keeping with the historical period with which the pageant dealt, and added much to the colorful beauty of the scenes. A song service, in which appropriate selections were given, was an interesting feature.

The Church auditorium was filled to overflowing, and many persons were unable to gain entrance. Those in charge of the pageant were requested afterwards to repeat it at an early date, in order that those unable to witness it last night on account of the crowd might have a second opportunity.

The World Challenges the Church.

In these days it is the habit of the world to challenge the Church. For some reason, pleasure is found in hurling insinuating questions and accusations of failure at those who believe in the Christian faith. Those who do so do not know the changes that are rapidly coming over the conception the Church has of her responsibility and the immensity of her task. Indeed, if there ever was a time when the Church had an enlarging conception of her work and of her program, and a desire for enlargement of organization, and an increase of resources, and a lifting of her spirit, is today. She is calling upon all of her forces as never before to pull together; to be strong and never to be afraid. Her popular phrases are: "pull together" and "pull to win," "make sacrifice hits when necessary."

It is the conviction of a growing constituency that religion must not occupy a subordinate place in the life of the nation. Those who are leading the destinies of the Church have a conviction that it must not evade or ignore any imperious challenge that the world might make that is worthy of our consideration.—W. Christian Advocate.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The children at the Orphanage had a very happy Christmas. The friends of the Orphanage sent them many little remembrances to make them happy.

Mr. W. W. Brown, of Burlington, sent us six large turkeys for Christmas dinner; Richards Bros. and E. W. Cather, of Winchester, Va., sent us eight barrels of apples. The First Christian Church, Norfolk, sent presents for each child; Franklin sent a box of presents and a bag of shelled peanuts. Henderson sent two barrels of flour, and many others sent in to help make it a joyful Christmas. One of the happiest occasions was in the baby home on Christmas morning, after the little fellows were put to bed on Christmas Eve night a Christmas tree was prepared for them. The Y. W. C. A. girls at the college had bought presents for each of the children, and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mrs. N. G. Newman, and Miss Mary Graham Lawrence and Gwendolyn Patton were appointed a committee to put the presents on the tree, which had been sent in for them.

Rosemont Sunday School sent Dr. G. O. Lankford a check to invest in Christmas toys to make the children happy; among many other things, he purchased a nice wagon with a bed and seat, and it was placed at the bottom of the tree. When the committee had finished their work, the tree was left for the many expectations of the children on Christmas morn. The superintendent went over at 5 o'clock in the morning and saw that the room was warm and comfortable before the children were allowed to come in the room from their bed-rooms. At 6 o'clock they were up and dressed and ready to take a look at what "Old Santa" had done for them. Before any one touched the tree they had some pretty Christmas songs and recitations, and a real nice little service; then they had the Christmas tree and the names were called out and each child received their little gifts. It was a very happy occasion, and a joy to see the many faces wreathed in smiles of real happiness.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Henderson Church, white gifts; Burlington Sunday School, N. C., white gifts; Mebane Bedding Company, 2 mattresses; Victory Class, Winchester, Va., towels, books, nuts, candy, oranges, apples, 1 pound cake; Roanoke S. S., Ala., 12 gals. syrup; Durham S. S., N. C., Apples, oranges, 1 dress, 1 checker-board, 1 box paper; Waverly Christian Church, Va., white gifts; Mrs. W. R. McKinney, 1 quilt; Home Economic Class, Monticello, N. C., 1 dress, 2 night dresses; Ladies' Auxiliary, Monticello, Ind., clothing.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

Manson, N. C., R. 1,
December 25, 1923.

DEAR BRO. JOHNSTON:

We are four little children, from 6 to 12 years. We are enjoying our Christmas gifts and wish to have the little Orphan children share our pleasure, so inclosed please find check for $3 from your friends,

LEE, ROZELLE, THOMAS, NORMAN HILLIARD.

P. S.—Papa sends the check, but we gave papa our money.

I am glad you write to me. I hope you will write each month. If many little cousins would write it would make our work more interesting.

"UNCLE CHARLEY."

REPORT FOR DECEMBER 27, 1923.

Amount brought forward		$20,871.05
Children's Offerings.
Lee, Rozelle, Thomas & Norman Hillyard.		3.00
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Palm Street, Greensboro	$ 4.25
Henderson	5.61
Morrisville	2.00
Shallow Ford	3.16
		15.02
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Centerville	$ 2.00
Christian Temple, 4 quarters	30.88
Mt. Carmel	3.75
		36.63
Baby Home Pledge.
U. C. Woodlief, Henderson, N. C.		5.00
Thanksgiving Offerings.
J. F. Parker and wife, Ala.	$ 5.00
Jr. Class, Lebanon S. S., N. C.	6.25
First Church, Greensboro, add'l	16.70
Holy Neck, E. Va., add'l	30.83
Waverly S. S., Va.	22.51
Union, Southampton, Va.	15.00
Mrs. Newell	7.00
North Clayton, N. C.	12.85
First Christian S. S., Warren, Ind.	25.00
Beulah S. S., N. C.	13.75
Mt. Hermon, N. C.	5.00
Cash item	.41
		160.30
Special Offerings.
S. S. Class, Baptist Church	$ 14.00
Southern Convention office	6.05
Casweel Lodge, 539, A. F. & A. M.	60.00
Dr. J. F. Burnett, secy.	12.09
		92.14
Grand total		$21,183.14

Stirring Up the People.

Agitation on the subject of religion is good. It leads to earnest discussion, to the searching of the Scriptures, and to inquiry into the strength of the foundations on which we build. A dead calm is dangerous. The Lord wants us stirred up. He wants us to think, to speak, to act. There will be intellectual and spiritual growth for those faithful men who believe the Bible, and who will contend for the faith against all comers in high places and in low. The men who fear for their place in the Church or the school, who are ambitious to be regarded as scholars, who submit to be dominated by skeptical ecclesiastics will backslide; the Spirit of the Lord will depart from them. Verily, they will have their reward. They are selling their Lord, some of them, for less than thirty pieces of silver. They are putting Jesus Christ on the market and taking what they can get for Him. But the men who bravely meet the foe, stand for God and the Bible, preach a pure gospel with fearless, holy love and joy will have eternal riches; they will win souls and shine as the stars forever.—Exchange.

In Christ alone true and eternal joys are to be found; and "we begin to live when we begin to live in, live on, live with, and live for Him." And be not deceived when you begin to so live; it will be the beginning of a new life to you.

Some writer has said that a man is of no account till he begins to walk with God in the knowledge of full salvation and settled peace. How is it with you, dear reader?

TRIAL OFFER TO YOU.

Only 25c for Ten Weeks' Trial Subscription to Youth's Companion, America's Great Family Magazine.
(Regular Price $2.50 a Year.)

This liberal offer does not pay unless it leads you to become a regular subscriber. But when you have read these ten splendid numbers you will not wish to be without this great National Family magazine.

The thrilling Indian serial, "Buffalo Horn," by Frank C. Robertson, ten chapters, begins February 14th. If sold in book form, would cost $1.50 or more. You get also "The Pearls of Quohoggar," a serial in four chapters, by C. A. Stephens, the dean of Companion story writers; thirty or more interesting short stories; and articles to interest all members of the family, and instruct them as well.

The Youth's Companion is appreciated and enjoyed by the old as well as the young. It is always clean, patriotic, interesting and instructive.

It does make a difference what your family reads. The Youth's Companion affords the best of interesting, clean fiction, able editorials, special contributions by leading world workers, the doctor's corner, household helps, special pages for boys, for girls and for children. You will be immensely pleased. Send 25c stamps for ten weeks' trial subscription to

PERRY MASON COMPANY,
885 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

GODWIN—HARRISON.

On December 22nd, at the home of the writer, Mr. Verber Godwin, of Portsmouth, and Miss Edna Harrison, of the same city, were united in marriage by the writer, at 9 o'clock P. M., in the presence of a few of their most intimate friends.

The bride wore a coat-suit of Poiret quill, with hat and gloves to match. She carried a corsage of Bride roses. They will make their home in Portsmouth, Va. We wish for them success and happiness.

W. L. WELLS.

NORFLEET—MILLINDER.

On December 29th, Mr. James Lee Norfleet, formerly of Holland, Va., but now of Portsmouth, led to the marriage altar Miss Alice Millender, of Port Norfolk, Va. The marriage took place Saturday afternoon at 4:30, in the home of the bride's parents in South Broad Street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. F. Jones, the bride's pastor and pastor of the Port Norfolk Baptist Church.

Miss Millender is an attractive and accomplished young lady, and a Sunday School teacher in her Church. Mr. Norfleet is a splendid and capable young man. He holds an important position with the A. P. Company line of stores. He is a member of the Christian Church, and superintendent of the First Christian Church Sunday School, of Portsmouth.

After a wedding trip North, Mr. and Mrs. Norfleet will make their home with the bride's parents. These are fine Christian young people, and their many friends wish for them a long and happy life.

W. L. WELLS.

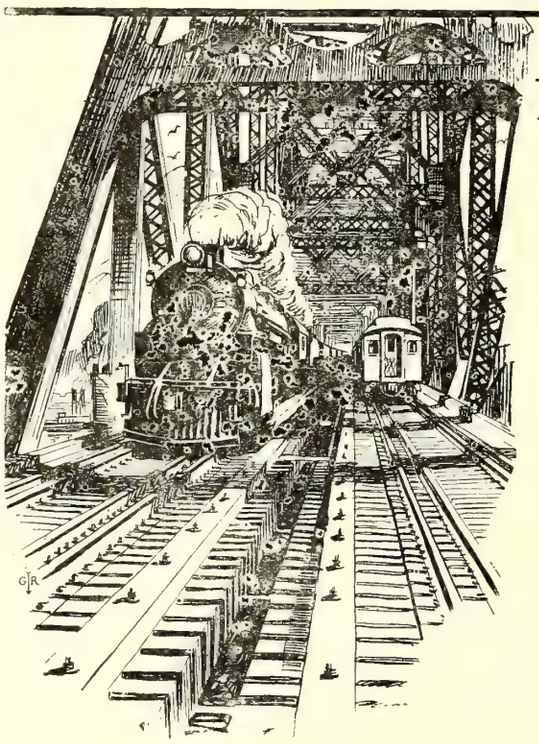
New local emergency paper money, based on rye values, issued by the Agrarian Union in Pomerania, has printed on its face the words "Not valid in Jewish hands."

Sweden expects to electrify all of its railway lines within ten years.

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
Business College
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 114 W. MAIN STREET.
CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

WHEN WINTER COMES
a handy package of Brown's Bronchial Troches is as necessary as warm clothing. Quickly relieve coughing, sore throat, loss of voice and kindred troubles. A real REMEDY—not a candy At druggists.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON, BOSTON, MASS.
Gen'l Sel's Agents: H F Ritchie & Co., Inc.
New York London Toronto
BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH AND VOICE LOZENGES
IN 3 SIZE PACKAGES

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Making new capital work for the South

The margin between the cost of producing transportation and the price received for it is so small that it requires the utmost efficiency of management, and the most carefully directed expenditure of new capital, to safeguard even a small return on the investment.

In no other large business enterprise is so great an amount of capital risked for so small a return as in railroad transportation.

The $285,000,000 of new money that has been put into the Southern Railway System in the past twenty years has been largely devoted to increasing capacity and promoting operating efficiency.

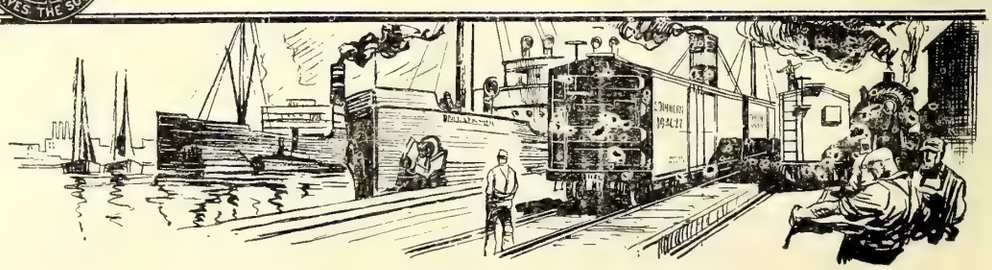
We receive many requests for the elimination of grade crossings, the construction of monumental passenger stations, and other non-revenue-producing improvements. The communities we serve naturally desire to have as much of this work done as can be safely financed, but they have recognized that their interests will best be served by expenditures which produce more and better transportation.

It is only because new capital has been expended on productive improvements that the Southern Railway System today is an efficient transportation machine and an asset to the South.

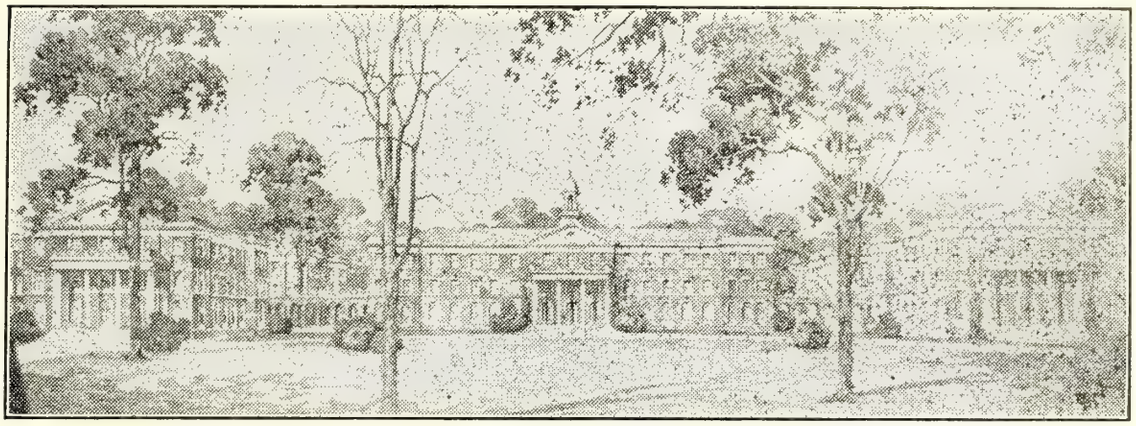
New $3,500,000 bridge, crossing the Ohio River into Cincinnati, one of the northern gateways of the Southern Railway System.

Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.

The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH



Elon is Building for the Future



Library Building — Auditorium — A GREATER ELON — Administration Building — Religious Activities — Science Hall

Our College is erecting these new buildings. Fire makes it necessary to do so.

Many Churches have already sent in their "College Day" offerings. How little can yours give and please God?

The Convention asks you to average one dollar per member. Are you a slacker or a worker?

Send your contribution to DR. T. C. AMICK, Elon College, N. C.

We are counting on you.

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Name .....
Address .....
Shipping Point .....
(Please write distinctly.)

A man asked a friend, who was hard of hearing, if he would lend him five dollars, to tide him over Christmas.

"What?" asked the friend.

"Will you lend me ten dollars?"

"Oh, yes," replied the friend, "but I wish now I had heard you the first time."

Winning plan for Edward W. Bok peace prize proposes the immediate entrance of the United States into the permanent court of international justice and co-operation with the League of Nations under specific conditions.

"A Hearse is a Poor Vehicle to Come to Church in—Why Wait?" This sign on the bulletin-board of the St. Andrew's United Brethren Church, of Des Moines, started the congregation talking—and going to Church.

A rare apple tree, valued at $5,000, stands on a mountain-side in West Virginia. It is protected by a burglar-alarm cage and is guarded against harmful insects and foraging animals.

Two hundred and ninety-eight vessels of the American Merchant Marine were lost during the year, 139 were sold to alien flags, and 628 were abandoned, their tonnage being: lost, 127,584; sold, 218,401; abandoned, 142,916.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

WINTER EXCURSION TICKETS
TO
RESORTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST

PLAN YOUR WINTER TRIP NOW.

Consult Ticket Agents, or
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

FORDS run 34 Miles on Gallon of Gasoline
Low Gear Seldom Used with Air Friction Carburetor

And we guarantee all other cars nearly double present mileage, power and flexibility, make hills on high formerly climbed on low. Models for any car, truck, tractor, marine or stationary engine. Makes old cars better than new. See our wonderful mileage guarantees for other cars.

Ford.....34 mi.	Reo.....24 mi.	Chevro't..32 mi.
Buick 4...30 mi.	Chalm'rs...23 mi.	Mac'l (25) 30 mi.
Buick 6...24 mi.	Olds, 6...23 mi.	Nash 6...23 mi.
Hudson...30 mi.	Paige 6...20 mi.	Lincoln 8..17 mi.
Hupp.....25 mi.	Oakland 6..24 mi.	StdbkrLt6 23 mi.
Dodge....28 mi.	Overl'd 4..32 mi.	Cole 8.....17 mi.

If your car is not mentioned here send name and model for particulars and our guarantee on it. Agents wanted.

AGENT ON 30 DAY'S FREE TRIAL

You can drive any car in heaviest traffic without shifting gears. Starts off on high in any weather without priming or heating—no jerking or choking. No more fouled spark plugs or carbon in cylinders. No leaking of gas into crank case. Try it 30 days on our guarantee of money back if not entirely satisfied. No strings to our guarantee. YOU ARE THE JUDGE. Anyone who can handle a wrench can attach it. No boring of new holes or changing of operating mechanism. Write today. AIR-FRICTION CARBURETOR CO. 196 Raymond Bldg. Dayton, Ohio, U. S. A.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

DEEP-SEATED FRECKLES
Need attention NOW or may remain all winter. Use the old and time-tried guaranteed treatment that has given satisfaction to millions of women for over 15 years, and rid yourself of these homely spots. Ask for
Othine--Double Strength
At all Druggists and Department Stores
OTHINE LABORATORIES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

PELOUBET'S
Select Notes
By AMOS R. WELLS, Litt.D., LL.D.
Golden Anniversary Volume
For half a century this Sunday School Commentary has been the constant helper of millions of Sunday School teachers, and the 1924 volume finds itself at the very pinnacle of its usefulness and popularity. A sale of over three million copies is a record which speaks for itself.
Send for the first lesson of 1924
Price $1.90 net $2.00 delivered
W. A. WILDE COMPANY
120 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

ROGERS.

Mrs. Sarah Saphronia Rogers, daughter of the late William James and Pheba A. Murry, was born July 22, 1857, and died December 31, 1923, aged 66 years 5 months and 9 days.

She was united in marriage to Franklin P. Rogers December 4, 1879. Her husband, one daughter, Ava, and many relatives and friends survive her.

In early life she confessed Christ and lived in the hope of a blessed immortality in Christ when life's work was done.

She was a devoted wife, fond mother, and a good neighbor. The funeral services were conducted from Long's Chapel Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Roberson, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Mr. Apple, of the Christian.

Her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery, where it awaits the resurrection morn.

P. H. FLEMING.

Burlington, N. C.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

C5453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

C5453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"

1536 East Broad

Richmond, Va.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1924. | NUMBER 3.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

P. Watson 419
851-27th St.,

Oil Supply Not Exhausted.—

While experts tell us how soon the world's oil supply will give out, dispatches from Moscow tell of oil deposits found every day or two in Siberia, and elsewhere. In Kamchatka, Professor Polsvoy describes "great sources of oil, so plentiful that it could be squeezed from the clay."

Better than Bok's Peace Plan.—

Anton Lang, who for years has played the part of Christ in the Oberammergau Passion Play, has a peace plan considerably better than the one that cost Mr. Bok $50,000. "Faith and toil and helping one another" is Herr Lang's formula. It's a good one, with more Christianity in it than in the whole League of Nations.

Tut-ankh-Amen's Sarcophagus Uncovered.—

The nest of shrines in the inner chamber of the tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen, Pharaoh of ancient Egypt, now has been dismantled and carefully removed, and Howard Carter and his assistants have had their first glimpse of the magnificent stone sarcophagus which contains the body. The archeologists were satisfied that the body had been undisturbed since its burial 3,200 years ago, and expected the coffin to yield important data regarding ancient Egyptian life.

Congress to Take Up Arms Sales.—

Opponents of arms sales prepared to carry the fight to the floor of Congress, and several resolutions to prevent such sales were being drafted. One was a joint resolution written by Representative Benjamin L. Fairchild, a prominent Republican member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and proposed that the Harding declaration against the sale of war equipment to any foreign power should be "declared to be the permanent, settled power of the United States, to be known as 'The Harding Doctrine.'" Mr. Fairchild denounced the sale of supplies to Obregon as equivalent to "armed interference" in the affairs of a foreign country, and as calculated to engender ill-feeling against the United States. In the Senate also the question was to be brought up, and a strenuous fight is in prospect.—Selected.

The Peace Award Referendum.—

Briefly summarized, the propcsitions which the author of the successful manuscript submits to be voted upon are: (1) that the United States shall immediately enter the permanent court of international justice; (2) that, without accepting membership in the League of Nations as it now exists, the United States shall co-operate with the league in the capacity of "a body of mutual counsel," under conditions which amend Articles 10 and 16 of the league by substituting moral force and public opinion for military force and economic pressure. The Monroe Doctrine is also to be safeguarded and the United States released from any obligation under the Versailles treaty, unless such is authorized by act of Congress. It is also specified that the league membership should be open to all nations, and finally, that the present methods and provisions of international law should be developed in proportion to the need.

This is the great question which is now submitted to the American people, through the press and its allied agencies, to vote upon. To do this effectively, all that is necessary is to put your cross mark (X) of approval or disapproval in the square indicated on the ballot. After you have marked your cross in approval or disapproval, you are requested to sign and mail the ballot promptly to the address given.

Every Christian a Reactionary.—

In an address at Columbus, Ohio, recently, Dr. Robert E. Speer made a brave effort to keep the Protestant Church together—a most commendable effort to be sure—but the means were inadequate for so stupendous an undertaking. He said every Christian should be a reactionary, a radical, a liberal, a conservative, a fundamentalist and a modernist. They may be all true, in a certain sense, but not in the sense in which these terms are generally used nowadays. It will take more than piling up a lot of names in which they are used in a way which means something other than the sense in which they are specially used. Used in that sense, they cannot be made to mean something that every Christian should be—for no one man can be all of these kinds of a Christian, using the words in the sense in which they are really used nowadays. To say a man is a reactionary, a radical, a liberal, a conservative, a fundamentalist and a modernist would be to make a Christian a "spotted" creature. We like to be as broad and as brotherly as the Bible authorizes us to be, but really if we were all of these we should have to stop and ask some one to tell us what kind of a Christian we are, for if we were all of these we should not know just what we are. We are with you, Dr. Speer, in the desire to keep God's people together on a basis of truth, but if we should try to make all of us bear all of these names—well, we do not see how it could be done.

National Bank System Doomed.—

"It needs but a slight acquaintance with American banking," says the Pacific Banker, "to be conscious of the fact that a perceptible movement is on to change from the national to the State banking systems. A leading banking paper in Boston is running a series of editorial articles under the head, 'Are the National Banks Doomed?' In his annual report, issued this week, Controller Dawes asks the same question."

Here is a point in the conduct of public affairs emphasized by a condition in the banking business of which little information has leaked out, but of which the banking fraternity is fully aware. The Pacific Banker tells us the matter is the subject of keen interest in conference and convention, and quotes extensively from opinions as to the cause, without, however, once alluding to the fact that the doom of all banks, especially all small banks, was sounded as a principal object of the Federal Reserve System. National banks were drafted into the Federal Reserve under duress. To those not blinded by the glittering promise of huge return, the forced membership is even yet abhorrent.

Banking changes will come in one of two directions. Either the money monopoly will be strengthened by still further restricting the power of issue, or there will be legislation giving all government obligations the circulation privilege, and permitting holders to issue government currency upon deposit and waiver of interest.

This will be a transfer of an interest-bearing debt to one costing nothing in usury, thus benefiting the whole people in more ways than one. —Exchange.

Cotton Estimates.—

On December 12th, the Department of Agriculture issued its final estimate on this year's cotton crop, the figures being 10,081,000 bales, a reduction of 167,000 bales from the estimate issued on November 2nd. The department's final figures were somewhat higher than cotton merchants had come to expect, but in view of the small carryover in August and the present rate of consumption, the crop is a very short one. In the Fifth District, both Carolinas appear to have raised larger crops than was expected from earlier estimates, the Department of Agriculture having raised the estimate for North Carolina from 1,010,000 bales on November 2nd, to 1,020,000 bales on December 12th, and for South Carolina from 740,000 bales on the previous date to 795,000 bales on the latter. The report lowered the estimate for Virginia, however, from 53,000 bales on November 2nd to 50,000 bales on December 12th. In 1922, North Carolina produced 852,000 bales, South Carolina 495,000 bales, and Virginia 27,000 bales. The success that many farmers have had with cotton in Virginia this year, together with the high prices being realized for the crop, has aroused much interest in cotton growing in the State, and it is likely that the acreage planted to cotton in Virginia will be larger next year than ever before.

NOTES-PERSONALS

WANTED: Short news notes from YOUR Church. Are you doing anything worth while? If so, tell the rest of the denomination about it. The other Churches want to know about YOU.

Mr. R. T. Brittle, of Dendron, Va., clerk of Union (Surry) Christian Church, paid THE SUN office a short visit the first of the week. We are always glad to have our friends call on us when in Richmond.

Rev. J. E. Franks is doing some fine work for THE SUN. You can do the same, Brother Pastor, if you will put forth the necessary effort. Your Church paper's success is essential to your success and to the success of the denomination.

The next session of the Southern Christian Convention will be held April 29 to May 2, 1924, inclusive. The place is to be selected by the executive committee. Any Church wishing to entertain the Convention will please communicate with I. W. Johnson, Secretary, Suffolk, Va.

Christ's message of good will is more than the presentation of a duty. It is a promise of success. Since God is love, good will can overcome disorder. A Christian settlement of every dispute can be found, provided men are ready to make the sacrifices justice may demand. No other proposal contains such promise. The victory of the strong may mean the triumph of wrong. The triumph of good will brings happiness.

Here is a portion for you, dear reader. We clip it from an exchange, and it may do you good to read its thoughts as applicable to human life. Read it and see if it will not make you think of things you have been delaying to consider:

"As we stand amid the sunrise glories of the new year there should be in us the zest and eagerness of men who have their hearts set upon a full day's work, or of bold and brave pioneers who hasten to subdue the wilderness or to explore continents which lie beyond the rim of the sea. What we need in this, as in every other new year, are spirits that will both dare and do. Let us be like Wilfred Campbell's pioneers:

" 'They feared no danger; saw no horizon dark;
Counted no danger; dreamed all seas their road
To possible futures; struck no craven sail
For sloth or indolent cowardice; steered their keels
O'er wastes of heaving ocean, leagues of brine;
While Hope firm kept the tiller, Faith, in dreams,
Saw coasts of gleaming continent looming large
Beyond the ultimate of the sea's far rim.' "

GREENSBORO C. E. UNION MEETS.

The first quarterly mass meeting of the year of the Greensboro Christian Endeavor Union was held recently at the Westminster Presbyterian church with a large delegation from all the societies of the union. Stokes Rawlings was re-elected president, and will head the Christian Endeavor in Greensboro again this year. The banner of awards committee made their report and awarded the banner to Grace Methodist Protestant church, for the best report of activities during the past quarter.

C. M. CANNON, Elon College, N. C.

BIBLE CLASS HOLDS WATCH NIGHT.

Several hundred persons were present at the watch-night service held in the People's Christian Church on New Year's Eve. The program was arranged by the Young Men's Bible Class of the Sunday School, and as usual did credit to themselves. The class president, C. R. Dempsey, presided during the evening.

The program commenced at eight o'clock with a social hour in the basement of the Church. The president welcomed the guests, after which the national anthem was sung, followed by prayer by the pastor and teacher of the class, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein.

Following the social program, light refreshments were served, after which all assembled in the main auditorium to witness the moving-picture entitled "Silas Marner," adapted from the famous book of that name by George Eliot. Between the films several hymns sung by Mr. Herman C. Taylor on phonograph records were played.

The watch-night service commenced at 11:30, in charge of Dr. Helfenstein, with the assistance of the Young Men's Bible Class. Dr. Felfenstein gave a short New Year's message in which he issued a challenge for every one to make the best of the New Year.

Just a few minutes before the midnight hour, when the old year faded out and the New Year took its place, Mr. Walter P. Carrow, in the garb of Father Time, with long hair, whiskers and scythe, as "1923," walked slowly down the aisle and upon the platform with fading candle. At the stroke of 12, Miss Harriet Vane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Vane, in the costume of a little fairy, as "1924," skipped merrily down the aisle and up to the platform, where she lighted her candle from the fast-burning candle of Father Time as "1923," after which he passed out of existence, and Miss "1924" held sway.

Eight members of the Young Men's Bible Class then lighted their candles from the candle of "Miss 1924," after which they lighted the candles of all those present, who had formed a circle around the Church. The service was very impressive and one long to be remembered by those taking part.—The Delaware State News.

THE LABORER IS WORTHY OF HIS HIRE.

That there is a scarcity of ministerial students is a lamentable fact in the Christian Church. There are various reasons given for this condition and various remedies recommended for the solution of this problem. Some say that the fact that preachers are not supposed to think, but rather to repeat the traditional dogmas of antiquity, is one reason that so many young men desire to enter some realm of service that stimulates creative thinking. Others claim that business has a stronger claim on our young men of talent and progressiveness because it affords greater opportunity for creative progress. There are not a few who are driven from the calling of the ministry because of the autocratic episcopacy of authorized or self-appointed bishops. The spirit of democracy in thought, as well as in administration, is rapidly growing in the American churchmen's mind.

The younger, aggressive generation are unwilling to take orders from a non-progressive papacy who would circumscribe their intellectual freedom and dictate doctrines which must be taught parrot-like to starving souls. New thought, new psychology, modern sociology, the better understanding of man and society have given the younger students of truth a better understanding of man's nature, a better science of human control, a wiser knowledge of human conduct than the ages that have preceded us possessed. For these reasons, many of the alert minds of our day steer clear of a field of action or service which would impose ancient ideas and methods of thinking or the lack of it upon them with authority and the threatening cudgel of heresy upon those who dare to differ in thought from the accepted traditions of the Church fathers. This condition explains the reason why the ministry appeals to the mediocre type of mind and does not attract many of the brilliant young men of later years.

Another reason why such a few aggressive young men apply for admission to the ministry is because of the unlimited amount of work that the minister is expected to do apart from the work of the ministry. This gives little opportunity for study and growth in mental, moral and spiritual development. The most fascinating experience that we ever enjoy in life is that which attends or results from development. When the minister is denied this joy and happiness which is the inspiration of our better natures there is little to inspire the minister to the better things of life.

The meager salary hat the average minister receives has much to do with young men not aspiring to the ministry. Not because the minister should be more concerned about his salary than the souls of his people, but because unless he has enough bread to keep soul and body together in the members of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. Just as the doctor, the school teacher, the trained nurse, and the parent are more concerned for the service rendered than they are for the monetary consideration, so shuld the minister have as his chief concern the salvage of his people and the redemption of the unsaved, but this he cannot do when he must earn bread at some other business for a living and preach on Sunday for a song.

I have made a study of the saleries paid the ministers of the North Carolina Christian Conference during the year 1922, and nd that the average salary paid was $509.99, or $9.81 a week for the ministerial service as reported in the "Christian Annual, 1922."

When we compare these figures with the remuneration received as follows: evangelical, synod, $17.30; Baptist, North, $25; Methodist Episcopal, South, 28.65; Methodist Episcopal, North, $29.44; Presbyterian, South, $28.58; Presbyterian, North, $34.60 a week—we can fully understand why so few young men enter the ministry in the Christian Church or go to other Churches where they can receive sufficient salaries to enable them to devote their entire time to the ministry.

The amounts received per week by factory workers and building trades are as follows:

Factory workers' salary (weekly)—
Boot and shoe workers	$25.04
Furniture makers	28.63
Auto makers	30.47
Foundrymen	31.51
Electrical workers	31.86
Iron and steel workers	37.81
Building trades' salary (weekly)—
Hod carriers	$30.14
Cement finishers	41.28
Masons	51.57
Plumbers	47.17
Plasterers	55.79
Bricklayers	55.92

This should be sufficient explanation why the trades attract so many young men from the ministry when they realize that these trades offer a living wage and the ministry does not. Many will use the sentimentalism of the good you can do and the authoritarianism of the injunction of a divine call, and pass on and not undertake to change conditions and provide a sufficient remuneration to enable the divinely called minister to answer the call with full-time service.

SAVED VERSUS LOST.

There has been a good deal written of late on the subject of "Eternal Life," some believing that there can be no falling from grace, and some that there can be no such falling after one has been truly regenerated under the quickening power of the Holy Spirit. The Scripture that gives us the promise of eternal life—that gives us such strong evidence that there is a possibility of falling from grace after being regenerated—are both true indeed and seem very clear to me.

I wish to say in the beginning that God is God, and has all power—nothing is impossible with God. There is no doubt that our Creator has a plan. Let us consider this plan somewhat. In the beginning, God made man in His own image, and he was then just as perfect as any mortal could be. In this condition he was placed in the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. But he did not keep it—he disobeyed God and fell fram grace.

Then God delivered the Mosaic law to Moses on Mount Sinai. This was to guide the children of Israel in the way of righteousness; but this failed. This brings us to God's last plan. Our Heavenly Father saw in His great wisdom that the only hope of redeeming His people was by the way of a great sacrifice, and He sent His only begotten Son into the world as a sacrifice. This He did to show His great love for fallen man. John 1:12 tells us that as many as received Him to them He gave power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on His name.

Again, in John 10:27, He says: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow Me." Again, in the 28th verse, He says: "And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." I believe this Scripture with all my heart. No man can pluck out my salvation, neither can I pluck out the salvation of another. But as I have stated, God has a plan, and in that plan He made every one his own free moral agent. He said: "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Of course, if man wills it he can pluck out his own salvation by disobeying God's Word. In that way he becomes to be like those spoken of in Matt. 24:12: "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." In the 13th verse of the same chapter He says: "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." It is also stated in Matt. 7:14: "Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Our Saviour knew that there would be many temptations that they would have to overcome when He gave them this passage: "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." It was our Lord's desire that all who were converted should continue in His Word.

Then said Jesus to these Jews which believed on Him: "If ye continue in my Word, then are ye my disciples indeed." If we fail to keep His commandments, then we shall be like the man Jesus was speaking to in Luke 9:62: "And Jesus said unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God."

So it seems very clear that there is a possibility of falling from grace after once being truly converted. Our Master made it very plain in Matt. 12:43, 45, when He said: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none." Then He said: "I will return unto my house from whence I came out, and when he is come he findeth it empty, swept and garnished. Then he goeth and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also to this wicked generation.

Then in Rev. 2:4, 5, we have these words: "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee because thou hast left thy first love." "Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do thy first works over again, or else I will come unto thee quickly and will remove thy candle-stick out of his place, except thou repent."

These passages speak of men as falling from grace in a very plain manner, and it seems to me that when any one makes the statement that no one, after being truly converted, can fall, does not know what he is saying, for the Bible teaches otherwise, and the Bible is right.

Ramseur, N. C. H. V. Cox.

[Never mind, Bro. Cox; just look out for Bro. J. Lee Johnson's explanation. He may give you some new light.—EDITOR.]

WOMAN'S AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary.

New Woman's Missionary Society Organized.

I had the happy privilege of visiting Bethel Church (Wake County) the second Sunday in December. Rev. J. Fuller Johnson is pastor of the Church, and Mr. W. S. Johnson, superintendent of the Sunday School. The opening exercise of the Sunday School was one of the best I have ever witnessed in any country Church.

At a meeting in the Church in the evening, a very promising Woman's Missionary Society was organized, with about as many men members as women. About twenty-five members were enrolled, and they hope to add more in the near future. Mrs. W. S. Johnson was elected president; Mrs. L. C. Mann, vice-president; Miss Blonza Hallman, secretary, and Mrs. Raymond Ausley, treasurer. We wish for them every success in their undertaking.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Christian Temple Church, Norfolk, is doing a splendid work, holding regular meetings with a large attendance. Miss Aurelia Manning is president. I had the pleasure of attending one of their meetings in the fall, held at the home of Mrs. J. E. Cartwright. Mrs. Cartwright has sponsored this work since its beginning, and these young people have learned to depend on her for sympathy and interest in their work.

Miss Rose Walker, president of the newly organized Young People's Society, at Reidsville, writes that they are holding interesting meetings, have added several new members, and expect soon to present the pageant "Two Masters" in the Church.

A letter from Miss Madeline Muse, president of the Young People's Missionary Society at Winchester, says that they are studying a book on Japan in the society; that they are preparing a special program to present in the Church and invite the Timber Ridge Young People's Society to attend. Also that they have voted to put a missionary paper, and perhaps two, in the public library in Winchester. These are splendid suggestions, and we pass them on with the hope that other societies may be able to use them.

In the same letter, Miss Muse says that the a campaign, which resulted in the addition of Christian Endeavor Society has recently closed ten new members to the society. Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, is very much interested in Christian Endeavor, and this fall conducted a class in expert endeavor, which many of his young people took.

Missionary Society Program.

1. Hymn.
2. Prayer.
3. Business period: roll call, minutes read, treasurer's report, report of program committee.
4. Devotional service: hymn, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go"; Scripture, John 15:1-15; sentence prayer, or special prayer for Japan.
5. Talk, "Missionaries of the Christian Church in Japan."
6. Paper or talk about the earthquake and reconstruction work in Japan.
7. Leaflet, "Home Life in Japan."
8. Song and closing prayer.

The meeting can be announced by an attractive poster, using pictures of Japan, with the following verse written below:

The Missionary Society meets at 3:30 Monday,
And we hope it will be a pretty day;
So please come, and don't say
That you haven't any way.

This verse was used by the Franklin, Va., society on cards sent out to the individual members to announce the meeting.

To those using the regular study books, this month begins a new line of thought, as the foreign book is scheduled for study next. "The Woman and the Leaven in Japan" is the title of the book, and it is hoped that many societies may even now decide to have a mission study class, using this book. Let us not forget to carry the thought of saving America and the world through our young people into our study of Japan. "The Woman and the Leaven in Japan" and "The Child and America's Future" can be obtained from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton Ohio, for 50 cents each.

For the members of the Christian Church it should be a joy to study about Japan, as it is our largest foreign mission point. We have besides the native workers, the following missionaries there: Rev. and Mrs. A. D. Woodworth, 26 Kasumi Cho, Azabu, Tokyo, Japan; Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Fry, Utsunomiya, Japan; Rev. and Mrs. C. P. Garman, 26 Kasumi Cho, Azabu, Tokyo, Japan; Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Q. McKnight, 41 Karahori Cho, Sendai, Japan; Miss Martha Stacy and Miss Angie Crew (both same address), 51 Hikawa Cho, Akasaka, Tokyo, Japan. These are named here with the hope that our women will familiarize themselves with our missionaries and the various mission points. We suggest that you write to any of these if you desire a letter direct from the mission field to read to your society, or if you merely wish to extend them your best wishes in the work which they are so nobly doing. They are your representatives, supported by you and your Church. Make them your very own by learning more about them.

You will be able to find an article in almost any daily paper or magazine about the earthquake and reconstruction work in Japan.

Be sure to have a real devotional period in every meeting. Never let business crowd this part of your meeting out. Make it real worship. Make your songs fit into the general theme of the meeting instead of selecting songs which are foreign to the idea you wish to present.

Subscribe to the Christian Missionary, Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio; price, 50 cents per year.

WHO BRINGS PEACE?

Men have ever talked of peace, dreamed about it, worked for it and prayed for it. Earth's brightest records are those which are concerned with the making and bringing of peace to mankind, peace in the home, in the workshop, in the State, and among nations.

WHAT HAVE YOU?

The inner man expresses itself through words and actions. Without many exceptions, the rule holds true that what one praises in another is evidence of its possession by himself. Goodness sees goodness, badness discerns badness.—J. L. Moneton.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

THOUGHTFUL WORDS FROM A WISE HEAD.

The editor of the Presbyterian Standard is a brave man, and a wise one as well. Here are some sober words from his heart and mind. We think so well of them that we are offering them for the careful thought of our readers. That editor says:

"Three questions have been put to us concerning these types of religion—the fundamentalists and the modernists. As more than one person may be interested in these questions, we deem it not out of place to give them a public answer. Before proceeding with questions and answers, it may be well to note that both terms are somewhat elastic. Some fundamentalists may include more doctrine among what they regard as fundamentals of the Christian faith than other fundamentalists. On the other hand, some modernists may minimize the essentials of Christianity more than other modernists. Bearing this in mind, it is still true that these two titles connote two broadly differing types of religion.

"1. 'What do you consider the chief differences between the fundamentalists and the modernists?' To this question we make answer that the one chief difference, giving birth to all other differences, is difference of attitude toward the Bible. The fundamentalists are anchored fast to the traditional view of the Bible. They believe that the Bible is the Word of God, that it is divinely inspired in such sense as that it speaks with divine authority. They make no distinction in this respect between Old Testament and the New; between the gospels and the epistles, between the words spoken by Christ, and the words written by His apostles. They accept the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, as virtually inerrant, and as the one infallible rule of faith and practice.

"With this view of the Bible, the only room for difference is in interpretation. It is the same voice of authority speaking to all, and as that voice speaks very plainly and distinctly in making known the way of salvation, the fundamentalists are agreed touching all the essentials.

"The modernists allow that God reveals Himself in the Bible, but they are far from allowing that He speaks throughout the whole Bible with an authoritative voice. They find a revelation of God's will in the moral and religious teachings of the Bible, but along with this they find in the Old Testament much legendary matter, and many superstitious beliefs and practices characteristic of primitive people. They find that the moral and religious teachings underwent a slow and gradual development. Consequently, we must correct the earlier teachings by the later. This means that all the teachings must be brought to the bar of human reason. That only is authoritative which the human reason declares to be worthy of acceptance. In a word, the modernists are rationalists. They accept no definite external authority in religion. While they treat the New Testament with more consideration than the Old, they will not allow that it has given us a clearly defined body of truth which is of binding authority for all time. As man is ever progressing from a lower to a higher stage of intellectual and ethical culture, there must be a new interpretation of truth for each succeeding age.

"Here we think is the point of divergence. The fundamentalists accept the Bible as infallibly inspired, and divinely authoritative. Consequently, they are firmly anchored to it. The modernists accept the Bible as an aid to reason in finding out the will of God, but it is authoritative only as reason assents to it, and the reason of one age cannot determine what shall be authoritative for the next. Consequently, the modernists carry no anchor.

"2. 'Do you think the fundamentalists are right in upholding what they believe to be the fundamentals of the Bible?' If we have defined correctly their view of the Bible, there can be but one answer to this question. If they believe, as our confession of faith teaches, that 'God, who is Truth itself, is the Author thereof,' they have no option in the matter. They dare not be disloyal to God, and they cannot be loyal to Him if they do not uphold His truth. Of course, it is altogether possible they may do this in an improper way. They may exhibit an ugly temper in dealing with modernists. A recent issue of the Christian Century quotes a contender for the faith as saying: 'Take the evolutionist, infidels, and these no-hell teachers out somewhere and crucify them head downward, and we will have a better country and world to live in.' We hardly think Jude would have us go quite this far when he exhorts us to 'contend earnestly for the faith.' But we think that the fundamentalists are justified in saying to modernists: 'Keep out of our pulpits, and organize a Church of your own. You must not wear our label, nor preach with our official sanction. Let those support you who believe in you. Don't feed from our larder while undermining our foundation.'

"3. 'What do you think the outcome of this conflict will be?' We believe the fundamentalists are fundamentally right. That is the same as saying that in their main contention they are on God's side. If this be true, they are bound to win. 'My word shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.' We may further say that nearly 2,000 years of history furnish a strong argument for the ultimate triumph of the 'old-time religion' based on the old-time Bible."

MUCH NEGLECTED.

Neglect is an open trait in the character of many people, but that is no license for the fact. In many instances, neglect is considered a perfectly justifiable excuse. If a thing has been neglected, we think it is all right, and none should make a disturbance over it. And yet, neglect is the source of many failures and the cause of much injury to others. The farmer neglected to cultivate his crop, and want was the result; the merchant neglected his business, and thereby lost it; the physician neglected his patients, and some of them died; the lawyer neglected the courts, and his business there, and he came to want; the student neglected his books, and he soon had a reputation for inaccuracy and slovenliness.

Neglect is the curse of the human family, especially is neglect a curse in the Christian life. Paul knew of this trait and its curse when he asked: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" If he had said, "How shall we live the Christian life if we neglect the careful study of the Scriptures?" the significance of the remark would have been quite as forceful, for of all the neglects in the Christian life, we know of none comparable to the neglect of the reading and study of the Scriptures—it is alarming and distressing! If you would know something of the neglect of the study of the Word of God, the first member of the Church you meet who has been in the Church for fifteen or twenty years, just ask him or her a few questions on the Bible, such as any young Christian ought to know well and surely, and you will likely be amazed at the ignorance of God's Work these answers will display.

Suppose you ask this question: "Who was Herod?" Would you be surprised to get this answer: "Herod was the ruler who helped Jesus to kill all the children in his country." Let us try another: "Who was John the Baptist?" "He was the man who helped to put Herod and his wife and her daughter in jail." A great many answers have been given to biblical questions that were no better.

One of the most neglected duties in the Christian life is the study of the Bible. Most of the homes in any Christian community have Bibles, one or more, and that is much to be commended. The thing that is not to be commended is the fact that these Bibles in Christian homes are so seldom used, so seldom studied, and when the Bible is not studied it is dishonored, and the man or woman who owns it is, speaking from the Christian standpoint, a mere weakling.

There are some Christians who cannot read at all, but they have hearing ears, and when any one reads the Bible in their presence they take it in and treasure it up as a precious legacy. They know more of the Bible and its precious truth than do many who have a Bible, with the ability to read it. The truth is, the greater portion of Church members who do not attend Sunday School, read their Bibles hardly at all, and no wonder they are ignorant of its teachings! There is hardly any duty in the Christian life that is more seriously enjoined than is the study of the Bible. Get your Bible and turn to Acts 17:11, and read:

"These were more noble than those of Thessalonica, in that they received the Word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so."

From that verse, we learn that the habit of Bible reading ennobled character and brought these Christians to the habit of daily reading the Scriptures. Daily Bible reading brought them to a condition where it was easy to believe the Bible—they read and received the Word with all readiness. That is one of the sure ways of coming to maturity in the Christian life. How many receive the truth now because they read the Bible daily?

In John 5:39, we read again: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

In this passage we have laid upon us the duty to search the Scriptures. Why? Because they teach and testify to us of Christ. Reading the Scriptures is a great blessing, but that is not the point in this passage. He wishes us to do more than to read them. He wishes us to search the Scriptures. Why? Because the Scriptures are filled with life—divine life—and that is what He wishes us to have, for He came to us that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly.

Notice one thing, viz: they were to search the Scriptures, and that is more than merely looking over the truths of God's Word. Jesus used the word ereunate. That is the word they used in that day, and it meant to search with the zeal and faithfulness which the hound shows when it is on the trail. Have you never seen the hound when trailing the fox? Did you not see how the dog puts his nose to the ground, and, giving no attention to anything else, he seeks to find the animal it is pursuing? That is what He means by search—put yourself down to the work in earnest, give no attention to anything but to finding the truth which shall make you wise unto salvation.

THE FRUIT OF THE TREE.

When I was a boy, on the farm in Old Virginia, if a piece of land got to be poorer than the land about it was, father used to tell us boys to give that a little more fertilizer and more attention, and then we would get better crops. This was practically always true, if what we put on it was suited to the needs of the land. What was true of that old farm was and is also true in other spheres of activity.

For instance, in the sphere of the Church of Christ. Years ago, we found the field of the Christian Church in poor condition to bring forth the best spiritual results. It really needed a treatment that would enable it to bring forth better and larger fruits. We did not understand the needs of the Church in that day, but we did understand that something was lacking to make the Church fruitful in good works. It needed at least a religious stimulant, that it might become more fruitful and serve a better purpose in the world.

It was just about that time that some of us undertook to introduce the missionary idea, not with the thought of helping our own work, but with the thought of helping the needy, both at home and abroad; but it marked the beginning of a new era in the life and work of the Christian Church in the Southern States, and it did just that for our work. It may seem strange to some of our readers, but it is true, that the more we undertook to do for others, the more the Lord did for us as a people. Then even we did not realize that the one had any necessary connection with the other. But we have learned better since those days.

The effect of helping abroad was so soon seen at home that we could not doubt that there was a reflexive influence at work—that what we did for the needy fields at home and abroad had a fine effect on the home base—the Churches upon which we depended largely for the means for helping outside.

This was something like forty years ago, but the effect still abides and our home work is in far better shape by many multiples than it was then. For instance, in that day we had no work except the struggle to keep our Churches alive. We had only a few Churches, and almost no enterprises as a denomination.

We had no missionary enterprise, we had no educational work, no schools or colleges, our Sunday School work was not very strong, our publishing interests were ordinary, and generally there was not much outlook. At length, our people began to wake up and to see the necessity of doing something more than merely maintaining our own existence. We first made an effort to begin a missionary work among our people. That work had not much more than got a good start when the Church generally began to brighten up with a desire to accomplish something for the Master's work. Then we undertook some work in the line of education. We started one little school, due largely, on the human side, to the great work of the late and beloved Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D. That was the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, and it did a good work for several years. Then, just before that, another educational enterprise was undertaken under the leadership of Revs. W. S. Long and his brother, Rev. D. A. Long. It was a normal college at Graham, N. C., and that did well for a number of years.

At length, the day came when our people were ready for something larger, and the effort to establish Elon College was begun. The Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., with some assistance, undertook the lead, at the call of his brother, in the establishment of this enterprise. The work was very trying. It was hard to raise money, and even harder to awaken interest in the people, but at last the work was well under way, and Elon College was at work. A few years have passed by since the beginning of this work.

Now, if we should attempt to present some figures by way of comparison, we might have a difficult task. However, we think we may be entirely on the safe side to say that since we began to work in missions our other enterprises have fairly surpassed anything we had dreamed of in our best days.

Our educational work, if possible, is five hundred times stronger than it was before we began to do missionary work. Our other enterprises have gone far ahead of our most sanguine expectations. Let us not forget that these enterprises have done their growing almost exclusively since we undertook to do missionary work. Our mission work itself has shown a fine development, and the whole Church has an outlook now that is heartening indeed, and the future is bright with the promise of yet better things with us.

PROSPERITY AND ITS OBLIGATIONS.

When the Lord prospers a people, He is getting them ready to meet some great need. If He gives us money, it is that we may give help where help is needed. If this be true, as we believe it is, then it is sure that the Lord has foreseen a great need in the world, and He has given the American people the prosperity to enable them to meet it, and we are glad to say that this country has done, at least in part, the work God has prepared us to do, as witness the great gifts which the people of the United States have sent to Europe and some other countries. The peoples there have suffered very much, many of them even in starvation, but as their need has been known to the people, the answer has been given. We clip the following from an exchange, as follows:

"Prosperity has reached a point never before attained in this or any other country. We still hear a great deal about the high cost of living and the low prices of farm products. But there are two facts that ought to be put over against these statements. Government experts tell us that in his counry there are now in operation 14,000,000 automobiles, and it is well known that a very large proportion of these belong to men who are supposed to be of moderate means. Another statement from the same source is that at the close of the past year there were 10,000,000 people in this country who had individual savings accounts in banks, and the total of these accounts was $3,700,000,000. This does not include any money on checking accounts, nor does it include money saved and invested in homes or otherwise. It should be borne in mind that practically all depositors in savings banks are persons of limited means, who are just saving a little at a time. Men of large means do not deposit their money in savings banks. God is blessing the people in this country in a wonderful way, and we in turn should be showing our gratitude to Him by bringing all the tithes into His storehouse. Then would there be an abundance for all of His work."

EDUCATIONAL CONDITIONS.

If you desire an interesting study, take up the matter of the educational conditions in the United States at different periods and you will find just such a study. These conditions vary with the passing years. One period they are one way, and at another period they have changed to another color. The Presbyterian of the South gives a glimpse at these conditions as they have been seen at different times, as follows:

"Religious conditions in State educational institutions have improved wonderfully in the last century and a half. Speaking on this subject, the United Presbyterian says: 'Statistics from eighty State institutions in 1921 shows that out of a total enrollment of 152,461 students, 130,486 had religious affiliations, while 21,975 made no statement regarding their religious life. This is very encouraging when compared with our early history, when even though the colleges were Church institutions, practically all the students were outside the Church. In Princeton, from 1778 to 1782, there was but one professor of religion. At Bowden College, in 1807, there was only one Christian. At Yale for four years there was but one, and but four or five in other years about the beginning of the century. Many of the students assumed the names of leading infidels and atheists. Often, every student was a professed infidel, or least outside of the Church. Bishop Meade, of Virginia, said, in 1811, that William and Mary College was a hotbed of French infidelity and that for many years in every educated young man whom he met, he expected to find an infidel.'"

THE NAME "CHRISTIAN."

In the late meeting of the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Dr. Robert E. Speer made a most singular but a fine statement regarding the name Christian. In delivering an address before the people on that occasion, he said:

"For my part, I want no label but Christian, and mean to try to call no brother Christian by another name."

We think that Dr. Speer has the right view of that matter, but we do not see how he can very well carry out his purpose in the matter of calling all peoples who profess Christ by no other name than that of Christian. That is just the position of the Christian Church—we say Christian is sufficient to give to any child of God. When you have called a man Christian, you cannot add to it in any way, for if a man is a real Christian you cannot add any other name that will mean more, or even so much, as the name Christian means. We do not believe that any one can make things better by choosing some other name other than that of Christian. That name links us on to Christ, if properly used, and we see no way any other name could equally rival it as a name for the people of God to wear. Would you rather be called Lutheran after Luther, or be called Christian after Christ? Would it seem to you better to be called Methodist after a method, or Christian after Christ? Or Baptist after water baptism, or Christian after Christ?

BRO. WHITE ANSWERS.

DEAR BROTHER:

I have just read your editorial in THE SUN of December 20th, in which you call upon me, with six other brethren, to return answer to the question of receiving or rejecting for membership in the Christian Church such a candidate as you have described under the caption, "Let Us Face the Facts."

You ask your imaginary candidate five questions, to-wit: (1) Do you believe in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world? (2) Do you believe that Jesus is the divine and only begotten Son of God? (3) Do you believe the Bible is the inspired Word of God? (4) Do you believe that Jesus came into the world to save sinners from their sins? (5) Do you believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven your sins? To all these questions, he emphatically answers, "No."

Should the Christian Church receive such a Candidate into her membership? I answer, unhesitatingly, no! Very sincerely, Windsor, Va. T. E. WHITE.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the features of the meeting of the executive committee of the Federal Council, in Columbus, was cordial letters from the President, other State officials, and ambassadors from many other countries. Such international recognition of the organization shows the place the council holds in the minds of the world. This is more than any denomination has or could have.

It is really a clearing-house for Protestant denominations. Banks have clearing-houses through which they co-operate to the advantage of all the members, though the clearing-house is not a bank and does not do a banking business. And now railroads have clearing-houses through which they adjust receipts for freight and passengers. In this way they co-operate successfully with loss to none and profit to all. Yet the railroad clearing-house is not a railroad, and does not do railroad business. Now, the Federal Council is not a Church, but an organization through which denominations can co-operate in the interest of the kingdom without loss to any one body. In such a meeting as was held in Columbus, denominations are out of sight; but the kingdom looms large in the thought, speech, and purpose of what is undertaken in the name of Christ. There is no place where great moral questions have such free discussion as in the executive committee, which is the Federal Council ad interim.

One of its chief concerns is to create public opinion against wrong and for right. To do this, it investigates conditions, reports findings through the press, and begets in the public mind an opinion that has weight with men. Such a public opinion was created against the twelve-hour day in the field on industry; and the United States Steel Corporation said that it changed from twelve hours to eight in response to the demand of public opinion. That corporation is the largest in the world, and would not have heeded any suggestion from a single denomination, no matter how large.

Public opinion is the mightiest force in any democracy. It gave us the eighteenth amendment, and it will enforce it; it gave more than ten million dollars of American money to relieve the conditions in Japan where the earthquake had killed a quarter of a million and injured seriously a million more; it has increased spiritual interest in childhood, so that now the Church receives its members from the age of less than twelve, though the additions came forty years ago from ages over sixteen.

Divisive questions are left out of view in the discussions in the Federal Council, and the activities of Christianity are made prominent. There is no conflict between science and religion; the conflict is between scientists and religionists, and neither fully understands the other. In this organization, the differences between men and denominations do not prevent friendly discussions of world questions, such as obedience to law, international justice, evangelical and educational work for all men, and the gospel of peace as against war.

Unity is a big item in the program of the council. Jesus said: "I and my Father are one," and He prayed "that they all may be one"; and Paul said: "Ye are all one in Christ." There is no unity out of Christ, and there is no division in Him. The spirit of unity is more manifest in this organization than in any other on earth. Here churchmen express what so many feel in their own denominations and dare not express at home, in the same way, lest they may be misunderstood. The atmosphere of a meeting has much to do with freedom of speech. Here the atmosphere invites friendliness, freedom of speech, and the attitude of all helps the individual in the expression of the unity that is in Christ.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

The expected has happened, and I say "the expected" advisedly. It always happens, and is to be expected, when the friends of Christ begin to quarrel with each other as to the method of exhibiting their friendship and allegiance, that the enemies of Christ arise and deal His cause foul blows. The quarrel in Germany between the conservatives and the higher critics, gave Nietsche opportunity to preach his doctrine of force as the final good of the social order, and the resultant was the World War.

The quarrel now between the fundamentalists and modernists, "to be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable of each word," recently declared an incisive wag, has given those who deny the authority and validity of Christ's teachings the very opportunity they are ever seeking to vent their contempt for His principle of love as fundamental in all phases of life and experience, and to preach their pagan doctrine of self-interest.

About six months ago, Lord Birkenhead was in this country deriding President Wilson's idealism. The partisan press hungrily welcomed his aspersions as another opportunity to strike at the broken and crippled man who has done more to gain expression for Christian ideals in international affairs than any man in history.

But this lord, emboldened by the "kindly" reception with which his criticisms of the great Christian statesman were received in this country, returned to England, and at the University of Glasgow delivered an address that is nothing more nor less than a frontal attack on Christianity. Fundamentalists and modernists alike acknowledge the validity and authority of the life, teachings and principles of Jesus. They differ on the interpretation of certain historical facts and in their quarreling over these facts they offer such pagans as Birkenhead the opportunity to ridicule the Christ they mutually love and serve.

Let me quote two passages from this twentieth-century pagan. "The school of idealism is the very antithesis of the school of self-interest, and yet nothing is more apparent than that, politically, economically and philosophically, the motive of self-interest not only is, but must be, and ought to be, the mainspring of human conduct." So much for private life.

When it comes to public life, he is equally explicit. "For as long a time as the records of human history have been preserved, human societies passed through a ceaseless process of evolution and adjustment. This process has been sometimes pacific, but more often it has resulted from warlike disturbance. The strength of different nations, measured in terms of arms, varies from century to century. The world continues to offer glittering prizes to those who have stout hearts and sharp swords; it is there, extremely improbable the experience of future ages will differ in any material respect from that which has happened since the twilight of human history."

Here is the insinuating, serpentine doctrine that the present lamentable controversy invites. And here is the doctrine the Church of Christ must unitedly combat. It will be a sad day for His house, if domestic infelicity should prevent His followers from marshalling all their strength against such infidelity as Birkenhead has hissed in the face of Christendom.

Let the warring factions of the Christian household read and ponder and act upon the teachings of Mark 9:38-40, and then they will find time unitedly to deal with such pagans as Birkenhead.

W. A. Harper.

MUNCIE (IND.) LETTER.

Interest in our work in remote sections is much more general and extensive than it was a few years ago. Our leaders are less local in their interest than formerly. Once their interest was confined largely to a given territory, and the enterprises and institutions of that section. A fortunate change has come. Vision has enlarged, and no longer do we think of ourselves as a conference, or convention, but as a great Church, representing the kingdom of Jesus Christ. It is not only true of our leaders, but of our people generally. It is suggestive, however, as a fact worthy of serious consideration that this is true only of that class who read our Church papers and literature. Our Church organs have been the primary and leading agencies in effecting this change which has brought us more into the real and important thought of the kingdom. The writer is out here in the Middle West, once so far away from our Southern fields and scenes of activity, but not so far now. I am taking for granted that friends, not of the writer only, but of the cause for which some of us have given, and are still giving, our lives are interested in the work over here. Having just completed our third year in this field, attended four annual conferences of which this Church is a member, and about twelve quarterly Conferences, I feel safe in saying that there has been real and solid progress made in the Conference during this period. It has been necessary for many of the leading ministers of the Conference to live on farms, do some farming, or engage in some other lines of secular work, which has handicapped them and made the best progress impossible. They are a class of sweet-spirited men, loyal to the denomination, and have filled a large place in their respective communities and fields of service. A few of the younger men who are well equipped educationally, and otherwise, are devoting their entire time to the ministry, and their influence is being felt in the Conference. The writer has found a warm friendship with the people of the Conference, and assurance of their interest in his work here at the First Church. While this particular field has many real problems, yet in many lines the interest is growing and indications are encouraging. The Christian Sun has been a wonderful inspiration and help to me personally, and its weekly visits have protected me against severe attacks of home-sickness. From my viewpoint, it was never before so good, nor served the enterprises of the Southern Convention better. I am thinking here, too, when with its present editor in charge in the early days of our mission work in the South, and the establishment of Elon College, it fought great battles for these great causes and sometimes against great tides. But the battles were won. But what real changes have come during the intervening years! The writer was ordained in a class of five young men by a presbytery of four ministers, and I am reminded here that Dr. Barrett is the only remaining member of the presbytery, and I am the only one remaining in the Christian Church of the class, one having suddenly died a few years later and the other three going to other denominations. Both The CHRISTIAN SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, our general organ, should have their subscriptions quadrupled, and by some means put on a self-supporting basis. If it ought to be, then can it not be? With a greeting and hearty God bless you, to friends of the dear old Southland,

MURDOCK W. BUTLER.

Muncie, Ind.

A CHRISTIAN: A COMMUNITY ASSET.

With a business man, a piece of property is either an asset or a liability. It is either profitable or unprofitable. In one's evaluation of the standards of value is the best evidence of his wisdom. In life, there are seen and there are unseen values. The Apostle Paul believed that the unseen were greater than th seen, for he says that the things that are seen are not so great as those that are not seen.

Of all values, either in the seen or the unseen universe, none is so great as the human soul. Christ Himself suggests this high value in the question in the end of the following observation: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" To him who knows what Christian character is, the ear-marks of Christian qualities places a human soul in the highest class of soul values.

From these observations, it is evident that a Christian person is a valuable asset to a community. It makes but little difference how rich a community may be in natural resources, forests, mineral deposits, water power, fertile soils, wholesome climate and the rest, if it be abundant in gold, and splendidly adorned with the arts of men, so that the richest harmonies of music, the most splendid of pictures and the most beautiful architecture and statuary—if all are there and Christian character lacking, it is but a gilded, showy, poor community.

If our prayer-meeting does not increase the sum total of Christian character in our community, it is profitless. But if there is real prayer, prayer of faith, in these gatherings each Wednesday evening, their value to the community commot be estimated. Not many persons attend, but that matters little. God, in a conference with Abraham, agreed to spare the city of Sodom if as many as five righteous souls could be found therein. The Christian soul of the twentieth century is as great a blessing in protecting a community as was the righteus soul in Abraham's day. Christ regarded His disciples, and we believe he so regards all who have saving faith in Him, as "the salt of the earth."

In thinking of some reasons why a Christian is a valuable asset to a community, it is not difficult to name several such reasons out of the experiences of the heart. The Christian is a man of prayer, and for that reason he is of worth to the community. The man of prayer brings blessings to the community that the gold of the millionaire cannot buy. The heart of prayer loves human souls, whether they be of friend or of foe. To hear one alone in the stillness of the midnight hour praying for you will melt your heart to tears, even though it be as hard as stone. A widowed mother was overheard so praying, by one of her little boys—praying that he might become a Christian man and a minister of the gospel. The discovery struck home to the boy's heart. He is an influential preacher in a city pulpit today. The prayer of the publican—"Be merciful to me, a sinner"—has always made a strong appeal to me as an example of the real nature of prayer. To live in a community of such hearts, one would not need locks on his doors to protect himself against felons and assassins.

Another reason why a Christian is of real value to a community is, he is of the Church and is for the Church! The Church has come to be so highly prized that few men, either saint or sinner, prefer to live beyond the pale of its influence. Of two men of equal powers of being a blessing to a community coming to make their home among you, you would prefer the one that upholds the Church to the one that does not. The Christian supports what the Church stands for with the best life he can command, although his actual living may fall far below his ideals. Such a man has more or less of spiritual humility, and is of value to the community.

The Christian is the highest type of integrity. But for his Christianity, this excellent quality of his character would be much lower. The negro race is seriously lacking in this quality. But with the negro and the natives of the West Indies also, integrity flourishes as the green bay tree, under the light of Christianity. The most highly Christianized nations are those wherein we will find this superior soul quality, integrity, most highly developed; so likewise is the community where Christianity abounds integrity doth much more abound.

There are other reasons why a Christian is a community asset, but with the three mentioned, viz: because the Christian is a man of prayer, because he stands for the things of the Church, and because he is a man of integrity, we believe that all will agree that this is enough. Enough to spur the prayer meeting to think a little more of the value that comes of developing stronger Christian character through the prayer meeting and otherwise, and of inducing other Christian people to make their homes in our community.

Elon College, N. C. W. P. LAWRENCE.

BRO. CARPENTER AND SECURITY.

DEAR BRO. EDITOR:

Bro. W. C. Carpenter has presented some Scripture to THE SUN which seem to refute the teaching of eternal security. To me, these Scriptures do not present the difficulty they once did, so I offer the following, hoping that it may be helpful to some. I would like to speak in detail on these passages, but space will not permit. I am also aware that there are Scriptures yet shrouded in mystery, and after all has been said, there are still other questions to be raised. Some of these Scriptures suggested by our brother, however, are simple enough and present no difficulty.

"Ye are fallen from grace," or "away from grace" (Gal. 5:4) does not carry the idea commonly believed. The Apostle Paul had preached justification by faith to these Galatians, and they had believed and "received * * * the Spirit" (Gal. 3:2), and had become "brethren" in Christ. Now, after Paul had gone, some Judaizing teacher had come behind him and taught these Galatians that they must keep the law of Moses and be circumcised. Paul's words, "Who hath bewitched you," with other words in this epistle, prove this. When Paul heard of this, he wrote the Galatian letter to try to anchor their faith in Christ apart from the works of the law. So he just said to them in substance: "If you are going to lay claim to justification on the grounds of circumcision, why, then, you must admit that it is not of grace. You are turned away from believing that you are saved alone "by grace through faith," and are trying to add low works to the finished work of Christ. It was not a question of losing salvation (for he admits their justification in the same verse 4), but the truth as to how they received it, "Ye are fallen away from grace," is about the equivalent here as if a Baptist were to leave his Church and join the Methodist, and the Baptist minister would then say to this person, "Ye are fallen away from baptism." He would not mean that the person had lost his salvation, but changed his attitude in respect to the teaching he had before received.

Second Peter 2:20, 22, to me presents no difficulty. Note just what is said: "Through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour." To receive "knowledge" of Christ does not mean necessarily to receive Christ. (This is also seen in other of the passages mentioned by Bro. Carpenter.) That is where so many are failing today. They are setting Christ Himself aside for His example or a "knowledge" of Him. Nothing but Christ Himself will do. Unless we receive Christ we will surely find that our "escape" from "the pollutions of the world" will not last, and ere long we will find ourselves, like the "sow that was washed," going back to the mud-hole. You may wash a sow all you please, but she is still a sow. God never calls His children sows or swine, but sheep and lambs, and they hate the mirey mud-hole. "His sheep hear His voice" and follow Him. "A stranger will they not follow." The difference between a "washed sow" and a sheep is the new birth.

Next we look at Matt. 12:43-45, and Luke 11:24-26, which cover the same ground. No difficulty here at all. It is just a plain case of self-reformation. Like a man I know, he has cleaned up his life for his family's sake and for decency's sake—stopped cursing and drinking, having sent out this unclean spirit, one of seven. But, notice carefully, while the unclean spirit is out, there was no Holy Spirit within, for his house is distinctly said to be empty. One day this evil spirit comes back from his "wanderings," and steps in to see how his old house looks. He finds that none other has moved in, so he again takes up his abode in this heart with other companions. Notice Christ's comment: "Even so shall it be with this wicked generation." Nothing of the kind is hinted at conceiving a Son of God. He is never "empty," but is ever the dwelling-place of the Holy Spirit (Jno. 14:16; 1 Cor. 6:19).

Now, the two references in Hebrew seem more complicated, but notice at the outset there is not a word about saving faith. In Heb. 4:6-9, there are clearly two classes mentioned: "Those once enlightened" and "beloved—you." The first advanced almost to the point of receiving Jesus, but did not. They seem to be described by our Lord in Matt. 13:20-21, "Heareth the word and anon with joy receiveth it, yet hath no root in himself, but dureth for awhile." Now, notice these in Heb. 6:9, designated as "beloved—you" have "better things"—"things that accompany salvation." Notice the plain reference to these two classes in verses 7 and 8. One produces fruit, the other "thorns and briers." "By their fruits ye shall know them."

In Heb. 10:26, it is "The knowledge of the truth." Pilate asked, "What is truth?" At another time, Jesus said: "I am * * * the truth." Did these receive "the truth" or a "knowledge of the truth?" If you read on in this tenth chapter of Hebrews, you will see clearly that he has two distinct classes in view. In verse 39, he clears up things when he said, "But we are not of them which draw back into perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul. I think there are many today who hear the gospel and "receive the knowledge of the truth," but refuse to accept Christ by blood atonement. They are never born again, for "whosoever is born of God doth not commit (practice) sin."

J. LEE JOHNSON.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

RELIEF AND RECONSTRUCTION IN JAPAN.

The Christmas offerings from the Churches have begun to come in, and we are grateful beyond words. We sincerely trust that any Church in the Southern Convention that failed to take the offering at Christmas time will take it at the earliest possible date. The following has been received:

Previously acknowledged through The Sun.		$349.16
Hopedale, N. C. & Va. Conference...	$ 6.50
Newport News, E. Va. Conference...	11.16
Mayland, Valley Ca. Conference.....	7.56
Whistler's Chapel, Val. Va. Conf....	5.42
New Providence, N. C. & Va. Conf...	11.55
Graham, N. C. & Va. Conference....	16.70
		58.89
Total		$408.05

A recent letter from Secretary Minton brings this paragraph: "Last report from Japan is to the effect that their first estimates as to reconstruction needs were entirely too small, but I still think that he figures I have made public will cover the need, though I do not see how we can well get on with less. The statistical report from Miss Stacy covering the Japan work was just recently received, and is certainly encouraging in point of converts, enquirers, attendance at services and money raised by the Japanese Churches on pastors' salaries. This will be published in the January Christian Missionary. The earthquake delayed it. I am praying much, as I am sure you are, that our people may respond heartily to this special appeal, and that this will in no way injure their giving to the regular work of our foreign mission cause."

I acknowledge, with gratitude, every dollar thus far sent in, and trust that responses will be very liberal, since the need is very great.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Elon College, N. C. Mission Secretary.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS THAT DID IT.

Three or four years ago our Southern Convention and our Sunday School Conventions and various Conferences began to vote and to urge that all our Sunday Schools in the bounds of the Southern Convention give one Sunday offering a month to the Christian Orphanage and one Sunday offering a month to missions. One by one our schools have been adopting this wise and well-deserving plan. No better plan for a Sunday School was ever adopted. It brings to the attention of the school the thought of caring for others and teaches the youth of the Sunday School that we should spend as much for others as for self in building up the kingdom and spreading the gospel. When a Sunday School gives two of its offerings a month for others and retains two offerings a month for itself for current expenses, it has done that which will inculcate a virtue and a benevolence that can never perish from the earth. Great is the pity that all of the schools have not yet seen their way to adopting this wise and worthy method. It is a pity beyond words, when any Sunday School will spend all the offerings that it takes on running itself and purchasing things for its own need. The schools that have not yet adopted this method will, in the months to come, do so, because, beyond question, it is the way of wisdom, growth and permanence. The amount sent for missions goes one-half to home and one-half to foreign missions, and the total amount received during the year 1923 was $5,384.50, and the following are the schools that did it, to every one of which and to every member of the schools we are personally grateful. May our Heavenly Father prosper them during the good year 1924, and may their number increase till all our schools are embraced in this goodly list.

Timber Ridge, Va.; Berea, Norfolk; New Lebanon, Va.; Linville, Va.; Johnson's Grove, Va.; Rock Stand, Ala.; First Church, Portsmouth; Graham, N. C.; Wadley, Ala.; Holy Neck, Va.; Pleasant Grove, Va.; Burton's Grove, Va.; Shallow Ford, N. C.; Winchester, Va.; Rose Hill, Ga.; Richland, Ga.; Henderson, N. C.; First Church, Raleigh, N. C.; Bethlehem, Va.; Leaksville, Va.; Durham, N. C.; New Providence, N. C.; Berea (Nansemond), Va.; Reidsville, N. C.; Liberty, Vance, N. C.; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.; New Elam, N. C.; Wakefield, Va.; Holland, Va.; Rosemont, Va.; High Point, N. C.; Bethlehem, Valley of Virgania; S. Norfolk, Va.; Beulah, Ala.; Dry Run, Va.; New Lebanon, Va.; Christiana, Ala.; Suffolk, Va.; Piney Plains, N. C.; Chapel Hill, N. C.; Ramseur, N. C.; Union, N. C.; Haw River, N. C.; Sanford, N. C.; Wentworth, N. C.; Lebanon, N. C.; Zion, N. C.; Ambrose, Ga.; Pleasant Hill (A), N. C.; Cragford, Ala.; Union, Va.; Antioch, Va., East End, Newport News, Va.; Wake Chapel, N. C.; Hanks Chapel, N. C.; Pleasant Union, N. C.; Monticello, N. C.; People's, Dover, Del.; Morrisville, N. C.; Palmyra, Va.; Franklin, Va.; Hines Chapel, N. C.; Citizen's Class, Elon College, N. C.; Turner's Chapel, N. C.; Roanoke, Ala.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Collections to January	$107,851.09
Collections for December, included in the above, amount to	1,188.32

We need $25,000 per month for January, February, March and April. J. E. WEST.
Chairman of Mission Board.

AN APPEAL TO NORTH CAROLINIANS.

I received my collegiate education at the University of North Carolina, and married one of the fairest daughters of Alamance County, so I feel a deep interest in your welfare and am going to have a heart-to-heart talk with you.

I take off my hat to North Carolina. She has won my admiration and respect. She is recognized today as probably the most progressive State in the South, if not in the Union. You have made rapid strides within the last twenty-five or thirty years, and the State is now reaping a bountiful harvest from the seed sown by wise leaders in the years gone by. You have come a long ways, and you ought to be proud of your record of achievements and present position among sister States.

When I first knew North Carolina she was near the bottom in illiteracy; the State University was only a second-rate college, with small faculty, out-of-date equipment, niggardly State appropriations, handicapped by strong denominational prejudices and competition, but with a loyal, capable and self-sacrificing faculty. Good roads had never been dreamed of, railroad transportation was limited, large cities were unknown, and the farmer had poor markets for the sale of his produce. Public health and sanitation were unheard of, population was small for a State of her area, and there was nothing particularly to attract immigration or prevent emigration.

Industrially, you had some men of vision who saw the possibilities of building up great manufacturing industries by water power (cheapest power at the time); they had faith in North Carolina as a manufacturing State, and invested in mills instead of mortageges. Other States looked for Northern capital to run their factories and mills, but North Carolina invested capital in mills and attracted outside capitalists.

At that time, North Carolina did not claim to excel in everything as they do now, but they were strong claimers in patriotism and State loyalty. They claimed to have been first in the Declaration of Independence (Mecklenburg), first at King's Mountain, first at Bethel, last at Appomattox, and to have furnished more soldiers than any State in the Confederacy. In the Spanish-American War they said a North Carolinian was the first to shed blood, and in the World War I will grant without argument that Josephus Daniels was a great Secretary of the Navy.

At this time, it is generally admitted that you are a long ways in the lead as to an adequate State highway system. It is also true that you are building and maintaining same without a single cent of taxation on property and income, except on automobiles and gasoline. These roads are increasing property values, facilitating business, improving farming, health, schools and Churches, and bringing millions of dollars annually into your State.

Your public school system is about as good as that of any Southern State, and is rapidly improving and expanding. The spirit of Aycock and other great educational leaders still lingers, inspiring you to leave no stone unturned to drive illiteracy from your borders.

The State University now ranks with the eighteen or twenty leading universities of America, and unless the others keep step with the great building program at Chapel Hill and the magnificent and increasing State appropriations for support and maintenance, the next five or ten years will place the University of North Carolina near the top of this select group. You have made a large increase in population and your increase in wealth has been phenominal.

Your industrial growth has been so rapid that the income taxes paid the United States for the year 1922 were over one hundred million more than those paid by Virginia. You were one of two States, I think, to show an increase over 1921. It takes my breath away to grasp such fabulous wealth, and such unusual prosperity in times of nation-wide depression, and adjustment of World War affairs. It is true that probably one hundred million of these taxes were paid by corporations, but it is wealth just the same; it is business just the same; it is industrial activity just the same. The wealthy States are the great industrial States. You have done all this without the harbors, bays, rivers and seacoast of Virginia and many Southern States.

I could use many columns to tell of your advancement and progress along all lines, but I have said enough to show why I take off my hat to North Carolina. But there is just one thing you lack, namely: your benevolences and gifts to the Lord do not keep step with your wealth and other things which go to make up your great State.

I assume that the Christians represent the average citizenship. In the Men and Millions Movement of the Christian Church, the North Carolina Conference, composed of ninety-two Churches and about 13,442 members, subscribed $174,916.25, and has paid to November 1, 1923, $28,198.11. This is just 16 per cent, and four of the five years will expire on May 1, 1924. As a further stimulus to prompt payment of pledges, Elon College and the Christian Orphanage are located in your State and are concrete examples of what the denomination is doing.

You have been loyal to your State, you have been willing to pay in taxes, labor and sacrifice the price of unexcelled success along all lines of endeavor. It has been worth the price; it is an honor to be a citizen of such a State. It is greater honor to be a citizen of the kingdom of God and make voluntary contributions to the support and extension of His kingdom to the uttermost parts of the earth. Will you meet your obligations to the Christian Church as you have met them to your State? Will you be as loyal to your Church as you are to your State?

"Render, therefore, unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." J. E. WEST, Suffolk, Va. Chairman Mission Board.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION.

The recent Student Volunteer Convention, held at Indianapolis, Ind., was a great gathering. More than six thousand delegates came from more than one hundred institutions and thirty or forty nations. The preliminary registration showed 4,891 white college students and faculty members, 124 colored representatives, 368 foreign students, 200 missionaries on furlough, 110 out of college, 328 mission secretaries and leaders from Churches and 130 leaders and officers. The days were crowded with meetings and discussion groups, but everywhere students were keenly interested in world problems, and in finding their places in the great work of the kingdom of God.

The Student Volunteer Movement began about thirty-seven years ago, especially to secure recruits for the foreign mission field. Since that time 10,000 foreign missionaries have sailed, and many others are still preparing to go.

Speakers from all over the world took part in the program. Race problems, the Christian's attitude toward war, the needs of the world, industrial problems, and the attitude of youth throughout the world today were the leading questions dealt with, and then through the whole convention there was a spirit, expressed often and unexpressed all the time, of an earnest desire to find the Jesus-plan for the world, and for young people to take their stand with Him to bring the whole wide world to His feet.

China, Japan, India, South America, Arabia, Egypt, the Philippines, and other lands had representatives there to tell of needs and conditions. The universal call seemed to be: "We are ready. We need Jesus Christ. Won't you come to help us to find Him?"

Great messages were delivered by Robert E. Speer and Sherwood Eddy, who have traveled over much of the world recently, by leaders in all nations and of every color. John R. Mott spoke Sunday morning on the "Commitment of Life," especially urging that life be consecrated to God wholly. In closing, he said: "Merge your will into that good and perfect and acceptable will of the Lord Jesus. Decision of life work is relatively small in comparison with the question: "Will Christ be taken as Lord?"

Four colleges of the Christian Church were represented at the convention besides a number of graduate students and members of the Church who were attending other institutions.

Rev. W. P. Minton, of Dayton, foreign mission secretary, was the leader of the Christian Church delegation, which had its meetings in the Y. M. C. A. On Sunday afternoon, about sixty or more gathered for the Christian Church rally, including students, faculty members and members of the Church living near-by. Dr. Minton had charge, and Prof. Ward McReynolds, of Defiance, led the singing. Rev. E. D. Gilbert, of Defiance, led in the opening prayer. There followed short addresses by representatives from each of our colleges, including Defiance, Miss Clara Prince; Palmer, Dale Sanders; Union, Miss Dorothy James; Elon, Miss Victoria Adams, and for the graduate students, L. C. Fletcher, of Yale. Dr. Minton spoke briefly of "Our Mission Work," and Mrs. M. T. Morrill spoke "Service Through Fellowship With Christ." Among others present were President Caris, of Defiance; President Alexander, of Union; Prof. J. W. Fix, of Palmer; Dean Savage, of Elon; M. J. W. White, Jr., of the University of Virginia; Mr. Shaw, of Raleigh; Dean Pleasants, of Union; Dr. Howsare, of Dayton.

On Monday night, the Christian Church group met in the Y. M. C. A., and, led by Rev. Howsare, discussed the convention informally in a very helpful and inspiring way. Each night in the hotel, informal prayer meetings were held, which drew the delegates from different sections of our Church very closely together.

The Indianapolis convention was hopeful in every feature of its program. Very great needs were faced, but here was a host of young people eager to give their lives if need be to righting the wrongs of the world. Very great problems were thrown out to be solved, but here was an enthusiastic throng of youth of great possibilities and abilities who hoped, through God's power, to help to solve them. To see such a host, giving up their Christmas holidays to days crowded full of sessions, to come for miles and miles at great expense, often to think together of the great work of the kingdom of God in all the world, gives new hope to the leaders of the Church. Surely, through these six thousand, God will perform miracles, and many dark places will be lighted and many souls brought to Jesus Christ.

Erie, Pa. LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

GOD'S FREE PEOPLE.

One of the greatest hindrances, if not the greatest, is unsaved people in the Church.

They are not free from sin.

They are not free from condemnation.

They are not free from the law of sin.

And when the outside world sees that, then they look upon the Church from that viewpoint, and then that condition of the Church becomes a stumbling-block to the world and keeps many from coming to Christ and into the Church.

God has a people who are free from sin, but when the devil picks at the Church, he takes the lowest grade of its members; hence the Church should so live as to give the devil no such advantage. God has had through all the prophetic and apostolic ages some who were free. Let us think of a few of them.

Enoch walked with God for three hundred years, without a break, and of course no man can walk with God in sin, and God is the same today that He was then. So Enoch was free from sin. God is just as able to keep us from sin as He was to keep Enoch.

God freed Israel from their Egyptian bondage, and is still able to free His children from the bondage of sin.

Romans 6:12 reads: "But now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

God will keep His free people from the devil's touch. We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself and that wicked one toucheth him not. —1 John 5:18.

God not only can, but will, keep His free people from condemnation. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. 8:1.

Paul declared that he had been made free from the law of sin.

Just take his testimony: "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Rom. 8:2.

The Word tells us that if Jesus makes us free, we shall surely be free, and no longer in bondage. I am as sure that Jesus is as willing to make His followers free from sin as I am that I am writing these words, for His word says so. In John 8:36 we read:

"If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." By this the Lord shows us plainly that He does not want His people to be in bondage.

We will never defeat the Roman Catholics, nor win the world for Christ till the Church gets free from sin. Let the Church, therefore, fall upon its knees and wait on God in faith, for His sanctifying grace, that she may be set apart from her unfaithfulness (sin) to a life of righteousness and faithful service. And let us preachers preach a full gospel, and not fail as did the ones who first preached through the upper coasts of Ephesus.—Acts 19:2, 3. Paul had passed through the upper coasts of Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, He said unto them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since (not when) ye believed?" And they said unto Him: "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." I wonder if some of us ministers are not guilty of the same offense? P. T. KLAPP.

Elon College, N. C.

VALLEY LETTER.

The past fall has been a very busy one, as, in fact, all seasons are with me. Trying to do two men's work is no child's plaything.

We had good revival meetings at Whistler's Chapel and Mayland. There were seventeen and ten conversions, respectively. Congregations at both places were unusually large. Mrs. Andes rendered valuable assistance in the music.

During the Christmas season, five of my Churches rendered excellent Christmas programs, all of which services it was my happy privilege to attend. These programs are not only very enjoyable and bring large congregations, but give excellent training to the young. Bethlehem remembered their pastor with $12.50; Dry Run, with $16.25; Mayland, $15.50; Concord presented the pastor and his family with several valuable gifts. In addition to these gifts, many things of more or less value have been given me by members of my Churches. Hardly a week has passed during the whole fall but that a package of some kind, and occasionally a Ford full of packages, has been handed me. For all these, many expressions of appreciation on the part of a kind and generous-hearted people, the whole Andes family rises to say, "Thank you."

As we step over the threshold of a new year, may we all, pastor and people, resolve to do greater things than ever in the service of our great Redeemer. A. W. ANDES.

Harrisonburg, Va.

WELL SAID.

God's leading is none the less real because it comes to us in quiet ways, and seems just the natural activity of our minds. His work in nature is through its operations, not over them, and in our lives He works within our spirits. We are constantly erring in our search for some external leading of God.—R. E. Spear.

FAMILY ALTAR

Conducted by Rev. H. E. Rountree,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

Praying.

Prayer is the greatest force of life. Why? Because of what it is and of what it means. Jesus said: "And when thou prayest," and Paul said: "Pray without ceasing." These did not stop to consider the necessity for prayer. They knew it is an actual natural function of a man's life, and, when they taught, they took it all for granted. Therefore, their whole theme on this subject was the subject itself and the constant practice of it.

Somebody said that prayer is desire of the heart, and it is; and in that sense Carlyle said: "It is the native and deepest impulse of the soul of man." Prayer to God is the offering up of our desires to God for things lawful and needful, with humble faith to obtain them through the mediation of Christ. He who fails to exercise and develop this power in his life, or denies himself the tendency to pray, cuts himself off from the essential functions of his existence. There are times when we do not feel like praying, and it is hard to do, but it is then we need it most, and we will serve ourselves best by withdrawing, like our Master did, in solitude and forget everything but to pray and know God.

Prayer.—Our Father, who dost exhort us to pray, and doth grant unto us what we ask, if we ask in faith, forgive us of our neglect and sloth, recall us from our wanderings, and restore us fully to the prayer life, whereby we may walk with thee and may ask for what we need, and be blessed. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

We Can Count on Him.

"Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."—Ex. 14:13-15.

Life is a great experiment, an experiment that each man makes afresh. There are two primary elements that enter in to make the experiment—God and the individual. One of these elements is constant; the other is variable. God revealed in Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. His love and His attitude toward the sons of men have ever been the same. We can always count on God. The question is: "Can God count on us?"

We cry to God and wonder if we can count on Him. Our God is not one who may be on a journey or asleep, that He cannot hear us. There is one certainty in the universe, and that is God. It is for us not to exhaust ourselves in calling unto Him, but to "go forward" in His name, being sure that we can count on Him.—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

WEDNESDAY.

"The Debt Eternal."

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children."—Deut. 6:7-12.

It is a fascinating title which Dr. John Finley selected for his book, "The Debt Eternal." After recounting the words used by the head of the educational department in England, "Education is the eternal debt which maturity owes to children and youth," he goes on to say: "We have need to remember that the supreme debt under which we have been placed by our past, by our hope for the future of the race, by our faith in a divine Being, and by our belief in the Christ in whom He has been revealed to men, is to teach our children that which has been committed to us through the centuries, and to enable them, so far as that is humanly possible, to realize that which we have struggled toward in our best moments, and in our highest aspirations and our most unselfish deeds." Which comes to the same thing as the command given to the children of Israel.

All of religion, and surely religious education, must rest on the assumption that there is, in every child brought into the world, the capacity to know God. There is the seed, which, properly watered and nurtured, will spring forth into the beautiful flower. Woe be to us if we do aught which shall keep that seed from developing as God intends it should!—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

THURSDAY.

*"Call upon me * * * and I will deliver thee."*—Ps. 50:15.

*"If any man * * * open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me."*—Rev. 3:20.

How wonderful it is to count on Him! This week, we have been thinking about prayer and our responsibility to teach it to our children. How many of us teach the children anything more than the little "Now I lay me down to sleep," or the Lord's Prayer? We teach them how to read and write and how to talk properly to other folks. We teach them the technique and skill of conversation and plea, that they may get best results for themselves and others. How much do we teach them to talk to God? Stop here long enough to think and answer this question.

Our second text today teaches communion and fellowship with God. What is fellowship and communion with Him? He says He will sit down at our table and eat and talk with us and we with Him. We are not to think of Him in terms of what he can give us. He is no Santa Claus to give us toys and grant our whims, nor are we babies to beg Him foolishly. He is our Father, and we are His children, who should have some estimate of spiritual values. A child does think of its parents first in terms of what the parent can give. But as it grows out of this thought, it learns to think of them in terms of what they are, and the child's petition changes from "Give me" to "Make me." Note the prodigal; he first said, "Give me," but when he came home, he said. "Make me." Our Heavenly Father can make us like Him, and He has told us how He can do it, if we will.

Prayer.—Dear Father, have mercy upon us unworthy creatures, and forgive us. Grant us grace to desire Thee with our whole heart, and so find Thee; and finding Thee, may we love Thee; and loving Thee, may we have full communion with Thy friendship and in it hate all sin from which Thou hast redeemed us. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Giving God a Chance.

"I will now turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt."—Ex. 3:3.

It was when Moses was willing to take the time to stop, turn aside and wait and see, that the Lord was revealed to him. Heretofore, Moses had been rather self-reliant and was busy about everything. Even when he thought he was doing the will of the Lord, he felt that it was up to him and he fell into terrible errors and became a murderer. At last, realizing his failure, he seeks solitude of the desert, and it is here that God is revealed to him in a burning bush.

There are many people who get glympses of spiritual possibilities, have visions of Christian service, but do not stop long enough to find out the way and have God's guidance, and, like Moses, go on self-reliantly busy about everything until they fail. There must be no hurrying about the things of God. There must be waiting on him and tarrying with Him. In this we learn who He is and what He wishes us to do. Obey this and carry the fountain of life to the world, O thou child of God.

Prayer.—Father, we thank Thee for Thy bounties, for undying friendships, for the many common things of life which cost us nothing, for salvation and Christian brotherhood which no human wisdom could create. Help us to wait on Thee, to know Thee, to learn of Thee and Thy promises, and how to rely upon Thee for our strength. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"That Day."

"He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."—2 Tim. 1:11.

No creed that ever was formulated could mean more than these words of Paul to young Timothy. He knew just what it meant to have the heart established, and he also knows something of what Timothy will have to encounter, as he goes out into the world for God. There would be the same old "fightings and fears within and without," the stubborn opposition of the world, and many a counter-current that might well cause dismay to even a stout heart. So, knowing full well the worth of a personal testimony, he uses these splendid words of the text followed by the admonition, "Hold fast."

"I have committed unto Him" is the secret of it all. He knew what Jesus could do for one, and he believed that the Man of Nazareth had done this work for him; so now it follows, as the most natural thing in life, to rest on the fact that he had committed everything unto Him who is able to keep against that day.

If the foundation should be of "wood, hay or stubble"—in other words, if it be of man—it shall be destroyed; but if, on the other hand, it be "gold, silver, precious stones"—His work—then the day will declare it. Are you "fully persuaded that He is able to keep * * * against that day?"—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SUNDAY.

The Sabbath and Man.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mk. 2:27.

What sort of work shall I do on the Sabbath? God, in sanctifying this day, said: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is a Sabbath unto the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work * * * wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." "Sabbath" means "cessation"—Cessation of work. And as sanctified unto the Lord, it is cessation from business to be "holy unto the Lord." And this is required of us not only because of the need of it, but as an acknowledgment of the covenant which has been established between Him and the people of all generations.

When Christ came, plucking corn from the fields, healing the sick, helping the needy, working miracles and teaching to take care of necessities for the good of man; the blinded Jews who could see no farther than the narrow walls of the synagogue, and could behold no duty on that day further than the hearing of the law, or the offering up of sacrifices, were indignant and resisted this desecration. But Jesus said: "The Sabbath is made for man," and told them how that it was so. He came not simply to read and hear law, but to show them the Father, and in the fulfillment of the law they must learn the work of the Father.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord, renew Thy spirit within us. Draw our hearts unto Thyself, that our work of the week may reveal Thee to us, and our keeping of this day may be according to Thy divine will. May we rest from our labors with cheerfulness and delight, and, such work as may be necessary to do, may it be to glorify Thy name. Through Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

BRO. CRUMPLER POUNDED.

On Wednesday evening, January 9th, quite a number of the members of Linville Christian Church motored over to Edom and welcomed their new pastor and his family into their midst by "pounding" them "hard and heavy." At least, we supposed they considered it a "pounding." However, each one brought so many pounds of good things to eat that "pounding" is scarcely the right name for it. Others, who couldn't come, sent things. We have been pounded many times before, but this one was the "biggest" one yet. Among the many things brought were wheat flour, buckwheat flour, sugar, coffee, rice, soda, baking powder, beans, Lima beans, apples, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, cabbage, crackers, cream, canned fruits, canned vegetables, salmon, canned meats, a side of meat, fresh pork, beaf, butter, cocoa, cornflakes, lard, sweet corn (dried), popcorn, candy, a fine cake, and two dollars in money. It will be some time before we shall have to buy any more groceries. We cannot find words sufficient with which to express our feeling of gratitude and appreciation for all these useful and good things. It makes us feel very humble and unworthy, but the more determined, by the help of our Heavenly Father, to render all the service possible to this and the other Churches of the Rockingham pastorate.

We are very thankful to these good people for this concrete manifestation of their esteem and friendship, and to our Heavenly Father, who prompted it. R. P. CRUMPLER.

Edom, Va.

Before leaving London, Ambassador Harvey "cleaned the slate." Among the last and most important things he did was to arrange a treaty with Lord Curzon whereby American officials are given permission to search English vessels which are suspected of being "rum runners." This has been one of the most difficult problems with which our government has had to deal, and Colonel Harvey is entitled to credit for having brought about such an arrangement before leaving his important post.

England very properly demands, however, that in general maritime affairs the three-mile limit will stand just as it has done in the past. The Soviet government of Russia is very anxious to establish the twelve-mile limit for all purposes. But to this, England and America will not agree.

English vessels, under the new treaty, are permitted to have liquor on board and sell it to passengers before the limit is reached. But when a vessel reaches the twelve-mile limit, bars are to be sealed until that limit is reached on the return.

As England has agreed to this arrangement, other foreign countries will no doubt fall into line, and this will be the established rule between America and all other nations. This will greatly simplify the enforcement of our prohibition law. —Exchange.

We call upon the Churches to emphasize constantly and unequivocally the power, the practicability, and the inevitable success of good will as the message of Christ Himself, and to condemn all distrust of the applicability of Christ's teaching to human affairs.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our report this week closes our work for the year 1923. Our total income for the year was $22,080.46. Our number of children have averaged one hundred for the entire year. Our Thanksgiving goal was first set six thousand dollars, but was later raised to seven thousand, and we raised $7,136.87. Our Churches and our friends have been real good to us, and we are very grateful indeed. Our Burlington Church stands at the head of the list in Thanksgiving offerings, with $1,000.63 to its credit. Suffolk stands second, with $500; Greensboro, First Church, third, with $331.20, and Holy Neck fourth, with $165 to its credit, and a number of other Churches have done well.

Burlington Church makes the largest monthly offering of any Church in the Southern Christian Convention, Suffolk second, and First Church, Greensboro, third.

Virginia Valley Central Conference has twenty-four Churches, eighteen gave to the support of the Orphanage and six did not.

Alabama Christian Conference has twenty-five Churches; fifteen gave, and ten did not.

Georgia and Alabama Conference has eighteen Churches; eleven gave, and saven did not.

North Carolina Conference has one hundred and eighteen Churches; one hundred and five gave, and twelve did not.

Eastern Virginia has forty-three Churches; forty gave, and three did not.

We want to ask all the pastors and all the Sunday School superintendents to help us this New Year to get every Church and Sunday School interested in the support of the Orphanage. One Sunday's offering each month for the Orphanage, one for missions, and two for self would be a mighty good slogan for 1924. Ask your Sunday School to adopt this plan.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JANUARY 17, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$21,183.14
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Bethlehem	$ 2.62
O'Kelly's Bible Class, Greensboro.	87.50
		90.12
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Pleasant Grove, N. C.	$ 3.00
Spring Hill	3.00
		6.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester	$ 7.74
Concord	3.67
		11.41
Baby Home Pledge:
Mrs. S. O. Spruill		5.00
Thanksgiving Offerings.
Burlington Church, additional ($413.63):
Mrs. C. M. Stafford	$ 1.00
W. W. Brown	250.00
Standard Grocery Co.	25.00
C. T. Holt	50.00
J. M. Fix	10.00
R. W. Browning	10.00
Dr. Chas. McPherson	5.00
W. E. Sharpe	50.00
W. K. Holt	12.63
Graham Church	10.70
Suffolk Church, additional	232.00
A Friend, Suffolk	2.00
Third Avenue, Danville	16.07
First Church, Winchester	10.62
Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Underwood	2.00
M. H. Hayes, Manson, N. C.	10.00
Leaksville, Val. Va.	7.75
Antioch, Val. Va.	30.00
Pleasant Grove, Va.	16.52
Christmas offering	3.50
		754.79
Special Offerings.
Bible Class, Catawba Springs	$ 5.00
W. H. Thomas	25.00
		30.00
Grand total for 1923		$22,080.46

FROM WALTERS, VA.

I have been thinking for some time that I would give a brief report of the evangelistic work during the summer of 1923, the Churches visited, the pastors that I worked with, etc.

I left Fancy Gap the 1st of July (this work will ever have a worm place in my heart); I came home for a few days. Having dates arranged for most of the summer, I first went to Fuller's Chapel. Here they had no pastor, Dr. Barrett having left to take up the work as editor of THE SUN at Elon College.

We began the meeting on Monday night, July 9th; the meeting was continued through the week, afternoons and nights; we had good crowds, and the meeting grew in interest until near the end of the week, so we decided to continue the meeting through Sunday and Sunday night.

At Fuller's Chapel we had a good meeting. The Church was revived; only three were added to the Church at this place, but much good was done in bringing about a good feeling between each other, and all being drawn nearer to the Lord. Dr. Barrett, as mentioned above, had just left this field, where he had not had the time to do any pastoral work; he had won the good will of the faithful members, and they seemed to regret his going very much. This, as I see it, is a prospective field; it is surrounded by prosperous farmers, and some good country merchants; it is well located. Its great need, from the human side, is pastoral work; it seems that its former pastors have been so situated that they have not been able to do very much pastoral work.

I supplied for them second and fourth Sundays until October. I had no time to do pastoral work, but my work with them was very pleasant, and I believe not altogether in vain. I believe that a young Bro. Hook, from Elon College, will take charge of this work. Praying God's richest blessings upon him and this people, I believe we can expect to hear great things from them in the future. The pastor and people have my best wishes and earnest prayers.

You will hear from me again soon.

Walters, Va. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

PRESENTED WITH A GOLD WATCH.

The members of the Young Men's Bible Class of the People's Christian Church Sunday School presented the teacher of the class, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, with a handsome 17-jewel Hamilton gold watch as a Christmas gift last Sunday. The president of the class, in presenting the watch to Dr. Helfenstein, stated that it was not merely a Christmas gift, but it was a token of the love felt by the members of Dr. Helfenstein and their appreciation of his efforts in their behalf. The class was organized in 1922 with nine charter members, and now has a membership of eighty-three. The officers of the class expect to increase the membership to one hundred by the time of the second anniversary—the third Sunday in February.

ONLY ONE RELIGION.

If we were to reckon up one religion after another, we would perhaps mention the Mohammedan, Brahman, Chinese and Christian; or we might give the different forms of the Christian religion, such as Catholic and the Protestant, with their innumerable sects that divide and break up Christendom, and at first thought unite in regard to this manifoldness of religion and differ only as to the number of religions that we might include in our estimate.

If, however, it should be stated that there is but one religion in the world, this statement would be generally accepted, for there would be a look of intelligence, satisfaction and self-content on many faces, as one and another would respond, "Yes, there is but one religion in the world, and that is ours." It is this confidence thatt here is but one religion in the world and that is ours that has introduced so much bitterness and narrowness into life; like the Chinese who have walled themselves in, and look upon their country as the central flowery and celestial nation, and all outside of this as barbarians, so do different bodies of believers, one holding as we say, one religion and another another, separate themselves; Christian sects bandy among themselves the words heretic and infidel, and the words are felt to mark a chasm as wide as that which separates earth from heaven. It is no wonder that many, seeing this bitterness and self-assertion, this contempt and hate, should doubt whether there is any religion, whether all are not alike deluded or deluding; should maintain at least that all religions are alike, so that it is no matter which of them a man accepts—there may be a truth somewhere; meanwhile, we must wait. I believe that, in a sense different from any that has yet been referred to, there is one religion in the world, and only one; one faith and only one. But to reach this thought we must move carefully; we must, in the first place, separate in our mind religion from theology, for there are many theologies and only one religion. Religion is everywhere the same; theology is everywhere different. This truth can be made clear by comparing the relation of religion to theology, with that of the air to the atmosphere. In our common speech we use very often the words air and atmosphere as if they meant the same thing. We speak of the air being heavy or light, healthy and unhealthy, mountain air, sea air, country air, night air and malarious air. It would perhaps surprise many to be told that the air is everywhere the same, that it may be indeed denser or rarer, that it may be more pure or less pure, but that the air, as such, is absolutely invariable; by night and by day, by the seashore or in the region of swamps, in the city and in the country, in Europe, Asia, Africa and America, and far out in the midst of the almost boundless reaches of the ocean—the air is everywhere the same. It has its fixed chemical combination, and contains here and everywhere eight parts of oxygen by weight to twenty-eight of nitrogen; this combination of elements in this proportion never changes—it is permanently fixed. On the other hand, the atmosphere is always changing. It is different in the night from what it is in the daytime; different on one day from what it was on another; different in America from what it is in Europe and Africa; different in city and in country, by the seashore and among the swamps. The atmosphere is the air, together with whatever exhalations from the earth are mingled with it. The atmosphere takes up everything; it takes the vapor from the sea, it takes the malaria from the swamps; it takes the sweetness of the flowers and the corruption of decay; it takes the carbon from combustion and from the breath of all living creatures. The air may sometimes contain only a small part of the atmosphere; sometimes it may be almost excluded by it; gases and vapors and smoke may take its place and banish it. Religion is often spoken of when we mean theology, just as we often speak of air when we mean the atmosphere; but like the air, religion is the same and has always been the same from the beginning. It may be more or less pure, but the difference is only between more or less. Its peculiar elements and their relations are always the same. I do not say merely that they ought to be the same, but they are the same. There is one religion and one faith; but theology is continually changing; it is different in one region from another; in one time from what it is in another, and that which makes the difference between theology and religion is that precisely which makes the difference between the atmosphere and the air; for theology is always full of exhalations from the world. It takes up the faults, the prejudices, the imperfections of our lower life—it is made foul by human passion. It takes up into itself the malarious breath of old traditions that have been left like pools or swamps after the living waters that have brought them have passed away, and they remain stagnant and corrupt.

Analyze the theology of a time or community and you will find the tradition, the prejudices that prevail there, mingled with more or less religion, but analyze religion and it is everywhere the same. Theology, like the atmosphere, may be sometimes health-giving, or it may breed even death—religion, like the air, can bring only life. When I say that there is but one religion, I mean there is but one central religious truth, and this finds itself expressed with more or less cleanness, with more or less purity, with more or less contradiction in all forms of religion that are worthy of the name. This one religious truth is the goodness of God and the confidence that man may place in this for life or death. This is the one faith that is common in all religious souls.

Theology is the result of human reason, human invention, of human prejudice, of human superstition, or human tradition. It may contain things that are utterly at variance with a true religious faith; it constructs its own theories of God's methods, and forms its own schemes to represent man's relation to Him. It may say with religion that God is good, and then it may go to affirm things in regard to Him which are inconsistent with all possible goodness.

Thus theologies differ—then contend, they excite hatreds and enmities—but religion is always one; is always at peace. One religious faith affirms the goodness of God and the trust that men may put in it for life and for death. We should have in our minds and hearts the knowledge and the feeling that the word faith, when applied to religion, can mean nothing else than this. The meaning of the word faith is confidence, and no man can imagine himself as using the word in any simple human relation, in any other sense. As the word gospel means good news, and no bad news can be called gospel, so faith means belief in the good, and no belief in anything that is not good can be called faith. Thus the word faith implies a wholeness, a healthfulness, an elasticity, a confidence, a hope. There is but one faith in the world; and if there is but one faith, there is corresponding with this but one religion, and this religion is faith in the good God and love of Him, and obedience to Him, and love of His children. When men talk theology they differ, and this is the reason for the friction between the so-called fundamentalists and modernist which is disturbing the peace of the Church to the great detriment of its mission at the present time; but when men talk religion they agree. It is beautiful to see how in all times of exaltation, in the grand crises which bring out the real emotions of the heart, in moments of sorrow, or common peril, the language of theology is forgotten, its discord ceases, and the common language of religion expresses to common emotions of all hearts. The skylark builds his nest low down upon the earth; but he sings, he leaves his nest and soars far up into the sky. So many a spirit builds its theologic nest down in the dark places of the earth, but when it sings, it leaves its nest, like the skylark, and soars in the ecstacy of prayer and praise, and one would never suspect, as its notes fall from the heavens, where its nest is, or what it is made of. It is pleasant to look over the index in our hymn books and see the names that are grouped there—Thoreau, Wesley, Watts, Parker, Doddridge, Madam Cuyon. There are hymns from Lyra Catholica, from the Wesleyan, the Episcopalian, the Methodist collections; Luther, Cowper, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Furness, Clarke and innumerable others meet there; representing all creeds, and all forms of belief. If their writers could meet and begin to talk theology together, what a jargon there would be. But these theologies are only their nests, far down among the thorns often, and amid the shadows. While there is discord and variance in Zion today because of the difference in theological teaching, there song is one, their religion is one, for they utter the one faith.

In an old volume describing the sufferings of the lost, a chapter given to the torments of each sense, showing that the tortures of Nero and other cruel tyrants were nothing to the sufferings of the lost; for these tyrants were finite, but God was infinite; each chapter was followed by a prayer, a prayer to the Infinite Love, a prayer full of faith and sweetness and tenderness. It seemed impossible that the two forms of utterance should stand in one book, should be the expression of one man. But in one the head spoke, and in the other the heart; in the one theology, and in the other religion. We differ in our conceptions of the so-called fundamental doctrines of the Bible, such as the fall of man, the trinity, the incarnation of Christ, etc. This is only a difference in theology; but so far as religion goes, we are one—we all start at the same point, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and close with the supreme confidence in God's goodness for life and for death. The one religion! that is what Jesus prayed in the Lord's Prayer. It is what He preached in the Sermon on the Mount. It is what He uttered in parables by the sea or in familiar talk by the wayside. This is what sustains the mourner in her sorrow, the sufferer in his pain, the strong in his struggles after the highest life, the weak in his helplessness. Each thinks it is his peculiar theology that helps him, but it is not—it is the religion that is common to all! Men's theology they may leave behind them in the Church; but their religion is nothing if it does not go with them out of doors and work with them on the street, and rest with them in their homes.

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged		$408.05
Burlington	$27.18
New Lebanon S. S.	2.91
Holy Neck	34.50
Pleasant Ridge (R)	4.15
Mrs. H. C. King	1.00
Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C.	7.50
Zion	4.60
Rosemont S. S.	56.27
		138.11
Total		$546.16

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

CULTURE AND HUMAN GOVERNMENT.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

A man's culture, intelligence, and education are never better employed than when giving consideration to the problems of human government. The subject is one worthy of the highest mental powers of the most gifted. Through all the generations of all man's past history this topic has engaged the most serious thought of the finest intellects of earth. What we fondly term the fairest fruits of civilization are only the results of things made possible by proper governmental systems. Scholars have never turned their minds to the consideration of any problems more important than those problems that pertain to man's best government. Man's chief misfortunes have come through the working out of selfish and designing schemes of able but wicked manipulators of governmental affairs. Tyranny, oppression, unjust taxation, and a long list of evils are but the results of wicked designs originating with those who sought to enforce perverted and malicious plans of government. Students and thinkers and scholars can turn their talents to no higher or holier matters than those that make for a people's betterment. Vast libraries of the accumulated wisdom of the ages can be used to no better purpose than to garner for practical purposes the varied experiences of mankind in its effort to give to individuals and nations just, and humane forms of control. Any democracy is doomed that has no sons able and willing to give constant thought to the problems of state. The proposition that men are free and equal must carry with it as an inevitable accompaniment the idea of such general intelligence among the entire body politic as will enable the controlling majority to preserve the principles of equity and justice. Blackstone says, "As it is impossible for the whole race of mankind to be united in one great society, they must necessarily divide into many, and form separate states, commonwealths, and nations, entirely independent of each other, and yet liable to a mutual intercourse." Addison, writing on this subject, remarks,—"If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it into the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest." Good government and the avoidance of danger of death demand eternal watchfulness and diligence on the part of those of high patriotic purposes. Lord Bacon claims, "The four pillars of government are religion, justice, counsel, and treasure, when any of these four pillars are shaken men have need to pray for fair weather."

Political science teaches us that a democracy is a state where the people rule themselves directly as in the small "city-states" of ancient times, or through their representatives, as in the United States. The sovereign assembly of citizens in Athens was called the "Ecclesia"; in Sparta the "Apella"; and in Rome either the "Comitia Centuriata" or the "Concilium Plebis." Small communities alone can have direct democracy; large organizations demand representatives chosen from communities and larger bodies whose obligation is that they act for the general good. Growth and increased population made impossible parochial democracy. Medium and moderate democracies adopted a low property qualification; extreme democracy is based on an enlarged citizenship embracing all adults without any distinction of either sex or property qualification. Since the days of Aristotle we have usually recognized three forms of government,—monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy. The medieval form of government was feudal, depending for its relation between lord and vassal to the tenure of land holding. The modern governments of Europe have grown out of this feudal system. England moved toward popular government by the commons demanding the right to share with lord and king the power of legislation; the commons demanding the sole right to impose taxes; and the setting aside of the clergy as a separate order. With the rise of cabinet government came the birth and growth of the two great historical parties of English politics.

In the United States the position of the President is not affected by hostile votes on pending legislation; his term of office is fixed by his election. The English general elections never cause the commotion caused by the election of our President, for here it involves much change in the administrative staffs, and the tenure of office and fortunes of large numbers.

The proper development of democracy, and its very perpetuation, are dependent upon intelligent interest in the affairs of state by a majority sufficient to eliminate evils and properly shape a growing civilization. Edmund Burke says, "Government is a practical thing, made for the happiness of mankind."

MEETING OF EDITORIAL COUNCIL.

The Editorial Council of the Religious Press met at luncheon at the Hotel Deshler, Columbus, Ohio, on Wednesday, December 12, 1923, at 12:30 o'clock.

President E. C. Wareing presided.

In the absence of the secretary, Dr. Howard B. Grose, who was detained by illness in his family, Dr. Paul S. Leinbach was elected secretary pro tem. Mr. McVicker led in prayer.

The roll call revealed the presence of the following: Ernest C. Wareing, Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati; Frederick Lynch, Christian Work; S. M. Cavert, Federal Council of Churches; Otto Press, Friedensbote; W. C. Woodward, American Friend, Richmond, Ind.; V. E. McVicker, Ohio Council of Churches and Ohio Christian News; A. J. C. Bond, Sabbath Recorder, Plainfield, N. J.; George Summey, ex-editor, New Orleans; David M. Sweets, Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky.; W. E. Snyder, associate editor, Religious Telescope, Dayton; H. F. Shupe, Watchword, Dayton, Ohio; E. V. C. Miller, Arkansas Methodist, Little Rock, Ark.; G. P. Williams, American Sunday School Union publications, Philadelphia; Lyman E. Davis, Methodist Recorder, Pittsburgh; Henry Beets, Christian Reformed Banner, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Oliver R. Williamson, The Continent, Chicago; Paul S. Leinbach, Reformed Church Messenger, Philadelphia; W. B. Norton, Chicago Tribune; H. E. Woolever, National Methodist Press, Washington; E. Robb Zaring, Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago; Arthur E. Hungerford, Federal Council of Churches; Herbert E. Worden, Federal Council of Churches; Herbert D. Rugg, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Rufus W. Miller, Heidelberg Press, Philadelphia; Herbert L. Willett, Christian Century, Chicago; A. E. Hangen, Evangelical Messenger, Cleveland; Edwin G. Frye, Evangelical Messenger, Cleveland; W. I. Wishart, United Presbyterian, Pittsburgh.

Mr. Cavert called attention to the recommendation of the eastern section of the council that a strong statement emphasizing the importance of the Church paper in the Protestant home should be prepared by the Federal Council and published as widely as possible, especially in such ways as to win the attention of those who are not now readers of the religious press.

After an extended discussion of the whole problem, it was decided that a committee should be appointed (1) to secure the strongest possible favorable action by the executive committee of the Federal Council, recommending the Church paper for every Protestant home, and (2) asking that a survey of the status, needs and paramount importance of the religious press be made by a committee or commission of the Federal Council to report at such time in the near future as they may be prepared to do so, preferably at the next quadrennial meeting.

The chair appointed Messrs. Sweets, Davis and Hungerford as a committee to convey this request to the Federal Council. The officers were instructed to send expressions of sympathy to Mrs. J. Fred Heisey, widow of the late esteemed editor of the Washington Methodist Advocate, and to our genial secretary, Dr. Grose, by reason of the illness of his wife. It was decided to lunch together again on Thursday at the same time and place.

Minutes of December 13.

The Editorial Council of the Religious Press met again at the Hotel Deshler on Thursday, December 13, at 12:30 P. M. President Wareing presided, and Dr. Lynch led in prayer. The minutes of Wednesday's meeting were read and approved, and it was announced that all who had signed the roster would be regarded as new members of the council. The officers of the council were instructed to prepare a program for the meeting of this council in connection with the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in 1924, and to ask for a place on the program of the Federal Council to emphasize the work of the religious press.

The secretary was instructed, in conference with Messrs. Cavert and Hungerford, to invite the editors affiliated with the Federal Council to join this council.

Dr. Sweets reported that the overture of this council would be presented by the executive committee of the Federal Council this afternoon.

Mr. Hungerford spoke on "The Value of Religious News in the Daily Press," and made a plea for larger space in the religious press for the news provided by the Federal Council.

Mr. Woolever spoke on the advantages of Protestant press representation at the capital of the nation, and referred to various interests which control large blocks of American publicity, with the plea that Protestantism should be more fully represented. Mr. Woolever presented for adoption the following overture to the President of the United States:

"The Council of the Religious Press of the United States, representing most of the Protestant Churches of this country, respectfully requests that you make some provision in your semi-weekly conferences with the correspondents whereby the millions of readers of religious newspapers may have the benefits of such direct contact with the chief executive of the nation." This resolution was ordered to be referred, with our recommendation, to the administrative committee of the Federal Council of Churches. On motion, the council adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,

Paul S. Leinbach,
Secretary Pro Tem.

EARTH'S ONE GREAT ONE.

That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherein he wont at heaven's high council table
He laid aside, and here with us to be
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
To sit the midst of trinal unity;
And hhose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

This year is going to be an interesting Church year. Subscribe for The Christian Sun.

FEREBEE.

Miss Nellie Gibson Ferebee departed this life September 6, 1923, at the age of thirty-eight years, after a brief illness. She was a daughter of Mrs. E. and the late John L. Gibson, of Rosemont, Norfolk County, Va., and is survived by her husband, Dr. L. C. Ferebee, and two children, Virginia Robins and Frances Coleman; her mother, Mrs. Mary E. Gibson; three sisters and two brothers, Mrs. Gertrude E. Bondurant, Mrs. Mary L. Fleming, Mrs. Grace E. Johnston, Howard L. and John B. Gibson, all of Rosemont.

Funeral services were conducted at the Rosemont Christian Church, of which she was a faithful member from childhood, by the pastor, assisted by Dr. G. O. Lankford, a former pastor, and Rev. Charles E. Green, pastor of the M. E. Church of South Norfolk, Va. The attendance was large, and the flowers were in profusion. A quartet from the Rosemont choir sang "Abide With Me," "It is Well With My Soul," and "He Knows it All." Burial was in the family lot in Riverside Cemetery, Berkley, Va.

A faithful wife, a loving mother, a devoted daughter, an earnest Christian, a good neighbor was Sister Ferebee. But she is gone, she cannot come back; but we can go to her. Yes, we weep, but not as those who have no hope. Dear ones, who has not wept? Yes, we have, and we will weep yet again. Our souls cry out for the touch of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still.

It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved.

B. F. BLACK.

HAMLET.

Miss Jenny Hamlet, daughter of John E. and Martha Durham Hamlet, died at her home, Semara, N. C., December 19, 1923, in the seventy-fifth year of her life. Her three sisters and two brothers are deceased. The sisters were Mrs. Fanny White, of Texas; Mrs. Mary E. Taylor, of Semara, N. C., and Martha L. Hamlet, also of Semora. The brothers, James and Henry Hamlet, died in the Civil War.

Two nieces survive—Miss Florence Bradshaw, of Texas, and Miss Hulda Taylor, of Semara; four nephews—Walter L. Taylor, of Semara; Scott, Turner and John White, of Texas, and a number of great-nieces and nephews.

For many years she was one of the exemplary Christians of Lebanon Christian Church. Practically all her life she suffered from bodily ills. Her religion was always her most treasured possession. As her body weakened, her faith grew stronger, and when the end came it was triumphant.

The funeral and burial were at Lebanon Church, Semora, N. C., on the afternoon of December 19th, conducted by the writer, and assisted by Rev. Mr. Raggins, of the Baptist Church. For years she was cared for in the home of her niece and nephew, Miss Huldah and Mr. Walter Taylor. By them and others she is greatly missed, but there is comfort in the assurance of meeting again.

C. E. NEWMAN.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS

The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years

Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.

GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

DAVIS-WAGNER Business College

NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.

POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. CATALOGUE FREE.

174 W. MAIN STREET. NORFOLK, VA.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For the future of the South

BECAUSE of the remarkable development of its natural resources, the South today is taking a new leadership in the economic progress of the nation.

But this leadership, if it is to be maintained, must have a more enduring foundation than the possession and exploitation of material things.

The South of tomorrow will be made by the children of today. The boys now in school and attending the churches will be the captains of industry and the leaders in the professions a few years hence.

Citizenship is in the making in the schools and the churches.

A great responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the teachers of the South—in the pulpit and in the class-room.

But the compensation accorded the great majority of them is inadequate.

The Southern Railway System, which pays three million dollars per annum in school taxes, voices not only its own best interest but the ambition of its 60,000 employees in respect to the future of their children and their section, when it expresses the view that greater rewards should be offered the men and women who are building Southern citizenship of tomorrow.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

APPLE.

Mrs. Elizabeth Corinna Apple (nee Sanford) was born October 27, 1849; died December 2, 1923; age, 74 years 1 month and 5 days.

Early in life she professed faith in Christ and united with Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va. On January 12, 1869, she married F. J. Apple, son of Rev. Soloman Apple, of Mecklenburg County, Va. This union was blessed with fourteen children. Eight of these are living; they are W. T. Apple, Garner, M. C., J. K. Apple, Cambridge, Md.; Mrs. S. C. Farmer, News Ferry, Va.; Mrs. W. F. Latta, Rangemont, N. C.; Mrs. Ollie Mangum, Rangemont, N. C.; Mrs. G. W. Roberts, Durham, N. C.; Robert Apple, Durham, N. C., and Mrs. A. L. Mangum, Bahama, N. C. There are thirty-six grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

The funeral and buriel were at Mt. Tabor M. E. Church, near Bahama, N. C., conducted by Rev. J. F. Starns. It is an occasion of deep regret to the writer, who has been Sister Apple's pastor for sixteen years, that he could not conduct her funeral, as expected by the family, on account of not receiving the message.

Sister Apple was a faithful companion, devoted mother, and a loyal member of her Church. She always supported both her local Church and the general enterprises. From the labors of earth, she has gone to her reward in heaven. May the entire family again be united.

C. E. NEWMAN.

BRAY.

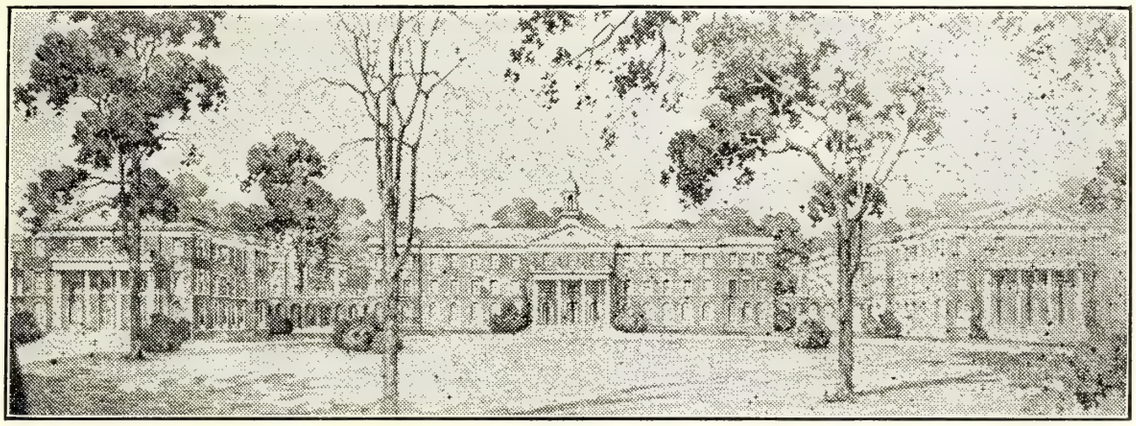
Farebell Bray Williams was born July 28, 1868; died December 22, 1923; age, 55 years 4 months 24 days. Was married to G. T. Williams January 2, 1889. To this union were born four children—Charlie, Luther, Clarence and Ernest Williams, all of Ramseur, N. C. Her mother, one sister and four brothers survive—Mrs. J. C. Allred and J. L. Bray, of Ramseur; William Bray, of Mineral Wells, Texas; C. L. Bray, of Liberty, and J. E. Bray, of Saxopahaw, N. C. She professed faith in Christ in her early life, and joined Pleasant Ridge Church, at which she was buried. She said many times in her last days that she was ready to meet her Lord.

Burial by the pastor, T. J. Green, assisted by Rev. Wm. Cox, of Friends' Church. A large congregation attended the burial. The Lord comfort her loved ones.

T. J. G.

WHEN WINTER COMES
a handy package of Brown's Bronchial Troches is as necessary as warm clothing. Quickly relieve coughing, sore throat, loss of voice and kindred troubles. A real REMEDY—not a candy. At druggists.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON, BOSTON, MASS.
Gen'l Sales Agents: H. F. Ritchie & Co., Inc.
New York London Toronto
BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH AND VOICE LOZENGES
IN 3 SIZE PACKAGES

Elon is Building for the Future



Library Building — Auditorium — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

Grow Cotton in Virginia

on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY

Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - - Richmond, Va.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

A Charm
Beautiful Hair
You can possess it by using Caro-Co Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Large bottle 50c at all dealers.

MAYO'S SEEDS

Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.

D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE :: :: TENNESSEE

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

SWOPE.

Peter Henry Swope was born November 26, 1855, and died September 8, 1923, at the age of 68 years and 12 days. His wife died about fourteen years ago, since which time he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. C. L. Dundore, of Harrisonburg, the only surviving member of the family. Bro. Swope was a faithful member of the Antioch Christian Church. Funeral services was held at the Dundore home December 10, 1923, and the remains laid to rest in the cemetery at Dayton, Va. A. W. ANDES.

LICHLITER.

David B. Lichliter was born December 4, 1848; died December 9, 1923, age 75 years and 5 days. He is survived by his widow, one son, and three daughters. Deceased was well thought of in his community. Funeral service was conducted December 11, 1923, at his home, near Dry Run, in Powell's Fort, and interment made in a family cemetery nearby.

A. W. ANDES.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

C5453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

C5453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 24, 1924. | NUMBER 4.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Drys Satisfied With Recent Law.—

David H. Hepburn, State superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, announced a few days before the General Assembly convened that the dry forces were content with the Mapp-Deans laws, and would rest on their oars, unless the "wets" introduced legislation inimicable to the dry cause. Mr. Hepburn is in Washington attending a national convention of the Anti-Saloon League, but is expected back in Richmond today. If the Barron resolution, which urges in effect repeal of the Volstead law, is interpreted by the Anti-Saloon League leaders as an attempt to weaken enforcement of prohibition, it may be the signal for a fight to strengthen the State law, which already is regarded as one of the best, from the dry viewpoint, in the United States. Mr. Hepburn promised that legislation designed to strengthen the Mapp-Deans law would be introduced if the "wets" took the initiative.

Debts of the Public.—

How many kinds of public debts are there in the United States? The Census Bureau gives us an idea in its recent statement. There is first the debt of the national government. Then comes the debts of the State governments. Next in order come county debts, city debts, towns, villages, school districts, townships, drainage districts, park districts, with here and there still other governmental units empowered to incur indebtedness.

The debts carried by all these governments in the United States amounted in 1912 to $6,814,955,000. This has grown in 1922 to $32,786,715,000. The increase represents 381 per cent. The per capita debt rose in that period from $70.20 to $301.56.

The debt of the national government alone advanced in the same period 672 per cent.

That the reader may see what is meant by warnings against the unparalleled increase of public debts, the division of responsibility is given as follows:

National debt	$22,525,775,000
State governments	1,162,648,000
County governments	1,366,636,000
Cities and others	7,731,658,000

The interest is more than one and a quarter billions of dollars a year.

The Celebrated Divine Dr. Jowett.—

It is a simple life in outline, but how rich in coloring and texture, only the thousands who heard his voice or read his books can tell. He led no movements—except in these post-war years to raise his voice for a union of Christians everywhere to wage war against war and to restore friendly relationships between the nations. He figured in no sensations. The newspaper headliners found no "copy" in his sermons. He challenged no unbeliever to debate. He read no one out of the Church for heresy. He drew no lines through the body of believers, parting the sheep from the goats, according to man-made standards. He still found sufficient inspiration for his ministry in the Bible, though he had full knowledge of the work of the critics and the men of science. His foundations were unshaken. He did not even think it worth while to digress from his main business—the preaching of the gospel of the new life through Jesus Christ—far enough to make either modernism or fundamentalism a major matter of discussion. And by his absorption in the essentials in his preaching he led men to the saving knowledge of Christ. He was an intense student of Scripture, a wide reader of literature, keenly observant of the life of men in books and in the flesh, extraordinarily gifted in making spiritual truth incandescent.—Christian Advocate.

A Noted Educator.—

There has been much in the public press concerning that eminent Princeton graduate, Professor Basil L. Gildersleeve of the class of '49, whose death in his ninety-second year occurred at his home in Baltimore on January 9th. Educators and editorial writers have joined in high praise of his character and his scholarship. But in none of these well-deserved tributes, nor in the published records of his life, have we discovered mention of the noteworthy fact that Dr. Gildersleeve was Princeton's oldest living graduate. Longevity, to be sure, confers no great distinction, though few there are who do not crave it; Methuselah and Old Parr are known only for the roughness of their bodily texture, which defied the tooth of time far beyond all actuarial calculations or even human hopes. But Dr. Gildersleeve's longevity was among the least of his distinctions. For half a century he was eminent as America's foremost authority on Greek—not merely as the most accomplished grammarian of his age, but also as the master of that literature and art and philosophy which gave to the golden age of Greece the highest civilization the world has known. For the preservation in modern education of the best things in Greek civilization, Dr. Gildersleeve strove valiantly; in his own words, he "fought a rear-guard skirmish" against the depreciation of classical studies in the colleges, which he denounced as "a sin against the eternal spirit." And he was himself a monumental argument for the value of classical education. As a writer in the Baltimore Sun has said, "None of those who had the happiness of studying with him—not under him—can ever forget his power of subtle stimulation, his exquisite mastery of the art of intellectual inspiration. He was in himself almost a whole university course. * * * Among the great teachers he occupies a place of singularity as well as of phenomenal stature. He was of Socratian style and mentality."

Should Deter Farmers from Contracting Debt.—

Merchants all over the South are getting on a cash basis. The boll weevil and "defiation" have convinced merchants and fertilizer companies that the "time prices" system is too risky to operate on, according to the Progressive Farmer. Banks have sprung up all over the South, and farmers of character and standing are depositing money when they don't need it, and borrowing when they do need it. Almost any man of character, sense and economy who will deposit in a bank in the fall can borrow from that bank the next summer and pay cash at the store. Consequently, in thousands of communities, it is getting so that only the shiftless, "no-account" element of negroes and a smaller irresponsible element of whites are left to do business on "time prices." Consequently, the merchant is forced to charge an exorbitant, ruinous increase on goods sold on credit.

Hence, to every honest man we would say: You can't afford to buy supplies on credit next year. If you buy goods at time prices and expect to pay for them, then you are going to pay not only for your own goods, but you are going to pay for goods furnished to a lot of scoundrels who will never make payment at all. That's all there is to it. The honest, hard-working, thrifty man who buys goods on "time prices" has got to help support a lot of dishonest, half-idle, shiftless folks.

To every honest man, therefore, we would repeat, we beg you not to leave yourself in condition where you must pay time prices in 1924. Let's save some money now. Let's put it in a bank. Let's try to keep enough ahead to pay cash for fertilizers and supplies in 1924—or at least, so nearly ahead that we can borrow any needed remainder from the bank instead of having to use "store credit."

Honest men can no longer afford to pay time prices. Let's quit it even if we have to live hard a whole year to do it. Better live hard one year and have freedom ever after than stay in bondage of store credit—paying for goods that dishonest men don't pay for, supporting the families of shiftless scoundrels when your own family deserves all the money you can spare.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. J. E. Jones, of 1421 Washington Street, Danville, Va., is superintendent of Third Avenue Christian Sunday School. All correspondents will please take notice.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson, of Fuquay Springs, attended the Billy Sunday meetings at Charlotte, N. C., recently. He no doubt had a rare opportunity in so doing. The Charlotte Presbyterian Standard gave very good accounts of the meeting. As usual, Mr. Sunday stirred up some opposition, but he won many to stand with him for the truth. We wish Bro. Johnson may give our readers a good report of what he saw and heard there. No matter what people say of him, nor what he may do otherwise, Billy Sunday stands for the truth as he sees it. You may wake him up on the wrong side of some other questions possibly, but he stands on the right side of the Bible and its teaching—at least he tries to do so, and seemingly he succeeds generally. We wish many of our readers might have the chance Bro. Johnson has had of hearing and studying Billy Sunday as a preacher of truth and righteousness.

"Practically all evangelical denominations agree with Baptists that the Lord's Supper is to be administered only to those who have received baptism."—Western Recorder. We should like if the Western Recorder would give us the facts to uphold his statement. Give us two facts at least. (1) Give us the authorized statement of any representative man to the effect that his denomination believes that the Lord's Supper is to be administered only to persons who have been baptized (immersed); (2) give us the passage of Scripture in which it is required that a Christian shall be baptized before he may partake of the Lord's Supper. It is easy for the Recorder to make such a statement, but we do not think it will be so easy to produce proof of the same. We have the statement; now let us have the two points of proof for which we are asking.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. L. D. Rippy, of our Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., which took place on Friday, January 18, 1924. We have known him for perhaps forty years, and have held him in precious remembrance. We came to know him first during the days when we were editing THE CHRISTIAN SUN at Raleigh, N. C. He was the true friend of that paper till the day of his death. As THE SUN had entered so largely in my own life and work, his friendship for the paper bound him close to its editor. But far more than that, he was the friend of the Christian Church and its Lord. He was locally the special friend of Bethlehem Christian Church, and was loved by a large circle of friends, as was attested by the very large attendance of the people of that community, besides a good many from a distance. There must have been a thousand people there. The matter of viewing the remains must have consumed a half an hour. It was remarked by several in our hearing that they had never seen so many people view the remains of any one person. Rev. J. F. Apple, the pastor of the Bethlehem Church, was in charge. He was aided by Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Rev. W. T. Scott, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., and other ministers were in the congregation. He had not lived in vain. God bless his memory and may his works follow to the glory of the Lord. Other notices will soon appear.

The first anniversary of the burning of the old administration building was celebrated at Elon on January 18th. It was an interesting occasion. A half-day holiday was given the students, and they enjoyed the afternoon as they saw fit. Then there were a number of visitors during the afternoon, among them the Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., the founder and first president of Elon College. In the evening a splendid dinner was given to the students and some of their friends who happened to be present. On this occasion several addresses were made of an interesting character by students and visitors. All seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion. Following the dinner, we adjourned to the hall of the societies in the new administration building, where we were permitted to hear a debate (the second of its kind) between representatives of Elon College and representatives of Emory and Henry College. The subject was the "Soldiers' Bonus—Ought it to be Given or Not?" Elon had the affirmative side of the question, and Emery and Henry had the negative. The debate was fine; the young men acquitting themselves splendidly. The decision was by three judges, who sat in different sections of the hall, and so had no chance to be influenced in their judgment by an expression of opinion of the other two members. The vote of the judges stood one for the affirmative and two for the negative, and so the decision was in favor of the negative. At the same hour, a similar discussion was held at Emery and Henry, where Elon had the negative and Emory and Henry the affirmative. And there the Elon representatives were victorious—thus the negative seemed to win in both cases. The young men must have been most helped by the careful study of the question, but the audience was very much edified and pleased with the honest and hard work which had been done in preparation for the occasion. We must say that the young men, we think, found all of the strong points on their respective sides of the question. If the debate had been held in the halls of Congress and by congressmen, we doubt that it would have been any stronger. This debate between these two colleges, as we understand it, is an annual affair. The spirit of both sides, as well as the speeches, were excellent. The defeated representatives of Elon were the first to extend hearty congratulations to the Emery and Henry victors. It was an occasion that will be long remembered.

A REAL POUNDING.

A few days ago, I mentioned some things we received that were good to eat. However, later, this seemed to be just a little test, or sample, of what was to follow. On Monday night—the last day of the year 1923—we had quite a surprise of good things. About 7 o'clock, Bro. J. C. Johnson, his brother, and Miss Essie, his daughter, came. While we were having a very pleasant conversation together, a car drove up in the yard. First thinking that it was my boy, that had gone to Walters, but this very quickly proved to be untrue, as the car did not go to the shelter, or barn, but came to the back porch. They did not knock on the door or call to any one, but seemed to be acting a little strange. Bro. Johnson (I think, knowing something of what was on hand) went to the door. He said some one was out there and wanted a light. On the outside we found Bro. Richard Joyner. He had gotten one of the neighbors to come by on the truck. The man was gone, but he was there with the goods all right. A large box full, and many things setting around on the floor. We did not make a full investigation just then, as about that time some one else knocked at the front door, which proved to be Bro. C. K. Barrett, Sister Barrett and their little daughter.

We spent a very pleasant time together. We talked for some time; then Miss Johnson, who is excellent in music, rendered some music on the piano, and we all sang some good old hymns, and Bro. Johnson led us in prayer. They left for their homes, we went to look over the good things brought us, which we found consisted of fifty pounds of sugar, one hundred and thirty pounds of flour, thirty pounds of lard, three pounds coffee, some candy and apples, two pair ladies' hose, four pair men's hose, one chicken, two pounds butter, bushel potatoes, greens and turnips, one twelve-pound ham, can of peaches, two cans of pickles, one dollar in cash, and it may be some things I have not mentioned. The next night, Bro. Fenton Rose and Sister Rose, his wife, brought us a sack of flour and five more pounds of sugar. Saturday morning, Sister Lizzie M. Daughtry sent us two cans of pickles and some greens. The same day, Bro. J. G. Duck gave me a pocket-knife.

This pounding was made up from the gifts of several people. I have their names, but not space to mention them. Words sometimes are vain and empty things; however, at this time I could not find words sufficient to express my appreciation for these good things, so will just say thank you, and pray that God will help us to render service to pay for the many kind things that are being done for us.

Praying God's richest blessings upon His people everywhere, I am yours in the Master's service. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Walters, Va.

GOD'S NECK AND ARMS.

Not long ago I was standing on the street corner waiting to cross. Just in front of me was a woman, with a little child, who appeared to be much frightened. The mother was trying to comfort the child and make it understand that there was no danger. The child fretted and held close to the mother's dress. All at once it fell into a panic of fear, and its startled cries attracted much attention. The mother stooped down to speak to the child, and it threw its arms tightly around her neck and held on in desperation. She could not get away. She lifted the child. She did not leave it hanging on unaided, but she put her arms around the child, and then a sense of safety came over it, and the crying ceased. I thought, "How like God that is!" We get frightened, and in terror and desperation grasp at Him. Like the child, we would put our arms about His neck. It is near, where we can hear His voice of assurance. Then I recall those words of that writer of the long past: "And underneath are the everlasting arms." It is not a case of our "holding on alone" with our weakness, but of God holding on also. Is it any wonder that Paul should feel that nothing could separate us from the "love of God, which is in Christ Jesus?"—The Watchman-Examiner.

"I STAND AND KNOCK."

Rev. 3:20—Just after Holman Hunt had finished his great painting, "The Light of the World," a friend came into his studio. He looked long at the beautiful picture—the loving face of the thorn-crowned Christ, who stands so patiently outside the shut door; the door itself, overgrown with gnarled branches of ivy, the hinges rusted, it had been tight closed so long.

"Wonderful! wonderful!" the man said at last. "Perfect, but for one thing, the door has no handle."

"No," answered Hunt at once. "The handle is on the inside. That door can be opened only from within."

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Much is said of ending war, but do you think we can end war as long as the wants of the human family present so many opposing problems?—J. F. E.

That is a timely question, but who can answer it? It was said that the late World War was a war to stop war, but it did not do it, and it is not likely to do it hereafter. There are so many opposing problems in human society that it seems almost impossible to end war. A leading business man is quoted as having recently said: "If every present question were settled, should we be any nearer the ending of war?" And then he answered the question by saying: "I think not, for fresh questions would be continually arising." And I guess that man is right. While men cherish and hold to their evil natures, I think war will continue to come. International conferences, treaties between nations, leagues of nations, and no other human agency is likely to do more than to make war more difficult. As long as men are seeking to make gain beyond what is pleasing in the sight of the Lord, wars are likely to continue. When men shall truly bow to the authority of God and dedicate their lives to His service, then war may cease, but not till then. It was said when the late World War in Europe ended, that there would be no more war soon, and for the reason that the world had almost destroyed itself in war, and that it could not have another war any time soon, the world's resources are not sufficient; and yet we are now expecting that on almost any day another great war will break out in Europe, and it is even predicted that it will be far worse than was the late World War. The truth is that human wants and needs are so varied, and what the one nation wants is so directly opposed to what another nation wants, that we can hardly hope for universal peace, certainly not till Jesus comes.

Question.—Why do some people lay so much stress on the virgin birth as it relates to Jesus Christ? If there were no virgin birth would not Jesus be the same Saviour?—Inquirer.

So much stress is laid on the virgin birth simply because it is essential to His character as a Saviour. If there were no virgin birth, then Jesus could not be the Saviour of the world, for He would be only a man, just as our Unitarian friends claim, and it is certain that no mere man could be the Saviour of sinners. If he could be, why is it that out of the untold millions of men who have been born into the world, not one of them has ever been the Saviour of the lost. No mere man could be what Jesus was, and Jesus Himself could not have been what He was if He had been born exclusively of earthly parents. Suppose we take up the fact that He is claimed by the Unitarians to have been the Son of Joseph and Mary, then He would be a bastard and rank with other bastards. Jesus was no bastard, for although He was born of a virgin, God was His Father, and so He comes forth a God-Man. It is true He was a man, but He was also God. He, therefore, took the place of a man, and among men, but He was God manifested in the flesh. It was through His relation to God that He was able to become the Saviour of sinners, and His relation to God depends, as we understand it, on the fact that God was His Father, and being God as well as man, He was able to sacrifice His life for the salvation of a lost world. He must have been begotten of God and born of a virgin, or He could not have been a Saviour of the lost. That seems to me to be a good reason why so much stress is laid upon the virgin birth. If He were not born of a virgin, then man could have no Saviour from sin. If you believe that Jesus is your personal Saviour from sin, then hold on to your faith in the virgin birth of Jesus, for if Joseph were His father and Mary His mother, He would have been an ordinary man, and so He would have had no power to redeem man from sin. Yes, as we see it, the virgin birth and the physical resurrection of the body of Jesus were and are the two pillars which are even today upholding the salvation of the lost. Therefore, if there be no virgin birth, we are without a saviour, and if without a Saviour, then of all men are we the most miserable, and for the reason that we are yet in our sins and without hope in the world. May God help us to see the truth as it is in Jesus. Let no man rob you of your faith in the virgin birth, for in so doing you would lose your only hope of eternal life in Jesus Christ.

Question.—Do you believe that God ever authorized polygamy? I am moved to ask this question, not through idle curiosity, but because 2 Sam. 12:7-8 seems to say that God did at least permit polygamy, and yet that system seems so contrary to the general teachings of the Word of God that I am slow to admit that God did authorize this evil system.—Sally.

We believe that God did not authorize polygamy. It may be that for some purpose which we do not now know, He permitted polygamy under peculiar circumstances for a very short time, but that it was a part of the plan of God in saving the world, the Word seems to be against it. If you will turn to 2 Sam. 11:27, you will see that David, in taking the wife of Uriah, greatly displeased the Lord, and so we cannot think of David as taking more than one wife without displeasing God. The system of polygamy all through the Scriptures seems to have the disapproval of God, and that is enough to set us against it, even though there were some facts which seem to the contrary. Just remember that for such facts set forth in the Scriptures, God had some special and good reason.

Question.—Somehow, it seems hard for me to see that you ministers are doing right when you enter into controversy over what is believed among you and the people of God. What is your reason for it?—Mother.

There seems to be not a little confusion over the matter of contending for the truth. It is not a mere matter of contending for human opinions, but rather for the revealed truth of God. In every age of the Church, so far as we are informed, false teachers have followed the preachers of truth and righteousness, seeking to pull down the bulwarks of salvation. It was especially so in the days of Paul, and Paul never hesitated to strike at error, and he did it on the right and on the left, when he got a chance to do so. He did not hesitate because some would say they did not like controversy. They may have said as much, seeking to discourage Paul in opposing error, but that did not keep Paul from defending the truth. If you will read Paul's epistles with care you will be compelled to see that again and again he struck the men who were teaching error some sledge-hammer blows. If it were right for Paul to do that sort of a thing, then it must be right for ministers today to do it also in defense of the truth. Suppose the minister were to sit down and do nothing by way of defending the truth, and that in the face of men who are teaching error, would you say that it is right to leave the truth without defense in the hands of the enemies of the cross? I cannot think so. A man of real ability says: "In * * * times of crisis, God has always saved the Church. But He has always saved it, not by theological pacifists, but by sturdy contenders for the truth." That is just the truth, as we see it, and we do not hesitate to strike as hard as we can when some champion of error is going around and seeking to pull down the truth of God. It is our duty to strike, and to strike hard and fast, lest the truth be made of no effect by its enemies. In the second epistle of John and in chapter one and verses 7-11, you will find that our position seems fully justified in refusing to admit error not only into our minds and hearts, but God's children, as shown in that passage, are not to give a place in your home to a man who is teaching error. The Church is the custodian of God's truth, upon whom may we depend to take care of it and give it under the blessing and power of the Holy Spirit a place of real standing among men? If the ministers give the truth no standing in human society, who will do it? Let us stand for the truth, and having done all, stand to the end. Pacifists for error may afford to keep quiet, but we have no place for pacifists for truth, for the truth must stand to the end.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

As to the teaching concerning "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," there seems to be no question. As a result, there is equally the responsibility of helpfulness, one toward another. The parable of the Good Samaritan is brimming over with this fact. There are three classes of men—the murderer, the indifferent observer of conditions and things, and the one who gives his assistance, even at a sacrifice. None of us would question that the latter is the more Christ-like, while the others are of barbarism and selfishness.

Christ is the example the Father gave; and, by that gift, inspiration is to come to man that will reveal the Christ-life in man, thus showing the love and long-suffering of the Father that is to attract man to his beauty and goodness.

Dr. Fosdick says, in other words, that to continue to receive and to give nothing in return means death. This makes it more necessary that one should tell of the benefits received. It must have been in the mind of the Christ when he bade his disciples to go and witness for Him. That, in expression, larger avenues for service are revealed, but to suppress the impressions that one receives makes him the less capable of filling, even the smaller places that are offered for service. All men have not the same capacity for service; neither are they capable to serve in the same place and manner; but happy is the man who finds his place and helps to make the world better.

Since our last note, we have received from Prof. P. J. Kernodle, of the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, beautifully bound, and a copy of his book, "Lives of Christian Ministers." This is indeed a very fine donation to the library. The writer of this article has gone through his library and found fifteen volumns of history, political and social science, fiction and biblical literature; and also the works of Edgar Allan Poe, and presented them.

We have a very fine opening since Christmas, and the work in the building is going on very nicely.

E. M. CARTER.

"GOD SO LOVED."

God is more earnest for me to be saved than I am to be saved! "He so loved the world that He gave His Son." He loved not the saints, not penitents, not the religious, not those who love Him: but "the world," men, hardened, hopeless wanderers and sinners! He gave not a mere promise, not an angel to teach us, but His Son—His only begotten! So much did God love the world, sinners, me! I believe this. I must believe it; I believe on Him who says it. How can I do, then, otherwise than rejoice?—Luther.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

A NEW FORM OF EVANGELISM.

It is not new, except in form. The same idea was prevalent in the days of Jesus, so that the evangelistic idea is not new, but the form of it may be. A thing is not necessarily bad because it is new, neither is it necessarily good because it is old. Some one has said that a thing, if new, is not true, and if true it is not new. That only means to say that age does not settle the question of character. It may be new and be either good or bad. So it may be old and be either good or bed.

Evangelism, as Jesus and the apostles taught it, is old, and yet it has indirectly the form of which we wish to speak. When we speak of evangelizing, it really means the work of winning the world to Jesus through the preaching of the Word. There may be more than one way of doing that, but it would still be evangelizing. When we ordinarily speak of an evangelistic meeting, we mean to set apart a certain time when we will invite the people of the community to assemble to hear some preacner of the gospel make his appeal to sinners and invite them to come to Christ. That sort of work has been in vogue among most of the Churches for a long while, and it is yet; and it has been fruitful of much good.

So far as present-day evangelism is concerned, we believe there is an error in the method. We do not mean to decry the old methods, or to depreciate its good work, but we do wish to suggest another method which we believe, if properly understood and used, would mean a great deal more to the Church and more to the world—to unsaved people. We would possibly call it lay-evangelism. Instead of having the Church get into easy seats and let them have a good and easy time doing nothing but listening, we suggest that a more helpful and profitable method would be to set apart two weeks, more or less, and instead of having the preacher and a very few members do all of the work, in the way of evangelism, we suggest that every member of the Church undertake to be a private evangelist, at least for the two weeks, more or less. By that we mean every man and woman in the Church should give themselves to evangelizing for that time. Not that each one should go into the pulpit to preach, but that each one take his place and personally and individually give his time to looking out for men and women who are not Christians and seek to win them to Christ. This they could do by finding men who ought to be brought to Christ for salvation, and having found such a person, let him or her give himself to prayer for the person sought, and to visiting that man and talking with him, seeking to persuade him to accept Christ. If you will for a moment, just imagine what effect would be produced upon the people of a community by seeing a Church give itself to that sort of work. Let the minister be preaching, if need be, but by all means let the members be devoutly and truly giving themselves to this sort of work.

Of course, there are some Church members who would make little way in an effort to do that sort of work at first, but as they got into the work they would become interested and would give themselves to prayer, that they might have both the wisdom and the power of God resting upon them to enable them to do this work to His praise and glory. This kind of work might be slow in the beginning, but eventually its fruit would be large and of the very best quality. If the ministers could train their people to do this sort of work, we believe it would soon become a mighty power in soul-saving. While it would be a ready means of soul-saving, we believe it would be the making of the Church—making the members very fruitful in their lives, fruitful for good. Such an arrangement would bring the Church where it could, in a sense, take care of itself, and when that time comes, you would see the Church far more fruitful in good works, and that would mark a new day in the life of the Church. Every Christian, in some degree of usefulness, ought to be a soul-winner, and if this method were commonly used among the Churches, almost, if not every member, would become soul-winners, and that would make a live Church and a Church of great power.

Even in Korea this idea is made practical in a large way. It is said that in Korea a person does not join the Church by answering a few questions, but not till he has gone out and won some one to Christ is he received. His success in soul-winning is the condition of Church membership. If he has won no one to Christ, that is taken as a good reason for holding up his Church membership till he can go out and win a soul to Christ; and when that is done, he is considered a soul-winner, and is therefore qualified to become a Church member. As such, he is received into membership and he is already an evangelist of some experience. Of course, there are many persons who would decry the very thought by saying: "Oh, it cannot be done!" How do you know it cannot be done? It has not yet been tried among us, and until a thing is tried, we ought not to pronounce against it. Try it, try it faithfully, and then see what comes out of the effort. Of course, it will take time to do this sort of work, and that is just what it ought to do; but when it has been faithfully tried, you will find that the Church is not only much stronger in every way, but it will be much more fruitful in good works. Why not let us try it? It will mean a great deal to the Church. "Yes," you say, "but the members cannot do that sort of work." Yes, but they can; that is, if you can get them to have enough religion, if you can get them to be filled with the Spirit, there will be no trouble to get them to work. Think over it, and then let us know what are your conclusions. It is certainly worth much prayer and thought.

SALVATION, THE NEED OF THE CHURCH.

We have just found and read a most remarkable article in the Western Christian Advocate, under the above heading. The heading is almost startling, and the facts presented in the body of the article are even more startling. We have long had some cause to feel that there are conditions which justify what he says. But is that possible? Can it be that the Church itself is in need of salvation? Is it possible that the lack of power on the part of the Church and its ministry is an explanation of the fact that the Church is not winning many people to Christ? If that is so, and this brother, the editor of the Western Christian Advocate, is right in what he says, then it is high time that the Church be awakened and made aware of its own helplessness and a reason for not many conversions in its work. We have long seen that there is some unusual weakness on the part of the Church, but can it be so bad as the Advocate editor makes to be? Alas! we fear that he is right; and if so, it is not against the Methodist Church, nor the Baptist Church, nor the Presbyterian Church, nor the Christian Church, for all of the Churches are in a similar situation. They need something, and they need it very much. We dare to say that if the Church people were all converted truly—yes, genuinely regenerated by the grace of God, under the power of the Holy Spirit—we should see a very different situation from what we now have. To make the Church fully alive, we need only to get it fully made alive in Christ, and then we shall see power and great fruitfulness, and the saving of the world through Christ will be a comparatively easy undertaking. The reason we are so weak and helpless is the absence of Christ in the Church. Give Christ His rightful place in the Church, and the Church will immediately become a mighty power in the world. The Western Christian Advocate says:

"Do there ever come times when the Church needs to be saved? On one side, it is a human institution, though it may have a divine origin. Here comes perplexities; here are vast perils. On the earthly side of the Church are doors that may be opened and through which may pass those undesirable elements that at times require the temple of God to be cleansed of its vileness and saved from the slump of its own vitality.

"Today there is the feeling that the Church needs to be saved; not because it is reprehensible; not because there is reason for the great head of the Church to repudiate it, but because there come times when forces take possession of it which do not display the spirit of our Lord. For this reason, the Church must be saved in the sense of being cleansed. It must be saved from itself, from the forces that develop within it, that threaten its destruction.

"The Church needs to be saved from an apathetic faith. Today there is almost as much dynamic faith in the teaching of Christ, and in the person of Christ as Saviour outside the Church as there is in it. Faith within the Church today is apathetic. It is not vigorous; it is not vitalized; it is not up in anticipation; it is not pressing forward; it is not on its toes with eagerness; it has not sufficient confidence in itself to go forth and assert as ineradicable and all-sovereign, the great columnar truths of the teaching of our Lord. It has not the evangelistic urgency that a great, mighty, colossal faith should have in an hour of the world's calamity.

"The Church needs to be saved from controversy. Who will question this fact? We are in an hour of divided forces, when we should be united. We are engaged in disagreements when we should be of one mind. We are wrestling under discouragement when we should go forward with the courage of conquest and of opportunity.

"Who will say that controversy is not raging in the Church? Who will deny thatt he flames of disagreement are not expected to burst forth in every denomination in Protestantism? Who will deny that there is a broadcast feeling of fear that the radical and the conservative, the modernist and the fundamentalist, will not rend the garments of our Christ?

"The Church needs to be saved from bitterness, because controversy produces bitterness, for when men disagree they impugn each other's motives. When they have the divisive spirit they seek to exclude each other from the kingdom of God. They push out and close doors. They become heartless and narrow. They fail to give way to the control of the sweet spirit of Christ.

"Bitterness, do we say, in the Churches? Ah! if you are acquainted with the controversies now prevailing, we need not discuss further this regrettable condition. Bitterness is in the Church where Christ would have nothing but love. Angry contentions have been heard above the choirs on Bethlehem's plain. The knife hath been unsheathed and men have been stabbed in the back, while those hungry of spirit, sick of heart, despondent, and lonely, have waited for the message of the Church sounding peace and good will, comfort and assurance to burdened souls.

"The Church needs to be saved from discontent. Her ministry is too restless. It gives small evidence of that sweet Christian assurance that leads the world to believe that the man of God, dedicated to the ministry of the pulpit, believes in the support and providence of God and his blessed assurance that they shall not want.

"Who, then, shall call the Church to her altars, that she may be saved from those forces, those influences, those conditions within herself and without her border, which keep her from experiencing truth her gospel message offers?

"How long will strong, able-minded men waste and exhaust their energies in forms of unworldly warfare while men, women, and children perish for the bread of life?

"How long will the faith of the Church be apathetic when the cloud of witnesses beyond her border are acclaiming the power of Jesus Christ to save the world from the darkness into which it has fallen?

"How long, O Lord! how long will the Church wait for the coming of her Lord, who seeks to make her the child, as well as the agent, of redemption?"

IS IT NOT A "TWEEDLE-DEE TWEEDLE-DUM" AFFAIR?

The present controversy, which is so disturbing the Church at this time, is not a minor matter. It is not even a thunder-storm excitement. Not many people seem to realize the meaning of the present disturbance. Many look upon it as only a small matter, disturbing only hair-splitters, and not the solid men and women of the Church. Here again is a mistake. The disturbance is a vital matter to the Christian faith—if the present conflict should result in the defeat of the conservative side of the question, then real Christianity would perish from the earth, for if the modernists' plea be correct, then there is nothing supernatural in Christianity, and without the supernatural power of God, upholding it, nothing among men can save it from a tremendous fall. The real issue at stake is that of faith and unbelief. The conservative side of the question stands for the faith of our fathers and the teachings of the Bible. The radical side of the question stands against the Bible as we have it. They declare that the Bible is made up of myths, and not a revelation from God. If, therefore, the radicals win, then the supernatural in Christianity is to be classed as an error and the fundamental doctrines of the Bible are thrown out as no good. When that day comes, then will the power of the Church wane, and no one can at this time tell the full meaning of a wane in the influence of the truth upon the hearts and minds of the people.

If the basis of revealed truth is taken from the Church, then a dark day will overhang the Church, for the Church without the Bible would be a very lame affair—its power would be gone, and its future would be as limited as real paganism and with no more light. That would be a dark day for the cause of Christianity, and there would be no altar fires from which to light the way of life. Now and then we meet with brethren who make light of the situation, as if no harm could come to the Church through the unbelief of modernism. Maybe that is true, but if so, it is very strange indeed. Christianity has a source of life. Now, if that source be taken away, what can be done in the way of finding the way of life? While the Bible cannot be considered the source of eternal life, we must all admit that it is the revelation of that source. Then, take the Bible from us, or, what is the same, destroy our faith in it as the revelation of the source of the Christian life, and then we are without a light and without a guide. To take the Bible from us as authority for the various fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith is to undo our hope and bestow upon us the darkness of the dark ages and let us down to the depths of darkness and the degredation of sin. We cannot consent to this situation. We must stand for the Bible as the revelation of God's will for the guidance of man, as he seeks to make his way back to God. The man who says this is only "a tweedle-dee tweedle-dum" affair, and of no special importance, no matter what he calls himself—he is a rank modernist, and should be classed as such. Do you ask, "Why so?" The answer is at hand. Such a man has no use for the Bible because he has already adjudged himself to be ample authority for all his needs, and therefore has no need of the Bible as a guide.

Take the matter of the virgin birth of Christ. If it is not taught in the Bible, then the fundamental pivot of Christianity is a fake, and we have nothing on which to stand. The Bible teaches the virgin birth of Jesus Christ. We do not need scholarship to back us in this claim, for scholarship knows not enough of the facts involved to displace the teaching of the Bible. The Bible very plainly declares the virgin birth. Now, what shall we do with it? Shall we accept it as truth, or shall we, just to satisfy a few non-believing men, reject the great truth on which, as we see it, the divine life and character of the Son of God rests?

The fact of the virgin birth is foretold in prophecy and confirmed in New Testament revelation. In Isa. 7:14, we read: "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call His name Immanuel." That is the sure word of prophecy. Then it is fulfilled in Matt. 1:22: "A virgin shall be with child and shall bring forth a Son, and they shall call His name Immanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us." Another account is to be found in Luke 1:26-38, and especially verses 34 and 35. Now we must accept these statements as true, or repudiate a plain statement of the New Testament. If you accept the authority of the New Testament, then you must accept the thought of the virgin birth. The truth is Christianity is a miracle, and its various leading doctrines are miraculous. If you cannot believe in the miraculous, then you are necessarily opposed, not only to the virgin birth, but to Christ Himself, to His resurrection, to His ascension, and, in fact, to His whole life, for Christ is a miracle.

Let the men who reject the virgin birth be consistent. If they must reject it, then let them reject Christianity as a whole, for it is all a miracle, and so far as we know, it is no more a violation of faith to reject the whole than it is to reject some vital point. If a man has no room for the supernatural in Christianity, then he may as well reject it all, for all of its vital parts are supernatural. Some accept the virgin birth, but make it mean something very unlike what the plain words of Scripture make it to be. Why? Well, it would seem because of unbelief in the plain Word—inspired Word of God. If a man cannot believe the inspired Word of God, then, so far as we can see, he may as well not believe anything about Christianity. That is what it practically amounts to—unbelief in any fundamental truth is the same as unbelief in all fundamental truth. Unbelief in one fundamental truth sets a man in array against all fundamental truth. It may be that this is not orthodox to some of our readers, but we believe it will stand the test of examination.

We have known occasionally men to reject some vital point in the doctrines of Christianity. It was the opening of the gate of unbelief, and soon the man so acting was not only an unbeliever in the one doctrine, but in others, and sometimes the first step in unbelief was the gateway to apostacy and to the rejection of all vital truths of Christianity. When we reject one fundamental, it is indeed the open gateway to a rejection of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible. Let us beware! Unbelief is a dangerous thing.

WHAT WOULD BE YOUR ANSWERS TO THESE QUESTIONS?

The man who is not in earnest about the work of his Church nearly always has an excuse ready for you, if you approach him on a particular line. If they should happen to be temporarily without an excuse, many of them would make an excuse so quick you would have thought that he had it already made and tucked away in his vest pocket so as to be ready should a need arise for it.

Editor Lewis F. Kipp of the Canadian Baptist undoubtedly has had some experience in dealing with this class of persons, and so he has written out some thoughts so as to have them all ready to present in case he should meet such a man, and we pass to our readers the words of this wide-awake editor, as well worth reading, as touching excuses for not taking and reading the denominational paper.

"Too high." That is the way to keep it high—don't subscribe. The fewer subscribers, the higher cost for each one.

"I have more papers now than I read." Better weed out the less important then. Do not economize on your religion.

"Others are important to my business." But religion is the most important business of life. It is for time and eternity.

"No time to read." What use do you make of your evenings, Sabbaths and other spare time; any better use?

"No taste for it." What have you a taste for? Taste indicates character, and character destiny. Which way are you headed, anyhow? Is it not time to wake up?

"Too dry." Can it be that, to a child of God, divine truth, in its application of life today; the progress of the kingdom; current history of redemption; the glory of our blessed Lord and Master; the salvation of our fellow-men; plans for the carrying out of the great commission, projected and in progress—can it be that these can be too dry to one of His children?

ANOTHER HEARD FROM.

Among the brethren asked to answer certain questions as to receiving certain men into the Church, was Bro. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa. Due to his absence from home he was a bit late in answering. He did not make a formal answer, but from his letter I select the following sentence as expressing his thought in the matter:

"I am not a minister, and am not receiving members into the Church, but if I were, and your "straw man' came, I would have to kindly refuse to receive a man who denied my Lord and His power to save."

Thank you, Bro. Eldredge, but our man was more than a "straw man." There are many men today occupying pulpits in this country, and elsewhere, who are sure-enough men, and I have good reason to believe, if they would answer the questions I have asked, and do it honestly, as I think they would, they would answer in the negative; and then, if you were a minister, you would turn away from him and tell him you could not receive him, and that is just what I would do.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Unity is one of the big items in the spirit and effort of the Federal Council. Jesus said: "I and my Father are one"; and He prayed "That they all may be one"; and Paul said, "Ye are all one in Christ." There is no unity out of Christ, and no division in Him. When the world comes to know Christ, and the whole Church comes to live Christ, then unity will prevail.

The trend of feeling and thought among Church people is toward unity. Christian literature and independent benevolent organizations, fostered by the Christian motive, indicate a certain, though it may be an unconscious, desire for the unity for which Jesus prayed; and His prayer suggests that it can be attained only by prayer; else why did He pray for it? It cannot be attained by doctrinal agreement, and it need not be done that way. Unity is a very different thing from organic union. It is a spiritual oneness, expressing itself in kingdom co-operation. The idea may be more clearly illustrated than expressed in logical terms.

Forty years ago the railroads of this country were independent organizations without hearty co-operation. Each company had its own gauge, its own cars, its own stations. As business grew, public opinion grew toward a demand for closer co-operation. Narrow gauge, wide gauge, broad gauge, made transportation slow, expensive, and unsatisfactory. Cars had to be unloaded and reloaded from one system to another, much damage was done to goods, and much delay to delivery. Many suggestions were made to remedy the loss to traffic. They tried change in the length of axles, and the shifting of box cars from one set of axles to another to fit the gauge of different systems. This was slow and expensive. Then came the suggestion for a standard-gauge track. Some companies was afraid of this, lest small companies might be absorbed by large companies. The three-rail plan was tried for a time, so that cars of different-length axles could pass from one road to another; but this was expensive and unsatisfactory. Finally, the standard-gauge was adopted by agreement, all axles were the same length, union stations were erected, traffic increased, travel was improved, companies were more friendly, and no railroad suffered; in fact, all were benefited. Now you can see in a train of a hundred cars, coaches from almost as many roads from the Atlantic to the Pacific. One train, but many cars! Each company shares equitably in the business of the country because they work together. They adjust charges by agreement, they co-operate in freight, passenger, express, and mail charges from Maine to California. All are benefitted, the public is better served, each company controls its own affairs, and all work together in harmony. In the same way, it seems to me, denominations could co-operate without the loss of autonomy, convictions, growth, or usefulness; but with increased usefulness to the kingdom. The lack of co-operation and rivalry results in a waste of means, energy, fellowship, and plants too many Churches in small places. This lowers the spirit of friendliness, unity, and efficiency in kingdom service. Kingdom values lose by a divided way of doing the Lord's work. In all world-obligations, such as missions, benevolences, education, co-operation is the expression of unity and the only true witnessing for Christ. Jesus aid again: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." It seems to be true still. Railroads have gone ahead of the Church in the matter of co-operation, and with success, and the Church might well learn this good lesson from this great business unity.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

I am very glad that Dr. Barrett has written at length in regard to the proposed financial plan for our Church, and that he has called on certain brethren to discuss it. He has certainly chosen a fine array of our leaders for this purpose. I hope, however, that others will discuss it, too, and that the editor also will make his position clear. No matter of greater import claims the attention of the Southern Christian Convetnion than the financial suppor of our Church's enterprises. Men and Millions will soon be over, and in the absence of a plan, our enterprises will suffer. Wisdom joins consecration in suggesting that a program be inaugurated to safeguard these enterprises.

I cannot hope to have suggested a plan acceptable in all particulars, but, as I wrote in the original article, the plan as suggested is definite and can be made the basis of consideration. When it has been thoroughly discussed by the brethren named and others, among whom I hope will be numbered Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Mr. S. A. Caveness, Mr. W. K. Holt, Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Mr J. M. Darden, Mr. P. J. Carlton, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Mr. J. W. Stout, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Hon. K. B. Johnson and many others, we shall no doubt be able intelligently to formulate a plan that will promote the kingdom's interests committed to our Church. I hope also that several brethren of our Church in other sections will join in the discussion, since the plan contemplates the co-operation of the entire Church. Such co-operation our leaders feel is imperative at this time.

I would like to call attention to one vital point. This plan is both a budget and an educational program. I made this plan in my first letter, but in an abbreviated form it may not be so clear. The budget plan alone is lacking in warmth and inspiration; it tends to become mechanical and lifeless. The educational plan without a definite goal or budget lacks method; it is spasmodic and uncertain. The combined plan aims to correct the weakness of both these methods of Church financing by incorporating and correlating the strength of each. What we all desire is the plan that our Master would approve. I hope there will be full, free, frank discussion of this plan, with suggestions for its improvement or for a substitute that will advance the kingdom's interests even more successfully than it promises to do. I am grateful to Dr. Barrett for opening up THE CHRISTIAN SUN for this discussion, and will be to every friend who enters into the consideration of this great issue.

Just one more word in conclusion. To adopt this plan without an adequate personnel to foster and promote it will invite disappointment. To expect it to function perfectly will also be to invite disappointment. The plan will require time and leadership. So will any other plan. What we want is the best plan we can get. We are entitled to it, and let's go after it.

W. A. HARPER.

TRUE AND FALSE LIBERALISM.

The words "liberal," "liberality," and "liberalism" are among the largest, best, and noblest words we have in our language; but, strangely as it might seem, in connection with religion, they are often misapplied, misappropriated and abused. If a call for religious liberals be sent out through the land, persons would respond whose belief would range all the way from diluted orthodoxy to pure theism, and from that again off to a thousand eccentricities of radicalism and individualism. Indeed, you will find rising up in response to your call many who do not believe in religion at all, for they tell us what the world wants now to bring in the golden age is to have religion replaced by science, and Churches by theaters and lyceums; on the other hand, you will have in your group many of the best people of all our communities, men and women of the highest intelligence, of broad views, large sympathies, progressive ideas, as an outgrowth of noble Christian character, such as Dean Stanley, Professor Jowett, Frederick Denison Maurice, Frederick W. Robertson, Charles Kingsley, Phillip Brooks and Heber Newton; also such brave thinkers and broad-minded preachers as Roger Williams the Baptist, and Bushnell the Congregationalist, Robertson Smith the Presbyterian, Whittier the Quaker, and Dr. Thomas the Methodist, with Channing and Parker, and Emerson and Francis E. Abbot, and surely nobody could deny their right to come. Others will appear, claiming a right to stand in the ranks of liberals, such as Frederick Harrison and a band of positivist, and Andrew Jackson Davis and Giles B. Stebbins, with a great company of spiritualists by their sides, and Herbert Spencer with a respectable body of agnostics by his side, and Haechel and B. F. Underwood and their fellow-materialist, all claiming to be religious liberals. So you see your company will range all the way from Christian to non-Christian, and even violent anti-Christian; from theist to atheist, from spiritualist to materialist, from most ardent and earnest believers in the upholders of the Christian religion and Churches to sneerers and mockers at religion, and violent denouncers of Churches, from real liberals, worthy of the name, to men as far removed from genuine liberality in their views of truth and in their methods of judging others, as darkness is from night; and what is worst of all, the combative, narrow-minded men, whose whole ambition is iconoclasm, and who are liberal in nothing only in quantity of vituperation which they hurl at Churches, preachers and religion, are very commonly the loudest in their claim of being liberals; while the real liberals, of genuine intelligence and breadth of view and charity toward others, whose aim is constructive rather than destructive, and who are working to build up a better religion instead of to tear down what true religion there is in the world —these are likely to be comparatively quiet and retiring. Thus, often the loud-voiced iconoclasts and destructionist come to be the class of men that get to be the most known in our communities as liberals; and men learn, unfortunately, when liberalism is spoken of, to think first of these men as its representatives; and in this way the cause of real liberality in religion is put in a false light, and seriously hurt. You all know such men—such reckless destructionists, such extremists—who never cease vociferating in behalf of tolerance, while, alas! few persons are so intolerant as they of the views of others who differ from them; men who condemn the Bible in the most sweeping and wholesale manner, while only too commonly their own ignorance of the volume they condemn—its origin, history, real character, and influence in the world—would be amusing were it not so pitiful. I suppose the only definition that can possibly be formed, which will cover all the different kinds of people who in this country claim the name "liberal," is the purely negative one of "persons who do not believe in all the old theological system of orthodoxy"; but a negative definition of this kind is no definition at all. The word "liberal" is a noble word; and it ought to be an honor to a man to be called such, but to be so called in a sweeping way, without definition or discrimination, is to thrust him into the company of men of one idea—cranks and extremists of the worst type. This, with every other noble word, is appropriated to a greater or less extent by persons who have no right to it. The word "radical" is a striking illustration of this, which means a root-man—a man who tries to trace all things to their root, their origin, their foundation; but instead of this it is often appropriated by men whose only care seems to get hold of everything that is time-honored and regarded by others as sacred, and root it up.

In the same way, the great word "progress" is very widely appropriated by men of all sorts of "isms," whose thought is anything but genuinely progressive. Every man who has a notion differing from that of the people generally, thinks it is an advanced notion, whereas it is just as likely to be retrograde.

To turn agnostic—lose faith in God and hope of immortality—is no advanced position, but a sad and dreary retrograde. Nor is it less true of the noble word "liberty"—"O liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name!"

Liberty is not license, but freedom from bondage of all kinds; a means to an end—not to plunge downward into vice and lust and crime, but freedom to rise to the highest wisdom and virtue and consequent happiness that beckons from above. The true liberal is the man who believes in liberty as a method by which men have to rise to all highest and divinest things attainable in this life. But ever the high and divine things are the end, and the liberty is a good only as it leads up to them. As soon as it begins to lead downward, it straight-way becomes license, and and is henceforth a curse. There is no true liberalism in scorn or contempt, for it sympathizes, appreciates, puts itself in another's place, and tries to look at things from that other's standpoint and judge from his viewpoint. I do not mean to say that liberality always approves, for it does not; it often condemns, but when it does condemn it is with sorrow, and not with delight, not with scorn, but with pity and tenderness. He is aware that minds differ; that different persons see the same thing in different lights.

The true liberal will not be, as to his ultimate aims, a destroyer, but a builder. If he destroys he will destroy, as nature does, to build again and to build better, for man's larger good, prompted by faith in truth, and love of God and humanity. He will see good in other Churches besides his own, and for the most part that they are made up of good, honest, earnest, true-hearted people. He will be slow to say that any evangelical body of Christian men and women who hold views differing from his own, are insincere or hypocritical, for the first principle with him is freedom to think, freedom to judge, and respect for others in their honestly formed opinions. I do not think that genuine liberalism tends to take men outside of the Churches, for the influence of the Christian religion, in its higher and more spiritual and rational forms, and of Churches, whenever they are what they ought to be, is not narrowing, but widening and enlarging to both mind and heart. It is a method and a spirit—a method of progress, growth, widening appreciation, enlarging attainment; it is the spirit of charity, sympathy, receptivity, appreciation, life. It is hope, faith and vision; the beating of the wngs of the human spirit, that has been cramped too long by human creeds and ecclesiastical fetters, the beating of its wings for a larger liberty—the liberty of "sons of God" through Jesus Christ.

The true liberal is the poet, the seer, the prophet; he is the man who pierces deeper into the heart of truth than his fellows; who climbs higher heights, and sees farther than they—ever in search of the new, he does not abandon anything that is good and true in the old. With one hand, he reaches forward in hope and confidence after the unattained; with the other, he holds firmly to the attained, while he believes in fresh inspirations and revelations ahead, he believes no less in the revelations behind. Men love the genuine liberal because all his words and works tend to carry the world forward to a better day—a day of clearer light, of larger charity, of growing peace on earth and good will to men. Oh, to learn the liberality of the Sermon on the Mount! to be as broad and progressive and charitable as truth and love! to be truly Christian! to be brothers of one another; disciples of Him who went about doing good; children of Him "who maketh His sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sendeth His rain on the just and on the unjust."

I close with the noble words of Dean Stanley: "Be as free, be as liberal, be as courageous as you will; but be religious because you are liberal, be devout because you are free, be pure because you are bold; cast away the works of darkness, because you are children of the light."

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

LOW CHRISTIAN PERCENTAGES.

Here is an awful statement from Rev. I. Millard Hoel, Tuscola, Ind., as given in a recent issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty: "I have found the following statistics: Less than 2 per cent of families, whose heads are Church members, have an old-time family altar. Only about 10 per cent of them say grace at the table. About 12 per cent try to keep the quiet hour. Twenty per cent try to read the Bible. The majority of those studying the Sunday School lesson do it hurriedly on Sunday morning. Many times on the way to Church, or after arriving, just before the school opens, I find many instructors untrained, with no interest in the devotional life, and who do not care to hitch up with the Church or the pastor in the hour of worship. Some teachers are only in the beginning of their teens, and say but little about the lesson and are anxious to get away to some prearranged feast or an outing. On an average of one-half of the enrollment of our Sunday Schools do not regularly attend school. Many come only now and then. About 5 per cent stay for worship in cities and towns. President Harding saw these conditions. He often remarked concerning them on his last journey westward through the United States. His heart was burdened because of the lack of religious conditions and often appealed to the citizens to live right and to develop the spiritual. He said we are not so religious as we were fifty or twenty-five years ago." We make this quotation to present to our brotherhood the present situation. Do you think a people who only measured up to the above can be counted a real Christian people? But there is another question behind this. What sort of teaching is it that has given the people such ideas and ideals of the Christian life? We do not wish to reflect on the teaching of brethren under whose labors this state of things has come to pass; but, brethren, the teaching of the truth under the light and power of the Holy Spirit cannot produce any such conditions in the religious life of any people as are here indicated. The true teaching of the truth, under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, will not, as a rule, produce any such lives as are indicated in what our brother says of the present state of the Church. If this be true, what is the remedy? Well, as we see it, it is for the preachers and teachers to get the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and then teach the people of the way more truly, and the truth in the heart of the people will produce a life so different from that revealed in the above quotation that we shall soon see a Church of real life and power taking the place of the present Church, and if this, or something akin to it, be not substituted for the present situation, then it will not be a great while till the light of truth will be withheld from the people, the candle-stick will be removed, and the Church will become yet more helpless spiritually. We are not disputing what Bro. Hoel says; we fear he has the situation presented about as it is. If we cannot break up this situation, Bro. Hoel, what shall become of us as a people?

WHETHER YOU BE FUNDAMENTALIST OR MODERNIST—READ THIS.

The modern apostasy from the "faith once for all delivered unto the saints," which delights to pose as a zealous "minister of righteousness" under the name of "modernism," is nothing more than the revival of old errors in a new dress. In fact, "modernism" is not modern at all, but a subtle attempt to revamp cast-off and discredited heresies of early centuries and pass them off in religious circles as a new revelation of truth, as the following from one of our much-respected exchanges clearly shows:

"Some one recently pointed out the close parallel between the ancient Marcion of the second century, and the modernist, showing that the so-called modern mind is just 1700 years old! Note the points of likeness. Marcion set up his own gnosis (knowledge) above the teaching of the Holy Scriptures. The modernist likewise. Marcion rejected most of the Old Testament, and accused it of teaching many errors. The modernist ditto. The old gnostic applied the same shifting and emptying criticism to the New testament that is so much in vogue among the modernists today, holding that Paul and others corrupted the pure, primitive truth inculcated by Christ. The ancient and modern gnostics are alike in rejecting a real divine incarnation, in that both deny the miraculous conception and virgin birth of our Lord. Again Marcion believed that matter is essentially evil, and therefore rejected the resurrection of the body, but held to a kind of 'spiritual' resurrection, whatever that may mean. The modernists do much the same. Marcion, like his present-day imitators, wanted to remain within the Church, even while he was scuttling the doctrines of the Church. This is another case of the 'deadly parallel.' "—Wesleyan Methodist.

(Now that you have read the foregoing, can you help taking your stand. If you do take your stand, on which side do you stand?)

A man once stopped a preacher in a street of London and said: "I once heard you preach in Paris, and you said something which I have never forgotten, and which, through God, has been the means of my conversion." "What was that?" asked the preacher. "It was that the latch was on our side of the door. I had always thought that God was a hard God, and that we must do something to propitiate Him. It was a new thought to me that Christ was waiting for me to open to Him." "If any man * * * open the door, I will come in."—Banner.

NOTICE.

The next session of the Southern Christian Convention will be held April 29 to May 2, 1924, inclusive. The place is to be selected by the executive committee. Any Church wishing to entertain the Convention will please communicate with I. W. Johnson, Secretary, Suffolk, Va.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

TRYING OUT THE BUDGET.

As stated before in THE SUN, the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference adopted a total budget of $4,435 for the coming year, and each Church of the Conference was asked to make as its goal for the year a certain stated portion of this amount. Soon after Conference, each Church and each pastor was notified both by the Conference secretary, Rev. S. C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., and later by the mission secretary, what the goal for each Church was and what the total goal of the Conference was, and their Church was asked to put on the every-member canvass early in the Conference year; that all members of all the Churches might be given an opportunity in helping to reach the desired need. Rev. J. F. Apple, Mebane, N. C., writes that he has put on the every-member canvass in all his Churches, and is of opinion that they will readily reach the goal desired of them by Conference.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., has been busy seeking to give every member in his Churches an opportunity to say what they will do toward reaching the desired goal financially during the present year. He says his Churches will report favorable results. In fact, Miss Rosa Best, Haw River, N. C., writes under date of January 16th in these words: "Our Church has pledged $120 to Conference for the year. We are trying the plan of having one Sunday night in each quarter set apart as a time when the offering is taken for this purpose. In this way, we hope to have our pledge paid before the end of the year." This is the amount Conference asked our Haw River Church to pay during the year on its total goal. We shall be most happy to print in THE SUN words of experience and testimony from other pastors or Church secretaries whose Churches have already made efforts or may at an early date do so, in the direction designated at the annual Conference at Bethlehem. J. O. ATKINSON.

CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS DIVIDED.

On page 393 of the Federal Council Year-Book of the Churches, one finds listed: fourteen varieties of Baptists (including the "Duck River" variety), six varieties of Dunkards, fifteen varieties of Evangelistic Associations, each of which is listed as a separate denomination; four denominations of Friends, twenty-one different kinds of Lutherans, seventeen Menonite denominations, eight white Methodist bodies and nine colored (seventeen in all), and nine separate kinds of Presbyterians. And so on. Now, for the sake of union, with which one of the fourteen Baptist denominations, or with which one of the eight white Methodist bodies (provided one is white), or with which one of the nine Presbyterian denominations should one unite? One would, if one is a follower of the Christ, certainly love to see the prayer of our Lord answered "That they all may be one; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."—John 17:21.

When will the fourteen varieties of Baptists (including the Duck River variety) quit fighting each other and all become just Baptists? And when will the twenty-one varieties of Lutherans quit fighting each other and become just Lutherans? And when will those eight white and nine colored varieties of Methodists quit their schisms and contentions and just be Methodists? And then one wonders when Baptists, Lutherans, Methodists and the rest will quit contending against each other and decide to get together as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and just wear His name, Christian, and decide to wage common warfare against the devil, instead of against each other?

J. O. ATKINSON.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged through The Sun.		$546.16
J. A. Kimball, Mt. Auburn	$ 5.00
Dry Run S. S., Va.	13.17
Piney Plains, N. C.	22.01
Wentworth, N. C.	9.15
Holland, Va.	25.00
		74.33
Total		$620.49

If our pastors and people could only realize the need in Japan, the suffering and the destruction occasioned by the earthquake September 1st; of how our Churches and property were in many instances seriously damaged, and others shaken to the ground and so completely demolished; and if all could realize now the need of the gospel in Japan and the opportunity this catastrophe has brought about, then instead of $620.49, we would be reporting ten times that much, and all Churches not having already taken this offering would hastily and heartily do so. J. O. ATKINSON.

L. D. RIPPY.

An Appreciation.

[This appreciation, by Dr. W. A. Harper, was read on the occasion of the funeral services over the remains of the late Bro. Rippy.—EDITOR.]

I have known a great many good men, and among them I ranked L. D. Rippy far toward the top. It is a matter of deep regret to me that I cannot attend his funeral and show by my personal presence my appreciation for one of the most gentlemanly gentlemen I ever knew.

Bro. Rippy was first and foremost a gentle man. If he ever had a harsh thought about any person, there was no evidence of it. I was once talking with him when two others came up. They were, as men ordinarily think, criticising justly a third party. They reiterated their opinions. Bro. Rippy, in his characteristically gentle manner, remarked: "He is my friend, and I would do all I could for him at any time."

He did not say this to rebuke the rest of us. It was his native attitude always to see the good in other people. "Harsh words never pay," I have heard him say again and again. "If you can't say something good and kind, it is better to remain silent," was Bro. Rippy's life philosophy, and that is why he was so gentle.

The last time I talked with him he gave me a subscription voluntarily to the rebuilding fund at Elon, and added he would have made it much larger but for certain conditions that had arisen. I learned from others the conditions. For him to have told me would have reflected on others. This Bro. Rippy could never do.

His gentility was evident in the family circle, in his business relations, in his Church. In these three relationships I knew him intimately, and I doubt not that the same gentility characterized him in every other realm of his life. Truly has a gentle man gone to be with that other Gentleman who when He was insulted opened not His mouth.

How Bro. Rippy loved the Church and the work of the Church! As Sunday School superintendent, as deacon, as Sunday School teacher, he was a prince, and faithfulness was his second nature. When the Church was open, you could expect him to be there. You could not think of Bethlehem without thinking of Bro. Rippy.

In his youth, death suddenly left him with heavy responsibilities to his father's family. He shouldered those without a murmur, toiled away till every obligation was discharged, and then seemingly forgot it all, but the record of his achievement was constant inspiration in his community. Those who knew what he had done would not let such a noble example perish. It is safe to say that no man exerted a finer influence for character in his community than did Bro. Rippy. He would have been amazed to have been told so. He was so unassuming and self-forgetful. But his neighbor knew and loved him, and will ever cherish his memory.

My heart is bowed down in sorrow at the translation of my friend. Life is poorer by his going, but the spirit world is adorned with the presence there of one of the choicest souls it has ever been my privilege to be associated with. God bless the memory and perpetuate the good words of this gentle nobleman of the kingdom!

W. A. HARPER.

JESUS, THE CHRIST—ECCE HOMO

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

More has been said and written about Jesus Christ than about any other personage that ever lived. His life and His teachings have played a dominant part in literature, art, and living; institutions, laws, and governments have been shaped by the ideas which he came to promulgate. Morals, manners, and customs have shaped themselves to His sayings. His birth is the focal point in human history; for thousands of years men looked forward to His coming; since His birth, history dates all events from that time.

Poets have filled their pages with tributes to His unrivaled influence on their writings; orators have sounded their most forceful appeals when basing their reasoning upon what we regard as divine teaching; the greatest painters and sculptors have drawn their highest inspiration from the Prince of Peace; and humanity gladly pays universal tribute to the conceptions of life that governed the life of the Man of Galilee. Carlyle, who is not easily moved to enthusiasm, exclaims in joyful words: "He walked in Judea eighteen hundred years ago; his sphere melody flowing in wild native tones, took captive the ravished souls of men, and being of a truth, sphere melody, still flows and sounds, though now with a thousandfold accompaniments and rich symphonies, through all our hearts, and modulates and divinely leads them."

Lidden, in his "Bampton Lectures," quotes Napoleon I. as saying, "Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne, and I myself have founded great empires; but upon what do these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for Him. I think I understand something of human nature, and I tell you all these were men; and I am a man: none else is like Him! Jesus Christ was more than a man."

If Jesus Christ is a man—
And only a man—I say
That of all mankind I cleave to Him,
And to Him will I cleave alway.
If Jesus Christ is a God—
And the only God—I swear
I will follow Him through heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea, and the air!
—Richard Watson Gilder.

"Peruse the works of our philosophers, with all their pomp of diction—how contemptible are they, compared with the Scriptures! Is it possible that a book at once so simple and so sublime should be merely the work of a man? If the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage, the life and death of Jesus were those of a God."—Rousseau.

After all the lapse of the years, the life and the work of Jesus exerts a greater influence today than ever before. His monuments are schools and colleges, asylums and charitable institutions, happy homes and beneficent laws, upright rulers and nations actuated by the teaching that he gave to the world. Trusting childhood and wise philosopher alike are glad to look to Him as Guide and Teacher.

The name of Christ—the one great word
Well worth all languages in earth or heaven.
—Bailey.

And so the Word had breath, and wrought
With human hands, the creeds of creeds
In loveliness of perfect deeds,
More strong than all poetic thought.
—Tennyson.

Jesus has withstood all assault from atheist, from agnostic, from unbeliever, and is stronger in His hold upon the world as the years pass away. Nothing can supply the needs of mankind that He so completely fills. Of Him alone can it be truthfully said that He is the Saviour of the world, and the only hope of earth. Knowledge and science alike pay tribute to Him, and to the truth of his doctrines. Puny man opposes, and passes to forgetfulness; the figure of Jesus looms larger upon the horizons of the years as the centuries drop into eternity. His followers base their lives upon His life, and without fear go to meet Him in the great unknown.

Take from the world all who have lived for the last two thousand years, and who have accepted wholly, or even in large part, the teachings of Jesus, and you would rob the world of its greatest names in every department of man's activity. The sturdiness and stability of civilization today depends upon an acceptance of Christ and Christian doctrines. We would look with suspicion and distrust upon any one who would even seriously deny this. We may lay aside all creeds and all doctrinal differences, but we must hold to Christ as the world's one Teacher of proper personal and national life. Many a great man has become convinced of the truth of Christ who began with doubt and demanded the fullest investigation. Grotius, the lawyer, was an able thinker; he demanded the fullest evidence, and he became thoroughly convinced; again, there was Sir Isaac Newton, of whom Dr. Johnson says that he "set out an infidel, and became a very firm believer."

"No religion ever appeared in the world whose natural tendency was so much directed to promote the peace and happiness of mankind."—Lord Bolingbroke.

"Christianity is the companion of liberty in all its conflicts—the cradle of its infancy and the divine source of its claims."—De Yocqueville.

The religion of Jesus began in Asia, spread radidly throughout the Roman empire, and swept on among the barbarians. When adopted by the empire in the fourth century, it was soon carried throughout the western world. It became the religion of Europe and of the nations founded by the European races. The religion of Mohammed, who lived about five hundred years after Christ, may even be regarded as founded upon Christianity, as may be seen by a close study of the Koran, the sacred book of the Mohammedians. Its three great divisions are the Roman, the Greek, and the Protestant. It does not trace to the dimness of antiquity, but is "individualistic," in that it looks to the individual, Jesus, as its Founder. Jesus Christ of Nazareth, in ancient Galilee, is its head and source. All Hebrew literature centered in the idea of God, and the mission of Jesus is only properly understood when studied in view of his relations with Judaism. The abstruse things of ritual and of theology were looked upon by Him as minor points, and His Father's will incarnate in Him for the redemption of the entire race was His sole thought, written into the concrete conception of love for man and love for God. His personality was infinitely greater than any mere words of His. While what He said was often misunderstood, still in His presence men felt themselves cured of sin and of fear and swayed by the mighty influence of a divine power. Protestantism, in its fundamentals, is a return to the primary concepts of primitive Christianity, freed from the ecclesiastical doctrinal systems. Christianity need have no fear of time to come; it has passed successfully through too many unheavals and attacks to suffer any fear as to its perpetuity.

"Blot Christianity out of history, and what would man's law have been? There is not a law that does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity; not a custom which cannot be traced in all its holy, healthful parts to the gospel."—Sir J. A. Park.

"Since the revelation of Christianity, all moral thought has been sanctified by religion. Religion has given to it a purity, a solemnity, a sublimity which, even amongst the noblest of the heathen, we shall look for in vain."—Prof. John Wilson.

"The influence of Christianity has been very efficient toward the introduction of a better and more enlightened sense of right and wrong, of justice and injustice, among the several governments. It taught the duty of benevolence to strangers, of humanity to the vanquished, of the obligation of good faith—of the sin of murder, revenge, and rapacity."—Chancellor Kent.

"I am the Light of the world."—Jesus.

IS A LEADER WORTHY OF RESPECT WHO DODGES BETWEEN MODERNISM AND THE BIBLE?

Here is an article which presents a most practical question, and we are giving it to our readers, not as our own, but believing it is a practical matter, it is important that our readers have their attention called to the thought which his article presents for consideraion. The first thing to do is to answer the question at the head of this article. It will do good to give a real answer to that question; it will do any reader good who has a leaning that way, as indicated in the heading. What is the use of dodging an issue of truth? A thousand times, let me urge you not to dodge any truth, and especially a truth which hangs about the salvation of your soul. You cannot afford, for the sake of popularity or for any other reason, to dodge between questions of right and wrong. If a thought is wrong, it seems to me that any man who belongs to our Lord ought to be braver than to barter truth for a mess of popularity. Mr. Wood asks this question, and believing it deserves a square answer, we submit it to our readers and beg them not to dodge it—face it squarely and answer it bravely.

By J. Edwin Wood.

I was much attracted by the publication of "Ingersoll's Last Poem" in a recent issue of the Western Recorder. It may not be remembered by some that the production quoted by you was revised within the few hours immediately preceding his death. The following is the changed poem as published by the prominent newspapers at the time, viz: July 26, 1899, no change being made, however, in the last section:

We have no falsehoods to defend;
Not the facts.
Our force, our thought, we do not spend
In vain attacks.
And we will never meanly try
To save some fair and pleasing lie.
The simple truth is what we ask;
Not the ideal.
We've set ourselves the noble task
To find the real.
If all there is naught but dross,
We want to know and bear the loss.

Is there beyond the silent night
An endless day?
Is death a door that leads to light?
We cannot say.
The tongueless secret locked in fate
We do not know. We hope and wait.

This brilliant man was naturally and justly censured during his lifetime, but if we are to take these last thoughts, just before he was ushered into eternity, as a criterion, who can say that his influence was more harmful than that of many present-day prominent Church members, educators and even preachers of high standing?

The above semi-recantation—not unusual as death approaches—was at least to his credit. Every sentence of the last stanza is a quasi-recognition of the great beyond, upon which his lectures and writings had cast such doubt, and a pathetic, though belated, plea for a lifting of the veil. And then, in an apparent cry of anguish, he added the last four words—"We hope and wait."

Do certain distinguished men of letter and theology of today realize the far-reaching effects of their "liberal" teaching when they shake the foundation of Scripture by denying the truth of some portions of the divine Word, of the immaculate conception, deity of Christ, His substitutionary sacrifice, bodily resurrection and all other miracles? Are they cognizant of the fearful results of such work? There are many thousands who are beginning to say with Ingersoll: "If all there is naught but dross, we want to know and bear the loss." These thousands may soon be added to those who have already decided that the Scriptures are a myth. Can any thoughtful man fail to see what a different world we are living in today from that of even ten years ago? Will any one of them say that the world of today is a better one?

Now, the responsibility of the teacher is great, but that of the preacher is infinitely greater, for he is both teacher and preacher. He is our spiritual guide. He is God's representative. If he is a teacher-preacher, then he is doubly responsible.

And now, another class. This includes many laymen and some preachers. I will describe them as a prominent friend of mine described himself; as one who likes to move along the lines of least resistance. Oh! what a multitude of these there are! People who know a thing is wrong, but dare not say so because it is unpopular. If I am in error in saying there are some preachers in this class, I humbly beg pardon. But if there are any, I want to know if they can ask God's blessing upon such a course. I admit that it smooths over many rough places in this world and enables one to live a peaceful, placid existence; but it makes more ragged the road of those who follow. And then—is it right?—Western Recorder.

WHO WAS HE?

The Christ-Child unto the stable came
'Twixt the midnight and the morn;
His mother laid Him softly down
By the beasts of hoof and horn.
And, little brother of all the poor,
The friendly kine a-near Him stood
He slept in the fragrant hay,
In the frost of the early day.
—Margaret E. Sangster.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

OUR CONQUERING CHRIST.

Text.—(Read Zech. 4:6; Dan. 7:13, 14; Rev. 3:21; 1 Jno. 5:4, 5; Rev. 2:7-11, 17, 3:5-12, 21:7.)

In a Rome-ridden country, amidst poverty, sensuality and vice; in the worst of cities, to the lowliest of parents, a child was born. He possessed neither name nor wealth, training nor education, and He associated only with the common people and sinners—when not with them, He dwelt alone in solitude. He was more familiar with the solitude of the hills than he was with the halls of fame. He knew the valleys and the gardens better than the palaces. He spent his life this way and finally came to His death friendless; and his last message was, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." How did He do it?

He had no knowledge of disease or medicine, but He healed all manner of diseases. He was not a lawyer, but he amazed the world with His laws. He wrote no books, but He inspired the best literature of the centuries. He was not an orator, but He was a master in interpreting the human heart. He was no statesman, but he founded the greatest government known to man. "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do, because I go to my Father." "We shall be like Him." Think of it!

Prayer.—Oh, Lord, make perfect our love toward Thee and toward our Lord Jesus Christ? Make us truly virtuous and godly. Increase in us the strength of the character of our Lord, and give us the victory over our temptations, that, according to Thy promises, we may not be tempted more than we are able to overcome. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CONQUERING GRACE.

"Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."—Rom. 5:20.

(Modern speech version) Sin reigned the reign of death, grace did also reign with a righteousness that ends in life eternal.—Rom. 5:21.)

Dr. Meyer, of England, says that "grace" is the "love of God in the repair of a soul that has been stricken with sin." The love of God in a painless, sinless, sorrowless world, is heaven—glory; but the love of God in a world of sin, pain, misery, and sorrow, is the overcoming power of the world, and converts the human soul from what it is in its misery to what it should be in glory.

For example, at the end of the war, Flanders country was so battle-scarred that practically everything was destroyed and even the earth was torn up by its roots. Now, nature has repaired it, and it is abloom in gardens and green fields, grass and forestry. It was nature's grace that did it. This man upon this bed was in an auto wreck. Several bones were broken, his nose was cut off, and one ear was taken away. The bones have grown back together, the nose looks like it did before, except the slight scar-seam, and the ear is there, too. You would never know anything had happened to him. Nature's grace has restored his body. What these things are to our life, God's grace is infinitely more to our souls.

Prayer.—Our Father, defend us against sin and grant that all our days may be ordered by Thy spirit. If we should fall, we pray Thee that, as the day is flooded with sunshine, so cause Thy love to abound in us; and as the season brings forth fruitage, may we so live that the abundance of Thy spirit may abound in us to bring forth fruit to Thee. Now and forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A VISION OF VICTORY.

"I behold Satan as lightning fall from heaven."—Luke 10:17-20.

The seventy, whom Jesus had selected and sent forth on a mission of evangelism and healing, had returned and were jubilant over their success. "Why," said they to Jesus, "when we mention your name, even the devils are subject unto us." We may be sure their naive exuberance was not altogether displeasing to Jesus, but He sees deeper than they do and knows that a victory so absolute was not won in so short a time. So quietly He looks up and says, "I beheld Satan as lightning falling from heaven." The task of all tasks is that of making the world Christian in fact as well as in name.

What has this vision of Jesus to say about this warfare and its outcome? It seems at first to rebuke any shallow optimism. The seventy mistook a preliminary skirmish for the decisive campaign. The conquest of entrenched sin is a slow business, but this saying of our Master's is a ringing assurance of ultimate victory. Jeus had no illusions about the end of the conflict. He saw Satan falling. One of our troubles is that we do not possess such an inspiring vision. We take evil at its own estimate of its strength. We forget how often in the story of mankind one man, armed with faith and vision, has won battles that armies could not achieve.—Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

THURSDAY.

THE SPRINGS OF JOY.

"Rejoice in the Lord."—Phil. 4:4.

Our vital joy is to be found in the Lord. In Him are the abiding springs. Then how near they are! We have no pilgrimage to make, no tedious, wearing journey to take! The springs are as near as our necessity, and we can stretch forth our hands and drink.

What a long way some people go for their happiness! They take long voyages in the hope of finding the springs. And the waters they find are often brackish, stale, stagnant, without any powers of vital renewal. And they come back home sadder and more weary than they went! But the springs of vital happiness demand no pilgrimage. The sad at heart need not go on uncertain journeys. The springs are in God the Father, and therefore they are as near as any one of God's children. "All my springs are in Thee," and when any one seeks the Lord, he is immediately at the springs. And he does not leave them as the years speed by, and summer ripens into autumn. The springs go with him. "They drank of that rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ."

And the waters are bright with unfailing joy. They are not like the waters of the world—a poor, a shallow happiness, which dries up in the day of the fierce heat. There is something deeper than happiness, which is a thing of outer circumstances. God's joy is vital joy, which is as independent of circumstances, and as enduring as the divine love itself. It is the joy of God, and when we share it, we share His very life. "These things have I said unto you, that my joy might be in you, and that your joy might be full." Yes, it is full in the day of life, and full in the day of death, and full in the blessed dawn of eternity. It is full, but ever fuller, for our capacity will be forever increasing, and with increased capacity we shall enter with ever-deepening wonder into the hidden secrets of God.—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

FRIDAY.

TAKE CARE OF THY SOUL.

The soul is like the body. It exists amidst contagions and death; but, like the body, it does not always yield, if it is well fortified with grace within.

Disease cannot easily befall our bodies unless there are conditions about us which will receive it. Disease demands prepared conditions. We have been inoculated with vaccine; therefore, we do not take small-pox. The same is true with typhoid. No typhoid can happen to him who takes the antitoxine every four years. It fortifies the body against it. There is no congenial atmosphere within for the disease; therefore it does not take. And this can be said of any disease which science has successfully combatted. Therefore, healthy bodies consist in the exercise of preventives, physical exercises, proper adjustments of the entire organism, blood flowing freely to all parts, with all the elements of healing. Such a person rarely gets sick, and may "die in the harness." But impoverish thy body by the lack of this exercise, and immediately disease sets in somewhere.

So it is with the soul. Defense is resistance. Resistance is maintained by the healthy exercises of pure soul food, soul cleanliness, soul exercises in love for God and humanity, and in keeping the life-blood of Jesus Christ flowing freely throughout thy existence and thou shalt be well. Weaken on these and the microbes of sin immediately find lodgement in spiritual depletion, spiritual defenses are dispoiled, and we are victims of moral degredation.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to care for and exercise our souls so that no sin may find lodgement within. Help us to inculcate in our lives the principles of our Lord Jesus Christ which are sufficient to protect us. May we be willing to sacrifice and abstain from the very appearance of evil so that we may obtain this. Forbid that we shall admit defilement lest the enemy triumph over us. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

GLORIFYING IN THE LORD.

"But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."—Cor. 10:15-18.

Make your boast your love and service for the Lord. Do not be troubled about your own authority and consideration. If you are seeking to commend yourself, God will surely not approve. This is the burden of Paul's retort and advice to his opponents.

For himself, he intends to glory in nothing that he is or has, but in God alone. On another occasion he declares: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ my Lord." What a fine, commendable spirit is here displayed! How worthy of our emulation! How it rebukes our self-seeking and shames our boasting!

Preachers, Sunday School teachers, Church workers of all kinds: curb your boasts and listen to this master worker for Jesus. If you want to open heart and voice in triumph, see that you utter forth the praise of your wonderful Lord, not of yourself. That will check your envyings and jealousies and increase your power to work with others for the glory of God and the spread of His kingdom.—Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee that we may be redeemed from the beggary of living for ourselves. May our prayers be exalted above simply getting something for ourselves and mere earthly bread, but may we live, pray and serve for the good of others; and give Thee all the praise. For Jesus' sake, we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mk. 2:27.

Plucking corn from the fields, though it was but to satisfy their hunger and permissible by the law, to the Pharisees it was an awful desecration of the Sabbath law. They tolerated nothing but devotions and the reading of the law on that day. But they had something to learn, which was there is a spiritual content of things, and the following is the method the Lord took to teach them: First, He calls their attention to what David did when he, hungering, ate of the show-bread from the altar. Second, he takes a wider ground and points out that the Sabbath stands for the good of man and it is to be used for his good. Christians so relate the Sabbath and man that one is eternally tied up to the other, and that there are things, while not deeply religious, for the good of His children, may be done religiously, and from this principle no man can escape.

Therefore, the Sabbath and its observance is a means to an end, and in no case is the end to be sacrificed to the means. Having done this, He then declares his own relation to it, affirming that he is the head and representative of it, sent from God for that purpose, and as such He has a right to control it. This was a tremendous claim. Certainly, only the Son of God—the God-man—could do such a thing without blaspheming. What is its spiritual content to us? Let us strive never to miss it.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord! our Heavenly Father, we bow low and veil our faces in shame, for we have not lived for Thee as we might. This day sanctify our hearts and enlighten our minds by the power of the Holy Spirit, that the simplest observance the day may bring forth may be for the good of Thy children, may give us keenest pleasure, may cleanse us from all selfishness and covetousness, and help us to seek Thy glory. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

POUNDED TWICE.

Two happy experiences have come to me of late in the form of two splendid "poundings." On the fourth Sunday in December, at the regular Sunday morning service, Pleasant Union people almost filled up the hind part of my Ford. The good things are too numerous to mention, for there was some of most anything for the pantry.

On the first Sunday (or rather, Saturday before) in January, the people of Catawba Springs gave me a second surprise, with a large pounding of a great variety of good things to eat and some to wear. I appreciate all these good things, for they help a fellow along a good deal. But more than the help, I appreciate the love that prompted the gift. I only wish I could show my appreciation by better service. I wonder if any pastor ever had a finer field, a more generous people to serve than I!

May our gracious Heavenly Father reward them (according to Phil. 4:19) and keep them ever dedicated (according to Rom. 12:1).

J. LEE JOHNSON.

Fuquay Springs, N. C.

Controversy never built up the Church or saved the souls of men. The passion of controversy is often not of heaven, but rather delights the enemy of our souls. Many a man of controversial gifts has sometimes won a victory in controversy that was his soul's undoing. The infidel has always been a great controversialist. A man who is sure of creed is not always trying to prove it.

A revival of Church activities is coming. Subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and keep informed. Ask your neighbor also to subscribe.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We want to first correct errors in reports. In a report several weeks ago, we, through error, gave credit for a box sent to us by the Ladies' Missionary Society of the New Hope Church, Ala., to the Ladies' Aid Society, Abanda, Ala. We also gave Mrs. N. M. Crowder, of La Grange, Ga., credit for a quilt which should have been credited to the Bible class of the East La Grange Christian Sunday School. We also gave Holland Sunday School and Church fifth place on the list of honor for the Thanksgiving offering, with $165 to its credit. Durham Church and Sunday School should stand fifth, with $175 to its credit, and Holland sixth on the list. We are hoping all the Churches will get at the top of the list in the next Thanksgiving offering.

We want to thank all the Churches, Sunday Schools and friends for their loyal support during the year 1923, but our children still eat and wear, and we will need your loyal support during the year 1924 also. Let us all bear the fatherless in mind, and be liberal in our offerings toward the support of the Christian Orphanage.

What shall our goals be for 1924? Help us to do a greater work each year. Help us to make our orphanage plant a complete and up-to-date plant, with an opportunity for the children to have trades to fit them for a life of service. To help us carry out the ideas we have in view, let us set the following goals for the year 1924:

Easter offering	$ 3,500.00
Thanksgiving offering	10,000.000
All other offerings	13,500.00
Total for 1924	$27,000.00

Let everybody begin now to help us reach our goals by the end of the year. Pray for the success of the work. Back up your prayers with your offerings.

CHAS. J. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JANUARY 24, 1924.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

North Carolina Conference:
Reidsville	$ 1.00
Mebane	1.00
Ramseur	2.87
Pleasant Hill	1.25
Berea, Alamance County	1.72
Catawba Springs	3.75
Randleman	1.20
New Providence	1.04
Ingram, Va.	5.00
		$ 18.83
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Holland	$ 8.83
First Church, Richmond	4.75
Berea (N.)	10.00
First Church, Portsmouth	33.45
Bethlehem	4.00
Suffolk	25.00
		86.03
Valley of Virginia Conference:
Timber Ridge	$ 5.50
Leaksville	2.50
Dry Run	3.50
		11.50
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Richland	$ 1.00
Kite	3.42
Rock Stand	3.00
Lanett	8.20
East La Grange	1.60
Rose Hill	3.51
		20.73
Baby Home Pledges.
S. F. Coghill	$ 5.00
A. L. Jolly	25.00
H. B. Everett	20.00
O. W. Mann	10.00
Miss Celestia Penny	15.00
Miss Sarah E. Boyd	20.00
Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Edmondson	20.00
		115.00
Lawrence S. Holt Endowment.
Bi-monthly interest		150.00
Thanksgiving Offerings.
First Church, Huntington, Ind.	$ 21.06
New Hill Church, N. C.	17.75
Greensboro, First Church, add'l	25.00
Union, Surry County, Va.	14.60
		78.41
Special Offerings.
L. L. Tilley, Durham	$ 30.00
G. E. Lingle	20.00
A Friend, Durham	15.00
W. W. Brown	15.00
Little Lights Class, Franklin Ohio.	2.00
Irene Reiber, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.	15.00
Chas. L. Rawles	10.00
		107.00
Total for week		$ 587.50

THE WEAVERS.

[NOTE.—The following poem was written by Mrs. H. E. Lewis, who is eighty-four years of age, living in the Old People's Home in Philadelphia. Her early life was full of comforts and relatives and friends. Now she is all alone in the world, and her simple occupation is that of weaving.—J. E. McCulloch.]

Yes, we are weavers, and each day
The threads of life we spin;
And be the colors what they may,
We still must weave them in.

When morning light there comes the thought
As we our task begin:
Our thought for us new threads hath wrought
And bids us weave them in.

Sometimes he gives us threads of gold
To brighten up the day,
Then somber tints, so bleak and cold,
That change the gold to gray.

His love, alas! we may forget
When these dark threads we spin:
That cause us grief and pain, but yet
He bids us weave them in.

And so our shuttle swiftly flies
With threads both gold and gray,
And on we toil till daylight dies
And fades in night away.

O when our day of toil is o'er
And we shall cease to spin,
He'll open wide "our Father's door"
And bid us rest within!

There, safe at home in heavenly light,
How clearly shall we see
That every thread—the dark, the bright—
Each one had need to be!

They that know Thy name will put their trust in Thee, for Thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek Thee.

1,500,000,000, and Canada, on the Scottish scale, a population of 600,000,000. When you think of all this you cannot help feeling that, in visiting these regions, you are making the acquaintance of the future."

It will take "great, big, eternal fellows" to cope with such a world as that! What statesmen we must have, what layyers, what educators, what business men, what farmers and builders, what mighty prophets of God and ministers of the gospel!

The most urgent question of today is where we are to get men adequate to such a colossal tasfl|

There can be only one answer:

They are to be made by the Church and by the Church college. The university and the higher ranges of intellectual training can only continue what has already been commenced.

First, we must turn the faces of our youth in the right direction; then endue them with the proper spiritual resolutions and give them vision and tasks. This is the work of Church and the Church school.

Those who have the highest type of education, which is the Christian kind, already have the reins of the future in their hands, and their feet in the stirrup ready to mount.

It follows that the premier place in our brotherhood, next to the Churches themselves, is held by our colleges. The master-key of the future is in their hands.

They train both mind and heart.

They are democratic—teaching the students to believe in the people, to love the people, to wish to serve the people.

They are within the reach of the poor man's son and daughter; they can satisfy the rich.

God is welcome in our colleges.

But whether our own colleges, or some other, produce it, the future is in the hands of those who have the highest and truest type of education and are accessible to the people.

The man who knows, and knows that he knows, and who loves and is known to love, is always trusted by the pilgrims to pioneer them through the jungle.

You, young man, can control the future if you will get the right kind of an education.—Christian-Evangelist.

"AMERICA AND BRITAIN TOGETHER CAN—"

Only a few weeks ago, Mr. Lloyd George, former Premier of England, was visiting in this country. On his return home he gave his impressions of the future of America and England if they work together as they should. He says:

"I came back more convinced than ever that the hope of mankind in the immediate future depends on the extent to which the two greatest commonwealths on earth can be persuaded to work together in world affairs. I know that everything to be said about America not being Anglo-Saxon. Neither are the British Isles, and the British Empire has a greater variety of races and tongues than ever the United States of America. All the same, the empire is governed by the same mixture of Celt, Teuton and Norseman that rules America. The identity of the language must lead to an absorption of the same literature, for the great name of the people. The same literature, in the end, means the same ideals. In the course of years, Shakespeare, Milton, Bunyan and Wesley will count more than Lafayette and Rochambeau. The influence of the former more and more into character, and that is what determines the destiny of the people.

"All the greatest men of America are of British stock, and their ideals and lives were fashioned by the same prophets and same priests, whose thoughts were conveyed to America through the medium of the same tongue as influenced the minds of the great leaders of Britain. Today, British literature flows naturally into American channels, and American literature, in the ever-increasing flood, is pouring into British channels. The association between the powerful Protestant Churches on both sides of the Atlantic is becoming every year closer and more intimate. The fact that over two-thirds of the population of the States receives the same spiritual training as the people of Britain, not only weaves bonds of brotherhood between them, but must have its effect in giving the same direction to the outlook and vision of the two nations.

Memories of outrages perpetrated by a king on the road to insanity have too long kept these two mighty nations apart. The oppression of Ireland kept these memories alive by giving a sense of continuity to the policy of wrong. These wrongs are now all dead and buried. There is no sense of artificially keeping alive the evil passions they germinated. They have ceased now to have any political significance or value, and therefore there is every prospect that they will be allowed to subside.

The peace of the world is at stake. It is a question of the path along which the human race elects to travel. One leads to peace, prosperity and unlimited progress. The other leads to bloodshed, desolation and infinite ruin. America and Britain together can shepherd the world along the right course."

SINCE MOTHER WENT AWAY.

By F. M. Dunaphant.

I do not have much time to play
  Since mother went away.
I stays at home an' works all day;
  I never goes away.

May an' Jane jes' plays, an' plays,
  An' runs an' hollers loud
Out in th' park in the warm sunshine,
  Where th' boys an' girls jes' crowd.

From th' kitchen winder I watch them
  While I washes dishes an' cooks,
Except when I steals a little time
  To read my picture books.

I let th' bread burn yesterday
  As black as it could be,
An' then I cried, an' cried, an' cried
  Until I couldn't see.

I took it out on th' kitchen porch
  To scrape it with a knife,
Like mother used to do when she
  Was daddy's "darlin' wife."

But daddy met me on th' porch
  An' said it wuz all right;
An' then he put his tool-box down
  An' kissed an' hugged me tight.

He wipped th' tears out of my eyes,
  An' held me on his knee,
An' said I wuz his darlin' girl,
  An' then he cried like me.

I know what he wuz cryin' 'bout,
  'Cause he can't fool me still—
He thinks that mother won't come back,
  But I do b'lieve she will!

The angels came on a cold, dark night
  And took 'er far away
To live in God's house 'way up high,
  Where all th' time it's day.

I didn't see th' angels come,
  'Cause I wuz sick in bed;
They tip-toed in an' took 'er out,
  An' not a word they said.

Next day it rained, an' rained, an' rained,
  An' th' nurse she kept me in,
An' tole me God loved mother lots,
  'Cause she did never sin.

She said that mother wuz with God,
  Where it wuz warm an' dry,
An' said for me to lay right still,
  An' not to talk an' cry.

I minded 'er, an' mother came
  An' sit down on my bed,
An' then she kissed me lots ur times,
  An' bathed my hurtin' head.

I want to see 'er now so bad!
  I wish I would get sick,
So she would come down from th' sky
  To see me right now—quick!

I don't know why she stays so long
  Up in the big blue sky.
When daddy says we'll see 'er 'gain,
  He always has to cry.

My book says God loves chilun lots;
  But I don't b'lieve it's so,
'Cause ef He did He'd let mother come,
  An' wouldn't be so slow.

'Cause I loves mother more than He,
  An' needs 'er jes' as bad;
An' ef he don't let 'er come home,
  I'm goin' to be mad.

I do not have much time to play
  Since mother went away.
I stays at home an' works all day;
  I never goes away.

GRAHAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Just now we are very much encouraged over the bright prospects for the year in our Church and Sunday School.

January 13th we enjoyed the best attendance we have had in more than two years. There was much interest shown on this date by pastor, superintendent, teachers and scholars, and I assure you there were none that felt the keen interest and cooperation of the Sunday School more than the superintendent. Our Church and Sunday School seem to have inhaled the spirit of "do something," and for this spirit we are due our pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher, who has labored unceasingly, untiringly, willingly and patiently with and for us and our success. He has always something new and interesting to lay before us at our monthly meeting, which is composed of six or eight different commissions of the Church and Sunday School, to-wit: spiritual, visitation, financial, publicity, music and decoration.

We are very proud of our teachers, which we think are best in any Sunday School, and especially do we mention those who have charge of the graded lessons. They are so much enthused over their work, for which we are so thankful.

We enjoyed a very good and helpful sermon on Sunday morning, January 13th, by our pastor. Although this is not unusual. His subject, "The Other Side of the Road"; theme, "Who is Thy Neighbor?" We do believe in advertising. You can't light a candle and hide it under a bushel and enjoy its light. We do not do successful business without advertising. Where the twelve were sent out, and later the seventy, they were advertising to the world the Saviour, Jesus Christ.

John B. Farrell.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

February 3, 1924.

Subject: "What Israel Learned at Sinai."—Ex. 19:1-24:8; Lev. 19; Deut. 4:32-40. (Print Dt. 4:32-40.)

Golden Text: "Thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might (Dt. 6:5). Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Lev. 19:18.

"And this shall be a token unto thee that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain," said Jehovah when He called Moses. And here they were "upon this mountain." It is always thus. When God finds a man who, by faith, takes Him at His word, He always fulfills His promises, sometimes moving in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. The lesson teaches this truth if it teaches no other.

The children of Israel had been fed on the physical food which came down from heaven in the form of manna and quails. Now, they were to be fed on the moral and spiritual food which came down from heaven in the form of the law. Centuries later their descendants—and we—were to be fed on the living bread which came down from heaven in the form of Jesus Christ and which continues unto this day in the person of His Holy Spirit. Wherefore do we spend our money for that which is not bread?

The giving of the law was rather dramatic. Sinai was a high mountain towering above the broad plain at its base. It looked like a huge altar, and begat in the hearts of a people who had been living in a low, flat river-bottom a feeling of reverence. In addition to the sublimity of the mountain itself, there were striking phenomena—thunders, lightnings, mighty blasts—which induced a feeling of awe and solemnity, and made the people know that Jehovah was about to speak to His people. But, as in later days, it was not in the earthquake or the fire that Jehovah spake; it was in "the still small voice." Jehovah gave the world His message through Moses. And He did it "as a man speaketh with his friend."

The Ten Commandments, or "The Words," are an immortal masterpiece. Except for the words of Him who spake as never a man spake before, there is nothing in all literature that compares with them. They are few in number—they can be counted on the fingers of the two hands—and they are few in words, but they comprehend in this brief compass the rights of God, the rights of man, the relationship of God to man and of man to God, and the relationship of men to each other; in other words, the whole gamut of human life in its social, moral, and spiritual relations. There is set forth here in a few words the fundamental principles of all law, and the basis of all enduring civilization. They are so lofty in ideals that today—centuries after they were given to the world—"they are still so far beyond us that we have dropped into the habit of thinking that we are beyond them." But we can never outgrow them, and unless we make marked progress we shall never realize them.

As few as they were, Jesus made them fewer. For He summed them up in two great laws—loving God with all the heart, and soul, and mind, and strength; and loving one's neighbor as one's self. And as vital as they were, He made them more vital by infusing a new spirit into them. The letter itself killeth; the spirit maketh alive. It is not enough to have the law written on tables of stone, or in a book. It is not enough to have them merely in our minds. They must be written in our hearts. Love is the fulfilling of the law.

A Few Lessons Which Israel Learned ot Sinai.

(Perhaps it would be better to say, "A few lessons which were taught at Sinai." For Israel did not learn—nor have we learned—these lessons.)

1. God demands first place in our hearts. As Ruskin says, "There are many things which God will put up with in a human heart; there is one thing He will not put up with—a second place."
2. Idolatry—of any kind—is forbidden.
3. God's name is to be held in reverence. (This does not apply merely to profanity.)
4. The Sabbath is a necessity in human life.
5. The home—and respect for the parents in the home—is not only the basis of a sound national life, but also of a good personal life.
6. Human life is sacred. This has a wide application to present-day conditions. There are countless ways of murdering people.
7. Purity in wedded life, and out of it, is a divine imperative.
8. Property rights should be regarded.
9. Truth, and especially respect for a man's name, is a necessity for individual and national well-being.
10. Beware of covetousness.

A Few Truths that Come from the Giving of the Law.

1. People must be prepared for God's revelations.
2. It usually takes time to get insight into great moral and spiritual truths.
3. The main office of religion is to train men to do right in all their dealings with their fellowmen.
4. Principle and motive, not detailed rules, are important.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

February 3, 1924.

Topic: "One Hundred Per Cent for Christ and the Church.—Rom. 12:1-13; John 9:4.

(Christian Endeavor Day. Decision Day.)

Sacrifices played an important part in the life of the Jews. He who reads the Old Testament, especially the priestly codes, can readily see how vital a part they played in the religious life of the Hebrew nation. They were often, alas! too often, offered in a formal way, and they were denounced at times by the prophets who saw their inadequacy from a spiritual standpoint. But the spirit of sacrifice is an essential part of religion, and it found its highest expression in the person and work of Jesus Christ, who lived for us, and died for us. Just how far this idea goes can be seen from the fact that we often speak of Christ as the Great Sacrifice for our sins.

It is not surprising, then, that in this lesson on this consecration day, we find Paul asking his converts—and us—to present ourselves as sacrifices unto God. For Paul himself practiced what he preached, and he had first of all given himself. He knew, therefore, whereof he spake. It is significant, however, that he enjoins Christians to present their bodies, a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable, or spiritual service. He shows us "a better way." As Christian Endeavorers, we are to give to God, at their best, every talent and every capacity we have. They are to be living sacrifices, wholly acceptable unto Him.

Think what that really means. It means that we are "to set apart—that is what consecrate really means—exclusively for God's use, our bodies and our spirits, which, as he says, "are God's." For instance, our ears are to hear only that which will glorify God; our eyes are to look only on that which is uplifting; our lips are to speak only such words as will glorify God; our hands are to be used exclusively for doing God's work; our feet are to carry us on God's errands, and also not to take us into ways forbidden—in short, our bodies are to be presented a living sacrifice, set apart to the service of God. An important factor in this consecration is our minds. They are to be renewed by the grace of God until we are actually transformed. This is only another way of saying what Jesus had in mind when He said that it was out of the heart that proceedeth the things that defile a man, for "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." And all of this consecration is to be 100 per cent.

Would this not be a wonderful world if all men were absolutely consecrated, a living sacrifice, to God! Think of living in a world in which every living person was committed to the noble task of doing what God willed in his life and in his relations to his fellow-men! Talk about heaven in the world to come! That would be heaven here in this world. And yet that is Christ's ideal for us. As Christian Endeavorers, we are to make it the rule of our lives that Christ shall have us, all of us, at our best, for His service. "And He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again" (2 Cor. 5:11). This is decision day. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.

To Think About.

1. What hinders consecration to the uttermost?
2. Why must we continually reconsecrate ourselves?
3. If you were really consecrated to God, would it make any difference in what you look at; in what you hear; in what you say; in where you go; in the company you keep; in what you do; in how you use your money; in the service you do for God?
4. Daily readings.—Luke 9:57-62; Acts 20:28-35; 1 Cor. 9:19-23; Rom. 15:1-6; 2 Thess. 2:13-7; Dan. 6:1-11.

THE REINS OF THE FUTURE.

We must make the most of today, first for its own sake, and then for the sake of tomorrow and the long, long future.

The forward-look is an essential part of the sacrificial life at the heart of Christianity.

Shall the near and the far, far tomorrows of the world be God's?

Who shall control the future?

That question staggers us when we get even a glimpse of the coming immensities.

Take a calculation like the following by Lloyd George after he had visited Canada and the United States:

"As you think of all this, you reckon up on a piece of paper what the population of the United States will be when it equals that of England per square mile and what the population of Canada will be when that great dominion is peopled as Scotland is today. The United States, on the English scale, ought to maintain a population of

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

November 14, 1923, was a sad day for the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church, for on that day Mrs. Mattie Harrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Wilkins, of Cypress Chapel Church, and the faithful wife of Dr. D. L. Harrell, a member of Lakeview Hospital staff, was called suddenly from her happy home on earth to the happier home in heaven.

When the call came, she was in her flower-garden, directing the gardner in the planting of flowers. No death could have been sweeter, and no shock to loved ones could have been greater. The family was soon called together—Mrs. R. A. Carlisle, husband and baby from Roanoke, Va.; Lemuel and Lillian from Elon College; Edgar, Joshua and papa, in Suffolk. They all crowded the chamber of sorrow.

The 16th filled Suffolk Christian Church with a great and sympathetic congregation, where flowers and music, Scripture and prayers, mingled in spiritual harmony with the spirit of her life and the devotion of her loved ones.

We, therefore, hereby express our sympathy for the bereaved, and our own esteem and loss, in words that imperfectly picture our real feelings:

1. That as wife and mother, as friend and Christian, as Church member and worker, all the relations she filled suffer irreparable loss in her departure.

2. That as a member of our society, she was willing and faithful to perform any task that claimed her service. Her companionable fellowship, her even temper and interest in the work, her modesty and faith, combined to make her life a model and her memory precious.

3. That we offer the sincere condolence of our hearts to the sorely bereaved family, and pledge our continued fidelity to the principles and activities which engrossed her life.

MRS. SUSIE HOLLAND.
MRS. A. T. HOLLAND.
MRS. J. E. WEST.
W. W. STALEY.
MRS. J. W. ELY, Chairman.

GARVIN.

Cephas N. Garvin was born November 9, 1851, and died December 9, 1923, aged 72 years and 1 month. Bro. Garvin was widely known and very popular in his community. A large congregation of neighbors and friends attended his funeral service at Timber Ridge, December 12th. Deceased was quite successful in business, and accumulated quite an estate during his lifetime. He lived near the Timber Ridge Christian Church, and was a member of that Church. He remembered his Church and other Churches in the community in his will.

A. W. ANDES.

DEEP-SEATED FRECKLES

Need attention NOW or may remain all winter. Use the old and time-tried guaranteed treatment that has given satisfaction to millions of women for over 15 years, and rid yourself of these homely spots. Ask for

Othine--Double Strength

At all Druggists and Department Stores
OTHINE LABORATORIES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS

The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years

Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

DAVIS-WAGNER Business College
NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. CATALOGUE FREE.
114 W. MAIN STREET. NORFOLK, VA.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For the future of the South

BECAUSE of the remarkable development of its natural resources, the South today is taking a new leadership in the economic progress of the nation.

But this leadership, if it is to be maintained, must have a more enduring foundation than the possession and exploitation of material things.

The South of tomorrow will be made by the children of today. The boys now in school and attending the churches will be the captains of industry and the leaders in the professions a few years hence.

Citizenship is in the making in the schools and the churches.

A great responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the teachers of the South—in the pulpit and in the class-room.

But the compensation accorded the great majority of them is inadequate.

The Southern Railway System, which pays three million dollars per annum in school taxes, voices not only its own best interest but the ambition of its 60,000 employees in respect to the future of their children and their section, when it expresses the view that greater rewards should be offered the men and women who are building Southern citizenship of tomorrow.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

McCLOUD.

On November 23, 1923, little Jennie Mason McCloud left us and went to be with Jesus. Three years only had she entwined her little life about papa and mamma, sister and brothers, and many, many friends, but oh how hard when we suddenly knew that the hands and heart had lost their fleshly grip.

Two days of illness, two days of life's cruel storm, was too much for the little clayed house in which Jennie lived. It fell, but Jennie felt no hurt. Well, as I see it, angels were there and rescued her and took her to the home, not made with hands; to a city that hath foundations that will stand the wreck of worlds; to a city whose Builder and Maker is God, where tears are found only in bottles, shelved in the museum of the eternal city.

Jennie was lame and sore; now she leaps as an heart.

Funeral services were conducted at the funeral apartments of E. Lee Cox, Berkley, Va., by the pastor.

We laid the body to rest in the family plot at Rosemont. The little mound was covered with beautiful flowers, placed by tender hands and loving hearts.

Jennie leaves to mourn their loss, father and mother, Mr. J. H. and Mrs. Bessie Campbell McCloud; one sister and four brothers, and a host of friends, all of Portlock, Va. Earthly families must be broken to form heavenly families. Some day we shall understand, though we should understand now, for Jesus said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven—suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not."

These hands that write have felt what they are writing. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. B. F. BLACK.

GILLILAND.

Mrs. Rebecca Cox Gilliland, wife of J. F. Gilliland, died December 25, 1923, at the age of 69 years, 1 month and 7 days. She was a life-long member of Pleasant Grove Church. She is survived by her husband and six children, besides many friends and other relatives who mourn her passing.

Interment was made at the family cemetery following burial services by her pastor, assisted by Rev. John Kidd, of the Baptist Church. May the Heavenly Father comfort her loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

MAYO'S SEEDS

Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:

Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,

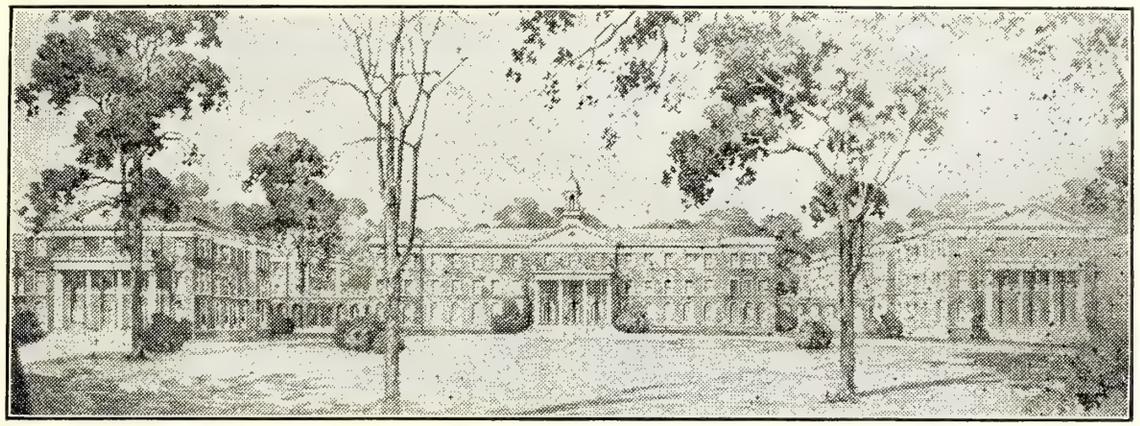
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.

Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.

D. R. MAYO

KNOXVILLE :: :: TENNESSEE

Elon is Building for the Future



Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities

Auditorium — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

Grow Cotton in Virginia

on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY

Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert

TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING

Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.

Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

MR. H. T. LePAGE, June 14, 1919.
Toronto, Ont., Canada.
My Dear Mr. LePage:
I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from. Yours cordially,
REV. BERNARD P. SMITH.
Pastor Christian Church, Kinston, N. C., U.S.A.

15,000 Churches Using Them

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with

Gray's Ointment

Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

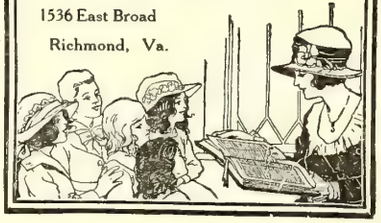
C5453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

C5453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

Called Home

LUCK.

Carey Luck, son of Paul and Mary Luck, was born in the month of December, 1859, and died December 19, 1923, age 64 years. In 1883 he was married to Miss Esta Glsscock, who survives him. To them were born twelve children, nine of these are living—Thomas, Dora, Johnnie, Sallie Bet, Cora, James, Maybelle, Charlie, Bessie, Drewry and Estelle; one brother, Richard Luck, survives.

Bro. Luck had been a member of Union Christian Church for thirty years. He was a quiet man, hard worker, met his every obligation to his fellow-man and to his Church. He had been a great sufferer for years, but during his years of affliction his faith grew stronger, and before the end he assured his people of his readiness to be with his Saviour.

My prayers are that the surviving children may always be as faithful in life's duties as their sainted father was in life.

C. E. NEWMAN.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1924. | NUMBER 5.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Missionary Feeble-Mindedness.—

Did the reader ever hear any one use the expression "Charity begins at home?" Some time ago a critic of foreign missions, speaking of the needs in the home land, used that expression to Dr. Arthur J. Brown. Dr. Brown then very laconically replied: "Yes, charity begins at home," and so does education begin with the alphabet, but it ends there only with the feeble-minded." There are many people in the world who never seem to get beyond their alphabet in grasping the missionary message. J. O. A.

Dangerous Attractiveness.—

The argument is made by superficial people, to catch other superficial people, that because a man attracts a good many persons to the church where he preaches he must be doing a great deal of good. This does not follow. They would be better off if they were not attracted and led to disbelieve the truth of God. Colonel Ingersoll was very attractive as an orator, but instead of doing good, he was a constant influence for evil. Attractiveness in a speaker is one of the gifts of God which has often been perverted to the destruction of souls and the breaking down of the work of the kingdom of God. Where much has been given, much will be required. He who winneth souls is wise, but he who misleads and perverts and destroys is immeasurably worse than foolish.—Herald and Presbyter.

Can a Man be a Christian and an Evolutionist.—

It is not our purpose to discuss this question, but to raise it. While there is an evolution that is very largely believed by the scholars of the world, there is a growing feeling that the Dawinian theory of evolution ha lost its place in the science of the world. It is largely a discarded doctrine. The great masters realize it has not been proven; indeed thaa it cannot be proven, and so they have turned to other explanations of the biological fact. The seminaries have taken up theistic evolution. The universities have ethical and social evolution. Dawinian evolution is inconsistent with an inspired Bible and the teachings of Christ, and we wonder if a college can be called Christian that teaches that man has ascended through ages and milleniums from a microcosm. Why does this thing persist in the biological departments of Christian institutions? —Methodist Protestant.

Enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment.—

A dispatch from Washington to the Boston Evening Transcript gives the substance of a report presented to President Coolidge by Attorney-General Daugherty on the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment since it went into effect on January 16, 1920. More than 90,000 cases have been disposed of, of which 72,489 were convictions. Fines totalling $12,367,600 have been assessed in criminal cases, and jail sentences for violations during the last twenty-three months aggregate more than three thousand years. Here on the Atlantic seaboard, with Canada on the north and Jamaica to the south of us, we hear a din about bootlegging designed to make people feel that drink is very freely distributed. But thoughtful men know they do not see one drunken man on the streets or cars where they saw dozens before prohibition went into effect. They also observe that the price of whiskey is reported as high as ever, notwithstanding the floods supposed to arrive.—Zion's Herald.

The Faith of Students, Religiously.—

Statistics from 80 state institutions in 1921, show that out of a total student enrollment of 152,461 students, 130,486 had religious affiliations, while 21,975 made no statement regarding their religious life. This is very encouraging when compared with our early history, when, even though the colleges were church institutions, practically all the students were outside the church. In Princeton, from 1778 to 1782, there was but one professor of religion. At Bowdoin College in 1807, there was only one Christian. At Yale for four yeasr there was but one, and but four or five in other years about the beginning of the century. Many of the students assumed the names of leading infidels and atheists. Often every student was a professed infidel, or at least outside the church. Bishop Meade of Virginia said, in 1811, that William and Mary College was a hotbed of French infidelity and that for many years in every educated young man whom he met, he expected to find an infidel.

The Number of Drinking People.—

In a report submitted by Major Sullivan, superintendent of police, to the District of Columbia commissioners, it is stated that during the past eighteen months 4,892 persons had been arrested charged with violating the prohibition law.

The facts are not as bad as they appear. This number is largely composed of rounders arrested many times a week. Seventy-five such persons being arrested once a week would account for the above somewhat startling total of arrests. It is well known that the liquor fraternity are doing their utmost to boost the number of arrests for all causes, especially for drunkeness. In this way they hope to discount the success of prohibition enforcement. These 5,892 represent largely the ald soaks and persons whose drinking habits have so far progressed that tissue degeneration is well advanced, with many of whom all sense of honor and propriety is gone. Those who have stopped drinking are largely those less advanced in alcoholism, who have not lost sense of decency or honor and are glad to avail themselves of the assistance that the prohibition law affords them to free themselves from the toils of drink. Very few of this class are to be found among the 5,982 arrests in the Capital city.

Chuckling, Are You.—

As we have been reading the story of the exploits of some of these modern ministers in the Episcopal church and of other churches with their modernism and their stage play in the pulpit, in which they are falling over each other to deny the old and established faith of the church, we have imagined that our Unitarian friends are chuckling with glee. While it is not true of all modernists that they have practically gone over to Unitarianism, it is true of many of them. The denial of the Virgin birth will eventually necessitate their adoption of the creed of many of the followers of this ancient creed that Jesus Christ was perhaps the most perfect man that ever lived —a man of superlative genius, a man whose life was practicaly spotless, but He was only a prophet, not a God, only a man of Godlike endowments. This is Unitarianism. It is the throwing over of the resurrection, which naturally follows the atonement and the adoption of the moral influence theory of atonement. All of them are in the line of Unitarian theology.—Exchange

Getting In Somewhere.—

A little girl was talking to her grandfather one day about the church. She said, "Grandfather, are you a Methodist?" He said, "No, my darling." "Are you a Presbyterian?" "No, my darling." "Are you a Christian?" His answer was, "I hope I am." She quickly responded, "Grandfather, I 'vise you to get in somewhere." Somebody asked Billy Sunday a little while ago if a man could get to heaven outside the church, and his answer was, "Oh, yes, you can swim cross the Atlantic Ocean without a boat, swimming's good." Both of these deal with the man or woman who tries to serve Christ outside of the church. We would not say that this could not be done, but we will say very freely that it is not dealing fairly with God or the church. If God in His grace saves a man's soul, he ought to be fair enough to stand by the forces in the world who are banded together to make God's will the law of life, and if he has received from God the blessing of salvation, he owes it to those who are fighting the battle of faith in this world to line up with them and help them to battle to the gates of death. It seems to us a coward's attitude to accept the blessing of the church and the blessings of God and then refuse to become a member of God's great army that is fighting the battle of righteousness in the world.—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. A. Harper was in Richmond on business for the college the first of this week, and called at THE SUN office to say good morning.

President Harper is rapidly regaining the use of his throat, and we are hoping that he may soon be entirely well. This will be most gratifying news to his many friends.

Rev. R. F. Brown, pleasant Hill, Ohio, is writing a series of articles on "The Miracles of Jesus" for the Herald of Gospel Liberty. Bro. Brown is a vigorous thinker and writer. He belongs to Dixie, but is laboring for a time in Ohio. We wish him great success in his labors in the Buckeye State.

Rev. M. W. Butler is sticking to his field at Munsie, Ind., in a most commendable way, not that his field does not have problems and difficulties a-plenty, but he believes in meeting them in the help and wisdom and courage which God gives—and that is the way out and the way to victory, and he is right about it.

We had a pleasant day with the First Church at Greensboro, N. C., the third Sunday in January. We had good congregations, especially in the morning, and good attention. We had the kind entertainment in the homes of Bro. and Sister Cotton and Bro. and Sister Johnson. The weather was cold, but we were comfortable.

Rev. C. H. Rowland is expected to take up his work at Greensboro, N. C., if we understand correctly, the first Sunday in February. That is an inviting field, a field of large usefulness, and we believe the Church feels that Dr. Rowland is the man for the field. Our Virginia brethren will give him up reluctantly, but they wish him great success.

We speak of the humiliation that came to Jesus because He was born in the manger, but, in fact, no humiliation can come to the Son of God from a human environment. There is a glory in a manger that no palace can boast of, when it holds the form of the Son of God. The cross was the emblem of humiliation for a thousand years until Jesus hung on one. Ever since, the cross has been the emblem of glory.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., is furnishing Sunday School lessons for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and he is doing his work very well. One or two omissions have occurred, which was, especially in one instance, the fault of the United States mail. He mailed it in itme, but it was not received at the editor's office at all, presumably lost en route. But this will rarely occur. His work will be most helpful to our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, who now expects to graduate at Elon next May, is working both for his graduation and for his pastoral work down in Eastern Virginia Conference. He preaches at Wakefield, Burton's Grove and Barretts. He makes one visit a month to the field and then in North Carolina he has one appointment a month at Seagrove. You may think all that work is a mere play, but if you will try it for one month you will soon see that it is work and not play. Bro. Crutchfield is a worker.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., is a busy man. He looks after the missionary work in the Southern Christian Convention and then answers many special calls to be here and yonder, preaching special sermons, funeral sermons, or delivering special addresses. If you think he is having an easy time, you had better undertake to follow him just for one week. It may be before the first week is out you will ask to be excused from following him any further; but he keeps up that sort of life year in and year cut. His is a great work, and he needs more than human strength to keep it up. Give him the help of your prayers.

The watch-night service of the Dover, Del., Christian Church was one of unusual interest, well attended and considered a great success. Dr. Helfenstein is a hard worker, and when he puts his hand to an enterprise, he keeps it there till it is accomplished. As showing their appreciation of his labors, his people have recently (at Christmas time) given him a very fine Hamilton gold watch as a token of esteem. This was the gift of the Young Men's Bible Class which is taught by Dr. Helfenstein. The class is not yet quite two years old, but has a membership of eighty-three. At a recent meeting of the Church, the reports from the various departments were made and showed the presence of much thrift in the work of the Church. Dr. Helfenstein must feel very much gratified to see his work in such a state of thrift.

Here is a fine sentiment from the pen of the Rev. W. P. Fletcher. In his comments on the Sunday School lesson for January 27th, he says: "God's plans are progressive; He is calling His people on. Because their fathers have lived there (in Goshen) four hundred years, is no reason why they should stay. When the conservative would hold us in Goshen and the liberal would run on before, God help us to recognize and follow the Pillar." That is a fine sentiment—the desire to follow the Pillar, but we must not forget that when you follow the Pillar you will follow the Bible, and that is the safe way after all, for where the Pillar leads, you may be sure to find Jesus. There are many professed guides for people who are in the wilderness, but the safe one is Jesus and the Word, for they are both agreed, at least when rightly understood. Before you make up your mind to leave the Pillar or Jesus, be sure that you understand them both, for when they are rightly understood they are both right.

We have not yet heard from any of the brethren to whom we gave the subject of "The Budget System" as a theme for discussion through THE SUN. As we understand it, the budget system will be presented to the approaching session of the Southern Christian Convention for consideration. Now, as it seems to us, since it is coming up for consideration with a view to adopting it as the finance system of the Christian Church, we feel that it ought to be discussed before the Convention meets so as to give the people all the light in its favor or as against it. If we go up to the Convention with no light on the system, then the great body of the people will not be ready to give it an intelligent consideration, and we shall stand a chance to get something we do not wish, or lose something we ought to have. It is from this standpoint that we make a plea for the study of this question through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If we shall discuss it fully and freely before we go to the Convention, then if we want it we shall have the chance to accept it intelligently, or if we do not wish it, we may reject it intelligently. THE SUN columns are open for any of our brethren to discuss it in full.

NOTICE.

The next session of the Southern Christian Convention will be held April 29 to May 2, 1924, inclusive. The place is to be selected by the executive committee. Any Church wishing to entertain the Convention will please communicate with I. W. Johnson, Secretary, Suffolk, Va.

BILLY SUNDAY NOT FOR SALE.

"One of the most common criticisms of Billy Sunday is that he gets too much money. Maybe he does. We are not passing on that. But here is a refreshing report: 'Paul Berg, manager of the State Theater at Cleveland, offered Mr. Sunday $2,500 and expenses for himself and family if he would make two six-minute talks every day for a week at his theater, permitting him to choose his own subject.' It is needless for us to tell our readers that 'Billy' turned this offer down. That is what they would expect him to do. He said that to accept would contradict his attitude and activities in religious work. There is another angle to this incident, too. It illustrates what is generally true of the theater. The theater exists as a money-making institution, and anything good or bad, that 'will pay' is suitable to theater managers. We are glad to believe that there are a few exceptions to this rule."

AN APPRECIATION.

The sad news of the death of Rev. W. R. Knight reached us early yesterday morning. Six years ago his companion preceded him, and since that time he has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. W. F. Horton, of Roanoke, Ala. It was in their home he departed this life on the night of the 16th, about 9 o'clock. Uncle Billie had been as well as usual and had spent much of his time the day before his death in town with his friends, and with the family enjoyed the evening in the usual manner.

He was eighty years and fourteen days old and leaves a record of a busy and useful life. He spent forty-five years in the gospel ministry, and during that time he did some most effective work, and organized some Churches that stand to this day as monument to his labors.

He was kind to the people of his charge and was affectionately known as "Uncle Billie" in his range of acquaintance. He was sincere and kind in his dealings and always considerate of the welfare of others. In his ministerial work he was unassuming and sympathetic, giving to those, old and young, the best advice and was ready at any moment to do what he could for the comfort and assistance of any who might call.

One of the last efforts he made toward the growth of his Church was by a very liberal donation for himself and one of his daughters for Bethlehem College. He did it for the sake of the children, as he said, those coming after him. So far as I know, he never did get to see the building, but he had a vision of it as an institution for the strength of the Church and the glory of God.

In his example, his family has a rich legacy, and of his memory a heritage that should inspire them to "look for a city whose builder and maker is God." May the Lord comfort the bereaved and encourage the Church, which was the pride of his heart.

The ministers attending his funeral were Rev. J. D. Dollar, his pastor, who conducted the service; Rev. C. D. Hunt, who preached the funeral, and Revs. C. W. Carter, G. H. Veazy and the writer. After the services in the house, his Masonic brethren took charge and conducted a very impressive commitment service at the grave in the cemetery at Mt. Zion Church.

E. M. CARTER.

CHRISTIANITY NOT A CREED, BUT A LIFE.

Today there is a renewal of the discussion about creeds. What are they worth? Are they worth anything at all? Why do people have any creeds? And, above all, what use are they in worship? In reply to these questions I would say that Christianity is a life, and not a creed. To be a Christian means that God is Father and we are children, and that is precisely what the Saviour tells us: to come to God as children, sure of His present love; with the fixed certainty that the Father is with His children now.

Christians should welcome every token they find and every word that they hear which insists on that gospel to which Jesus gave up his life, namely: that the Holy Spirit of God is with us whenever we seek it; that we are God's children and must go about our Father's business; and we need not talk if we do not do. Jesus protested against this when he said, "Why do ye say Lord, Lord, and do not these things?"—action rather than talk. The religious attitude of many Christians in the day which is forever passed, thank God, was to withdraw themselves into quiet dwellings, sing their hymns, chant their prayers, look out from their Cathedral windows and domiciles, and see the wicked; see the slums of their cities; bandits on the highways and soldiers marching to war; renouncing the world; with little or no concern, because they were Christians. Hundreds of religious organizations flourished, and hundreds of magnificent Churches were erected; many great Christian convocations were held, but where are they today? Other religions have long since driven them out and taken their place, and the Churches have gone down in ruins. Modern Christianity has no idea of renouncing the world, but instead boldly claiming it for Jesus Christ. Religion of today is not that of the cloister, but rather of the street and market-place. We have developed in this generation the highest type of ethical Christianity that has ever dominated any country, and the deepest consciousness of responsibility—"We must be about our Father's business."

For a generation after Christ died, Christianity was simply called "The Way." This meant not the manner or method, but literally, the road in which the people were to travel, and they were to be judged as to how well they had kept in this road. As Paul declares proudly, "The Way, which men call heresy," is derived from the Greek word hodos, the road, the path or road in which people walk or ride, and our word "road" comes from the same root. The history of Christianity through the nineteen centuries shows that the majority of ecclesiastics have insisted that what Christianity needs is a good verbal statement of its purposes and system, and so because of this we have the Apostles' Creed, Nicene Creed, Athanasian Creed, canons of fifteen councils, decrees of the Council of Trent, thirty-nine articles, five points of Calvin, Westminster confession, and, literally, a thousand more such "symbols"—symbols is the fashionable name just now—as monuments of the interest which the ecclesiastics have taken and now take in such historical or verbal statements.

All this time these formal statements never advanced one man or one woman an inch in The Way, or in the Christian or divine life, but instead have engendered separation and schism. The creed-test makes a cleavage along the line of mere opinion and so pushes excellent people apart and splits into ineffective fragments what might be united, vigorous body of earnest workers. The creed is indifferent in its bearing on character, for the emphasis is not laid on religion, where it belongs, but on mere opinion, where it has no business.

I am not a believer in the doctrine of extreme, radical fundamentalism, neither do I endorse extreme liberalism or modernism, but I see in true liberalism a prophecy of the final abolishment of creeds and confessions; the spirit of the Reformation which threw off the yoke of the hierarchy; that the same reformation will itself be reformed; that Christianity will some day break loose from the bondage of creeds and ecclesiastical tyranny, so each human soul will have a free atmosphere for thought, and conscience, and will equal to the play and scope of all its energies and ever-expanding life.

There is no valid or permanent reason why fundamentalists and modernists should divide and form two separate and distinct organic factions or communions, for their aims, purposes, hopes and ends are the same—to love God and love man; to serve God and save men. Their religion is the same, but their creed is different, and God knows that we can well afford to sacrifice every creed but the Bible, if we can preserve the union of the Church, so that together they may work for a common good. As far as individuals are concerned, the Church is already divided and always will be, for every person is a law unto himself—God does not duplicate. His interpretations of the Scriptures, of life, of duty and destiny, his theology and creed, is different from that of every other person in their various details, but Christianity consists in these things—it is not expressed in creeds, but is a life.

A sufficient definition of a Christian is following Christ, and if any man makes the effort to follow Christ, whether he expresses this in any formula of words or not, he is a Christian. If pressed to give a verbal definition of Christianity, it could be expressed in four words: "love God, love man." Paul's definition was still shorter, consisting of three words—faith, love and hope, "these three abide and continue forever."

It is important to notice here that when our fathers re-established the Church on its primitive basis, they saw the folly and danger of attempting verbal statement of opinion. They, therefore, abandoned written statement of doctrines. They had no creeds, as we call creeds, for a hundred and twenty years. They had covenants, in which they pledged themselves "to walk together in Christ." "It is not in our belief in a set of words; it is in our action—following Him." And here they did but follow the Master's own great example, who when parting, gave them the symbol of union which has in fact united his followers from the beginning. What did He ask them to do; to repeat the same confession, make the same profession, say the same answers to the same catechism? Alas! there is no catechism and there are no answers. The symbol of communion united Thomas who doubts and Peter who betrays. If only they can eat bread together, that is all. If they can pass the cup from hand to hand, that is all. They confess their weakness, yes; they would fain remember him, yes; and then, if they can recognize the mutual dependence of him who gives to his brother a bit of bread, of him who takes from his brother a cup of cold water—these are the Saviour's tests of discipleship. Take that most pathetic conversation with the young nobleman of Edom. So far as a verbal expression went, he and the Master were one. The young man says, almost sadly, "I have kept the Ten Commandments"—that is, I have obeyed the written law "from my youth up." Jesus tells him what is the one thing he needs, and that is action. "Follow me; do as I do; lift up that which is fallen down, bring comfort where there is no comfort, make men see and know that the kingdom of God is at hand."

What we mean when we say that Christianity is a life, and not a creed, is that our Christianity must be avouched, illustrated and extended by action. Christianity has no defensive armor; it must be on the aggressive, or it is lost. What are called the evidences of Christianity become the defenses of Christianity. If the Church had shown herself in intense action during the past two hundred years, saying nothing about the past nineteen hundred years, we would not have Christianity divided into orthodoxy and heterodoxy, as it is today, for this departure from the commonly accepted standards of faith has not been for the simple reason that men wanted to be original, but to approach the world from a different angle in order to reach the masses and bring them back in "The Way," for it is a sad travesty to Christianity that after nearly two thousand years of gospel preaching and teaching two-thirds of the population of the earth have not even heard of Christ. There is nothing to be gained by throwing the plain teaching of Christ overboard, but the suffering of an eternal loss; neither is there anything to be gained by holding on to our antiquated traditions—the true battle cry is not backward, but onward with Christ!

Some one asked Dr. Wayland, of one of his distinguished friends, if he thought that he were a Christian? His answer was: "Can he drive out the devils? If he can, he meets all my requisitions, or the Master's." The passage in the gospel where the disciples saw a man casting out devils in Christ's name and they rebuked him, was what he had reference to. They rebuked him as ecclesiastics rebuke such people today, "because he walketh not with us." And Jesus said: "Forbid him not. No man can work a miracle in my name, and lightly speak evil of me." The Master is willing that His Church shall stand the test to which He leaves fisherman, apostle, young nobleman, and repentant sinner. It is the same test for kings and emperors and fishermen, for preachers and blacksmiths, for artists and dressmakers—that simple test of thistles and vines and fig trees. All of them, the emperor like the blacksmith, shall be judged by their fruits. The fishing net and the Church will be judged by what they do. The doctrine will be judged by the life, and not the life by the doctrine. To live as one lives who knows that God is here has not proved to be easy. But to say, "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, the Maker of heaven and earth," proves very easy. Millions of men and women will say it in Church next Sunday. And millions of them will go out, and in the street and at home and on Monday in their day's work will act as if there were no God, no Father, and as if the earth had no Maker. The Saviour of mankind was not pleased with such lip service, and He said so. It is easy to say in rapid utterance, "I believe in His Son Jesus Christ, conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary." Millions of men will say this next Sunday in the Church and will go out to borrow and lend, to earn money and spend it, to eat, to drink, to work, and to play, in such wise that no man who sees them could guess that Jesus Christ ever lived, that He ever said, "Blessed are the pure in heart" or that He ever said that "all the law and all the prophets hang on the words, love God and love man."

God is not pleased when men say and do not. Let them show their belief, not by their words, but by their fruits. Religion is not a creed, but a life. By their fruits ye shall know them.

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

One month of your good intentions is gone. Will you let another slip by before sending in your renewal to The Sun?

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

IT IS NOT SURPRISING.

Any man or set of men who wil deliberately fight the Constitution of his own government may be expected to do many other bad things. The time was when it was looked upon as a crime to speak against the Constitution of the United States, and that was right. It ought to be so regarded now, for we have a company of men who are opposing a part of the Constitution and thereby rendering themselves unfit for the work of living in our country. It seems to us that a good Amendment to the Constitution would be to send out of the country any person known to speak against the Constitution, or any part of it.

We have said that any man who is known to speak against the Constitution may be expected to do many other bad things. Well, here is proof in at least one instance. The wet men are against the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Now keep this fact in mind, and then remember that they do not hesitate to lie in order to make it appear that prohibition is a failure and that we have more drunkeness now than ever before. That is not true, and yet they keep up the cry as if it were the truth. On any and all occasions when it suits their wishes they are proclaiming the failure of Prohibition, and not only its failure, but that it is responsible for many of the ills in our country, not the least of which (as they see it) is keeping them from making as much money as they want. Well, that may be, but they had a long time at selling liquid damnation and ruin to the many homes of our land whose heads were crazy with strong drink. Even now, there are hundreds and thousands of homes which have not and, never will, fully recover from the effects of strong drink. Thousands are now ignorant and can never have an education, just because the heads of their families to which they belonged spent all of the living in drinking and carousing, so that the children in that home had no chance to get an education, and all because their fathers were a set of drunken sots. We regret to use the term, but no other will set forth the truth of the facts in the case. It is no wonder that men who will spend their living in strong drink and cut their families out of the necessaries of life and deny to their children the privileges of an education, to say nothing of warm clothing and good wholesome food. It is no wonder that such men will fight the Constitution of the country and lie in an effort to make people believe that prohibition is a curse to the people, and especially the young people, only that they may get the chance again to make themselves sots and to rob their people of what is justly theirs.

Indeed, it is not surprising that such men are clamoring for the return of the privilege of making themselves worse than the brute —by making themselves drunk and thereby pauperizing their families and denying them a place in decent society. God help these benighted men to see to what extent they are seeking to bring ruin upon them to whom they have promised to give protection and comfort. No, there is no occasion to expect anything else but that these men will do all in their power, even to tearing to pieces the Constitution of our country, in order that they may do their best to destroy the comfort and happiness of their own families. Whatever does this is an enemy to the home and to the larger life of the nation, an das such deserves to be put out of the way of decency and righteousness.

The liquor business is outlawed—it has not and cannot have any place in a true and noble life of worthy mortals. It has been banished from the country and it must remain banished that our country may be free from its awful work of destruction. The Eighteenth Amendment is here to stay, and the men who fight it must go—go to oblivion where the inhabitants are left in darkness to be forgotten forever. Prohibition must live and continue to bless the world with soberness and purity and a larger life of service and usefulness. Liquor must have no place in such a world as this. Too long it was permitted among mortals, but in this day of light the people have learned better and they have decreed that it must be banished, and banished forever.

Prohibition is prohibiting the liquor business, and when a man says it is not, he is either speaking in ignorance, or he is wilfully lying, that he may deceive and thereby get a chance to put upon the public the awful curse of strong drink.

IS THE SUPERNATURAL IN CHRISTIANITY FUNDAMENTAL?

Much is said nowadays of what is fundamental in the Christianity of Jesus. Now and then we see that some man has found that only Jesus is really fundamental. Is that so? How did you find it out? And how does it work?

Imagine some one accepting Jesus, but rejecting what He taught. Is it a fact that Jesus and what He taught are independent one of the other? Can a man accept Jesus while he repudiates what He says? Can that be done? For instance, can a man accept Jesus as his personal Saviour and at the same time repudiate the teachings of Jesus, as set forth in the New Testament? How can He do it? If what Jesus taught is not fundamental, then on what plea can we make Jesus Himself fundamental? That is a fair question, and we should like to have it answered.

If what Jesus taught is not fundamental, then upon what evidence do we claim that Christianity is a supernatural religion. And if we reject the teachings of Jesus, then we reduce our religion to a man-made religion, and in that event, we have a religion that may well be said to rank with the many man-made religions so common in the East. A man-made religion of the East is no better than a man-made religion of the West, and as a follower of Jesus Christ, we do not want a religion that is not from above—not supernatural. We do wish a Saviour whose teachings give us assurance of the truth of the religion that we profess. If His teachings are not reliable, then how can we know that He is our Saviour? If we accept Jesus as our Saviour, then we must of necessity accept what He taught.

We have no sympathy for a religion which teaches us that we have a Saviour whose teachings cannot be accepted. If they can be accepted, then they must be fundamental, and if fundamental, then all who believe Him ought to believe His teachings. If this view is correct, then we are sure that the religion of Jesus is fundamental, and as such we ought to accept His teachings. If these teachings are fundamental, why not class them as supernatural; and if supernatural, why may we not believe them as a fundamental factor in our religion?

Referring to this return to the supernatural, the Wesleyan Methodist says:

"What is needed in the religious world today along with an adherence to correct Bible doctrine in relation to the fundamentals, is a return to the supernatural in personal experience and Church activities. We need correct doctrines, but we need a supernatural regeneration and sanctification and the manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost in our ministry more. When Peter and John were arrested and brought before the sanhedrim for preaching in the name of Jesus Christ, it was the fact that there stood in their midst the man who had been miraculously healed from a life-long infirmity which won the day for these fearless preachers. 'And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it' (Acts 4:14)."

If any teach that there is nothing supernatural in Christianity, then either such teacher does not know what he is talking about, or teaching, or else we do not. To say Christianity has not in it the supernatural is to place Christianity on a level with other man-made religions. For one, we have no part in a Christian (?) religion which leaves out the supernatural, nor have we any sympathy with the teaching that Jesus is fundamental, but we have consideration for what He taught. We cannot separate Jesus from His teaching. If Jesus is true, then His teaching must also be true, and we have no sympathy with any teaching to the contrary. Jesus is fundamental, and so are His teachings, for no man is authorized to take from the Book anything He taught. So important were His teachings considered that in the closing of the last book of the New Testament, it was definitely announced (Rev. 22:19) that if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. If any one wishes to risk taking away a part of the book of prophecy, or any other part of the Bible, that may be their business, but we can have no part in any such work of destruction of the Word of God. If any feel disposed to do the contrary, that must be his or her responsibility. We must follow the Book as of divine authority in obedience to the command of the Holy Spirit.

WHO WILL CROWN OUR NEW ELON?

Yesterday we were passing from room to room in our new Elon College administration building. We found the main building approaching completion. It is very attractive, and most inviting. The administration department is not only beautiful and well arranged, but it is a credit to our people and the Alamance people who made its construction, as a whole, possible. The administration department is on the first floor and in the southeastern end of the building. Then there are a number of recitation rooms on the first floor, even THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S editorial rooms are on the first floor. Then on the second floor are other recitation rooms, and among them is one dedicated to missions, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson is in charge. Then, on the third floor, are still other recitation rooms, the hall of the literary societies, the domestic science department (and it is splendidly fitted up), the stenographic hall, the bookkeeping hall and the bank (a place where our young men and women may be taught banking). This is hardly half of what may be said truthfully of this great building, which is more than 200 feet long and about 60 feet wide, and three stories high. Just a year ago (January 18th), the old administration building was burned. It seems quite a wonder that in so short a time a new and greater building should have taken its place, and now so near completion. Then along with this building there are four other buildings in process of construction, and in due time these will be completed, making Elon one oft he best equipped institutions in the State of its class. It is not the largest, but it is better adapted to its purposes than any institution in North Carolina. Indeed, great pains and not a little cost have been the price of the adaptation of these buildings to work to be done. And now as these draw nigh to completion, we all feel that its future under the blessings of God will surprise the people not only of our own Church, but the people of other Churches and of the State at large. We have a plant which, for its adaptability to the work to be done, will command, as we believe, the high appreciation of the people generally.

Just one thing is lacking. As we stood and looked upon this magnificent bunch of college buildings, we could but say: "There is just one thing lacking, and that is the crown of the physical plant. And what is that? It is the campus. Necessarily it has been overlooked. Nature has made it a beautiful place, well suited to the site of a college, but of course it must have the skill and work of a landscape gardner and much effort must be put forth in order to bring it to its best and to be in keeping with these magnificent buildings, but it will take money to put it in order and make it one of the beauty spots of North Carolina. A number of men have been very generous in giving money to erect these buildings, but now we need one more upon whom God has generously bestowed with a liberal hand the good things of this life—some man who is blessed with ample means—to take in charge this campus and make it a thing of beauty. It will indeed be the placing of the crown of beauty on this plant, now giving such earnest promise of the highest usefulness in the near future. The man or the woman who has the money can crown his or her life of generosity with a beauty that will place a lasting halo of appreciation in the hearts of of our people, and indeed of the people of North Carolina, for it will be to this plant just what the painter's brush is in the finishing touches on a great picture. There are people among us who are able and who may count themselves highly honored in having the privilege to do this much-needed work on the campus.

Think of it, brother or sister. If you have the money, can you tell us what good that money will do you when you are no more among mortals? But if you will let a generous impulse move you to furnish the money that is so much needed to beautify the Elon campus, you will enshrine your generous act in the lives and hearts, not only of the people of our Church, but in the hearts and lives of the young people of the two states of North Carolina and Virginia, as well as others. Great things have been done at Elon College, and yet greater things will be done under the blessings of God in the coming future. Will you not allow this opportunity to grip your heart and mind till you shall come to the help of this great work and do a noble part to put the crowning touch of beauty on this institution and its campus? May God help you to do His will in this matter! Think and pray that your eyes may be opened to see this great opportunity now at hand.

SHORT NOTES ON BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Second Samuel, or the Book of the Kingdom.

Some one has said that the First Book of Samuel has marked in the persons of Eli, Saul, and even Samuel, the failure of man in his relation to the kingdom of God. While this seems true, may we not claim it is also true thatt he Second Book of Samuel marks an upward tendency and the beginning again of the restoration of order through the putting on the throne of God's choice of men to be king over His people, David? As a part of the program in the new order was the recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's political center. So also was her religious center in Zion.

Then God established the Davidic covenant. This Davidic covenant became a strong arm of God with His people. It was a center of truth among the people of God. While there were some unfavorable turns in the government under David, there was in fact much success and a new day dawned. In 3 Sam. 23:1-7, we find David's last words in which he sets forth the character of the millennial kingdom.

The Second Book of Samuel opens with a lament over Saul and Jonathan. Captain Abner proclaimed Ishbosheth, son of Saul, king, and for seven and one-half years David's reign was limited to Judah; then Abner went over to David's side and stood with him till he was slain by Joab and Ishbosheth was assassinated. David had in the meantime made such an impression on the people as a ruler that he was by common consent made king over all Israel, with his capital at Jerusalem. That points us to the man who hd been content to be faithful in what was under his supervision and await the coming of events which should give him his rightful place as king of all Israel.

One lesson we see in all of the lives of these great men in the service of God, and that is that retribution follows close on the heels of men who dare to forget God in service. Did it not come surely and, in many instances, quickly to the men who undertook to fill places of great responsibility and at the same time betrayed the trust God had given them? This is enforced in the lives of these men. Especially do we find it plainly set forth in the history of David and his family. David left the path of honor and true rectitude and then the return, measured to him in sin in his own life and in the members of his family. He betrayed Uriah, and then came fast the misdeeds in his own family, deeds never to be forgotten. Think of the sin of David and then put along side of it the child of his crime in death. Think of Ammon in incest, bringing grief and shame upon all who were near and dear to David; then think of Absalom, rising in rebellion against his father's kingdom and the trouble he brought upon the gray hairs of the man who first put in motion sin in his own family.

Implicit obedience is the only safe rule for the life of the people of God. Jehovah had commanded that the ark should be taken to its proper resting-place upon the shoulders of the Levites, but instead of doing as he was commanded, he undertook to carry it upon an ox cart, and when the ark was severely shaken, so that Uzzah, to save it from falling, rushed up and put his hands on it to save it, if possible, then Uzzah was stricken and died. To do things as God had directed is the surest way to success. Three months later, the ark was carried on the shoulders of the Levites, as God had originally directed, and all was well. The same lesson needs now to be learned. How many, even professing Christians, think they can do the Lord's work in any way which may suit them, rather than do it as God has directed. There are people who seem to think it makes no difference how the Lord's work is done, just so it is done. History of God's hand in human affairs does not seem to justify that thought. If a thing is to be done, let it be done as God has commanded it, for then the responsibility is upon God. If we take the work in hand and do it as we please, regardless of the commands of God, then we may expect His displeasure upon us. When God told Moses how to build the tabernacle, Moses went and did the work as the Lord had told him, and when he came to report, he reported his work by departments, and as he closed what he said of each department, he took time to tell the Lord that He had done it as He had commanded. That being true, it ended the responsibility of Moses. So when we do things as God has commanded us to do, if the thing should fail, no blame can be attached to to, for we have done it in God's own way, and therefore the responsibility is His. David had been guilty of murder, treachery and adultery, and when Nathan came to him with the parable of the ewe lamb, David could only stand speechless, for he saw himself all wrapped up in disobedience and sin.

The Second Book of Samuel is in four parts, as follows:

1. From the death of Saul to the anointing of David as king over Judah, in Hebron.—2 Sam. 1:1-27.

2. From the anointing in Hebron to the establishment of David as king over united Israel.—2 Sam. 2:1, 5:25.

3. From the conquest of Jerusalem to the rebellion of Absalom.—3 Sam. 6:1, 14:33-4.

4. From the rebellion of Absalom to the purchase of the temple site.—2 Sam. 15:1, 24:25.

Certainly, the Lord's dealings with Israel are full of the shadows and the lights of His leadership in Israel. The events covered in this book extend over thirty-eight years, and enable us to see that man in the days of David was much the same in his moral character as is man today. Even in his loyalty to his Lord, he is much the same—sometimes he is very true, and then, without any notice of any change, he is very false and unsteady.

For all of David's folly and sin, he had to pay. Turn to the last chapter of Second Samuel and you will see how God required him to choose his own punishment. How awful David felt it was, that he must choose his own punishment! And what was worse, if possible, David must not only suffer himself, but he must see others suffer, even the death of 70,000 men. If in our sins we should bring suffering only upon ourselves, that would be enough, but sin sweeps a wider swath through humanity than the individual—many others must suffer the sins of the leaders.

"But" is a word that is frequently in use. How could we get along without it? There are so many occasions when it is needed, and especially with some people. There is a class who like to say good things and then follow it with a "but." He is a fine fellow, "but" he is this or that. Let us learn to leave off this but except when there is some real call for it. Do not throw it in just to limit the good word some one has said of a certain party. Forward puts the thought in this shape when it says: "Every nature that knows any depth has a 'but' to its friendship. There is the outer court where many come—business acquaintances, neighbors with their cheery gossip and harmless small talk, people with kindred interests. Even many a pleasant family tie goes no further than this outer court, and yet does not feel defrauded, because the inner chamber is denied it.

"Indeed, there are but few privileged to enter the inner chamber, and neither they nor you may quite know the reason or the order of this spirit intimacy that goes so much deeper than any ordinary acquaintanceship, and that need not always be on its guard. Topics that never come to the surface in common conversation are safe here, confidences that slip out of their hiding-places naturally, understanding that calls for few words. A pure, strong, helpful friendship is one of God's greatest gifts, not only because of what it is in itself, but because it helps us to understand the one perfect friendship that links the human with the divine."

Pastors, this is to be a busy year. Line up a list of new subscribers for The Sun.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The meeting of the Anti-Saloon League of America in its twenty-first annual session of its history, and the fourth anniversary of the passage of the eighteenth amendment to the national Constitution, was held in Washington, D. C., January 12-17, 1924. All the States were represented, and there were more than a thousand delegates present. It was a simple, but certain endorsement of the eighteenth amendment by the citizens of the republic. All ranks of men and women thronged the First Congregational Church three times a day with a faith and enthusiasm characteristic of true Christians and loyal citizens. At heart it was a jubilee over what had been achieved within thirty years, and a purpose that the whole world might some day be under prohibition.

When the Christian Endeavor Society in Convention in Atlantic City in 1914 announced as its slogan, "A dry United States in 1920," friends of the saloon ridiculed the youngsters, and the semi-prohibitionists expressed grave doubts of its accomplishment in so short a time; but it came two years sooner than their prophecy. Young people may be counted fools, but they are sometimes good prophets. They are rising up in their majesty in colleges and universities of the country and organizing great bodies for the enforcement of the nineteenth amendment by obedience to all law. They were provoked to this action by the false propoganda that students were drinking more than ever, and that even girl students were learning to drink as never before. It is the old drinkers and those who have money interests in liquor who try to persuade themselves and others that more liquor is used than ever. If they can get all they want and pay no tax on it, they would really favor prohibition. Nobody believes it, and the nation will not permit it. The nation is dry and it will remain dry.

Great addresses were delivered by Governors, Senators, Congressmen, ministers, educators, lecturers, women, and business men; and all agreed that the eighteenth amendment is here to stay, that the people stand for enforcement, and that the weakest support is from the secular press. The great dailies pay little attention to religious or temperance conventions. That is the experience of the Federal Council and the Anti-Saloon League; but spiritual and moral forces can succeed in spite of such indifference. Dry movements do not expect the support of wet papers.

Rear Admiral Sims said that "the age of machinery cannot exist without prohibition. The navy could not exist unless the men were sober. Ford and Gary can do much for prohibition because they operate so much machinery. Delicate parts of powerful machines require sober men to operate them." Railroads are prohibitionists. Congress is dry. Schools are dry. Business everywhere is dry. The nation is dry, notwithstanding the wet propaganda put out by the press.

Rabbi Simon said: "The whole tendency of athletics is toward sobriety"; and he might have said that Greece knew that three thousand years ago. It was reported that 360 prohibition officers have recently been killed, and that shows the attitude of the wets toward obedience to law.

The chief points emphasized through the convention were: obedience to law (all law), and a process of temperance education that will make the world for prohibition. In the violation of law the buyer is equally guilty with the seller, and the eighteenth amendment is as binding as any other part of the Constitution. Five thousand students of the University of Illinois have pledged themselves to the support of the eighteenth amendment, and the girls of Cornell have pledged themselves not to keep company with men who drink. When the present generation of makers, dealers, and drinkers die, the trouble will end.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

For the first time in six weeks I have today been privileged to attend public worship. What a pleasure it was! I can now understand better the grounds for the feelings of the psalmist when he declared: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." It is a good and wholesome spiritual topic to attend public worship.

Reading sermons and other good books, listening to religious discourses over the radio, calm and uninterrupted meditation, are excellent experiences all of them and eminently worth while, but they are incapable of taking the place of public worship. Those who do not attend public worship, whether from choice or from necessity, have an area of their spiritual experience uncultivated. They are poor whether they realize it or not.

From my earliest recollection, I have been a regular attendant on public worship. Two of my most impressionable experiences out of childhood's days are an inordinate affection for cherry pie and attending public worship in Old Providence Church, in Norfolk County, Va. I still crave cherry pie, and the love of public worship abides. Aside from the habit of public worship which comes out of the practice of my parents in taking me to Church even before I was able to understand, as the years have come and gone and thought has reacted on experience, I have certain very definite reasons for going to Church. Among them, I would enumerate the following:

1. Jesus went. I understand it to be my privilege as a disciple of His to follow in His steps. It was His custom to attend the services of the synagogue and the temple. There were practices in both which His soul abhorred, yet as the best available method of registering His allegiance to God, He went. This leads me to say that no man has a right to absent himself from public worship because he does not like the preacher or the kind of music or the place appointed for worship or some officer of the Church. Public worship is social acknowledgment of God, and has an inalienable claim on every person. We should follow our Saviour's example and go to Church.

2. I enjoy it. I enjoy it sometimes more than others. The sermon is sometimes better than at other times, and sometimes I am in a more spiritual frame of mind than at others. But I have never been to public worship when there was not something for me to enjoy. I have attended Church where the service was in a foreign tongue. I felt I was in God's presence in a special sense, and I enjoyed it. My experience coincides with Peter's at the transfiguration, when he said, "Lord, it is good to be here." That's the way I feel at public worship, whether it be on our campus under the over-arching trees, in a theater, in a private home, in our temporary chapel, when I worshipped today, or in a Church building. I do not think it selfish to enjoy myself at Church. I go as a sense of duty, but I am glad I enjoy it.

3. It gives me spiritual insight into my daily, routine life and its problems. I frequently find myself during public worship applying the spiritual measuring-rod of the Christian life to some problem that has been perplexing me. Some word of the sermon, some phrase in a prayer or song, some "still small voice" out of the encircling spiritual realm starts a stream of thought, and what was before uncertain becomes as the brightness of the noonday. I do not go to Church to withdraw my mind from my daily problems, but to seek light and leading in their solution. There is nothing unspiritual about our daily life. We need to spiritualize every duty and all experience. I can joyfully testify that such ability has frequently come to me from public worship. That it does not always so result is my misfortune, and no fault of the Church or its services.

4. I want always to throw my influence on the side of the uplifting institutions of the social order. As a citizen, I feel that I should vote because that is the most effectual way I have to support good government. As a neighbor, I make it a rule to visit the sick because sympathy is the balm in Gilead for a stricken friend. I try to support in a personal way the institutions and organizations that promise uplift to lfe. And, therefore, I support the Church which is to me the finest institution I know. I always aspire to support the best things and causes with my life and influence, and so I must support the Church. Let those who for one reason or another fail to support the Church by their presence, consider how poor and desperate life would be without the Church and its ministering service. Then let them consider if it is honest to profit by such an institution without supporting it. Whatever else I may be, God being my helper, I have resolved never to be a spiritual parasite. And confident that God approves this resolution, whatever influence I have shall be registered on behalf of the Church and its services of worship.

I covenanted anew today with God as I sat in the place appointed for His worship.

W. A. Harper.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

It will be a happy time on this earth when war is done away, and men and nations resort to the plan "of all the earth" to settle difficulties. We do not expect men to think alike. There is to be differences of opinions, even if their actions are similar. The most prevailing character and the most striking feature of human history is war, though it may be ancient, savage or civilized. It is proof also of the sinfulness and imperfections of mankind; and, that its passions are not bridged by justice or ruled by love. One of the most interesting topics of the present day is: "will the time ever come when the nations 'shall learn war no more'?"

We have consulted science, but that does not teach men to love one another; it results better in those methods, how to destroy. Commerce has failed, for some of the most cruel wars have resulted for the sake of trade and revenue.

So it is in the case of education, progress and civilization. War does not originate from without, but its source is from within. There needs to be something applied that will overcome the lust for gain and of power, glory and revenge. Then to overcome the ravages of war it can only be done by the love of God and the Golden Rule. That cannot fail. Let us hope that the substitute plan that is being agitated by the press at the present may be a means of a final conclusion. It was the article, "What Should Christian America Do?" in the last copy of the Christian Missionary that stimulated and brought forth these lines.

Consider the position of one sent to teach Christ, the Prince of Peace and an impression upon the minds of the people whom he is trying to instruct, that our nation is most interested in commerce; even to that of furnishing arms for battle. It is too absurd. Those who love God and put their trust in Him can understand that some blessings may come in disguise, but it is hardly expected that the heathen would consider such. The purpose of the missionary efforts in the heathen lands is to instruct its people how to meet and successfully attack the enemy of man with no idea of killing or the destruction of property. Let the Christian's idea prevail and happiness in all the earth will reign. E. M. CARTER.

SANFORD LETTER.

So swiftly has time passed that it seems but a few weeks since we came to our present field. Yet more than a year has passed since then.

It has been a year like all the years of the past, and yet different. The same sun has warmed and brightened our days; the same moon and stars have gleamed through the darkness of the night; the same Heavenly Father has watched over us and protected us.

And yet each day has brought to us new conditions, new problems, new responsibilities, new friends, new opportunities for service.

Among the blessings that we enjoy, our friends occupy in our hearts a place of deep and earnest appreciation.

Their kindly consideration of our needs and comfort has been expressed during the year, but especially during the period following Mrs. Williamson's operation in the hospital.

They ministered to us in many ways, including words of sympathy, flowers and visits. We shall ever hold in most appreciative memory all these tokens of kindness.

Early in the year, Shallow Well Church gave us a good, old-fashioned pounding. This was followed some time afterwards by a "visitation" from Turner's Chapel; and then by Sanford. In addition to the above-mentioned donations, we have been the recipients of private donations too numerous to mention, including a fine Christmas turkey from a friend of the Poplar Branch community, and a nice lot of sausage from a friend of the Grace's Chapel community—these coming at Christmas. We received also as Christmas presents a nice percolator, given by the Shallow Well Sunday School, and a cash donation from the Turner's Chapel Sunday School.

These remembrances have been very much enjoyed, and in addition have very materially reduced our living expenses, and at a time, too, when it was most needed. We trust that these kind friends who know the circumstances, will forgive this tardiness of recognition. We very much appreciate every act or thought of kindness, whether of things temporal or spiritual. We feel under renewed obligations to render them the very best service possible.

It is our intention in our next letter to report matters possibly more directly concerning the kingdom interest.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

OUR RICHMOND LETTER.

We scarcely have time to write a letter, and yet we know that Richmond ought to be heard from, especially now that we have a sure-enough Christian Church in our city. And the Church we have is worth yof our best. If you had been present last Sunday morning to have witnessed the service, we are sure you would have thought so, too. We had a good service and fine music. Some of our Richmond people are wondering how we do it and how we have accomplished so much in such a short time. Well, if you will hear Dr. Walters preach and then hear our choir sing, you will begin to think there is a reason why we are getting along so well. At night, Dr. Walters stood up like a man and told us of a block to law enforcement. He stands his full height for law enforcement, as all good people ought to do.

Our pastor is giving us a weekly talk on the "Principles of the Christian Church." It will continue for five weeks. The friends of the Church in Richmond are urged to come out and hear what he has to say. We dare say that there are many in Richmond who, if they were to come and hear him on this subject, they would go away with a new idea of what the Christian Church stands for. If you do not believe it, just try it and see.

Just now we are starting a teacher-training class. It will meet each week at the close of the prayer meeting. It will be taught by the pastor. It is expected to open with a membership of twenty, as that number has ordered books.

We also have a Wellons' Brotherhood Bible Class, which holds its regular meetings in the Sunday School hour and its business meetings in the Sunday School room on Friday, February 1st, at 8 P. M. All adult members of the Sunday School are invited to attend.

Our regular meetings are held as follows: On Sunday—9:30 A. M., Sunday School; 11 A. M., morning preaching and regular service. The evening service is held at 8 P. M. If any of our people should be in the city, we wish them to come and worship with us and hear a good sermon by our pastor, Dr. W. T. Walters.

Dr. Walters declares that we spend six days in making a living, and he thinks we may well afford to spend at least a part of one day in making a life. That is good doctrine, and we th inkall decent people might at least go to Church on Sunday and give God a chance to see what He can do to lead us out into a larger and better life. Try it! SUSAN.

TORONTO AGAIN.

Toronto is shivering in the grip of the coldest weather of the winter thus far. Yesterday morning (January 21st), the mercury registered several degrees below zero. It is a little warmer today, and it is snowing. We get it colder sometimes than the temperature this cold wave has yet brought. But it is cold enough now for a Southerner.

Sometimes I have heard people who had been in the Canadian northwest say they don't feel it when it gets down to thirty-five and forty below zero. There is a certain amount of reason in this. I am of the opinion that I should soon get so that I shouldn't feel anything in a temperature like that!

I wonder sometimes if people don't make remarks like that merely because they have heard other people make them, and not because they really feel the truth for themselves. I wonder also if the same doesn't hold true of a great amount of our talking and thinking. After all, there is very little originality in our thinking and our manner of expression. We think in a certain way because others have thought in that way. We say things because others have said them. Men vote in a particular party because their fathers voted that way. We join a certain Church because our parents belonged to that Church. In the religious controversy which is now raging over this continent, we often hear the expression, "The faith once delivered to the saints," I wonder if, when we sift the meaning of that expression, it isn't merely saying, "The theological opinion which our forefathers have held."

The majority now don't take the time to think things through for themselves. They simply accept as true that which is told them. In all ages they who dared to think ahead of their contemporaries have been branded as dangerous characters.

It isn't always a credit to one, neither is it a sign of real thought, to forsake the teachings of childhood and early life. Often they are right, and it is best for us to follow them. But we do need to think them out and digest them for ourselves, just as we must do the food which we take into our physical bodies.

But I started to talk about the cold weather. I notice there is at least one advantage in it. The girls I see on the street now have roses in their cheeks without having to resort to the drug-store variety. And this may be taken as symbolic of the real contribution which the cold weather makes to manhood and womanhood. It increases the struggle to make a living, but in doing so it makes a contribution to ruggedness of character that is indeed worthwhile.

There are, you see, advantages even from shivering in zero weather. Then don't forget that Canada doesn't always have a zero temperature. It is far from being a country of perpetual snow and ice. It is a place of birds, flowers and abundant crops. Like every other country, it has its advantages and disadvantages, its bad people and its good ones. And like most other countries, the good are in the majority.

The interests of Canada and the United States are so interlocked that they are inseparable. Though living under different governments and paying allegiance to different flags, we are the same people and we must work together, not only to advance our common interests, but to make a common contribution to the good of mankind.

Toronto. CALVIN J. FELTON.

DR. HARPER'S BUDGET SYSTEM.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

Complying with your request for an open discussion of Dr. Harper's plan for financing the Christian Church, I wish to submit the following. For some time I have been wondering what we would do to finance our cause when our Men and Millions drive should close.

We must have some plan or method whereby we can support, nourish and strengthen the good work we have put our hands to in the name of the Lord.

We have in the last few years made much progress. We have enlarged our borders, lengthened our cords and strengthened our stakes, as we believe in harmony with the Lord's promptings. We must not, we cannot, allow any retrenchment. Therefore, something definite must be done to maintain and advance our cause. I believe Dr. Harper's budget system is a good one. To my mind it is fair, considerate and systematic. He has suggested a board be elected and a budget secretary be chosen by the General Convention, which is our highest authority. He also suggests that each regional Convention, each Conference, and each Church, though the most lowly and the weakest in our midst, be vested with the same power. The regional Convention, each Conference and the local Church having received their budgets outlined from their authoritative source, have the right to accept, modify or reject the plan therein specified. I cannot conceive of anything fairer, more legitimate than this. Therefore, I readily, heartily and gladly approve of Dr. Harper's budget system until some other of our worthy leaders be able, can and will, suggest and offer a better plan or system.

Portsmouth, Va. M. W. HOLLOWELL.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

We are hearing much now of Christian Education. Evidently a man by the name of Kennedy had a mental grasp of the term when he recently addressed the Student Volunteer Convention at Indianapolis, if the papers quote him correctly. His words remind us of those by the wise man, Proverbs 1: 7, of which we need to be reminded in these days, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." This man Kennedy is reported as saying: "Religion and worship are the heart of knowledge. The search for truth is as much a matter of heart and character as it is of brain activity. Men are not rational by nature. The conduct of men in the past decade has been savagely irrational. It is because we want men to think that we ask them to worship."

At the heart of all education and going before all education is, or should be, worship. Power to reason logically and convincingly will do us little good unless our reasoning is tempered with a sympathetic heart, a benevolent, a moral, a spiritual attitude. J. O. Atkinson.

A MULTIPLICATION TABLE FOR CHRIST.

Mrs. E. C. Cronk says: "If you cannot go to the foreign field in person, do not feel that the door is closed to you. God may be keeping you at home as a unit in order to send you out as a multiplication table. Multiply the efforts of your life by training a whole Sunday School, by quickening the interest of a whole missionary society, by leading a mission study class. The doors we would enter in foreign lands, we cannot because we fail so utterly in getting the people here to realize their part of the work."

Another writer adds the following: "Years ago a woman in a little Western town volunteered for missionary work. Her age and lack of education made it impossible for her to be accepted. Sewing by the day to support herself and her mother, she has yet found time for a large service. Missionary stories told a Sunday School class, a monthly missionary program in the Epworth League, lessons on missionary giving, and mission study classes have all come as an expression of her missionary spirit." J. O. A.

SUFFICIENT MISSIONARY LIFE IN THE HOME LAND.

Many, many people, professed Christians, still say there is sufficient work in the field of missions at home. When we shall have converted the folks at home, it will be time to try to convert those in non-Christian countries. These who say this do not consider, surely, the fields of service and the opportunity afforded in those fields. Mr. Sherwood Eddy puts it this way: "Remember, that of every four thousand Christians, three thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine are remaining in this country; that of every thousand of our Christian young people who are most free to go, nine hundred and ninety-nine are staying at home; that of even those who are specially fitted by a college training to go, more than twenty-nine of every hundred are staying in this country; and that, though we have so many thousands of Christian laymen pouring from our colleges to meet the needs at home, sixty-four of every sixty-five of even our ordained ministers are staying in this Christian country. . * Jesus taught to leave the ninety and nine in the fold and go out to the wilderness and find the one; but we leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness and crowd to the fold to feed the one."

In the United States there is one Protestant minister for every five hundred and thirty-five persons, one Christian worker for eighty-seven, and one communicant for four. Abroad, counting missionaries of all classes and missionaries' wives, Africa has one for each 24,000 population, Japan one for each 52,000, India one for each 62,000, and China one for 65,000. According to the most conservative estimate, there are at least 160,000,000 people of the non-Christian world utterly untouched by missionary effort. These figures do not include the people of localities—and there are many such—where there are merely not enough missionaries to handle the work; it includes only those people living in the areas where there are no missionaries at all.

J. O. Atkinson.

THE REASON OF OUR SLOW GROWTH

The writer has often contended emphatically and knowingly, that the one reason of our slow growth as a people was because of the meagre support and little heed we have given to missions. He knew he had history and the Bible and the words of Christ to sustain his argument, but he had not fully comprehended the situation until a speaker on missions revealed this to him recently. In a great address by a distinguished Canadian, this sentence was used: " If we do the harder task it will then be easy to do the lighter task." Now is not that plain enough? The harder task is out yonder. It is more difficult to reach and to convert the heathen than it is those close at home and in Christian lands. We Christians have been content with undertaking the light job, the easy task, in Christ's name. We have forgotten or failed to remember that Christianity grows by doing the harder task. Its most rapid growth has always been among the greatest difficulties. Her triumphs have always arisen from her trials. We have some how not given ourselves in full candor and earnestness to the trial of the harder task. As long as we are able to content ourselves with doing the light work and the easy task we shall not thrive nor prosper in our growth. It never has been God's way. When we undertake in His name to do the greater work and the harder task, then this easier shall go rapidly, lightly and readily. When we get ready to undertake in earnest to reach with the gospel in pagan lands, in the course of a year or a decade 100 000 souls for Christ, then in that year or decade God will give 200.000 souls at home. This is the Divine way of working. We might as well learn that our human way and will cannot carry against His way and will. From the beginning until now God never allowed a non-missionary people to grow strong and to increase in His might and majesty. It is reasonable to conclude He never will. He bids us undertake the difficult task, the harder thing. He will then quickly accomplish the lighter and easier task through us. J. O. Atkinson.

BUT THEY WILL NOT BELIEVE.

I am just in receipt of a personal letter from Miss Miriam Goodwin, who last August sailed for Japan to do work in Korea, as a missionary sent out by the Southern Baptist Mission Board. In this letter, which was never intended for print, are these words: "In regard to the needs of Korea, the half has never been told. I wish people at home would believe what the missionaries tell. As a rule they think it is too awful to believe. There are three things that I think touch me most; the utter ignorance of what Sunday means; the absolute lack of home life; and the pathetic condition of the women here. As we walk through the streets on our way to the tiny church where the little handful of Christians has gathered, we see no difference between Christmas or Sunday and any other day. Most of the conditions cannot be exaggerated. I only ask that you include our work in your prayers. I imagine the need for more workers is as great in other missions as it is in ours. We could easily use several more workers right here in this station."

But the people will not believe what the missionaries tell us. The Mission Secretary has sometimes been accused of exaggerating conditions on the mission field, where the saving power of our Christ is neither felt nor known. His reply has always been that where Jesus is unknown, moral and spiritual conditions cannot be exaggerated. They are worse than can be told. Christ is the world's Saviour and Redeemer; and while sin abounds in countries where he is taught and known, it abounds more exceedingly and abundantly and beyond all powers to describe, where he is neither preached nor known. This is why it is urgent that we who know Him, shall carry the gospel of Him to peoples who know Him not. One of the ways that Satan himself uses in preventing the spread of the Gospel is that of making people think that conditions are not so bad as represented in lands and places that know not Jesus. With Miss Goodwin, we exclaim, Oh! if the people who call themselves Christians would believe what the missionaries tell them. J. O. Atkinson.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A CHANCE— AND THEY WILL NOT BE SELFISH CHRISTIANS.

Frederica Beard says, and truly: "There is a growing realization that if children are to be trained as Christians in our Sunday Schools, it is impossible to omit the missionary element; that this is the heart of the Christian spirit, and that in the broad sense of the word a Christian and a missionary are one and the same." For how can one be a Christian who is unwilling to obey our Lord's final and supreme command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

The late John Franklin Goucher wrote: "Contributions to the expenses of the Sunday School by those who are to receive the direct benefits of their own gifts are not acts of benevolence. In fact, for the Church to pay the expense of its own Sunday School is no more an act of benevolence than it is for a father to pay his family's living or educational expenses. For the child to be taught to give primarily to anything which centers in himself, or to anything in which his personal relation is the determining factor, or to give simply to relieve his Church of its duty to give, rather than to supplement the giving of the Church, that it may enlarge its work, is to strengthen the principles of selfishness. The Church should provide for the expense of its own Sunday School, and let the children and youth have the culture, influence, the character-developing privilege of contributing to the world's evangelization."

What do you think of a Sunday School that will not even give one offering a month for the spread of the gospel, but spends all its offerings on itself?

Should not every school give at least as many of its offerings per month to others as it spends on itself?

The reason why a Church is missionary is because it has taught its youth in Sunday School to be missionary.

Thank God this Christian Church of ours has made a beginning, for the Sunday Schools in the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention contributed to missions in 1923, through a monthly offering for that purpose, $5,348.50, and most of these schools had a talk or paper on missions at least once a month. And not one of these schools is poorer for the offering.

The only hope of making our Church missionary is to get its Sunday Schools to hear about missions and then give to missions. Reader, is your Church, your Sunday School, doing thi?

J. O. Atkinson.

A GREAT CONFERENCE

The writer was permitted, by the invitation of our General Mission Board, to attend the North American Missionary Conference, which convened at Atlantic City, January 8th to 11th, inclusive. In this Conference, one is aware of the presence of men and women who are not only interested in world problems, but are grappling intelligently with them. If the Congress of the United States could and would discuss these problems with as much intelligence as one sees displayed in the Foreign Missions Conference, it would not be long till our government and the other governments would be on the sure and safe road to world peace. Having attended previous Conferences, we have given the readers of this paper in previous years what we thought, and felt, and learned while in the Conference. A different course is persued this year, and in a few instalments we will transcribe from our notebook that which speakers on the floor said in their own words. There will be lack of connection, since the writer does not take short-hand. However, the salient points and outstanding thoughts of the Conference will be presented.

First Session.

(Tuesday Night, January 8th.)

Address by Dr. Wm. I. Chamberlain, "Outstanding Problems of Foreign Missions." The first problem is the preparation of the message and the messenger. Every institution is to be judged by its power to realize its ideals. A bank is not being judged by its power to produce poets, nor a mill by its power to produce painters. Both may have poets and painters in their employ. The Church is to be judged by its power to produce disciples. Redeeming men and making them disciples of Christ is the high aim of the Church. The Church is and must be judged by its success as a redemptive agency.

Victor Hugo said there was one thing stronger than an army, and that was an idea which has come to its time. In times of economic and political chaos and distress, we have the strongest expression of the spiritual. The Book of Revelation was written in the darkest time of political history. Yet that book is aflame with spiritual force, vigor and a note of triumph. The darkest periods of political distress, and of economic despair or upheaval, occasion the arrival of great spiritual light and expression. In the seething caldron, the overflow and the outgo, something remains.

The greatest need today is (1st) a deepened sense of the reality of the Almighty and Transcendant God; (2nd) our discovery that God is dependent upon our explorations for Him and in His name. The deepest ground of our missionary message is not based on the great commission, but on the nature and being of God. If there be any God for me, and there is, then He is the God of all men. Two infinites would be mutually exclusive. There can be but one Infinite and Omnipotent God.

God, in announcing who He was to Moses, said, Tell the Children of Israel "I am." In that simple enunciation there is unity, personality, eternity, characteristics of the true and loving God.

God moves toward men rather than man toward God. God is seeking now; He has ever been seeking to reveal Himself to man. There is more in revelation than in discovery. Through Jesus Christ, God is revealed in a person. Christ stands supreme today as the Word made flesh—even the Word of God as it speaks to man and endeavors to find and reach man.

(3rd) A third and great need is the discovery of the indestructability of truth. Great spiritual truths are absolute and complete. Christianity is not an experiment; it is an experience. Neither is it an abstraction nor a syllogism. It is a definite, vital experience. "Religious education is to serve the divine and rest in it."

Jesus Christ is the herald of God. He alone of all men lived in the full light of the unseen and invisible. A man somewhere relates that he was condemned to hell and was on his way there. But in the darkness of his journey he stumbled over the heart of God and fell into heaven. The outstanding problem of the missionary today is to lead men and women to stumble over the heart of God—that they may fall into heaven.

Dr. Endicott: "Outstanding Problems on the Mission Fields."

There are great areas of folk who have been robbed of their rightful privilege to know God. What greater curse can come to any people than to be born in paganism? And yet there are great areas of people, millions, untouched with the opportunity of knowing the true God and His Christ. We disguise the great need by placing one or two missionaries in an area where a thousand could be used and could not then do the work. Then there are areas within areas which have not been touched—as Islam. "Master, we have toiled all the night, yet at Thy command we let down the net."

What is the trouble? Can we mediate the gospel to Islam? We cannot issue an ultimatum to Islam to accept Christ. Maybe we have not yet learned the secret of our religion. Can Jesus reach them? Then, can't we? Yet, after all our preaching to Islam, we have not reached them.

Then, what about conditions in the University of Tokyo? About 98 per cent of the students there are agnostics or atheists. What matters it that we are increasing 2,000 a day in our Christian forces in this country! Have we a task yonder we cannot do for Christ? If we do the harder task it will be easy to do the lighter task. The harder task is out yonder in pagan lands. Until we learn to do the harder tasks for Christ, even the easy ones will remain difficult and hard.

Chinese are saying we Christians have carried into our Churches our ideas of government. Has God given the order for His people to divide up in China? Dividing up areas into denomination districts only delayed and enlarged the difficulty. Christianity only religion preaching unity and fail to practice it. Buddhism, Mohammedism, etc., preached unity and practice it. But Christianity that spoke of unity does not practice union.

One hundred and twenty different mission boards. Explain this to Chinese. Is there a reason why I should carry China the news that I am with the Presbyterian, M. E., etc.? If we could solve this problem of unity, many others would solve themselves. When we speak of Christ we speak with authority. One reason why we get no more results out yonder is because of the multiplication of denominations. We have many denominations here. One wishes we could keep them here and not export them—or that which helps to make or keep them alive.

J. O. Atkinson.

(To be Continued.)

STUDENT ATTENDANCE DISCOUNTED.

A man, the Rev. Frank E. Burkhalter, writing in a Baptist paper, says that of the 93,000 Baptist students attending the Baptist and State colleges in the South last year, fully 60,000 of them did not attend Church. He makes this statement on the authority of Frank H. Leavell, who is the executive secretary of the Interboard Commission on Student Activities, and he made this statement, we are told, after he had made a thorough survey of this situation. That is a strange proceeding, now, isn't it? Again we ask: What is at the bottom of this situation? We believe it is due to the shallow work of our teachers and preachers in giving the people the truth. Shallow work will not do. It is said that the farmer who knows how and does plow deep, gets the best results. We believe a great deal of the present conditions of Christian experience is due to shallow work on the part of the teacher and the preacher. Brethren, beyond all question, the present heart and spiritual conditions of a vast number of people is due to the character of the teaching and preaching of the truth. If we want a more viril experience, and therefore a stronger Church, spiritually speaking, we must feed the people on stronger food, and the feeding must be done with a stronger heart—life. No ordinary or indifferent work will produce such results spiritually as we are looking for. It is no use to blame us for stating the case, unless you can show that we misrepresent the facts. Just think of it—nearly two-thirds of the students sent out from Baptist homes in this land of ours did not attend Church during the year 1923. That alone tells a story that is enough to make the Churches in this country ashamed to life up its face in the presence of truth. How is this state of things to be remedied? It is hard to say, except we must feed them on stronger truth and lead them in the Lord's way. This state of things is not true only with our Baptist brethren, but we can find an intimation of the same tendency in our own college at Elon. Here the students were required to attend Church services on Sunday. Some did not think it was necessary to require them to attend religious services on Sunday—that they would do so without being required. This has been proven to be a mistake. Since the burning of the administration building, January 18, 1923, for the lack of proper accommodations, they have been unable to require Church attendance, and the facts, so I am told by good authority, show that a large per cent of the students do not attend Sunday services. So we are afraid, if the facts were accurately given, we should be compelled to take a stand with our Baptist brethren as to the attendance of college students on religious services on the Sabbath. Brethren, there is no use in disputing the matter; there is something "out of whack" in our religious teaching. We may be orthodox, but we do not give the truth out to the people in the power of the Holy Spirit, and even though we be orthodox, we are lacking in power. Somebody has said that evangelicalism is the truth on ice, but evangelism is the truth on fire. That makes a big difference in our work—a difference we ought to recognize, and try, by the help of God, to seek to give the truth to the people, not on ice, but let us seek to give it to them all aflame with the fire of God. This would make a wonderful difference in the effect the truth will have upon the hearts of the people. Let us try it; it will pay compound interest at a high rate and be the means of giving the Church power, such as she cannot have under existing circumstances. The Church and its ministry need to wake up and get to their work under the power of the Holy Spirit, for then we shall see our young people faithful and loyal to their profession as Christians. So may it be for us all.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

February 10, 1924.

Subject: "The Failure at Kadesh."

Golden Text: Jehovah is with us; fear them not.—Num. 14:9.

Lesson: Num. 13:17-14:45; Deut. 1:26-40.

Devotional Reading: Rom. 8:31-39.

The children of Israel spent about a year at Sinai. They had to learn that great principles must be applied to the every-day facts of life. Hence, we have all the detailed laws regarding food, clothing, worship—everything that concerned life. Regardless of what we think about the efficacy of these laws now, they had a large place in God's plan for His chosen people, and the year at Sinai was well spent.

And then they moved on to Kadesh. This place was on the southern border of Canaan, about fifty miles from Beersheba. It was an attractive oasis in the desert, and was a strategic point, for a journey of seventy-five or one hundred miles, over a country that offered no strong, natural barriers, would bring the minto the heart of Canaan. Canaan—the land of their dreams! Canaan, with its fertile fields and its perennial spring! Canaan, the land of their hopes! What a thrill they must have had as they saw the promised land, not afar off, but actually at their feet. It would seem that all that remained for them to do was to go in and claim the land that flowed with milk and honey for their own. And this they made ready to do.

Moses sent out twelve men "to spy out the land of Canaan," and told them to "see the land, what it is, and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, many or few; and what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strongholds. And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein or not." They were "to be of good courage, and to bring of the fruit of the land." Like any wise leader, he wanted to know what problems confronted his people. The Lord's work puts no discount on common sense.

The spies did as they were told. And when they returned with first-hand information and concrete illustrations, they made their report. Ten of them said that it was truly a land that floweth with milk and honey, a land greatly to be desired. "Nevertheless," said they, "the cities were walled," and "there were giants there," giants so large that they felt like grasshoppers in their sight. No, "we be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we." Thus read the majority report.

But there was a minority report. It was returned by only two men. By a strange coincidence it agreed almost word for word with the majority report, except for one thing. It reported the "goodness of the land" and also "the walled cities and the giants." In "findings," it was the same;the difference was in the recommendations. Whereas, the ten men said, "we are not able to go up against the people," the two men said, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." The ten men had seen the difficulty in the opportunity; the two men had seen the opportunity in the difficulty. The ten men had counted up only human resources; the two men h adadded to human resources the divine resources. As men of vision and faith, they had seen that they that were for them were more than they that were against them. And they taught to men of all time that "genuine seeing is not so much a matter of eye-sight as of insight."

The majority report was adopted. There was then—and there is now—magic in numbers. People still follow the crowd. But then, as now, the majority is not always right. An appeal to the masses as to the respective merit of "Jazz" and "Bethooven" would corroborate this statement. It was only a little over eleven days from Sinai to Canaan by way of Caleb and Joshua; it was nearly forty years by way of the majority. Blind leaders of the blind.

There is a touch of the pathetic in the lesson. When the people mourn, and rebel against Moses, as was his custom, he went unto the Lord. His appeal is as touching as it is eloquent, and every Christian worker should read it for its revelation of the heart of a man who loved his people. In the heart of this man of God we find the spirit of the Good Shepherd, who layeth down His life for the sheep.

Teaching Points.

1. Foresight has a legitimate place in God's work.
2. They can who think they can.
3. Argument should be weighed, not counted.
4. Not "Can I make it succeed?" but "Is it God's will that I undertake it?"
5. Crises are opportunities.
6. People often retreat when religion becomes too costly.
7. "Pray not for tasks equal to your powers, but pray for powers equal to your tasks."
8. Followers of Christ should give a good report of the land.
9. The men who enter the promised land are the men who see things in the light of God.
10. Encouragement comes not from minimizing foes, but from magnifying allies.
11. Religion would fare badly if there were not a few men and women of faith.
12. A good test of manhood is to be found in the response which it makes to the difficult.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

February 10, 1924.

Topic: In His steps. II. How and what Jesus taught.—Matt. 5:1-12, 11:3, 13:3.

They called Him "Rabbi," that is "Teacher." And they did well, for such He was. In fact, so great a teacher was He that He is known as "The Great Teacher" or "The Mastrr Teacher," and today, after nineteen centuries, all of our sound educational programs are based on the principles which Jesus used in His teaching. We talk much about modern education, psychology and pedagogy, but as a matter of fact we are simply discovering or applying the methods which the Master Teacher used in Galillee nearly two thousand years ago. When we remember the fact that Jesus never had any special training in a "normal school," nor took "a summer school course," we stand in awe, or rather bow in reverence, and say with the centurion, "Truly this man was the Son of God." And then if we are wise, we will sit at His feet and learn of Him.

Jesus was a great teacher because of His intimate knowledge of God, and of man, and because of His ability to employ all known literary devices in presenting the truth as He knew it. Parable, metaphor, simile, question, paradox, hyperbole, proverb—all find a place in His teaching. And, in addition to a deep earnestness, there was also satire, irony and humor. He who would be a great teacher should study the methods of the Great Teacher.

I. How Jesus Taught.

1. Informally. He did not have a school; He simply gathered a group about Him, or taught them as they resorted to Him by the lake, on the road, on the mountainside.
2. Simply and directly. He put great truths in simple language.
3. Concretely. He taught them in parables—that is, in pictures.
4. Earnestly. There was always an earnestness and a passion about His teaching. And this earnestness gave His teaching power.
5. Positively and not negatively. Jesus said, "Thou shalt!" He invoked faith, rather than talking about doubts.
6. Helpfully. Jesus always had in mind to help men.
7. Authoritatively. He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees. But it wa snot dogmatism; it was conviction born out of personal experience.
8. By example. Jesus lived what He taught.

II. What Jesus Taught.

1. About God.
He was all-powerful.
He was the Father.
He loved men.
He would forgive men who were penitent.
He was a Spirit.
He was holy.
2. About Himself. He was the Son of God, the Friend of sinners, the revelation of God, the revelation of man, the center and circumference of man's spiritual life, the Saviour of the world.
3. About Man. He is a son of God, capable with God, made for eternal life.
of infinite possibilities, created for fellowship with God, made for eternal life with God, a brother of all other men, and instrument through which carries out His will in the world.
4. About religion. An essential of a good life, pre-eminently a matter of personal relationships, a spiritual and not a formal thing, a force that should affect every phase of life.
5. About life. It was good, a measure to be filled and not a cup to be drained, does not consist in the abundance of things which a man possesseth, to be used for the glory of God.

"There are many other things which Jesus did, and taught, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."—John 21:25.

FIVE GREAT DAYS—FOR FIVE GREAT REASONS.

By Lucy M. Eldredge.

Just as the old year closed, and 1924 began, a host of young people, more than 6,000 strong, spent five great days at Indianapolis. These days, in the great Student Volunteer Convention, were days never to be forgotten. The real story of the gathering cannot be written now. It will only be fully recorded as lives are lived. The power of the Indianapolis Convention will be revealed in all corners of the world. This is true for five outstanding reasons. Five simple words may sum up the experiences of those five days.

Worship.

The spirit of Jesus Christ was there. From the moment when the youth from many lands first joined in "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" and "Our Father," until of one accord they joined in "Blest be the Tie that Binds," after the last benediction, there was a spirit of worship. The great Cadle Auditorium, filled to its limit, was quiet as men and women bowed to really pray together. The great hymns of the Church, rich in melody, association and meaning, expressed the desires of those gathered there. A period of united intercession was a feature of every session. Each night the "Morning Watch" cards were distributed, and all urged to join in this morning period of personal devotion. A desire for continued intimate fellowship with the Father, and comradeship with Jesus Christ was created at Indianapolis in these worship periods. Here is found the real secret of the power generated, of the birth of new resolutions, and of the strengthening of many lives.

Example.

Thirty-seven years ago, the Student Volunteer Movement was born in the consecrated hearts of students like John R. Mott, Robert P. Wilder, Robert E. Speer and others. To their vision expressed in the watchword of the movement, "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation," they have given their lives. Their presence and their addresses to the convention were living messages of God's power in consecrated lives, and through men surrendered to Him. Their challenge rang true because of their own lives.

Men and women from all lands were an inspiration. They had come because they had heard the story of Jesus. They had felt His power in their own lives, and wished their people to share the blessed story. One could not listen to Dr. Y. Y. Tsue and Dr. Chung and L. K. Chang, to Dr. King and Dr. Aggrey with their messages from the black man's point of view; to Dr. Keller who had traveled 5,000 miles to bear Europe's story; to Prof. Osuano, of Mexico, and Rev. A. Thaker Dass, of India; to the missionaries like Dr. Paul Harrison, of Arabia, and Kingsley Birge, of the Near East—without feeling that their lives had been in touch with God. You just knew they were "saved to serve." And you wanted to share their vision and their task. Living examples like these inspired the youth in Indianapolis to "Go and do likewise."

Information.

A great exhibit aided the program in furnishing gripping information. This information revealed first knowledge from God's Word from Canon Woods in great messages concerning what we believe about God, about sin and the cross, about the kingdom of God, about power. The delegates came first to know God. Every national representative brought startling facts about the needs of his land. Dr. Speer and Sherwood Eddy just back from wide travels, brought news of a world which is dissatisfied and eager for something better. Four great basic problems were discussed from the platform and in smaller groups, and portrayed on the posters of the exhibit: the race problem, industrial conditions and problems, the Christian student's attitude toward war and the youth movements in various lands. The information given made people think. The knowledge imparted carried with it a challenge to thought and action. It was information which would lead to the transformation of lives and the reformation of the world.

Association.

Indianapolis brought the young people of our Church together. They came from Defiance and Palmer, from Union and Elon, to know each other better, and to interpret their college life. On Sunday afternoon, in the denominational rally, a group of fifty or sixty gathered to hear from the colleges and words of counsel from mission leaders of the Christian Church. Monday night the group came together again to discuss informally the real vital meaning of the convention. In the hotel, informal group meetings for discussion and prayer were held daily. These are some of the young people upon whom our Church must depend to make its missionary progress. How fine for them to come to know each other under such inspiring conditions! And also profitable and pleasant was the association with State groups, with returned missionaries, with foreign students, and with many others of kindred purposes and desires.

Optimism.

Great problems were faced, but without discouragement. Needy situations were presented, but always with the challenge and possibility to relieve them. A world in chaos, but with a great hope, was pictured. It was a happy crowd which thronged daily three times to the Cadle Auditorium. Doors were shut at the opening hour, but few were left on the outside. They had come to Indianapolis for a purpose, and they were interested and eager to fulfill that purpose. It was a picked group from many institutions and lands ready, as Dr. Judd said in opening, to "seek for the Jesus-way out" of the problems before them. They were joyfully looking to a future in which they could play a helpful part. They had faith in the power of Jesus Christ. The older leaders were hopeful, as well, as they faced again and this vast sea of youth with such possibilities and talent and consecration. They trusted the youth of this generation with their challenge, feeling that they could be counted upon.

The Indianapolis convention closed on the first day of this year. It closed with Arthur Rugh's challenge to students to go back to their campuses as changed men and women to stir other lives. It closed with Sherwood Eddy's challenge still ringing clear as he called: "1-9-2-4! Those are your signals. For God's sake, do not fail us now!" It closed with students still pondering over John R. Mott's great message. It closed with Jesus Christ both the conscience and the will of the convention. Formally, the convention ended, but it cannot really ever end. Under God, it was a convention for all time, as young lives were consecrated to the program of His kingdom. In changed lives, shall the record of the Indianapolis convention be written as it is lived.

Erie, Pa.

ELON COLLEGE DOINGS.

Yesterday was fittingly observed as "Greater Elon Day" on the campus, a date that will be made an annual feature of the college calendar. One year ago the heart of Elon College was destroyed by fire, and today five buildings have raised their walls where one stood before; and to commemorate the event, the college authorities have set January 18th aside as a holiday to be known as "Greater Elon Day."

The exercises of yesterday culminated in a banquet for the students and faculty and visiting friends in the college dining-hall at the dinner hour, and a debate with Emory and Henry College in the evening.

The question under fire in the debate was: "Resolved, That the Defeated Bonus Measure for World War Veterans Should be Passed." A two-to-one decision from the judges—J. H. Harden and J. L. Scott, of Burlington, and W. S. Crawford, of Mebane—defeated the soldiers' bonus measure and gave the victory to the negative team represented by P. J. Viall and F. M. Matthews, of Emory and Henry College. G. C. Mann and O. C. Johnson represented the affirmative argument for Elon.

The affirmative attempted to prove that the soldiers' bonus was not a gift, but only adjusted compensation of a just debt long overdue; that veterans from other wars and other nations were paid adjusted compensation; and that the present stable condition of the government justified the measure without further taxation.

To offset this, the negative team brought forward the facts that the bill made no practicable plan for payment of this money; that this enormous amount put into circulation at once would raise commodity prices; and that a bonus was against the principle of a democracy and would injure the high standard of appreciation of patriotism and citizenship.

During the course of the special dinner, a very appropriate program was carried out under the direction of Dean Savage. W. T. Scott spoke of the dark outlook on January 18, 1923, which had on January 18, 1924, changed to one of light and hope. During the twelve months between those dates he brought out the fact that the endowment of the college had been increased $100,000; that $400,000 had been raised for new buildings and equipment; and that a finer spirit of co-operation had been developed between the college and the constituency of the Church denomination.

W. B. Terrell followed with a toast to the present head of Elon College, Dr. W. A. Harper, and spoke of his leading activity in the campaign that had been waged throughout the State and nation for rebuilding Elon. To him, Mr. Terrell attributed the material prosperity that had been Elon's good fortune in the past twelve months.

Dr. W. S. Long, founder and first president of the college, journeyed up from his home at Chapel Hill to be at the college on this memorial day. President Harper, in a short address, told something of the sacrifice and labor Dr. Long had devoted to the college in its early days.

Music was furnished by a quartet of students —Misses Mary Lee Foster and Della Cotten, and Leon Watson and Gordon Grymes, with Miss Madge Moffitt as accompanist, who rendered pleasingly one of the college songs.

Dr. Long spoke briefly of his appreciation of the progress of the college and of his deep interest in all that occurred here.

C. M. Cannon.

The battle over the Bible goes on, and while the Lord our God is in charge of things in this world, that battle will likely go on until it is finished, and we hope it will, for the Bible is worth fighting for. Let us not be driven by some false idea to abandon the defense of the Word of God. On the God-ward side, the Bible is perfectly safe—the hands of its enemies cannot touch it—but on the human side, we must give attention to this battle, and for the reason that there are so many men and women who may lose out in the divine life if we do not see that the truth is kept before them inviolate. The Bible, in its purity and power, is the need of every living soul. Let us do our best to see that the great Book is kept before the people for their benefit in finding the way back to God. The Bible is the greatest Book known to man.

There is one good sign of the times—the fact that lynching is on the decrease. During last year there were twenty-eight lynchings in the United States, and that is twenty-eight too many, but it is twenty-nine less than last year.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

PRAYING AND LIVING.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Prov. 23:7.

If prayer is "desire of the heart," as we understand it is, and the heart is made up of and engrossed in thought, in the last analysis then, our thoughts are prayers. It is true that our thoughts determine our characters; therefore, it is through thought of God, that we shall know Him and attain His character. Christ Himself has set us the supreme example of this. While He was praying often and long, it was not how much He prayed, but it was the quality of His prayers. Listen how He talked to the Father in this chapter. The very loftiest of ideals seem to be born into His life as He speaks, and an indomitable will power is bestowed upon Him to carry out His plans.

Isn't this true of us—the loftiest ideals come to us when we are offering our sincerest prayers; and our most powerful determination comes when we thus dwell with Him? Then pray. Don't neglect it, for out of it will come your greatest service and joy in life. Pray, for by it you pass into your richest personality. Pray, for of it comes the greatest sanctity of life. Pray, for from it will blossom the flowers of lovingkindness and the fruit of greatest usefulness in life. "For their sakes," said Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—Our Father, as little children look to their father for the answer to the questions of life, and for their help in life, help us, as Thy children, to look to Thee for the love that never faileth, for the faith that is enduring and reaches heaven and takes us clear through. Forbid that we shall waver from this in all our living. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE BUILDER.

"Others have labored, and ye are entered into their labors."—John 4:35-38.

Jesus is discoursing on the place of service in the kingdom of God. He tells the disciples that personal and well-directed effort is necessary. Christianity is more than a mystical religion; it is social, active and aggressive. There is reaping to do for today and sowing to do for the future. The word "labor" has been a term of derision in the past; Jesus lifts it into spiritual meaning.

"Others have labored." Yes, we are all debtors to the past. Others have toiled and suffered for us. Our existence, our liberties and our religion all are the result of the work of others. There is a oneness in the work. One soweth and another reapeth, but both are one in the cause. There is an invisible comradeship, and vast hosts of illustrious workers are with us as we toil. We have picked up their unfinished tasks and their ideals and must carry them on. Jesus did not say "ye have entered into their gifts and blessings." He said: "their labors." If we would take the harvest and all its blessings, we must also take the labors. We must leave something for the future workers to reap—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Unite our hearts and teach us the joy of the Christian faith when it is unsullied and unstained with jealousy or narrow definitions. Help us to gain new thoughts of Thee, and new love for one another, because of Thy love for us even when we were yet sinners. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JOY IN THE WORD OF GOD.

"The statutes of the Lord are right rejoicing the heart."—Ps. 19:8.

The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul.—Ps. 19:7.

Whoso keepeth the commandment (of the Lord) shall know no evil thing.—Prov. 13:9.

Great peace have they that love thy law; and nothing shall offend them.—Ps. 119:165.

Blessed are they who are perfect in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. * * * That do no unrighteousness.—Ps. 119:1-3.

His mouth talketh wisdom,
And his tongue speaketh justice.
The law of His God is in His heart,
None of his steps shall slide.—Ps. 37:30-31.

The light of the righteous rejoiceth. But the lamp of the wicked shall be put out.—Prov. 13:9.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for every day, so fresh and new with life, for every good thing we have, for Jesus who saves us completely and forgives us entirely of all of our sins. We thank Thee for the rich joy of Thy word. Grant us increasing joy in it, and forbid that we shall neglect it at any time. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A SPIRITUALIZED MIND.

(Read Dan. 10:7-12.)

Daniel had a vision and saw things of God which nobody else ever saw. Stephen, when stoned to death, saw glories on the other side which others had no conception of. When Paul was converted on the road to Damascus, he heard a voice and saw a vision of his Master which were not revealed to others. Such things have not ceased to be to the few or the many who have the spiritual mind and put themselves in a position of revelation.

A young friend, not long ago, when passing from the earthly to the heavenly, did so with calmness and greatest deliberation, and for several days before he breathed his last, even up to his last moment, he saw heavenly things in the kingdom above and was able to tell his parents about it before he left them. Many such experiences have come to the observation of the writer, and no doubt to you. How is it?

Some have said that certain ones have been endowed with spiritual gifts more than others. This can't be so. Those who have spiritual gifts are those who have cultivated them, and thus received the endowment, and if they see things that we do not see, that is the reason. We have no doubt been negligent and have dwarfed our spiritual powers. Spiritual faculties can be trained until we can see as Daniel, as Stephen, as Paul, as John on Patmos, and as my friend.

Prayer.—Our Father, this hour we lift our hearts at the altar of our souls and pray for a will to resign our whole being to the daily habit of listening to spiritual things, cultivating and training our spirits unto Thy spirit lift, that the glories of heaven, as far as Thou wouldst have them, may come to the earth. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GOD'S VISITS AND SEEING HIM.

"Thou knowest not the time of Thy visitation."—Luke 19:44.

God visits us in opportunity. The dawn of opportunity is the unveiling of His presence. When the door opens upon the way of sacrifice and enlargement, He is there! No longer does He visit us in bodily form; He comes in the form of circumstance. He speaks to us in the voice of events. We may behold His comings and goings in the movements of our day. We may see Him in a tendency, we may hear Him in a challenge, we may find Him in the midst of upheaval and unrest. He comes to us in the brightness of some glorious hope, being "clothed with light as with a garment"; and He comes to us in the shadow of some chilling disappointment, visiting us "in the night seasons."

It is, therefore, a fine attainment in grace to be able so to interpret events as to discern the presence of the Lord. We are advancing in the school of the Spirit when we know the time of His visitation.

To recognize the divine visitation, and to discern the visitor! To know Him as He comes to the door! "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." How may we know His knock? "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." "With what measure ye hear it shall be measured to you again." We need the consecrated ear, and the ear is sanctified in the consecrated heart. When the heart is sanctified all the senses are awake to the presence of the Lord. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

SATURDAY.

THE WORSHIPING SPIRIT.

"Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness."—Psa. 29:1-2.

Atmosphere is hard to define, even though it is something of which every one is conscious. We know we are glad to be in some places, and glad to be out of others. It is a certain indefinable air of cleanliness, comfort, beauty and home-likeness that makes us love one spot above another, and makes us return to it from time to time with special pleasure. How is it in the Church in which you worship? Does the sweetness of the place hold us? If it does, it is likely to hold others also.

A youth standing in silence on the shore of a lake, encircled by the forest trees and watching the moonlight on its surface, said: "Surely God must enjoy beautiful things, to put here this beauty, where for years no one has seen it but Himself." That is worship. That same youth sits in Church now, as a man. The tones of the great organ quiet him; the prayer of the minister makes him search his heart. Hymns and sermon make him feel that God needs his life in carrying on His great work in the world. That is true worship.

According to the strength of the desire, we bring to worship will be the amount and quality of the blessing we take away. Charles Dickens, on his first glimpse of it wrote to his wife: "It is such a beautiful place in which to worship God, you would shed tears to see it."—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

Prayer.—Our Father, though we be absorbed in business, day by day, prepare our hearts and minds for the calls of the Sabbath tomorrow, and let not business keep us from this, nor from the proper spirit for the Lord's day. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

When manna fell upon the earth to the children of Israel, it marked the Sabbath day, and we are told that for forty years after this it marked the separation of the weeks for them. The day after the manna was a day of rest and worship for them. It was after this that the law concerning the observance of the Sabbath was given. Associated with this law are a few things which reveal to us its meaning. The first is that we shall "keep it holy," "have no other God," "take not the name of the Lord in vain," "honor thy father and thy mother," "thou shalt not bear false witness," "thou shalt not stead," "teach these things diligently to thy children," and "all flesh shall come to worship before me" at "his foot-stool for He is holy."

Prayer.—O Almighty God, grant, we beseech Thee, that we may always place our trust under the shadow of Thy wings, that we may dedicate our lives and all those placed in our charge to this course. May we spend this day in cultivating this spirit in ourselves and all others with whom we may come in touch. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE HUGHES PLAN.

A year ago Mr. Hughes made a speech in which he suggested thatt he problem of reparation could be solved by having a disinterested committee, composed of the best business men of several countries, make a thorough investigation as to Germany's ability to pay and report their findings to the nations to which indemnity is to go. France would not hear to this for a long time, but at last she has agreed to go into such a conference with certain limitations. This conference is to be simply advisory and is to operate under the condition of the treaty which was signed after the armistice. France takes this position for two reasons. In the first place, she thinks she will secure a larger amount in this way, and in the second place, she does not want to invalidate the treaty agreed upon or weaken the authority of the League of Nations.

The total amount originally demanded of Germany was 130,000,000,000 gold marks, of which France was to receive 32,000,000,000. France some time ago agreed to reduce the amount coming to her to 26,000,000,000 gold marks, provided the nations to which she is indebted would relinquish all claim upon France.

When the amount of indemnity was first fixed, Mr. Wilson said $15,000,000,000 would be as much as Germany was able to pay. Lloyd George urged thatt he amount be made much larger, and at his insistence it was fixed at $130,000,000,000. Now, Mr. Lloyd George is saying that Germany is not able to pay the amount asked. It would see mthat he was playing politics when he stood for the larger sum, and is now greatly embarrassing the situation by pleading for a reduction. Had Mr. Wilson's suggestion been acted upon, we believe a much larger amount of the indemnity would have been paid before now, and the world would be a long way toward the peace which all the nations profess to desire.—Biblical Recorder.

A REJECTED CANDIDATE.

A young man applied to one of the British missionary societies for service in the foreign fields, but his medical examination showed he was unfit, much to his disappointment. "If, then, it is God's will for me that I must remain in this country in business, my business shall be the Lord's," he said, "and all the profits shall be devoted to His work."

He entered business life. His first year's profit was $300. This he sent to the mission board. The next year he sent $1,920; the third year $4,096; and the years that followed, $10,000, $12,000 and $14,000.

During six years this consecrated, sickly man paid $42,316 for the personal service abroad which he was not permitted to render.

The obligation to give the gospel to others is as universal as the privilege of receiving it. Why should not tens of thousands be willing to pay for a substitute at least if they cannot go, or invest as a minimum the tithe plus free-will offerings for the various benevolence causes.—Telescope.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Flu and pneumonia seem to have had a good inning at the Christian Orphanage for two weeks. We have had about fifteen cases of flu and six cases of pneumonia. One little boy was critically ill with pneumonia for a week. The doctor and those who were nursing him almost gave up hope for his recovery, but we are thankful to say that he is improving now and we have much encouragement as to his recovery. All the other cases we have are very much improved and will soon be out again.

When we have so many sick at one time and some critically ill, the responsibility of the work grows very heavy, but as they begin to recover and we feel they are out of danger we can feel the burden get lighter. They feel mighty close to you when you sit by the bedside of a little motherless child and look for every breath to be the last one and wonder if you have done all that could have been done for it and have been as tender in nursing it as a mother could have been, could she have been by their bedside. It is a responsibility, a task, a privilege and a duty. May God help us to be faithful.

Our January offerings have been good, and we will soon pass the first mile-post in our offerings for 1924. Twenty-seven thousand dollars to raise, twenty-seven mile-posts. Watch our total grow. If it grows too slow, mail us a check to make it grow. We want the Orphanage to grow and glow this year, and we want you to help make it so.

The following have been sent in since our last report: 1 box, no name; 12 pr. hose, 2 towels, 1 handkerchief, 1 box, Richmond, Va.; 12 pair little pants; Ladies' Aid Society, Arthur, Ill., 1 quilt, books and pictures; Mrs. S. W. Wright, Franklin, Ohio, suit case containing books, toys, gingham, etc.; Missionary Society, Pinqua, Ohio, 3 comforts; Jr. Christian Endeavor, Springboro, Pa., 1 quilt.

Chas. D. Johnston,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JANUARY 31, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$ 587.50
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Monticello	$ 1.00
Sanford	7.52
Durham	9.94
Burlington	56.60
Mt. Auburn	7.80
Liberty, Vance	3.14
New Elam	4.18
		90.18
Eastern Virginia Conference:
New Lebanon, Surry County	$ 5.00
Holy Neck	24.00
Mt. Zion	5.82
Elm Avenue, Portsmouth	2.35
		37.17
Valley of Virginia Conference:
Lineville		1.25
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Pisgah	$ 2.70
Rock Spring	1.00
		3.70
Northern Church.
Pleasant Hill, Ohio		5.35
Thanksgiving Offerings.
Bethlehem, Ala. Co., N. C.	$ 13.01
New Lebanon, Surry County	21.00
Ocean View, Norfolk, Va.	8.00
Merry Oaks, N. C.	7.00
Twentieth Century Class, Suffolk.	60.00
Oakland birthday offering	20.71
Sara E. Phelps, Marlow, N. H.	5.00
Y. P. M. S., Dover, Del.	5.00
Concord, N. C.	6.35
		146.07
Baby Home Fund.
T. F. Aysceue		20.00
Special Offerings.
Mrs. H. A. Culver	$ 30.00
G. L. Gwinn	10.00
Rent	15.00
		55.00
Grand total		$ 946.22

KINDS OF CHRISTIANS.

There are two classes of Christians—those who live chiefly by emotion, and those who live chiefly by faith. The first class—those who live chiefly by emotion—remind one of ships that move by the outward impulse of winds operating upon sails. They are often in a dead calm, often out of their course, and sometimes driven back. And it is only when the winds are fair and powerful that they move onward with rapidity. The other class—those who live chiefly by faith—remind one of the magnificent steamers which cross the Atlantic, which are moved by an interior and permanent principle, and which, setting at defiance all ordinary obstacles, advance steadily and swiftly to their destination, through calm and storm, through cloud and sunshine. "We live by faith," says the apostle. And those who learn so to live are stable, joyous and triumphant. It is the New Testament mode of life. Happy those who can say with the psalmist: "My heart is fixed, O God; my heart is fixed"; or, with the noble apostle, "The life that I now live in the flesh is by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."—Prof. Upham.

THOUGHTS FOR THINKING MEN AND WOMEN.

Many a supposed giant has turned out to be only a shadow.

All love asks is the privilege of doing its best.

A "green old age" is generally the proof that man has lived well.

When this new star appeared, these, the magi, were already gazing skyward. They were starwise long before. The revealing Light came to those who had eyes to see!—Rev. E. M. Cross.

We must remember that the earth itself is every now and then among the stars. Everything about us should partake of this uyward tendency.—H. Macmillan.

"Are we limiting God by asking for only what our small vision sees to be possible, or are we remembering that with God all things are possible—things that we cannot even think of?"

"Would we hear the message, we must at least be still; would we see the angel host, we must at least turn our eyes heavenward; would we find the Redeemer, we must at least seek the Child."

"So good it is for us that we cannot see into the future, and that under such conditions the dear Lord extends His hand to guide us through darkness and uncertainties. I am now wondering thus early in the New Year if this is to be an eventful year to me as the past several have been. The Father only knows, and I am sure He cares."—Indiana. To leave it all with the Father is the thing to do, especially when in faith and love we may leave it in His care.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society another beloved member, Mrs. Willie Harris Edwards, who departed this life December 25, 1923, aged 17 years; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we, in faith, humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who can make no mistakes, and record our appreciation of her Christian life, though short, and patient in suffering.

Second, That to the bereaved family, especially her faithful husband, we extend our heartfelt sympathy in her early passing, and commend the bruised and broken hearts to the Supreme Comforter.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the minutes of our Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. A. D. BRINKLEY,
MRS. B. D. CROCKER,
MRS. BURWELL RIDDICK, JR.,
Committee.

MORGAN.

Mrs. W. A. Morgan, Apex, Route 4, died very suddenly in her home December 24, 1923, at the age of 58 years 11 months and 6 days. She leaves a husband, two sons, W. A. and Leon D., of Apex, and two daughters, Mrs. A. B. Wilder, Raleigh, N. C., and Mrs. E. J. Castlebury, of Apex, Route 4. She was the daughter of the late William Goodwin, of Raleigh.

It was on Christmas Day that her funeral was held in Martha's Chapel Christian Church. She had been a faithful member of that Church for several years. Scores of relatives and hundreds of friends were there to pay last respects to all that was mortal of one of the most godly and most widely known and highly respected women of that community. She not only believed that with Christ is the word of life, but she sought to know His teachings and to be governed thereby.

"You and Mrs. Howard pray that we may be as true to God as mother was," is a quotation from a recent letter by one of her children.

B. J. HOWARD.

POND.

Catherine Lee Pond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Pond, was born March 19, 1914, and died December 13, 1923.

Called in the bloom of childhood,
Just in the prime of life;
Away from this world of sorrow,
To the land where all is bright.
In my heart a memory lingers,
Sweetly, tender, fond and true;
There is not a day that passes
That I do not think of you.

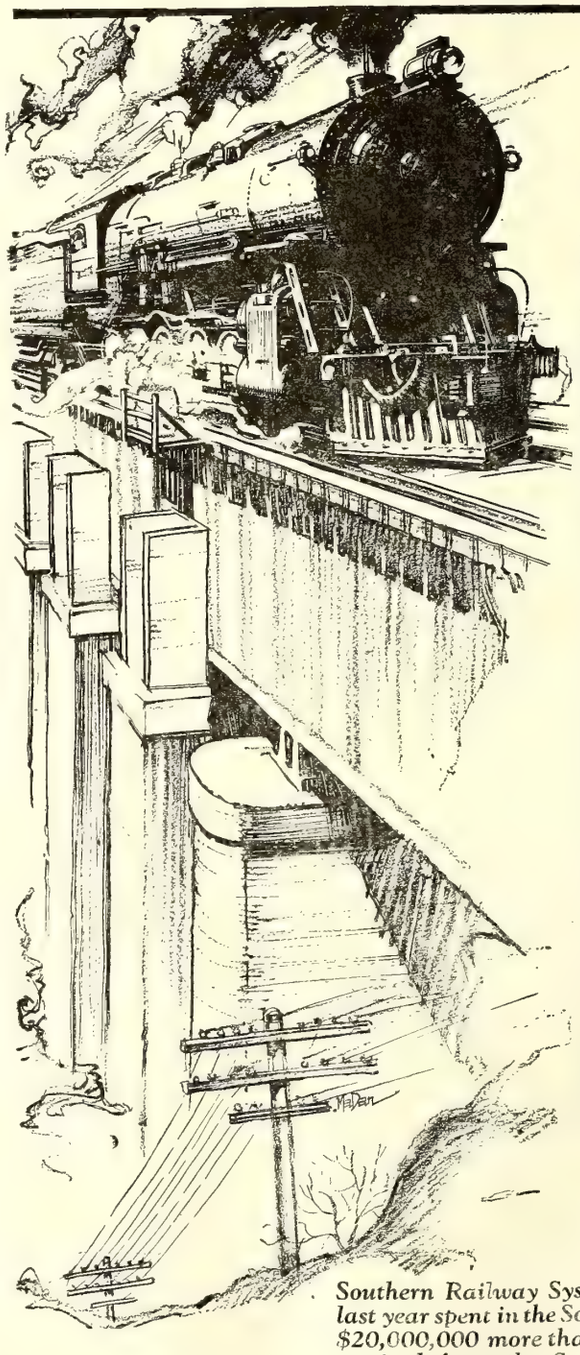
I miss you, dear Catherine; miss your sweet and loving smile, but we'll meet again in heaven, where no farewell tears are shed.

OLLIE B. WELLONS.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

DAVIS-WAGNER Business College
NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. CATALOGUE FREE.
114 W. MAIN STREET. NORFOLK, VA.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Keeping pace with the South

The first American locomotive to enter actual service was the "Best Friend" of 1830. Built in a New York foundry, shipped by sea to Charleston, it hauled the first passenger train on what is now the Southern Railway System.

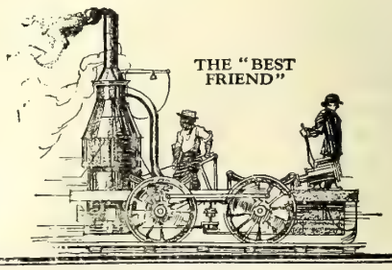
Twenty-two hundred locomotives, some of them fifty times as heavy as this famous pioneer engine, and 70,000 cars, operating on 8,300 miles of Southern Railway System lines, are now doing the work that was begun by the "Best Friend."

From the Ohio and the Potomac to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the far-flung rails of the Southern reach across twelve states with 40,000,000 inhabitants.

The Southern serves the South—from the northern gateways at Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville—and the western gateways at St. Louis and Memphis—to the ocean ports of Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick and Jacksonville—and the Gulf ports of Mobile and New Orleans.

Operated by men of the South, who have been bred in its traditions to understand its problems and its needs, the Southern keeps pace with the South. The investment in its properties is now more than $710,000,000, of which $285,000,000 has been expended in the past two decades.

With the continued cooperation of the people of the South, we will be enabled to command the capital for the greater transportation facilities that Southern development will inevitably demand.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

THE SOUTHERN SR SERVES THE SOUTH
The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

WICKER.

Mrs. Delitha Thomas Wicker, beloved wife and ever-helpful companion of Rev. J. D. Wicker, quietly fell on sleep Friday evening, January 11, 1924 at their home, near Sanford, N. C. She was born March 12, 1842, and so only lacked two months of being 82 years of age. She was married in 1864 to Bro. J. D. Wicker, and to this union were born eleven children, nine of whom survive, namely: Cora Agnes, now Mrs. N. A. Dowdy, Durham, N. C.; Walter Crump, now Rev. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C.; Russell B., of Sanford, N. C.; Clara, now Mrs. S. M. Watson, Sanford, N. C.; Hattie, now Mrs. George Timberlake, Wake Forest, N. C.; Edgar Pope, Sanford, N. C.; Flora, now Mrs. Evanda Cole, Sanford, N. C.; Maggie, now Mrs. J. D. Hill, Sanford, N. C.; Bessie, now Mrs. Robert Nelson, Troy, N. C. These, with a most devoted husband, gave every care and comfort possible to a loving mother and fond wife in her affliction for the past eight years.

Stricken with paralysis years ago, and already suffering with rheumatism, she showed her loved ones and all who knew her how to be patient, and even cheerful in suffering, and how to be brave and hopeful in the throes of pain and affliction. Her favorite words, which she not infrequently sang in her affliction, were—

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for every one
And there's a cross for me."

In the face of such patient suffering, and victory in affliction, one is reminded of 2 Tim. 2:12: "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him."

The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson, from the Sanford Christian Church, at 2 P. M., Sunday, January 13th. The writer assisted.

Sister Wicker had been a faithful member of the hCristian Church since early years, and in her days of health and strength was active in all that her Church undertook. A true and loving wife, a fond and devoted mother, a kind and gracious neighbor, a faithful follower of the Lord Jesus has gone to her rich reward. A great concourse of people who knew and loved her attended the funeral at Sanford and the burial in Shallow Well Church Cemetery. The beautiful and abundant floral designs more than covered the mound beneath which she sleeps. These tokens showed how her friends and neighbors respected and loved her. J. O. ATKINSON.

FRANKLIN.

Mrs. Caroline Franklin, wife of the late Gus Franklin, died January 8, 1924. She was for many years a member of Piney Plains Christian Church. Having made profession of faith in Christ at an early age, she remained faithful to her trust till death.

A good woman, we believe, has gone on to glory. She was buried in the Church cemetery beside her husband. May the rich blessings of our Lord rest on those that remain of her loved ones and prepare each of them for the reunion. J. LEE JOHNSON.

Elon is Building for the Future

Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

Grow Cotton in Virginia

on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY

Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

MAYO'S SEEDS

Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Flack Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.

D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE :: :: TENNESSEE

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

ALLRED—ALLEN.

Mr. Raymond Allred and Miss Minnie Allen, both of Asheboro, but formerly of Ramseur, were united in marriage by the writer at his home in Ramseur, N. C., December 23, 1923. They were accompanied by Mr. Hobert Leonard and Miss Florence Allred, sister of the groom.

They are splendid young people, and many friends wish them a happy married life. T. J. GREEN.

BROOKS—ANDREW.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Andrew, Liberty, N. C., Mr. Lynn Brooks and Miss Mattie Andrew were happily married in the presence of a few friends and relatives on the evening of December 22, 1923.

These are popular young people, and many are wishing for them happiness through life. Ceremony by writer.

T. J. GREEN.

A Charm

Beautiful Hair

You can possess it by using Caro-Co Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Large bottle 50c at all dealers.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

C5453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

C5453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 6½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"

1536 East Broad

Richmond, Va.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1924. | NUMBER 6.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Welcome, But No Change.—

The papers are announcing that the Archbishop of Canterbury is making overtures for the union of the Roman Catholic Church with the Church of England. This is not new, for the Episcopal church in many places has been traveling toward Rome for many years with rapid strides. In many Episcopal churches in our own country they have the confessional, prayers for the dead, and a celibate ministry. We read sometime ago a book by an episcopal writer who claimed that his church was the mother church and that Rome was a child of and not a mother to his church. We were rather amused when reading the evening paper to see that Archbishop Curley, the successor of Cardinal Gibbons of the diocese of Baltimore, has not heard of this great thing, but if the Church of England wants to come into the mother church, he says, she will be welcome, with the understanding that not one iota of the doctrine or practice of the church will be changed, the doctrine and practice being two thousand years old. Archbishop Curley has stepped into the shoes of a very wonderful character, but so far as we have seen he has not had the wisdom of utterance of his predecessor, nor does he have a tithe of the courtesy and diplomacy that made Cardinal Gibbons a world character. And we are very sure that when the question of union between the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church is settled Archbishop Curley will not be called into counsel.—Exchange.

Seven Year Experiment in Tuberculosis Work Ended.—

An epoch-making enterprise in the field of health promotion and disease prevention has just been concluded in the Framingham health and tuberculosis demonstration. This experimental piece of health work, which was started in 1917 and ended January 1, 1924, has proved that a community can determine to a more or less degree its sickness and death rate. Through the Framingham experiment, most valuable research and demonstration in life conservation has been made. Special emphasis was placed on the prevention of tuberculosis.

The demonstration was made possible through a contribution of funds to the National Tuberculosis Association by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Dr. McBrayer endeavored to get the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to do this demonstration in Roanoke Rapids, and Dr. Lee K. Frankel, third vice-president of the company, in charge of this work, was favorably impressed with the opportunities, but thought that a larger place should probably be selected for the study. After a careful study of many communities, Framingham, Mass., was selected for the work, first because of its excellent beginnings in the health field; second, its typical character as an American semi-industrial community; and third, the assurance of co-operation. On account of its success in the undertaking, it now serves as an example to communities from Maine to California and from Washington to Florida.

The most important single discovery for disease prevention in the demonstration has been the consultation service offered to the physicians for the diagnosis of early illness. So valuable has this been found to the community that it is to be carried on in 1924 under the auspices of a local health committee.

The Annual Meeting of the New York Bible Society.—

The annual meeting of the New York Bible Society was held this week in the new Bible report presented by the General Secretary, Dr House, No. 5 East Forty-eighth Street. The George William Carter, showed a large increase in the distribution of the Scriptures. During the year 1923 about 800,000 copies of the Scriptures were distributed in 66 languages. This number is larger by over 300,000 volumes than ever before distributed by the Society in any one year of its history. Most of the distribution was free and the balance sold at cost or less. Over 82,000 volumes were distributed to immigrants arriving at Ellis Island, and 70,000 to sailors and seamen from all parts of the world. Hundreds of Bibles were donated to the American Merchant Marine Library Association in order that one Bible may be in each Library furnished the ships by that Association. The Society is occupied with one work, and that is the circulating of the Bible . It handles no literature of any kind but the Scriptures. A portion of the report presented to the Society is as follows:

"In these times of strain, stress and uncertainty there is need for a larger free distribution of God's Word. There is wide-spread mental activity which is in opposition to the teachings of Revelation and seeks to cast dishonor upon the Divine Record. There is a social program being promulgated that would blot out the Sabbath, nationalize property and destroy the government. With all this and perhaps springing out of it there is a growing disregard of human and divine authority, a spirit of restless unbelief and often aggressive infidelity. Human life with many has lost its sacredness and there is a frightful indifference to spiritual truth. No human expedient and no human philosophy can avail to save us and our beloved country from the storms of atheistic socialism and anarchy. There is one bow of promise that spans the dark background. It is the divine assurance, that, though heaven and earth pass away, the Word of God shall not pass away. Coming through nineteen centuries this assurance is as true today as ever.

"The best way to meet the storm of pernicious literature is by a larger scattering of Bibles, 'the leaves of which are for the healing of the nations.' The need of the world is more Bibles."—G. W. C.

Concerning Taxes.—

Reduce the taxes? Everybody says yes. Yet a growing number of citizens recognize that something more than that is needed—the whole tax situation calls for revision and establishment upon sound foundations. Given authority, it is easy enough to lay a tax. Given political prestige to be enhanced or harmed, it is easy enough to get at least the intention of laying taxes fairly. But taxation itself, as a principle and a practice, is in a most chaotic state, which accounts for the virility and increase of various tax philosophies among which the most virile perhaps is the single-tax idea.

The central fallacy of our system is that it taxes people instead of things. Would that some statistician could take a specific taxable amount of $200 in a small income and trace the number of times that $200 is taxed—not once, as $200, but 200 times if that amount becomes part of the taxable income of 200 persons. It is the person who is taxed, not the wealth. You received that $200, and paid on it; also you paid it out to a physician for an operation, and he paid taxes upon it, too; the physician paid it out to the surgical instrument manufacturer, the latter paid taxes on it also; and so on until it becomes a question whether the $200 exists at all at the end of the process. Citizens are taxed, not their wealth.

Flowing from the central fallacy are others, principally the resulting inequality. There may be large concerns who share the tax levied upon them, but if so they should make themselves known to avoid the haunting suspicion that there are none such; it is generally believed that the working-public pays all the taxes, just as it is the working-public that supplies all the capital upon which our enterprises are built. Taxes are shifted to the last man who has no one else upon whom to shift them. Tax property; the tax appears in the rent. Tax commodities; the tax appears in the retail sales price. And so on.

Taxation is one of the profounder mysteries of the political organization of the peoples, and may be used to their help or their hurt. The time has come for a wider public thoughtfulness about taxes, not as sums of money inconveniently demanded from us, but as representing a national power whose right principles have not yet been discovered, or if discovered not recognized, by government.—Dearborn Independent.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Convention, meeting April 29th, in the city of Norfolk, with the Christian Temple, will have some great questions to consider in its work.

Rev. Jas. W. Wellons, D. D., is feeling a good bit better for the last few days. His many friends will rejoice in this improvement in his physical condition.

The work on the Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., is moving nicely and encouragingly. They need money very much, and they very much deserve it.

Dr. W. A. Harper is gaining in health conditions and is able to be regular in his attendance upon his official duties. His many friends rejoice in his recovery.

Lieutenant-Governor West of Virginia is dealing some telling blows in favor of the Men and Millions. Read what he says and act on his suggestions as far as you can.

Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C., has had a rather protracted spell of indisposition this winter, but he is becoming well and strong again, as his many friends will be glad to know.

The next session of the Southern Christian Convention goes to the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. That is a good selection and will, we believe, be a fine place for the meeting. See official notice elsewhere in this issue.

Mrs. M. A. Atkinson, wife of Mr. Moses A. Atkinson, of Elon College, is very ill, causing her friends great anxiety. She was a Miss Hobby, of Raleigh, N. C., and is a sister of Mrs. W. L. Wells, wife of Rev. W. L. Wells, of Portsmouth, Va. She has been growing quite feeble for quite a while, but in the last few days her condition has become alarming.

The Journal of Christian Education for February, 1924, is on our table. It has as a special feature a sketch of the Boy Scouts, showing what they are and what they are doing. It also has a tribute to the Camp Fire Girls by Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, together with much more matter along other lines. It is a creditable magazine, and shows much work is done on its pages.

Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Orphanage, has the sympathy of its many friends because of the illness of a number of the children. If they were his own children he could scarcely do more for them than he is doing. He needs not only the sympathy—for sickness brings expense—he needs other help: a few dollars for the children would come in quite handy just now.

What are you doing for Men and Millions? The five years are out next year, and if you do not pay it before, all unpaid subscriptions will be due at the end of the fifth year, and that time is not far away now. Save while you can, and be ready against the day it is due to pay it. It is a debt you owe because you promised it, and having promised it, be sure to make the promise good. This we should do because it is right for all people to make good a promise, especially if it be a good promise, and then because the Lord's work will, on the human side, languish if you do not pay it.

Rev. W. C. Wicker has an office in the administration building along with The Christian Sun and our Mission Board. Dr. Wicker was so long connected with the college as a teacher that it seems quite natural to see him in and around the building.

And what are you doing for the Orphanage? With 100 fatherless children to be cared for, Bro. Johnston needs our help. Let us not be slow to give it. We must not grow careless about what we do for the fatherless children? Bro. Johnston has made a wonderful success of it, but that only shows how we should do more to help him carry the burden. See that you do help him and that early.

The visit on Friday of last week to Elon College of Prof. L. A. Weigle, the head of the department of religious education at Yale University, was an occasion to be remembered. His address was an unusually fine one, so far as we could judge, and was in every way worthy. It was true to the Bible, and seemed to breathe the spirit of Christ. His subject was: "Jesus the Ideal Teacher." See letter of Mr. C. M. Cannon (Elon Notes).

Hon. William Jennings Bryan is delivering some mighty blows against the unbelief of modernists. He is writing a series of articles for the Sunday School Times, and they are valuable. Here is a sample of his writing on the virgin birth of Jesus Christ: "The supernatural element cannot be eliminated from the account of the birth of Jesus except by the application of rules that will strip the Bible of everything supernatural," and of course he is against that as most of us are.

Dr. C. H. Rowland leaves Franklin, Va., with flying colors, after having served the Franklin Christian Church for more than twenty-three years. It must be gratifying both to himself and family, as well as his many friends, to have such a host of admirers and devoted friends after such a long service. All four of the Churches united at the Christian Church on last Sunday, January 27th, at night, in a farewell service. The occasion was one that is not often seen, and it was an expression of brotherly fellowship and goodwill on the part of the people for Dr. and Mrs. Rowland and their children—for all of them seemed to have gotten a stronghold on the community. The coming together of the four Churches of the town to pay a debt of love for this family was indeed a high tribute of respect and affection. See the account of it all elsewhere in this issue or the next.

Some one has said that a man's spirituality must always rise above his mentality, and we believe that is the way it ought to be. Who knows but that all this error that is abroad in the land today is the outcome of allowing the mentality to rise above the spiritual? When the mental rises above the spiritual, then you have a wild horse with the bridle off, and no wonder no one can hold him. If you will keep the mind under the spiritual, then you have a source of great power and the good will dominate the evil, and for the reason that God gave the spiritual to keep the mental in its place. The mind of man is a wonderful gift for good, so long as it is under control—God gave it to us to be used in just such a case. The mind of man, no matter how keen it may be, no matter how well-developed it may be, just so it is dominated by the spiritual, will be a great power on the human side.

Did you ever think of it in this way? An exchange says: "When a Church ceases to be a clinic for distressed souls, it becomes a center for wrangling minds." Oh, that explains the matter. The business of the Church is to look after bringing lost souls to Christ, and when it does not do that it gets to be idle, and an idle mind is the devil's workshop. So when a Church no longer looks after lost souls, it becomes an abiding-place for the devil, and the result is he sets the Church to fussing and quarreling, and then it is that the Church becomes the agent of the devil, and by its quarreling and fussing it is at work for the wicked one.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, the new pastor of the First Church of Fall River, Mass., was formally installed as pastor of that Church on Tuesday, January 29, 1924. Among those present and taking part in the installation services we note the names of Rev. W. S. Thomas, Rev. H. M. Hainer, Rev. W. G. Sargent (who preached the sermon of the occasion), Mr. Harry Sherwood, Rev. W. J. Martin, Mr. William A. Gifford, Rev. H. Arnold, Rev. F. H. Gardner, Rev. E. J. Bodman (who as president of the Rhode Island and Massachusetts Conference, presided), and the now pastor, Rev. H. Russell Clem, pronounced the benediction. The occasion was no doubt a very pleasant one, and we trust it is the forerunner of a great work to be accomplished under the united labors of this Church and its new pastor. Bro. Clem and his good North Carolina wife must feel much at home, for there were three addresses of welcome. We wish our brother abundant success in his new field.

Bro. J. A. McAdams, of our Elon Church, is a gifted teacher in the Sunday School. Recently he was called to teach a Bible class. We happened to be present, and we do not know when we have been so surprised as we were because of his ability as a teacher. He knew his lesson so well that he did not have a Bible or a Quarterly in his hand. He seemed perfectly at home in the lesson, and taught it with apparently the greatest ease, and he knew what he was talking about. We could wish that the Christian Churches all had such a teacher as Bro. McAdams, for then they could hardly help being interested in the Bible. Send for him to come to your Church and have him teach a class and then get him to talk to the Sunday School on "How to Become a Fine Teacher in the Sunday School," and we believe you will always thank us for giving this advice. Have a Sunday School rally in your Church and have Bro. McAdams to be there and take part in it, and your school, we believe, will move up in the matter of real interest in its work.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. Holland,
L. E. Smith,
I. W. Johnson,
Executive Board.

January 31, 1924.

SHORT NOTES ON BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

THE KEY-THOUGHT OF THE CHRONICLES IS THE THEOCRACY.

A theocracy is a people governed directly by the administration of God, or by priests as representing God. The first and second books of Chronicles is some account of the people of Israel during the time when they claimed to be under his control. The two books were originally one book, and set forth the obligations of Israel to the people—when the people were supposed to be under the rule of God. The people were more than theocratic, and looked forward to the day when they would be able to get all Israel to submit to this theocratic rule, but really it does seem to be more than could be done under ordinary circumstances. The secret of this prosperity, extraordinary prosperity, of a people is in their Ruler. When a people will devoutly follow God in humble submission to His will, we must expect great blessings upon such a nation.

The word "chronicles" has a peculiar meaning to it—words of days, journals. The Septuagint calls it "things omitted, or supplementary." Neither name exhausts the purpose and purport of these books. The people, now returned from captivity, have rebuilt the temple, but their national fabric is still wanting. It is not definitely known who wrote these books, but many believe Ezra is the author. He seeks to base his work upon Judah, and the end he hopes to gain is to reconstruct a nation which had fallen to pieces and have a nation that is truly given to the theocracy.

It has been suggested that the writer traces the redemption line from Adam to David, and from that point to Judah's last king. The division of families and possessions, together with the Levitical courses, as they existed before the captivity, are here recorded possibly with a view to their restoration, when Israel should again be prosperous. These records contain much that is recorded in the Books of the Kings, but much is also omitted because not needed to meet the author's purpose. The things which are specially emphasized are the points bearing on the preservation of the temple, its restoration, its purity in worship, the orderliness of its services. On the other hand, it makes plain the displeasure of God toward idolatrous rites and relics from heathen sources. These are hateful in His sight. The author also places much stress on placing God on His throne, especially in the hearts of his people. It also shows the attitude of the kings of Israel toward the King of kings. It is the key to Israel's prosperity, and shows not only the rewards of the same, but also its penalties.

One great fact that we need to note, viz: the fall of the temple and the long exile of the people followed the successive rule of three wicked kings. It really brought upon Israel a great moral plague. A crisis was thus thrust upon the people, a crisis that must be handled or it would destroy the national hope. It was in this time of trouble that every true reformer of national prominence and every act of true religious worship was held up as a power in staying the plague.

Some have thought that the Books of Kings and Chronicles were much alike, but as a matter of fact, in many respects they were much unlike. The Books of the Kings concerned both kingdoms, Israel and Judah—both were political and kingly—whereas the Chronicles concerned only Judah, and it was ecclesiastical and priestly. The Kings was a record of history, and that analizes; the other was a philosophy of history, and it analyzes, as Dr. Pierson puts it. Some one has said that in the Kings we find wars, idolatries and offenses; in Chronicles we find deliverances, repentance and reformation. In one, idolatry is treason against the Supreme King; in the other, apostacy from the Covenant God.

The temple is naturally uppermost in the minds of the people. In the first book we have an account of David's preparation for building; in the second, we have an account of Solomon's erection and dedication of the temple. The service of song is fully set forth. It was conducted by 288 trained singers and players, with a chorus of 4,000, led by Asaph, Heman and Jeduthun. Its aim was not to display the art of music, but to worship Almighty God. What a lesson for many of our congregations in this day!

Four great deliverances were wrought from Judah, viz: under Abijah, against Jeroboam; under Asa, against the Ethiopians; under Jehoshaphat, against the Moabites, and under Hezekish, against the Assyrians. In each instance the success is attributed to God. What a lesson for Christian workers of today!

If the Lord leads in the battles, victory is sure, for where God leads, we know the right will be found. When it is truly said that God fights for a people, two things are assured, viz: the people with whom and for whom God fights is in the right, and for them victory is certain.

The two Books of the Chronicles fall into four divisions, as follows:

1. The genealogies, as given in 1 Chron. 1:9.
2. The kingdom under David.—1 Chron. 10:29.
3. The kingdom under Solomon, as given in 2 Chron. 1:9.
4. The kingdom from Rehoboam to Zedekiah, as given in 2 Chron. 10:36.

There is one very interesting fact brought out —certainly more than one, but one seems to be an outstanding fact in the history of God's people—and that is that wherever God went with His people, no matter how difficult the place, blessing followed and prosperity crowned their work. On the other hand, when they went into sin, God retired from their midst, and disaster followed. What a lesson for the Church of the Living God of today! How often does the Church of today fail in its great undertakings for God and truth, and all because we enter the battle without God?

FROM WALTERS.

I left here on Saturday, July 28th; reached Moncure in the afternoon of the same day. Bro. T. E. Ferrell took me out to his house for the night. On Sunday morning he sent me to Lee's Chapel. Here I met Bro. J. E. Franks, pastor of the Church, to begin a meeting at that place. I preached here in the morning, and in the afternoon we went to a school-house about three miles away. Bro. Franks had been conducting a meeting here for some days. So I preached at the afternoon service. Bro. Franks opened the doors of a new organized Church, and between twenty and thirty presented themselves for membership.

We returned to the Church and began a meeting on Monday, preaching morning and afternoon for two or three days, then morning, afternoon and night. The Spirit soon began to work in great power, the Church was revived, and we had about twenty professions of faith in Christ, mostly grown people. Lee's Chapel has some fine people, and seemingly a bright prospect for the future. Bro. Franks is pastor here; he is a good one, and very much loved by the people.

I came home on Sunday and preached at Mt. Carmel; Bro. Franks went over to Zion and began a meeting on Sunday. I went back on Monday; Bro. Franks met me at Moncure, and we returned to Zion on Tuesday. Zion is an older Church than Lee's Chapel; in fact, Lee's Chapel is a branch from Zion. Here we continued the meeting until Friday afternoon, morning and afternoon. Here we had a very good meeting, many of the people were very earnest, the Spirit convicted in answer to prayer. The Church was very much revived, and sinners saved. As well-informed man as Bro. Franks thought there was not many people here but what were Church members, but we had twenty professions of faith in the Lord Christ, and then it seemed there were more left than we first thought. Some were converted here that had been waiting for a long time. Bro. Franks is pastor here; may God lead pastor and people to His glory.

Bro. Franks took me from Zion to Raleigh Friday afternoon. This was the first time that I had a real good conversation with Bro. Franks. We had been together for almost two weeks, but we had talked spare moments about getting Christians revived and sinners saved. On this trip, he related to me some of his experiences as God chastened him before he would submit to preach the gospel. Thank God that he yielded to His call.

I reached home Saturday, left Sunday morning for Fuller's Chapel, preached Sunday afternoon, left for Clayton Monday, reaching there about noon. Bro. Franks came in the afternoon and we began a meeting that night.

When we reached Clayton, things seemed a little cold, but there was some that believed in God. The pastor, Bro. Franks, believed in God, and the writer believed in God, so in answer to prayers, the Holy Spirit soon began to do His work, the Church was revived, and sinners saved.

I remained at Clayton until Friday night, August 24th. When I left, there had been twenty-five or more professions of faith in Christ, many backsliders had been restored, and the Church very much revived. Here, they are building a new Church; they truly need a man here for all time if the work grows as it should. I think Bro. Franks was going to preach for them this year, for they like him.

Bro. Franks, as I saw him, is a Spirit-filled man and a tireless worker. The trouble, as I see it, is he has too much to do, or too large a field. He is doing the work two or three men should do. While I admire his spirit and earnestness, I fear he will go beyond his strength and shorten his life. But again I am sure God will take care of His own, so I just pray God's blessings upon his efforts, and bid him godspeed in His service. As I see it, he is a great man in God's hands for righteousness.

The Lord willing, more will follow soon.

Yours in the Master's service,

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Walters, Va.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

We wish to acknowledge by this means the following items: Nice pork, sausage, sweet potatoes, molasses and about sixteen pounds of sugar. This was given us during Christmas time by the good people of Concord Church and community. We hereby express our sincere thanks to all, and may the gracious Lord bless those who had a part. We are grateful to our Heavenly Father for good friends. May the Lord show us how to serve Him better and be true to Him who doeth all things well.

L. L. WYRICK AND WIFE.

Elon College, N. C.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

WHAT WILL BE THE OUTCOME OF THE LABOR MOVEMENT?

For many years there has been a movement on the part of what we ordinarily called the laboring people. The effort has been to secure better wages for the men who do the work of this country. That the laboring man has a right to what is just and fair, we must admit—we are glad to admit it, and for the reason that the best authority we have among men says: "The laborer is worthy of his hire." There can be no question that the man who wields the tools deserves what is fair, in the way of wages, as it is that the men who have the money to pay for labor has the right to realize a fair compensation on their property.

There was a time when the capitalist got more than his share of the product of the labor of the man who gave his time and strength to producing what the capitalist desired. Of late, the scales have turned and the difference is looking to the other side of the question. The situation is a serious one, and in the final outcome it is the average man who is to be the loser.

Even now, it is with great difficulty that a man of ordinary means can get a house to live in. In the first place, he is not able to build such a house for himself, and for the reason that he cannot command sufficient money to put up such a structure. In the second place, if he abandons the thought of building a house and proposes to meet his urgent need by renting, he is confronted by such a high charge for rent that he cannot afford that. He may go to the man who owns the house and undertake to reason with him as to the price of rent, but he will be met with the fact that the owner declares that the cost of building is so high that he cannot rent it for less, and there you are between these two extremes. The rich man does not lose. He refuses for one moment to consider such a thing as low rents. The laborer who built the house will not agree to make the cost less by working for lower wages, and there you are—it looks as if the poor man in need of a house in which to keep his family may have to go to the tropics, where people do live in mere shacks or under shelters, or it may be in the open, since he cannot pay the rents which are charged for houses of comfort for a family.

Only a little while ago we met a man, a fine carpenter, who was working for something like $15 a day, at least his men who were working under him were getting $14 a day, and it is to be supposed that the boss was getting more than was the regular workman. He was complaining because in order to get a house for his family to live in, he had to pay $50 a month for a small house. He could afford it, but what of the poor man who had to work on the farm for a dollar and a half a day? Whon he went to rent a house, he did not have enough money to pay the rent on his house because he had to work for a very small wage.

Now as we see it, the laboring man is responsible for the situation. He has managed, in an effort to get a reasonable wage, to learn how he can get a big wage, and he says: "I have worked long enough for small wages, and now I can get big wages, and I am going to do it regardless of who has to suffer for it." He gets his $14 a day and wants more, and if organization will help to get it, he is going to have it regardless of the men and women who have to suffer because they happen to be so unfortunate as to have to work for low wages. But that is not the most serious side of the question. A day is coming, and it cannot be very far away, as we think, when the man who is furnishing the money and the man who is furnishing the muscle to do the work are going to feel the pinch in a way which they do not now seem to realize.

The high prices of this day cannot last always, and for that fact there is an economical cause. The people of the United States are now the highest payers for labor of any country in all Christendon. Other countries have their work done much cheaper, and so they can sell it much cheaper. What does that mean? Why, it means that soon there will be no market in the world for production in the United States, and for the reason that other countries can undersell us, and then there will be no market for production in this country, and for the reason that things made in other countries are sold much lower, because made much cheaper. And what then? Why, stagnation will come, and then there will come a panic in the trades and in business, and then the men, who have made high prices a necessity, will have to help themselves the best they can, for there will be no one else to help them. Then they will be glad to work for low prices, and for the reason that work will be hard to get at any price. And who is to blame for such a situation? Why, no one except the man who forced prices up to a point where they could not be given, and they could not because there was no market for the labor, and with labor down below zero, and the foreign markets so far below us that we cannot sell to other countries, well, in that case we shall be helpless and then the laboring man will be glad to get anything he can for his work, and for the reason thatt here is no market abroad for his high-priced labor, and none at home because stagnation has come upon the country. With no market abroad and none at home, what can the laboring man do? What can any one do? We are shut up to be our own market, and our own market is so overdone with production for which there is no demand that no one can ask for a high price, and possibly for no other price, high or low, just because other markets can undersell us, and with stagnation in our own productions we cannot sell, and when we cannot sell then somebody will have to suffer, and as we see it, the men who are now getting such high prices will not then be able to get any price for the products of our labor. Here is the situation which is even now confronting us and which we will not only have confronting us then, but it will be forcing us to cry for help. It is coming just as surely as effect follows cause. Now, while we can, we will do wisely to consider it well, for the day is coming when we cannot manage the situation.

Just remember that you cannot have a house, nor an automobile, nor a suit of clothes at a reasonable price when the men who made them charge an unreasonable price for the work they have done on them. Reasonably high labor is all right, but when it gets to be unreasonably high, then we are facing dangers in the economic situation, and these dangers will hit the high-priced men just as surely as they do other people. If all men would truly learn to live and let live, then might we be able to handle the situation which even now is confronting us, but all men will not do as they would be done by, and the result is that sooner or later we shall all face a most perplexing situation, and for it the laboring man will be largely to blame. Remember the prediction!

A VERY QUEER CHURCH.

We do not like to seem to find fault with a Church of a different denomination, and yet the time has come when we feel that to keep quiet is to be unfaithful to truth and right.

It is reported in the papers that the Rev. Lucian Johnston has written a lengthy article for a paper called The Truth, and the paper has been published, in which the clergyman named above has said some very queer things to come from the heart of a minister of the gospel. He writes against prohibition and seeks to show that the American people are about to lose their liberties through the passage of the eighteenth amendment, making our country dry by the prohibition act.

It is a fact. The American people have lost their right to get rich with blood money; it is a fact that they have lost their liberty to get drunk; hey have lost their liberty to spend their money for strong drink; it is a fact that they have lost their liberty to robe the children and their mothers of the money which ought to be theirs for the daily needs of the home; they have lost their liberty to burden the State and the nation with the heavy taxes which liquor business imposed upon the good and honest people of the land in which we live; they have lost their liberty to make hogs of themselves by wallowing in the mire and dirt of a drunkard; they have lost their liberty to pauperize children and bring them up without education and without the ordinary comforts of life; they have lost their liberty to rob and murder their fellows, and for the reason that sober men rarely do such things, besides these they have lost many other bad things which are usually found in the life and doings of drunkards.

We suppose Mr. Johnston is a Roman Catholic priest, for he calls on every one—and especially Catholics—to set themselves against the curse (blessing) of prohibition. He asserts that it is his opinion that the Roman Catholics will be the last to defend liberty here in the United States. By that he means that the Roman Catholics will stand for this liberty when all others have given it up. May it be that every one in this country will come to stand for the liberty that prohibition vouchsafes to the people, and this includes the Catholics, and even Mr. Johnston himself. It is a pity that such men give the world a chance to hold the Church responsible for support of the liquor business. Oh, Mr. Johnston! how can you look at the people after you have tried to enlist them for the support of the liquor business? We feel that blushes ought to cover your face until you would become truly ashamed to stand among your fellows. How can a man who claims to preach the gospel, take such a stand among for the most awful curse that has swept our land in a hundred years? A minister of the gospel standing for the liquor business! Before we would do it, we would lay aside the ministerial garb and give up authority to proclaim the gospel of the Son of God.

But Mr. Johnston is not satisfied with his own stand for the most awful curse that has ever afflicted a civilized people. He declares that he sees no one else who has brains enough to stand against this awful tide, no one but the Catholic Church. Let it be said here and now that we do not believe the Roman Catholic Church will ever stand, as a Church, against prohibition. It is true that a small part of that Church is for liquor, but the men of brain in that organization are too deeply set for the good of humanity to have part in such an awful work as the undoing of prohibition. No, sir; the Catholic Church has too high an ideal of some things to throw itself into the swim for ruin. It has its follies and its wrong ideas, but we do not believe it will ever be guilty as a Church of doing an effective part to bring to this country the liberty of the whiskey business again.

Referring to what Mr. Johnston has said in regard to there not being brains enough in any other man or institution to stem the tide of prohibition, the Presbyterian of the South makes answer this way:

"It does seem a pity that there are no brains in the heads of the millions of Protestants in this country. If the 96,000,000 non-Catholics in the United States had the same proportion of brains that the 16,000,000 Roman Catholics have, we wonder what kind of a country this would be! Would it be as illiterate as Mexico and Brazil were before Protestant missionaries began to lift the people out of their ignorance? Would it be as illiterate, as ignorant, with as large a proportion of its people savage as were the Philippines when they were practically ruled by the Roman Catholic Church and no other Christian religion was taught there? Would the people know as much about liberty as those of Spain and Central and South America knew before they were contaminated by contact with those who held and taught Protestant religion? We cannot help wondering!"

AN EXPERIMENT AND ITS FRUITS.

Man naturally is fond of experimenting. He likes to try a thing out now and then, and often he does so to his sorrow. He is often of the opinion that he can do it better and that he can prove it by trying it out.

In human society there seems to be an inordinate desire to get things done purely by the strength and wisdom of man, and forthwith an effort is made, but so far as we know without much success. It does seem that discouragement would induce a cessation in this sort of work. It is not so, however; at least, it is not so in many cases.

The one outstanding instance in this class is the effort to do without God. How anxious are many people to get through this world without God's assistance! Whenever any effort has been made to this end, the plan has invariably fallen through, as it ought to have done. There are, we think, only a few men who are daring enough to make an effort, and yet now and then some person assumes that he or she can do thus and so without any help from God. It is a pity that men and women (some men and some women) are so thoughtless.

"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."—Prov. 3:6.

No man has ever lost anything by acknowledging God in all his ways. This applies to great and small alike. No matter how small one may be, or how great he may be, he loses nothing by acknowledging God as the help of his life.

It is related that in the days of Sir Henry Havelock, when he was one of England's great men, and a general of the army of England of marked ability, when he entered Persia at the head of the British army he wrote to a friend: "I have good troops and cannon under my command, but my trust is in the Lord Jesus, my tried and merciful Friend. To Him all power is entrusted in heaven and on earth. He daily seeks for me, as I seek Him without the shadow of doubting." Again, after a battle, he wrote:

"We must be ever thankful for the preserving mercies of the day. The cannonade was warm, and my steamer, the Bernice, crowded with Highlanders, led the troop-ships to the point where we landed. I felt throughout that the Lord Jesus was on my side."

When the tidings of peace came, he wrote: "The intelligence which elevates some and depresses others, finds me calm in my reliance on that dear Redeemer who has watched over and cared for me, even when I knew Him not, these three-score years and two."

That is the kind of a life, love and devotion which means so much to the people who can thus show forth the true character of God's children. It is not often that we hear such expressions from the rulers and military leaders. It would be much better for our country if we did. All men who are worthy the name are kings in the little circle in which they move with authority, and kings need to be humble before the Lord, just as truly as the humblest man or woman. Both men and women need to learn to acknowledge God in all their ways, and when that is done, the Word tells us God will direct our paths.

There are many men and women who have found out that it pays to acknowledge Him in all their ways, and for the reason that He becomes a guide to them who truly and devoutly acknowledge Him their ways, even as in the case of sir Henry Havelock.

It may be from an unwritten chapter in the history of the League of Nations, but it has force in it all the same. It is said that the name of God nowhere appears in all of the document of that institution. It may not have been any intention to exclude His name, but it was left out, probably in deference to the whim of some man who was an unbeliever, or it may be a Jew, who dislikes to seem to believe in God; but what has become of that instrument which had not the name of God in it? What? Well, you know the answer in the main. The constitution of the League of Nations is on a book page, but it has so far ended in accomplishing practically nothing. God was left out in its consideration, and now God has no use for it in His great and world-wide plans. It has become a means of confusion, and it stands a helpless agent, which had been intended for the good of the world. And would not God be interested in such an instrument? Most certainly He would, but He was left out and then He left that out. When you leave God out, you leave out usefulness among men.

Acknowledge God in all your ways, and He will direct thy paths.

We see in one of our exchanges that a brother says the Church is arranging to carry a warm, tactful and personal invitation to every non-Church member to accept Christ and unite with the Church. That is fine, only it gives out only half of the truth, and perhaps the smaller half at that. When we invite unconverted persons to accept Christ, do not forget to put in the other half of the same truth, that is to urge the member coming into the Church on such an invitation to make sure that Christ accepts him (or her). That is the way we get many poor Church members, by receiving persons who say they have accepted Christ, while they know nothing of the other side of the question—they do not seem to know that Christ's acceptance of them is the vital point and that they cannot become Christians till Christ does accept them, no matter how much they have connected themselves with the visible Church. Suppose a man is persuaded to join the Church, saying that he has accepted Christ. So far, so well, as it may seem; but suppose, through a lack of genuine repentance (and we fear that often happens), Jesus had not accepted the man who thinks he has accepted Christ. Then can Jesus accept one, as redeemed, who has not repented of his sins? We think not. There is, we think, no sort of doubt but that many persons, being overurged to join the Church, do so without repentance, and in that event, we think nothing has been gained, but much has been lost. We have an idea that many whose names are on the Church roll, but never show any active interest in the Church, are of this class. It is important that a man accept Christ, but it is also important that we let this man know hat accepting Christ is but half of the question. Let him not think that the matter of his being a member of Christ is not settled till he is assured that Jesus accepts him. The two sides of this question ought to be intelligently given to every man and woman who is invited to come to Church.

HATS OFF TO MY FRIENDS.

Truly, mercy and goodness have followed me all the days of my life, and I have tried to dwell in the house of the Lord—that is, under His protecting cars—always. THE SUN readers can easily imagine that I have been greatly blessed all my days, but especially in these latter days of my life. Truly I can say I was once young, and am now old, and yet the Lord has never forsaken me. How grateful I am for all of His lovingkindness to me.

I am thinking of the many dear friends of THE SUN family who remembered me at the close of my ninety-eighth year. Many sent me cards and letters of friendship and affection, and some sent me some material tokens of love in the way of presents for the oldest minister in our brotherhood. I thank them all and would love to write to each one individually in acknowledgment of his or her thoughtful kindness in remembering me. I am just now beginning the ninety-ninth year of a long life. The Lord has been near me through all of the journey of a long life. He has brought me thus far on the journey in safety, and for the time that remains, I fear not to trust Him implicitly and truly. Help me to praise Him for all of His goodness to me, not merely for a long life, but especially for the good He may have used me to accomplish along the way as I have come.

Your devoted friend and brother,

Elon College, N. C. J. W. WELLONS.

One of Many Letters Received.

Dover, Del., Dec. 10, 1923.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, Elon College, N. C.:

Dear Uncle Wellons,—The children of the junior and primary departments of the People's Christian Church, of Dover, Del., are getting acquainted with you this morning through your picture in the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and wish you a Happy New Year and a joyous birthday, and hope God will give us as many years to serve Him and teach us to do it well.

Faithfully yours,

Mrs. A. G. Massey, superintendent; Mrs. R. C. Helfenstein, president; Mrs. Ella R. M. Benson, Mrs. Florence E. Ford, Mrs. Ella Warrington, Dorothy Helfenstein, Anita Ford, Dorothy Raymond, Marie Grampp, Gladys Nissen, Beatrice Moore, Frieda von Reider, Sara Rebecca Clement, Pauline Helen Dixon, Mildren Still, Edna Still, Mildred Messick, Esther Krouse, Clarence M. Dyer, Granville Snyder, John H. Satterfield, Robert Reed, Stephen Schneider, Christian Grampp, George Morgan, Sara E. Garrison, Virginia Webb, Beatrice Moore, Ruth Webb, Bettie Deery, Mabel Driver, Clara Mattern, Charles Mattern, James Raymond, Marion Ford, William Webb, Olyn Snyder, Cauffield Reed, Rebecca Keith, Frances Handy, Anna Krouse, Maynard Reed, Benny Cartright, Romaine King, Phyllis Dixon.

(What a fine greeting from the young folks making up such a class to the oldest minister in the Christian Church. God bless the young and the old together.—EDITOR.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Housekeeping is the care of a house and a family. It is endless in its demands and in its duration. It is never finished. It may be classed as a fine art, though it is not named with the fine arts—architecture, painting, poetry, music and sculpture—but it is a fine art more universal than any of those classified as fine arts. It falls to the lot of women, in the main, and opens up a field for the exercise of a talent the most useful; in fact, the most beautiful. It is ethical and aesthetic. It is for a day and for life. It is a care and a pleasure. It is chiefly for others, as all fine arts are. Mother and house seem to be correlated. Housekeeping is the ideal art. The house may contain the rarest furniture, the most artistic decorations, the finest pictures, and the loveliest surroundings; but it is not complete without the touch of the housekeeper. A fine art cannot be described; it must be seen.

Think of breakfast, dinner, supper, all to be planned, prepared, and served. No artist ever had more delicate selection of material for painting than the good women who feed the world. The work is only partly done when the family retires from the meal so much enjoyed. Dishwater is no perfume, and the sink is no fountain of purity; but the after-service is a necessary part of housekeeping. What of making beds, sweeping floors, dusting furniture, and hanging curtains! Home is woman's dominion. Here she is supreme. Viewed only as work, it is a hard life; but it is more: it is the greatest service in the world. No place like home. It is the only place where men rest. It is the only place where love reigns. Other buildings may be larger, more costly, but here tired nature is restored by rest and sleep. Here, religion is most genuine, and character is at its best.

Folks who are bad at home, are awful away from home. There is nothing so bad as a bad home, and nothing so good as a good home. Good housekeeping is a large factor in a good home, for it includes the family as well as the house. It involves great responsibility as well as great service. The hand-service in the home is no more than the heart-service. Home is the altar of the Church, the heart of the State, the seat of education, and the fountain of social life. The good housekeeper does not see her work alone in floors, tables, beds, pictures, and yards; but in behaviour, friendliness, honesty, Christian character and obedience to law. Her work creates an atmosphere that is clean and wholesome, and it reflects the reign of love. Nobody but mother knows what it means to spend a lifetime in the narrow circle of home, with its daily repetition of work and cares.

Memory holds in store the treasures of the housekeeper, or rather homekeeper, and appreciates it all the more as the years go by. The backward look of age is as bright as the forward look of youth. There is no barren spot in the path of true life. It is all bright with hopes or memories; and the housekeepers of the world hold the highest place in the happiness of mankind. Christian women keeping house do not wear crowns; they crown the human race. It may seem like drudgery to the thoughtless and unwilling, but it is aesthetic and artistic to the lovers of home. Love is the greatest artist, after all. It was God who adorned the heavens and beautified the earth; but it was left for woman to make a new Eden for the world.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The financial problem would appear to be an engrossing one for our Southern Christian Convention when it assembles this May. There are other problems, to be sure, but they all root back in the financial program to be inaugurated. A little examination will clearly demonstrate this.

The subject of missions will certainly claim our attention. We will be told of the situation in Japan and Porto Rico, and of the plans to go forward there. We will rejoice over the growth and expansion of the work in the home field. But immediately the question of meeting obligations already incurred and of raising funds for the enlarged program will claim our best thought.

Christian education will be given earnest, prayerful consideration by our leaders when they assemble. We will rejoice in the rebuilding project at Elon, in the encouraging outlook at Bethlehem, in the promise of the correlated program of our Church for our whole educational work. We will be made to see, however, the outstanding need of our colleges, not only for buildings, but for endowment, necessities which must be supplied or they will pass from the stage of action. The financial program for Christian education will loom large.

The Orphanage always makes a good report, and we can see Bro. W. K. Holt reading it now. But the fact is that last year current expenses outran current income, and a large group of worthy children are knocking at our doors for admission in vain. Here again the financial key is needed to unlock the door of our opportunity.

Perhaps THE CHRISTIAN SUN is our most urgent financial problem. The Men and Millions fund has been supplying thousands of dollars for the past three years to keep our paper going. These funds will soon be exhausted. Then what of the future? We have never, as a Church, been fair with our Church paper. We have expected it to be the agency of publicity to all other Church enterprises and to be self-supporting. This is not honorable dealing for a great Christian brotherhood. We must this session adopt and put into execution a statesmanlike plan of supporting THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The budget plan I have suggested may not be the best plan for solving these problems. Discussion of this plan ought to clear the way for consistent and constructive action. We ought not to wait till we assemble in Convention to voice our convictions. Our discussion should be devoid of personal preference and entirely dispassionate. The good of the kingdom should be our only quest. We ought not to keep silence respecting so vital an issue. We ought not to try to side-step it. We ought to face it fairly and reverently, as our major avenue of service to the kingdom at this time. If a man's financial affairs are in jeopardy, no matter how good he is, he cannot do his best work. The same is true of a local Church and of a denomination. We must settle this matter.

One other word—the disposition of this problem is not with our leaders. They can legislate, but the members of our local Churches will accept or reject their action, and so either make or mar our future. That is why we need the most incisive public discussion of this issue. We are too prone to run our local affairs well and leave our general enterprises to the persons we have placed in authority to act for us. We expect Uncle Charlie to make the Orphanage go, for example, and Dr. Atkinson to cause mission to succeed. This is a false and indefensible attitude. These enterprises are ours. Every act of our Convention is ours to ratify or to nullify. Unless we support these measures, our cause cannot prosper.

Come, let's face our duty! Let's help solve these problems as our Master would wish us.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

We had a very sweet Christmas in our country. Everybody was quiet and orderly and seemed to enjoy the occasion in a very fitting manner. Our work since Christmas has been going slow on account of the inclement weather and almost impassable roads. We are considerably hedged in. I am under many obligations to the Church at Pleasant Grove for a nice raincoat given to me for a Christmas present, and also to the new Church at Roanoke for a nice purse of ten dollars, presented for the same purpose. I sincerely appreciate these gifts and I pray God to bless these good people with the richest of His goodness. I have entered upon the New Year's work with hands and heart full. I surely must be busy this good year, and yet I feel the need of the prayers and co-operation of the brethren in all my work.

Surely this new year will open up for us good and great opportunities. Let us press forward to the goal of greater success. We must do more as the years pass by, for the time grows shorter with us and opportunities close with the passing.

Let every member of our dear old Church get ready for sacrifice and service for our Master's glory. I have Antioch, Beulah, New Hope, Roanoke and Pleasant Grove Churches, and an immense amount of other work this year, so when you have occasion to think of me please think of the work I have and pray for me. Our college will need our increasing interest as time passes. We are engaged in a great task, and therefore we "cannot come down from the wall now."

If our people could only see what we have done at such a small outlay of cash, I think they would hasten with their contributions. I am writing all subscribers whose pledges are due, and asking for a small remittance.

Please don't put off this matter, for we need the amounts due, and I know that our dear Heavenly Father will bless you if you seek to do His will.

Wishing every one a Happy and Prosperous New Year, I am,

Yours in His service,

G. D. HUNT.

BOOKS AND LIBRARIES—THE TREASURE HOUSES OF MANKIND.

By WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

THE ORIGIN OF BOOKS.

"My library was dukedom large enough."—Shakespeare.

"That place that does contain my books, my best companions, is to me a glorious court, where hourly I converse with the old sages and philosophers."—Fletcher.

Our word "book" is derived from the Old English word "bok," which is closely akin to the Anglo-Saxon word "boc" and the Gothic word "boka." Among the Gothic tribes the beech tree was known as the "boc," and as they used slips of the beechwood for writing-tablets, the word "boc" became the origin of our English word "book," and also of the German word "buch." As these slips of wood could not be rolled, they were naturally gathered together like the leaves of modern paper. One of the very oldest manuscripts in existence—"the Upeala copy of the Scriptures"—is written on sheets of vellum, arranged as a "book." Early in the Christian era this form was adopted in Rome, while Northern nations used rolls down to a recent period. The word "volume" comes from the Latin noun volumen, which is derived from the verb "volvo," meaning to roll. The ancient volumen was a roll of papyrus or parchment written without any division of chapters or paragraphs. It further had many abbreviations of syllables and words and even of paragraphs which tended to make it almost illegible to the average reader. In all Teutonic tongues we find this word "boc" with many variations of both form and gender.

In ancient Babylon 2500 B. C., there were clay tablets in cuneiform characters for the preservation of important records. These were stored in jars on shelves with a form of index to show their contents. In old Ninevah, in the year 700 B. C., there was such a library founded, perhaps, by the great Sargon. The British Museum still has what is called the "Creation Series," and in the Musee de Louvre, at Paris, is a roll running back to 2500 B. C., with the sayings of Ptahhetep.

Papyrus made from the pith of a reed is as old as 4000 B. C., and was even used as late as 1000 A. D. It was about the tenth century that paper from linen rags began to be used, and in the twelfth century paper mills were beginning to be set up. It was near the end of the nineteenth century before papers made from wood-pulp, grass, and clay came fully into use.

As parchment took the place of the old papyrus, the modern form of the book began to take shape. The best-known examples of the volumen, or roll, are the Scriptures known as the Codex Sinaiticus and the Codex Vaticanus, which date back to the fourth century after Christ. Of course, the invention of printing made many changes in the form of books. Many important improvements were introduced by certain famous printers such as Aldus, the Elzevirs, Croxton, William Morris and others well known in the development of the "art preservative." The development of bookbinding followed the growth of the art of printing, naturally. The fifteenth and sixteenth centuries saw a wonderful advance in the art of fine bindings, with exquisite hand-tooling done in gold, showing the influence of the skilled artists of the East and reaching Europe through the workers of Venice, who took unusual pride in their fine work.

"Employ your time in improving yourselves by other men's documents; so shall you come easily by what others have labored hard for. Prefer knowledge to wealth; wealth is transitory, knowledge is perpetual."—Socrates.

The Treasure Vaults of Intellect.

Our libraries preserve the accumulated wisdom of all the ages. In a material-minded civilization we are prone to forget what books may mean to us. The world's first libraries were kept in temples, and were cared for by the priests, and a lover of books amid his treasures may minister, like a priest of old, to the needs of mankind. Petrarch says: "Some books relate to me the events of past ages, while others reveal to me the secrets of nature. Some teach me how to live, others how to die. Some by their vivacity drive away my cares and exhilarate my spirits, while others give fortitude to my mind and teach me the important lesson how to restrain my desires and depend wholly upon myself. They open to me, in short, the various avenues of all the arts and sciences, and upon their information I safely rely in all emergencies." Books should be as carefully selected as one's friends, and it is the largest part of a man's education to learn a few books well, and to learn how to find others that he needs, and to cultivate the power to draw from them for his needs in life.

Great lawyers must live near great libraries; great preachers must abide under the shadow of the great books of the world; great physicians must ever have their hands upon the medical lore of the past and the present; great teachers should live in an atmosphere of the great books and be on the alert constantly to introduce their pupils to the great thinkers of earth, past and present. It is the glorious heritage of the present day to every intelligent person that the great literary reasures of mankind are now available for all. The lack of serious reading and serious attention to libraries in our homes, our schools, our towns and cities, is one of the most serious indictments of present-day civilization. In the age of Charlemange, the gift of a copy of the Scriptures to a city or State was regarded as a princely donation, and was celebrated with great festivities; today we often overlook the inestimable blessing that books may bring to us, and seem to forget their presence. In his Areopagitica, John Milton says: "Books are not dead things, but do contain a potency of life in them as active as the soul whose progeny they are. * * * who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself—kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. A good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose in a life beyond life."

Every home should have its library; not necessarily a large one, but such a collection of books as is consistent with the means of its inmates, and this library and its constant use should be a part of the daily life of the inmates of that home. This is both reasonable and possible, for daily mental and spiritual food is even more important than the supplying of bodily food for daily physical needs. The great library at Thebes bore this inscription: "Books are medicine for the soul."

"Golden volumes! richest treasures,
Object of delicious pleasures!
You my eyes rejoicing please,
You my hands in rapture seize!
Brilliant wits and musing sages,
Lights who beamed through many ages!"
—Disraeli.

With the spread of learning, and the coming of universal education it is a shame that books do not occupy a higher place of honor in the daily lives of our people, and claim more attention than they now receive. A serious charge may be laid att he door of our schools and colleges for this state of affairs. Remember the enthusiasm of Fenelon for books, which led him to exclaim: "If the crowns of all the kingdoms of Europe were laid down at my feet in exchange for my books, and for my love of reading, I would spurn them all." If we are to be remembered by future ages, and if we are to perpetuate ourselves along our higher lines of thought, we have much still to do in the matter of forming the habit of universal book-reading, and the building and supporting of ample public and private libraries.

"No casket is rich enough, no casing sufficiently durable to honor and keep safe such a jewel as a precious book."—Charles Lamb.

Libraries, Past and Present.

When the great explorer, Layard, made his wonderful discoveries in ancient history, some seventy-five years ago, he came across the remains of the library of Assur-bani-pal, the Assyrian patron of learning. Oven ten thousand works on various topics were therein. These clay tablets were grouped and catalogued. Before this day even, there were libraries in ancient Babylon. Ancient Egypt, 6000 years ago, preserved her records of religion and science. The Alexandrian libraries were among the best known of all ancient times. Rome's greatness rose to its height only when libraries were built, and books cultivated and preserved. Constantine set up a library as an important part of his new and splendid capital city. The monastic libraries of France, England, Germany, and other countries show the growing interest in books during the middle ages.

The advances in methods of caring for books, and in making them more accessible to general readers, have so improved during the last few decades that the work of the skilled librarian is now ranked as one of the learned professions, and its great importance duly acknowledged. It may be of interest to glance at some of the world's finest collections of books.

The Bodleian Library, at Oxford, England, was founded by Sir Thomas Bodley in 1602. It now has about 1,000,000 volumes, and is the great European treasure-house in Oriental manuscripts.

The British Museum, founded in 1753, is in central London. It is one of the world's finest collections of books, maps, manuscripts, and ancient records.

There are important libraries at Cambridge, Edinburgh, Dublin, and other places, and in connection with many of the English cathedrals.

There are in the United States over ten thousand libraries with over 1,000 volumes each, and nowhere has the movement for the collection of books had more attention, although it has not even then received the aid due its just demands upon public appreciation. We have nearly forty State library commissions in our country. It is their duty to encourage the formation of libraries, and to offer helpful suggestions looking to this end. The State of New York is the pioneer in the matter of circulating libraries in this country. New York City also has the finest municipal libraby system in the world. This resulted from the consolidation in 1895 of the Astor and Lenox libraries with the new library foundation of several million dollars that was a bequest from Samuel J. Tilden. Andrew Carnegie, in 1901, added a large sum which enabled the library commission to establish sixty-five branch libraries. The present number of volumes under the control of the organization is about one and one-half million books. The Boston Public Library is one of the finest in the country and is housed in a magnificent building that in its art features surpasses many other well-known libraries. The Boston library is built in the Romanesque style, costing nearly three million dollars, with windows by La Farge, Burne-Jones and others, bronze doors by French, and paintings by Sargeant and Abbey. It must be seen to be appreciated.

The wonderful Library of Congress, at Washington, cost over six millions; is in the Italian Renaissance style. It is built of white granite, and its decorations and furnishings are superb. With its fountain, portrait busts, bronze doors, allegorical figures and mural paintings, it ranks as among the world's most notable buildings.

Our nation has grown to be the greatest and richest in all the world. Our material development has attracted the attention of all the earth. It is incumbent upon us to see that in our inellecual and spiritual life we rise to the heights made possible by our great material prosperity. Otherwise, prosperity will become a mockery, and our riches our shame.

"Of all the things which man can do or make here below, by far the most momentous, wonderful, and worthy are the things we call books."—Carlyle.

News reaching us concerning the work of the Elm Avenue Church, in Portsmouth, Va., is most gratifying. The work is looking up.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE NORTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

(Continued from Last Week.)

Wednesday Morning Session, January 9.

Mr. W. C. Pearce, noted Sunday School man, was the first speaker today, his subject being, "Religious Education for Children and Youth in Mission Fields." Frances Willard and the German Nietsze were contemporaries. While Willard was writing temperance into the thinking of the United States, Nietsze was writing military tactics into the thinking of Germany. From the former came a saloonless nation; from the latter a World War.

There were 1,700 vacation Bible schools held in China last year. The very kind and type of Sunday School we have here in United States seem to fit and are popular in all lands. One person in Brazil went thirty miles to start a Sunday School with one pupil. Now that school has over one hundred pupils. Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s have won their thousands to Christ in pagan lands. We ought to have a department of religious education in all our Church colleges, and in this department there should be trained teachers.

To reach the "kiddies" of the world will require time, patience, co-operation, many lives and much revenue; but it is worth the effort. "Suffer the children to come unto me, and forbid them not," applies to the children of Japan and Africa as much so as it does to the children of America. The most important need now in foreign lands is co-operation in Sunday School work. Dr. Pearce stressed the importance of teaching missions in all our Sunday Schools and then of planting Sunday Schools in all our mission fields.

Rev. Chas. W. Iglehart, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, came to America and to this Conference to represent the needs of Japan as occasioned by the recent earthquake. He was in Tokyo at the time of the earthquake, but could not describe the horrors that followed that awful catastrophe. He could only give experience and impressions. First, sorrow had come as a pall over all Japan. It had produced a certain sort of inertia. The people did not think anything but of preserving life. On the other hand, all Americans then had a plan. Not one-half of one per cent of enough provisions for relief came, but what did come inspired optimism. There was nothing but kindness everywhere on the part of Japanese and Americans. Any who had provisions, facilities or essentials divided them with others. Second, a common and universal suffering made brothers and friends of all. Divine human nature asserted itself. There was no looting, no robbery in Tokyo. But in Yokohama each took all he could; there was no government, no army, no place for three days. There was a lack of loyalty in Yokohama not witnessed in Tokyo. This was because so many nationalities dwell in Yokohama. Third, the whole Japanese horizon has been enlarged by the earthquake. They regard America especially in a broader, better, brighter light. They are saying: "We have misinterpreted the American spirit, for when they could have hurt us, they helped us."

There is now no yellow journalism in Japan in regard to the American spirit. The earthquake has blazed the way for a new day in the missionary life of Japan. The better elements of human nature had gained the ascendency in Japan following the earthquake, and Japanese are saying everywhere that there is something strangely good and wholesome and helpful in the religion of Christianity.

Bishop Tucker spoke of "The Influence of the Earthquake on the Evangelization of Japan." As Christians, we cannot see the place of such calamity, death and ruin; but in it we may now see an opportunity to advance. It has done much to drive away suspicion and hatred and prejudice. The Japanese did distrust our advances. This doubt and distrust have largely been wiped out. Many Japanese doubted if Christianity was anything more than a name—a new, useless, untried religion. But suddenly there has been opened up a state of mind favorable to the preaching and teaching of Christianity. Japan has never been so open and so ready and so susceptible to our religion as it is today. Reconstruction in Japan calls upon us to consider many things. Japan realizes that it needs a faith, a stabilizing faith. They must believe something. In her university centers there is lack of faith. There is even now a great effort to revitalize some native or pagan religion. We should now be ready to present Jesus Christ whom they should seek. Christianity has not failed, but has won a victory in Tokyo. In the first ten years of mission work there, only eleven converts were won. Now there are many self-supporting Christian Churches, and Tokyo is equipped with many benevolent and philanthropic organizations—all the outcome of Christianity. In Tokyo there is a complete answer to the criticism that Christianity can't adapt itself. It has done this in Japan and is working.

Many Japanese have been asking, "Is not Christianity a spent force?" Christianity is not a dominating force or power in Christian lands. Many of our schools, colleges, business houses, have persons with no passion to save souls. The influence from our country must be such as to show that Christ is as able to save now as He was 2,000 years ago when on earth. The earthquake has called for and emphasized the need of unity among Christian forces at work in Japan.

Japan has had compulsory education for forty years, and now 98 per cent of her population of school age are in school. Japan is now one of "the big four" nations of the earth. It is a compact mission field. Travel is quick and easy, and her people are alert to learn. It is today the most strategic mission field on the map. Shall we enter and do the work to which God is surely calling us, and which He has so wonderfully opened up and made ready for the gospel? The spiritual regeneration of Japan is the most essential need today. Japanese ideals have been greatly influenced by Christ, and in a measure Japan is moving Christward today. Men, women and money are needed in Japan for carrying the gospel as never before. In compact, solidified Japan, we Christians are divided into many denominations. This ought not to be so. We must have a unifying force in Japan. As Jesus looks upon this, the greatest aggregation on earth, He says: "I have compassion on the multitude: give ye them to eat."

J. O. ATKINSON.

(To be Continued.)

FOURTH QUARTER OF THE FOURTH YEAR.

February 1, 1924, began the fourth quarter of the fourth year of our Men and Millions pledges, and April 30, 1924, closes the fourth quarter of the fourth year. All of which means that after the present quarter we will only have one more year in which to collect and pay up our Men and Millions pledges before the five-year period will expire. This five-year period will expire April 30, 1925. It is hardly to be supposed that those who have made no payment by next year will be in position to pay up for the entire five years. It is to be supposed, however, that those who make an effort and a real sacrifice to pay something during this quarter of the fourth year will be in a position a year hence to make another payment, if not to pay up in full. The longer we delay this vital matter, the more difficult it will be to pay the pledges.

A recent statement went out to all the pastors and all the captains showing what per cent of amounts pledged had been paid at the end of the quarter November 30, 1923. A statement will be issued in a few days and sent to all the pastors and all the captains showing what each Church has paid up to January 31, 1924. We feel, with this statement in hand, that the pastors can make announcements and appeals to their people that will count tremendously for this great cause at this crucial time.

Other churches which put on such movements, are reporting progress in these last months of their campaigns and somehow or other, the writer has faith in his Christian brethren and sisters to believe that they will not neglect nor be indifferent to the most beneficent, worthy, meritorious and holy Movement our dear Church ever undertook. Brethren and friends, in the name of Him whose we are and to whose Church we belong, we cannot fail our obligations in such a time and in such a matter.

Lieut.-Gov. J. E. West, the Chairman of our Board and of our Movement, printed in last week's SUN a list of the churches which have made rapid strides in meeting their quotas. We are exceedingly anxious to see this list of honor increase very rapidly. Any and all who care for our dear Church and this great Movement can aid materially in increasing the list. I sincerely trust that the next statement sent to our Chairman, after the present quarter is all in, will make a much better showing than that which he printed last week.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MISSIOARY OFFERINGS FOR JANUARY.

Wakefield, Va., $2.70; Ambrose, Ga., $3.50; Henderson, N. C., $5.28; High Point, N. C., $1.25; New Lebanon, Wentworth, N. C., $2.48; Union (Surry), Dendron, Va., $1.69; Linville, Va., $2.25; Winchester, Va., $7.28; Pleasant Grove, News Ferry, Va., $3; Rosemont, Berkley, Va., $8.22; Holland, Va., $8.70; Reidsville, N. C., $3.93; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $1.53; Leaksville, Va., $3; Portsmouth, Va., $6.59; Winchester, Va., $4.74; Holy Neck, Holland, Va., $16; Pleasant Union, Lillington, N. C., $5.55; Brown's Chapel, Spies, N. C., 55c; New Lebanon, Elberon, Va., $5; Elam, New Hill, N. C., $3.68; Ingram, Va., $4; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., $3.49; New Providence, Burlington, N. C., $2.19; Beulah, Wadley, Ala., $1.80; High Point, N. C., $1.73; Wadley, Ala., $3.38; Union (Southampton), Franklin, Va., $1.65; Liberty, Vance, N. C., $1.23; Durham, N. C., $20.98; Dry Run, Seven Fountains, Va., $2.35; Turner's Chapel, Colon, N. C., $1.28; Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., $43.60; Burlington, N. C., $70.10; Burlington, N. C. (special for mountain work), $6.53—total for January, $261.23.

We are grateful to these good Sunday Schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home, in Carroll County, Va., and abroad, in Japan.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

January 31st ended the third quarter of the fourth year of Men and Millions Movement. We are very happy to report that some Churches have reached 100 per cent in the payment of their quota, several have reached 50 per cent, and many others 25 per cent. This should inspire all of us to do our best. The fourth quarter of the fourth year began February 1st. Here is devoutly hoping that every pastor and every captain will urge their congregation to make most liberal payments on the pledges which ends the fiscal year April 30, 1924. We feel that many can now pay and will pay, if attention is directed properly to this important matter. By personal contact, in group meetings and through individual letters, pastors and captains have been seen and written to and it is now up to the leaders in each congregation to lay the payment of these pledges upon the hearts of the members.

Any one wishing to know how much he owes on his pledge can easily find out by writing the undersigned or by inquiring of his captain or of his pastor. Brethren and friends, the time has come for action in this, the best and holiest, movement our Church has ever put on. We cannot longer defer payment on these pledges wisely. In the language of the inspired writer: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." The time has come, the hour has struck when we Christians must go forward in this movement.

Our chairman, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, who sponsored the movement from the beginning, has written some most telling and thrilling articles to THE SUN recently. It will be an unspeakable tragedy for us not to respond to his pleas and do our duty in this strategic hour.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

One of the most loyal and active of our Churches is Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., pastor. This Church, though young in years, gives liberal support to every interest and enterprise of our Convention. No call goes to it unheeded. It was the privilege of the mission secretary to worship with Dr. Harward and his wide-awake congregation on a Sunday night some weeks since. We were more than gratified at the wonderful progress the work has made under the consecrated leadership of Bro. Harward. The congregation was large, intelligent and attentive. The singing was excellent, and the whole period of worship manifested evident study and effort on the part of all interested, to make the services helpful and inspiring. Dr. Harward is building up in the Church a constituency of intelligent, interested and loyal laymen, as well as faithful and active women, in all that pertains to kingdom interest. This congregation and what it is doing would put to shame many of our older congregations in all that pertains to push, progress and development in kingdom growth and interest.

In the request for a Christmas offering for Japanese relief and reconstruction work, the congregation sent in $22.65, an amount equal to some of our very large congregations. The Sunday School makes a regular monthly contribution to missions and to the Orphanage, has an active wide-awake Woman's Missionary Society and is carrying on in all the activities of Convention and Conference. We heartily congratulate Dr. Harward, his faithful wife and the interested and active leaders who are doing so much to build up a permanent and progressive Church and constituency.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS COLLECTIONS.

As some Churches oversubscribed quotas and some did not subscribe quota, we publish the percentages of the quota, which we believe is fair to all Churches.

Eastern Virginia Conference.

Churches that have paid 75 per cent or over on the total quota—Berea, Nansemond.

Churches that have paid 50 per cent or more—Waverly.

Churches that have paid 25 per cent or more—Franklin, Norfolk (First), Ivor, Johnson's Grove, Newport News, Rosemont, Suffolk, South Norfolk, Wakefield.

North Carolina Conference.

Churches that have paid 75 per cent or over on the total quota—Elon College, 100 per cent; Pleasant Grove, Va., 100 per cent; Raleigh, 100 per cent.

Churches that have paid 50 per cent or more—Sanford.

Churches that have paid 25 per cent or more—Henderson, Mt. Auburn, Turner's Chapel.

Valley of Virginia Conference.

Churches that have paid 75 per cent or over on the total quota—Timber Ridge, 100 per cent; Washington, D. C., 100 per cent.

Churches that have paid 50 per cent or more—Mayland.

Churches that have paid 25 per cent or more—Antioch.

Georgia and Alabama Conference.

Churches that have paid 75 per cent or over on the total quota—Wadley.

Churches that have paid 25 per cent or more—Ambrose, Vanceville, Cragford.

Who said the Churches could not pay their pledges? Four years will expire during May, 1924, which means that 80 per cent should be paid by that time. I shall feel greatly encouraged if the Churches pay 40 per cent by that time.

Results todate show progress. Number of Churches out of 190 paying full quota, 5; number paying over 75 per cent, 3; number paying over 50 per cent, 3; number paying over 25 per cent, 16.

All of the Churches in the 25 per cent class can go 40 or 50 per cent by May, 1924.

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

VIRGINIANS ALSO HAVE MONEY.

Refering to my recent article, "An Appeal to North Carolinians," a Suffolk friend calls my attention to the fact that 76,257 Virginians paid on incomes of $208,331,751, and 44,161 North Carolinians paid on incomes of $127,992,951. Of course, I knew that, and everybody else who reads a daily newspaper. I was not comparing the individual incomes or wealth of Virginia and North Carolina. I was trying to show the industrial growth of North Carolina, and in doing so gave the corporations credit for paying one hundred million dollars of taxes. I am satisfied that North Carolina has made rapid strides industrially, without reference to any other State. If memory is correct (data not before me), all the taxes paid to the United States by North Carolina was over one hundred million more than that paid by Virginia. North Carolina was one of four States in the Union to show an increase, while Virginia was included in the forty-five States which showed a decrease. Readers can draw their own conclusions. Do not let an incidental matter withdraw attention from the main issue, which is: pay up pledges to Men and Millions.

J. E. WEST.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

I find in the bulletin issued by the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., Dr. W. T. Walters, pastor, an item that seems to me of deep significance and of real worth. The item referred to appeared under the head of notices in the January 27th bulletin, and reads as follows:

"The principles of the Christian Church will be the prayer-meeting topics for the next five weeks. The subject January 30th will be 'Jesus Christ the Head of the Church.' If you are interested in the Church we want you to come."

One wonders why these very topics are not more often used in our Christian Churches by much older in years and richer in experience than the Richmond Church. One wonders if we Christians do not take it for granted that all our members know just the principles, position and polity of the Church. Is there not danger that we take too much for granted in this particular? The writer chanced to be on a committee before whom a candidate for the ministry, from one of our own Christian Churches, appeared for examination. On being asked if he had ever read the principles of the Christian Church, replied in the negative. Being further questioned if he knew what the principles were, his answer was in the negative. No doubt the pastor of that Church had for years taken for granted that this young man and others knew of the principles of the Church. I wonder if the example of Dr. Walters is not a fine one for many of our Churches to follow.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THIS SOUNDS GOOD.

"Dear Bro. Atkinson,—I herewith enclose $6. which amount is the final payment on my Men and Millions pledge, which pledge was made as a member of Zion Church. I wish you great success in your good work."

The writer of that was a good sister who has been prompt and loyal from the beginning of the movement. Her letter reveals her joy, and also imparts joy.

Another: "Dear Bro. Atkinson,—Enclosed find check of $10, same being amount to pay pledge of my wife and self the quarter ending November 30th. Please, with your receipt, write me amount of balance due to pay the pledges of my wife and self in full to the end of the five-year period, April 30, 1925. We wish to pay it all up now. With best wishes for this good movement."

Such letters are hopeful and helpful, and indicate the feeling many are experiencing these good days. May their kind multiply.

J. O. ATKINSON.

A CORRECTION.

In the list of Sunday Schools given, page eight, CHRISTIAN SUN, January 17th, New Lebanon, Va., occurs twice. One should have been New Lebanon, N. C., Bro. E. R. Moore, Madison, N. C., superintendent. There may have been others errors which we ourselves or the printer got wrong. We will certainly be glad to make any correction, as we are anxious to keep this list correct and for all to know the Sunday Schools that are proving loyal to the Southern Christian Convention and to their own Christian Convention and to the great work of home and foreign missions.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

Who waits to see what is going to happen, still waits. Subscribe for THE SUN and learn what is happening.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

February 17, 1924.

Subject: "Joshua and the Conquest of Canaan."—Lesson Joshua 1-11; 23, 24.

Golden Text: "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which Jehovah your God spake concerning you."—Josh. 23:14.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 47.

"Moses my servant is dead." And there was something pathetic about his death. For many years he had been leading his people to the promised land. He had faced insubordination and ingratitude, but by virtue of a self-sacrificing spirit and heroic measures, he had at last brought them to the very border of that land. And yet he knew that he could not enter with his people; he could only see it afar off. Somehow or other, we linger over that scene where he climbs to the top of Mount Nebo, and there sees spread out before him the land of his hopes and the goal of his dreams. And then he dies in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off. What a parable of life!

"Moses my servant is dead." The worker dies, but the work goes on. And in this case, as in most other cases, it goes on through others who have been trained and who are ready for the work. "Joshua, the son of Nun, was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him." Here is a lesson for both old and young. Leaders can do no better than to train younger men and women for the work; younger men and women can do no better than to prepare themselves for the work. Let no man decry the lack of opportunity. Let him prepare himself for the opportunity which will come. The world is always waiting for the man who can deliver the goods.

"Now, therefore, arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people unto the land that I do give unto them." It was not a time for weeping; it was a time for action. The land was before them. It had been given them. But they must possess it. They were to have only such land as they subdued. It is the divine way. What an insipid thing life would be if we did not have to earn things!

The lesson covers thirteen chapters, and they must be read if the full significance of the movement is to be learned. He who turns to these chapters with an open mind will find that they will be rewarding beyond measure, for they are as interesting as they are inspiring. This is especially true of young people, who in this day face great challenges in their lifework. There were never so many lands to be possessed. And the same principles that made it possible for Joshua to go in and possess the land will make it possible for young people to go in and possess the land today.

The lesson includes Joshua's commission to service, the crossing of the Jordan, the capture of Jericho, the failure and victory at Ai, the conquest of the land—the division of the land is omitted—and Joshua's farewell address. The thoughts given below are drawn from the entire thirteen chapters.

1. God's work requires different kinds of workers at different times. Moses was an organizer and a law-giver Joshua was a warrior.
2. It takes courage to do the Lord's work.
3. Courage comes from a sense of divine sanction and presence.
4. No man is able to subdue external enemies until he has subdued the enemies within himself.
5. Because a man fears God, he need fear no man.
6. Godliness is profitable unto all things.
7. Joshua was selected because Joshua was prepared.
8. God exerts His power to bring men out of the land of bondage. He also exerts it to bring them into the land of promise.
9. God helps men who help themselves. And He usually helps men to help themselves. ("The manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land.")
10. Victory is not always to the strong—it is to the pure.
11. Victory has its dangers.
12. Blessings depend upon obedience to God's law. (Spiritual blessings.)
13. It is a good thing to recall God's dealings with us.
14. The loss of a leader is not a time for weeping; it is a time for action.
15. Reading the Bible is not enough; we must meditate upon it.
16. Spiritual blessings are ours only as we appropriate them.
17. Righteousness exalteth an individual as well as a nation.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

February 17, 1924.

Topic: "What is sin? How does it affect character?"—1 John 3:4; Rom. 3:9-20.

Daily Readings: Ex. 5:1-9; Rom. 1:18-25; Isa. 1:1-9; Rev. 3:14-22; 2 Tim. 3:1-9; Rom. 6:1-14.

Some modern folks deny the fact of sin. They say it does not exist, except in the mind. It is just a form of error. Again there are those who give half-hearted recognition to sin, but they give it other, and less harsh-sounding names. They call it weakness, mistakes, wild-oats sowing, and other misleading names. Still others recognize the fact of sin, but do not realize its real nature or effect. They speak of "little sins"—as if there were any such thing as little sins. In short, there is much evasion and much confusion in regard to sin.

The Bible calls a spade a spade, and it emphasizes the fact of sin throughout. In fact, the theme of the Bible is, in a general way, the problem of a good God saving men from sin. A noted Japanese preacher has a three-hour sermon on "Man, Sin and Salvation," and he is getting back to fundamentals when he discusses these themes. Sin is a fact in the Bible, a tragic fact.

And it is a fact in life. Ignore it if you can, call it what you will, but the fact of sin remains. We have only to look around us to see the fact of sin, and its terrible effects. Marred bodies, crippled minds, enslaved souls, broken lives, wrecked homes, ruined characters—a hundred and one things bear testimony to the awful fact and effect of sin. It is one of the great facts of life with which we have to deal.

So far as I could find, the Bible defines sin as sin in only four places. Rom. 14:23: "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Jas. 4:17: "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." 1 Jno. 3:4: "For sin is the transgression of the law," and 1 John 5:17: "All unrighteousness is sin." But there are numerous references to sin throughout the Bible. An interesting insight as to the forms or nature of sin is given by the different terms that are given to it in the New Testament. I quote from Trench: "Sin may be regarded as the missing of a mark or aim; the overpassing or trangressing of a line; disobedience to a voice; the falling where one should have stood upright; ignorance of what one should have known; diminishing of that which should have been rendered in full measure; non-observance of a law." Thus we see that there are sins of omission as well as of commission. Not to do is sometimes a bad, or worse, than to do. So much for what sin is. Now, for what it does.

Sin may express itself in many forms. Immorality, covetousness, impurity, irreverence, unbelief, selfishness, disobedience, willfulness, lying, stealing, indifference, etc., are manifestations of sin. But whatever the form, the effect of sin is eventually the same—death. The wages of sin is death. Be not deceived, sin involves death, physically, mentally, morally, spiritually.

1. Sin has blinding power. It has a subtile way of deceiving people. It makes good sometimes appear as evil, and often makes evil appear as good. People who live in sin usually do not see things straight. Having eyes, they see not.

2. Sin has binding power. Some men—most Americans take pride in the fact that they are free. But Jesus says that whosoever committeth sin is the bond-servant of sin. Many men are not free at all. They are abject slaves of sin. Sin has a way of binding people and rendering them less and less free.

3. Sin has blighting power. Name any virtue or worth-while quality of life, and reflection will show that sin will blight it. It is no respector of persons. One of the most tragic things about sin is that it blights the finer things of life. It violates virtue, distorts truth, deadens conscience, smothers sympathy, kills self-respect, weakens will-power, destroys powers, impairs usefulness, and makes happiness impossible. It causes disease, suffering and death, not only on the guiltyt but on the innocent. Sin is the arch enemy of all mankind.

Jesus said that sin had its roots in the heart or inner life. Thus it is that men and women must have Christ in their hearts. It is not enough to be reformed; a person must be transformed. And it was for this purpose that Jesus came. "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins."

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

We do not all agree as touching the work of the Holy Spirit, or sanctification, or sin. There is monotony in a conversation in which there is no disagreement. And when all the Church was forced to agree, the dark ages arrived, thought became flabby, and the Church sinned terribly. However, on the great fundamentals, all Christians should agree. One of the great fundamentals is the fact that there is the Holy Spirit. Without Him our work would be in vain. Without Him we could not read the mere material pages of our English Bible in such understanding manner as causes us to believe Him to be the Word of God. As touching the manner of our receiving the Holy Spirit, I believe He works how and when and where He chooses. He prepares us in His own way for His coming into our hearts. One devout follower looks for Him at an altar in the house of God in a set and definite manner, and the Heavenly Father gives the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him, even as earthly fathers give good gifts to their children (Luke 11:13). Another devout follower looks for Him in some hour of crisis, sorrow, or when he faces a stupendous task or lesson, and he finds Him. The disciples were not in the Church or synagogue, but were herding together in hiding from the enraged Jews when Jesus came through closed doors and breathed on them and said unto them: "Receive ye the Holy Spirit" (John 20:22). After this, at another time, when they were feeling little, lonely and incompetent before the greatest task ever undertaken by mortal men, when they had prayed many days they were all filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:4). So we see, God gives the Holy Spirit as He wishes. There is no confining Him to human plans, times, or places. He is God and His ways are as high above our ways as the heavens are above the earth.

If one or more persons feel they face a particular task, a mighty undertaking, and seriously mean to do something with the special empowering of the Holy Spirit, and can be agreed and in one accord at a set time in any definite place. Pentecost did not come to an established synagogue, although the apostles used the synagogues as meeting-places, just as Jesus did, whenever convenient. I see no good reason for not praying for a special anointing of the Holy Spirit, but I am as ready to advocate asking for Him continuously for the no less great task than that of living a personally pure and consecrated life. He is no doubt a "second blessing" to many, but to others—and I believe to the former class also—He is a continuous well of water springing up unto eternal life. Some receive Him one way, some another, some receive Him at one time, some another; but all who receive Him receive Him for the sanctifying of their souls, i. e., for the "setting apart" unto some definite task.

Jesus was born of the flesh once, suffered for our sins once, died on the cross once, was resurrected unto life once, in order that He might establish once and for all the Christian Church upon the earth. As He came once at a definite time and predicted place, so also He has sent once and for all on the Day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit to the Church He died to establish. This is the great fact of the Church, as Christ is the great fact of Christianity. This is a fact we cannot overlook, and we dare not ignore, because He comes in the name of Jesus, He teaches the Church all things, and brings to its memory all that Jesus has said (John 14:26). All who are a part of the Church have been made so under the power of the Holy Spirit, even at the price of the blood of Jesus. And every where the gospel has been preached and men have heard it, the Holy Spirit has fallen upon those who have heard the Word.

"While Peter yet spoke these words, the Holy Spirit fell on all them that heard the Word. And they of the circumcision that believed were amazed, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 10:44, 45). That is to say, these Christian Jews were surprised to see that God honored believing Gentiles also, so that they too became a part of His Church. When they became children of God they became possessed of the Holy Spirit.

Sanctification in one sense of the word is a growing process in contrast with regeneration, as a special act—being born is a special act. Growing in grace is a process. Now for emphasis, and in order that there be no seeming contradiction, I repeat that there is a receiving of the Holy Spirit in becoming a child of God—a part of His Church, which has the Holy Spirit without measure—and also a special empowering of the Holy Spirit which is a mysterious thing coming as He does when and where and how He chooses. Some natures are more susceptible to spiritual growth than others—gaving different gifts—but we are all members of the same body. So those who have grown more holy than we, should learn from our common Lord to be patient and loving and kind even to those who might doubt. Lord Christ was compassionate and saw that Thomas received all he required for his doubting mind. Another found comfort in confessing: "I do believe; help thou mine unbelief."

And finally Jesus Christ Himself taught His disciples to pray daily for the forgiveness of sins. "Give us this day our daily bread," and in that same prayer, "Forgive us our sins." Now, they could not pray the whole prayer daily—in keeping with its word "daily"—without praying every day for the forgiveness of sins. I believe Jesus instructed His disciples aright, and always with an humble, penitent heart, we should approach our sinless Saviour in prayer.

There have been at times bitter dissentions between devout students over these sacred things—overemphasis of either side is harmful; dogmatism without love is Church-dividing; and the day is too needy, the Church is too hungry, for brethren to quibble and quarrel over the degree or manner of their experiences in Christ Jesus.

The great question is: Have you had an experience at all in Christ Jesus? If so, "As ye received Christ Jesus, so walk in Him." "And they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy" (Rev. 3:4).

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Norfolk, Va.

ELON NOTES.

Prof. Luther A. Weigle, dean of the school of religious education at Yale University, who is now conducting a course of lectures in Greensboro, visited the college this morning and spoke to the students on the subject, "Jesus the Ideal Teacher."

J. Foster Barnes, who came with Dr. Weigle from Greensboro, favored the students with several song selections—"Vale," by Russell; "Mah Lindy Lou," by Strickland, and "On the Road to Mandala."

President Harper presided over the chapel exercises, and introduced Dr. Weigle. In opening his address, Prof. Weigle declared that Jesus taught with authority, and that the source of that authority came from the fact that He knew how to teach.

In summing up the high points of the address, Prof. Weigle declared that Jesus was an ideal teacher, because—

First, He had the ability to make His pupils understand; that He always had examples to illustrate and figures of speech, and used the story method.

Second, that He was able to stir folks to think for themselves, and that He was a master in this respect.

Third, that Jesus led His pupils on to clear, clean-cut, essential conclusions. He chose to use extreme cases so as to leave no doubt of the proper conclusion.

Fourth, the genuinely live way in which He taught. He used no formal method because He was not teaching subjects, but men; and Fifth, that He had a supreme faith in His pupils.

These outstanding principles in the success of teaching, Dr. Weigle said, in closing, are applied today in all modern teaching.

At the close of the chapel exercises, Prof. Weigle met with the Elon students who were planning to attend Yale University after graduation here, several expressing their intention of taking graduate work there.

While Prof. Weigle was at the college, he looked over the buildings and plans, and expressed himself very heartily in his praise of the work that was being undertaken here. Especially was he impressed with the promise of service by the new Christian education building.

C. M. CANNON.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Sunday, January 13th, was very pleasantly spent with the people of the Seagrove Church. On Saturday, Rev. J. T. Klapp, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, and Miss Essie Cotten and I went down on an automobile. While there, we were entertained in the homes of Mr. D. A. Cornelison and Mr. O. D. Lawrence.

At the regular Sunday morning service, Rev. P. T. Klapp preached. At a special meeting just after preaching services, a Woman's Missionary Society was organized, with Mrs. D. A. Cornelison, president; Mrs. A. C. Harriss, vice-president; Miss Lizzie Lawrence, secretary-treasurer. While the new society is small in numbers, a great, good work will no doubt be done by these women, who are so interested in the work.

In the afternoon, an every-member canvass for the Conference and local Church budget was put on. This is a very progressive step and will mean renewed interest and growth for the Church. There are only about thirty-five members of the Church, but they are all interested and work together for the kingdom.

At 7:30 a Christian Endeavor meeting was held, with Howard Auman, leader. There was a large number of young people present, and several of them took part in the meeting.

At the evening service, Rev. Crutchfield, pastor of the Church, conducted services, followed by Communion service.

PATTIE COGHILL.

BEGINS NEW PASTORATE.

Dr. C. H. Rowland is leaving Franklin this week for Greensboro, N. C., where he will immediately assume the duties of pastor of the First Christian Church of that city. Having finished his pastorate of twenty-three years here, we are deeply grieved at the loss of him, and congratulate the people of Greensboro in securing his services. He is being accompanied by his family to Greensboro, where they will reside. We shall miss them.

J. L. ROUNTREE.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

LIVING FROM THE HEART OUT.

"Love avoids doing wrong to one's fellow-man, and is therefore complete obedience to law."—Rom. 3:10 (Mod. Sph. Ver.).

One of the best men it is my privilege to know is a Roman Catholic—a fact one would never guess unless one should see him at mass. He lives like a child of God, in his home and everywhere else. He is always helping somebody and making things easier for those around him. He seems to love everybody, and everybody who knows him seems to love him.

This friend said to me one day: "My father's motto for his children was, 'Love your neighbor, and set nobody a bad example. Remember, that everybody is a soul, and woe be unto the man who harms a soul.'"

Saith the Scriptures: "Carry out these injunctions, because you know the critical period in which we are living."—Paul.

Prayer.—O Lord, come quickly and reign on Thy throne in our hearts, lest the evils of selfishness, covetousness, pride and uncleanness come in and stead them away. Forbid that anything shall abide within to work against us, but give us strength to resist and cleave to our Saviour. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE CONQUERING SPIRIT.

"Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."—Jno. 6:33.

To all who believe and follow Christ, He is courage, hope, truth and life. These things are better than medicine to a sick person. He is the basis of all justice. Cruel and inhuman practices fall before Him. All judgment seats are His, although He Himself was a victim of the most cruel injustice the world has ever known. He set in motion influences which will strip the world of its injustices and lift law above the reach of might and hate, greed and graft. He was not a lawyer, but He was infinitely more.

There were only thirty-three years from the manger to the cross, but in that brief time, though not a governor nor a king, He founded an empire of righteousness for all eternity and won a love for His people before which all else pales away. He never commanded an army, nor stormed a fortress, nor led a charge, but He conquered and won the greatest victories of the world. His was a warfare of love against sin, and He won by purity, gentleness, goodness, self-denial, moral worth and dignity of character, and established the eternal brotherhood of man. Quality of soul was His chief defense. With this He conquered the devil, and He has promised that we shall be conquerers, too, through Him. Shall we?

Prayer.—Dear Father, we love Thee for Thy love, and for Thy all-conquering strength. It is better than all the riches of the world to know Thee and to have Thy overcoming power for our salvation. Hold us steadily in Thy presence. Let nothing weaken our faith nor our hold on Thee. Be our strength and give us the mastery over all things pertaining to our life and character. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MY SHIELD AND MY GLORY.

*"But Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head * * * I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the Lord sustained me."*—Psa. 3:3-5.

That is a sweet and heartening song, and all the sweeter when we note the estate of the songster. It is the song that rises out of dreariness that exercises such a fascinating ministry: "At midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God, and the prisoners heard them." And here is the singer of this psalm, not dwelling in luxurious ease, in the inspiring warmth of a glorious summer; with him it is winter-time, and it is night; yet out of the winter and the night there rises the jubilant strain of this triumphant trust in God.

It is a beautiful figure, this figure of the shield! It suggests the all-sufficient protection which comes from the companionship of God. The Lord will be to him a shield against the foe without. The world will not be permitted to pass beyond its threats. Winter-time may breed envy, malice and uncharitableness. I need some defense against these foes within. This re-enforcement I obtain from my God. I claim all real protections as the ministry of the King. Anything which shelters me from the enemy is the armor of God. "The shields of the earth belong to God."—Psa. 47:9. We claim them all.

In the approbation of God, I find my honor. The crown that man can give me, man can take away. There are no crowns like God's crowns. He gives to me "the crown of life." Every faculty in my being shines in the abundance of life.

Happy the man who delights to recall the thought of God before he sinks into slumber! No peace like the peace of him who, when he awakes in the morning, gives first welcome to the thought of God. The man who finds in God his shield, who seeks in Him his glory, and who makes in Him his boast, will have mornings of joy, and evening-times of light.—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

THURSDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN'S TITLE-DEEDS.

"In your patience possess ye your souls."—Luke 21:19.

To possess one's soul is an infinitely grander thing than to possess some magnificent estate. There is many a man who owns thousands of broad acres who has never owned the fair realm of his own soul. Ask him for an inventory of his estate, and he will produce one recording the contents of every nook and corner in his wide domain. Ask him for an inventory of his soul! Ask him what sacred powers he has in the world within, and what control he has of them, and whether there is peace and harmony in that mysterious kingdom! He can record his wealth in personality; ask him what treasures he has in personality! In what measure does he possess his own soul? There is something grimly ironical in a man owning many things and yet not owning himself. He has gained the world; he has never gained his own soul.

Now, the secret of self-possession is to be found in Christ. It is through Him that we discover our souls. We find ourselves in finding Him. We never know how much there is in us until we are discovering how much there is in Christ. Our powers remain like sleeping seeds until "the heavenly air is breathing round."

We do not come into these possessions in a day. The title-deeds may be ours in a moment. They become ours by faith in the living Christ, and they are handed to us in the moment when faith is born. But every day of faithful walking with the Lord brings us more and more into the possession of our spiritual estates, as every day we have new surprises in "the unsearchable riches in Christ." Therefore, "in your patience, possess ye your souls."—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

FRIDAY.

RIGHT THINKING.

"Be ye renewed in the spirit of your mind."—Eph. 4:23.

Somebody said: "Well doing is conditioned on well being." Right thinking is dependent upon right being. It is not always this way. Right thinking to lots of people seems to be a kind of "think as I do, or you are wrong" standard. It does seem that we are moved to our judgments, decisions and actions by instinct, passion, impulse, likes and dislikes, then we do our thinking afterward. We have an impulse and we act. Perhaps we have struck a blow that brings us into endless trouble, or said an unkind word which we would give the world to take back. We say: "I didn't think." But the worst of it is that when we have acted, whether right or not, we begin to think and summons all our thoughts to justify our action. This is true not only in the little mistakes we make, but also in our little opinions and prejudices in every-day life. We suddenly form our opinion of some one and then we find ourselves searching for thought—reason—to justify that opinion whether it is based on merit or not. We fall in love with a person without considering any of the reasons why. Is this right? Can right thinking ever obtain by this process? Yes, by accident. Action upon our impulses should be retarded until they can be sent around to the mind and reason and seasoned with the salt of good judgment before we act upon them.

Christ's way is to purify the source. Back of the soul is a spirit which Christ says is the source of everything, and must be clean, renewed and set right. If our impulses and passions are clean and right, out of these will come right thinking. Paul did not give up his old life and put on the new because it seemed to be the reasonable thing to do, but he said, "The love of God constraineth me to do this, and woe is me if I do it not."

Prayer.—Our Father, forbid that we shall possess the comforts of this world which Thou hast given us and grow high-minded; forbid that we shall act upon anything without the purity of heart that Thou dost give. Purify the fountains of our hearts, and so will our thoughts be pure, and thus we shall build for eternity. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S PERFECTING GRACE.

"His work is perfect, for all His ways are justice."—Deut. 32:4.

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 Jno. 1:9.

"His work is perfect." Have we trusted Him to perfect this grace in us? Repent daily of thy sins and turn thy soul to him.

Let Us Pray.

Dear Father, we give Thee thanks for Thy nearness in love and in the blessings of life—health, strength and protection. Thy way is the way of life and holiness.

Help us to come to Thee humbly confessing our sins. Be merciful unto us and forgive us. May our transgressions be as the wind that passeth away, and forbid that we shall ever turn to even the least of them again, provoking Thy wrath. Turn our thoughts to Thee and things divine, and our feet to the light of Thy path.

May we draw from Thee constant respect for our covenant with Thee, that it may be light when we reach the dark places. In all our musings on Thee, make us to drink abundantly of the depths of Thy refreshing. Protect us from the fault of Israel who followed too much their own desires, but may we compare our desires with Thy will, and, as we set our watches by the standard time, may we set our wills to Thine, lest we be estranged from harmony with Thee and our souls be denied the blessedness of Thy table; our days be vanity and our years a terror. But grant our prayers, Lord, and so shall our lives yield an increase in Christian fruit, and thine be the glory, world without end. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mk. 2:27.

It was on the sixth day of creation that man appeared, just before the Sabbath. All other work had been accomplished. God now creates His highest workmanship—man, who is to be His representative on earth throughout the ages. To be the proper representative, he must be one with God, have knowledge like Him, a righteousness like His, and a love like His,etc., and it must have been a question with the Lord, "How is this to be done?"

How is man to be made to realize his spiritual existence and relations, his mission and his dependence? How shall he be made to be like his Creator and constrained to keep in communion with Him? How must he develop his spiritual nature above the purely physical and material? How shall he be saved from sin, moral lapses and lifted up unto true holiness? The Lord said, "I will make the Sabbath, a day divine in its sanctity and human in its opportunity. To keep this day true to his mission as a representative of God, he will be like me." It was thus that God gave man the Sabbath as a symbol of his greatest need; and it is thus that it has been handed down to us as a reminder of our relation to Him and our mission to the world; and to be used faithfully as a means of obtaining the best gifts of the soul. It is a day of training for the dominions of righteousness and holiness over the things of this world, and for the glories of heaven.

Prayer.—Our Father, grant that we shall never compromise or parley about the claims of our Lord's day. Forbid that we shall ever permit a break of conscience in the observance thereof. May we be willing to part with our right eye, even that which is the most dear to us, rather than to suffer our souls to be ensnared. Grant us Thy spirit, Lord, this day. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

HENDERSON STILL ACTIVE.

Since taking over the Henderson work last November, the interest and willingness of the members and the activities of the various organizations has been most encouraging and inspiring to me. During the few months in which they were without a pastor, interest had lagged to some extent, but all seemed glad and anxious to get back into the full swing of work once more.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society is as full of life and enthusiasm as ever, and the Senior Society seems to be catching some of the spirit and vigor of the children. It recently joined the newly formed Vance County Christian Endeavor Union, which we feel will aid it in forming a larger and more progressive program. A new Sunday School class of young girls has recently been formed who call themselves "The True Blue Class." This class, which is being taught by the pastor's wife, has already become an active part of the Sunday School. A junior congregation has also been organized, in which the little folks seem keenly interested. Their story each Sunday morning gives them a real part in the morning service.

On the Sunday night before Christmas, the evening service was turned over to the Sunday School, at which time they gave the beautiful service "White Gifts for the King." Each class took an active part, from the cradle roll up. The Church was tastefully decorated with an appropriate lighting effect, and each one seemed to execute his part to perfection. Many thoughtful and useful gifts were sent to the Christian Orphanage and elsewhere, but perhaps the greatest white gift of the evening was the offering of $18.10 for the Japanese relief and reconstruction work. Directly after the service, the pastor and his wife were much surprised and pleased when the Gleaners Class presented them with a clothes basket full of white gifts, all of which were very useful and greatly appreciated. Another pleasant surprise was the gift of a handsome mahogany rocker from one of the members and his wife.

Sunday night, December 30th, a union service of the Protestant Churches of Henderson was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, at which the pastor of the Christian Church preached. The audience was large, and a spirit of unity prevailed which was very gratifying and inspiring to all followers of Christ.

A. H. HOOK, Pastor.

A RECORD OF A COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Shallow Ford Sunday School is located two miles north of Elon College, N. C., in the center of the Shallow Ford public school district, and we are very much gratified with the Church census of the district just completed, as follows:

There are in the district 215 persons. Of this number, there are 119 Church members; there are 175 who attend Sunday School, and 187 who attend Church services.

There are in the district 13 persons over 21 years of age who do not attend Church or Sunday School, and 14 children under the age of 14 who do not attend Sunday School.

Out of 215 people living in the district, there are only 27 who do not attend Church or Sunday School of all ages. There is only one family in the district that has no Church membership in it. On our public school roll we find the names of 85 children, and of this number there are only five who do not attend Sunday School. Sunday School members attending Church services 100 per cent.

We would be glad to hear from any Sunday School who can beat this record. We are going after those who do not attend Church and Sunday School and hope to have a 100 per cent Church and Sunday School attendance for our district.

You are always welcome at the Shallow Ford Sunday School, which meets at 10 o'clock every Sunday morning; O. B. Pitts, superintendent. Prayer meeting every Sunday at 6:45 P. M.

A visit from you will help us, and when you help us we hope to help you, and by helping one another we may be able to help those out of the Church and Sunday School.

W. E. WALKER.

Burlington, N. C., R. F. D. 6.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged through The Sun.		$620.49
Berea, Norfolk	$10.00
Miss Lois C. Lawrence	10.00
Durham, N. C.	12.50
Christian Light, N. C.	10.26
Union Ridge, N. C.	15.73
Mrs. Sallie E. Holland	2.00
		60.49
Total		$680.98

We are grateful for any amount the Churches or individuals may send for the relief and reconstruction work in Japan.

J. O. ATKINSON,

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Twenty-seven thousand dollars to raise in 1924! Twenty-seven mile-posts to reach and pass! The first one reached and passed! Help us to raise the second one in February. One hundred and five little children calling for bread! You can give them bread by contributing in your Church and Sunday School when the offering is taken for the Orphanage. Will you help feed them?

Flu and pneumonia still hold fast and seem to like to keep us company. At this writing (January 30th), we have four in bed, all have pneumonia; three are getting better, one is very ill and has the old-time pneumonia. We are uneasy about his condition. Don't forget to remember us in your prayers. We are a great believer in prayer. We received a letter from a lady in Atlanta, Ga., a few days ago, stating that the Church people in that large city had special prayer in behalf of the sick children here. We are happy to be remembered in our trials, and when we see some of our little fellows near death's door.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

Jan. 24, 1924.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY:

I am a little girl, eight years old, in the third grade. My teacher is Miss Hardy. I have one brother. We help mamma clean up the Church. So I am sending you fifty cents for the Orphanage. I will close, with love to you all.

ELEANOR GERTRUDE NEWTON.

Rt. 1, Henderson, N. C.

REPORT FOR FEBRUARY 7, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$ 946.22
Children's Offerings.
Eleanor Gertrude Newton		.50
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Liberty, Halifax County, Va.	$ .86
Shallow Well	4.32
Hopedale	3.86
New Lebanon	1.00
Baracca Class	1.00
Bethlehem	4.34
Wake Chapel	5.70
Shiloh	1.20
Palm Street, Greensboro	5.25
Pleasant Hill (H)	3.36
Danville, Third Avenue	5.31
		36.20
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Wakefield	$ 2.46
Rosemont	6.68
		9.14
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Beulah	$ 1.03
Wadley	2.95
Beulah	3.34
Baby Home Pledge.
Jas. G. Faulkner		5.00
Special Offerings.
R. W. Thompson	$ 25.00
Antioch Church, C. Endeavor	60.00
Cash	5.25
Jas. Wagoner, balance on pig	14.24
R. T. Glass	1.00
W. H. Thomas	25.00
		130.49
Grand total		$1,134.87

RIPPY.

Leonard Dennis Rippy was born July 15, 1864, and died January 18, 1924, making his stay on earth 59 years 6 months and three days. He was married to Sudie F. Waynick, August 18, 1892. To this union were born three children—Mrs. W. A. Mitchell, Mr. Leonard Philips and Joseph Michael Rippy. He leaves to mourn his loss his family, one grandson, W. D. Rippy; three sisters—Mrs. Bettie Ross, Miss Alice Rippy, and Mrs. O. P. Shelton—one brother, Mr. John Rippy, besides a host of relatives and friends. He made a profession of faith and joined Bethlehem Christian Church in early boyhood, of which he was a faithful member and Church-worker up until the death-angel called him from the labors of earth to his reward in heaven.

The funeral and burial were at Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, assisted by Revs. G. O. Lankford, P. H. Fleming, J. P. Barrett, and Rev. W. T. Scott.

The attendance was great, and the flowers were many and beautiful. A faithful husband, a loving father, an earnest Christian, a good friend and neighbor has gone to his reward, where loved ones are waiting. Yes, we weep, but not as those who have no hope. Our souls cry out for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still.

God comfort the loved ones. May the entire family again be united.

A FRIEND.

MILES.

Robert S. Miles was born June 10, 1866, and departed this life January 18, 1924, his age being 57 years 7 months and 8 days. He professed faith in Christ when about 21 years of age, and lived a consistent life thereafter. Bro. Miles joined Concord, and later moved his membership to Bethel Church, where he was a member at death.

He leaves to mourn, a loving wife, four children, two grandchildren, five brothers, three sisters, a number of relatives and a host of friends. Two sisters preceded him to the spirit world.

The deceased was held in high esteem by his neighbors and friends. He will be missed. He was a member of the Junior Order, where he was highly respected. Bro. "Bob," as he was usually called, was conservative in his views of various questions of the day, but there was a brotherly spirit in him that was discernable to all who became acquainted with him. "He carried his troubles to the Lord," he said, and he lived it, for you never heard him complain.

Burial services were conducted at his home and at Concord Christian Church by the writer, and assisted by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. His fraternal order paid their tribute of respect and had charge of the service in the cemetery at Concord, where interment of his body was made. Peace to his ashes. May the good Lord comfort the bereaved.

L. L. WYRICK.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

There was a gloom cast over Bethlehem Christian Church and community January 18, 1924, when it became known that the death-angel had taken out of our midst our friend and brother, Leonard Dennis Rippy. He was a loyal member of Bethlehem Christian Church. For a long time he served as Sunday School superintendent.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in resignation to the will of God.

2. That the Church and Sunday School have lost a faithful and generous member and the community a good citizen. Let us cherish his memory.

3. That to his wife and children and their families, those to whom he was nearest and dearest, we extend our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the Heavenly Father, who loves and cares for those that commit themselves to Him. By and by, may they be reunited and form an unbroken circle around the throne of God.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed on the Church record, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
MISS FANNIE PASCHAEL.
MRS. R. A. THOMPSON.
C. A. SUTTON.
J. D. SIMPSON.
J. F. APPLE.

SCOTT.

Mrs. Rosie Ellen Scott, beloved wife of W. P. Scott, was born on June 2, 1875, and fell on sleep on December 20, 1923. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cox, and leaves three sisters—Mrs. L. M. Loudermilk, and Mrs. Mary Loudermilk, both of Greensboro, and Mrs. Mily Brady, of Pleasant Grove—also four brothers, namely: Mr. A. I. Cox, of Climax; F. T. Cox, of Ashboro; J. T. Cox, and E. A. Cox, both of Greensboro, N. C.

She was married on March 26, 1896, to W. P. Scott, and to this union were born seven children, five of whom survive, namely: Lettie, Ida, Lulu, Della and Nelda.

Sister Scott, in her early years, joined Pleasant Grove Christian Church, and remained a loyal member and faithful worker until four years ago, when she moved her membership to Palm Street Christian Church, continuing there until she received the call to her heavenly home. She was tenderly laid to rest on December 23, 1923, at Pleasant Grove Christian Church, mourned by a large circle of relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

"Until we meet again before His Throne,
Clothed in the spotless robe He gives
His own;
Until we know even as we are known—
Good-night! Good-night! Good-night!

H. B. HALL.

Weak Blood Needs Iron

Says Doctor

To Build Up Your Strength, Energy and Endurance.

"WHEN you feel yourself slipping into a weak rundown condition, it is because your blood is becoming thin, pale and watery, literally starving for want of iron," says a physician. "Once you supply iron in proper form, a multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Iron is the red-blood food which satisfies iron hunger and works day and night to build up red corpuscles, repair wasted tissue, renew the vigor of your body and ward off germs of disease.

"For years, in my own practice, I have prescribed organic iron, NUXATED IRON, because it contains iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples and like the iron in your blood. I consider Nuxated Iron is in a class by itself as a health-giving tonic. It acts as a powerful strength and body builder, steadies the nerves, puts color in the cheeks and spring in the step.

"Whenever I have a patient come to me who says he gets up feeling tired in the morning, is nervous, irritable and easily upset; when he can no longer do a day's work without being all fagged out at night, has pains across the back and pale drawn looking face, I at once put him on a course of Nuxated Iron. In many cases I believe that this has prevented a state of nervous collapse or a condition so weakened that it would be an easy matter to contract some serious disease.

'If you are not strong or well, simply try taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks and note the amazing change in your health, vigor, energy and endurance. You should be astonished at the results in even a few days time. The manufacturers guarantee satisfactory results or the druggist will refund your money.

DAVIS-WAGNER Business College
NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. CATALOGUE FREE.
114 W. MAIN STREET. NORFOLK, VA.

Miller's Antiseptic Oil, Known as

Snake Oil

Will Positively Relieve Pain in a Few Minutes.

Try it right now for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lumbago, sore, stiff and swollen joints, pain in the head, back and limbs, corns, bunions, etc. After one application pain usually disappears as if by magic.

A new remedy used externally for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Influenza, Sore Throat, Diphtheria and Tonsilitis.

This oil is conceded to be the most penetrating remedy known. Its prompt and immediate effect in relieving pain is due to the fact that it penetrates to the affected parts at once. As an illustration, pour ten drops on the thickest piece of sole leather and it will penetrate this substance through and through in three minutes.

Accept no substitute. Manufactured by HERB JUICE MEDICINE COMPANY, Jackson, Tenn.

for Economical Transportation

CHEVROLET

Quality Cars at Quantity Prices

Chevrolet now leads all high-grade cars in number sold.

Our new low prices have been made possible through doubling our productive capacity.

We are now operating twelve mammoth manufacturing and assembly plants throughout the United States in which thousands of skilled workmen are turning out 2500 Chevrolets per day.

See Chevrolet First

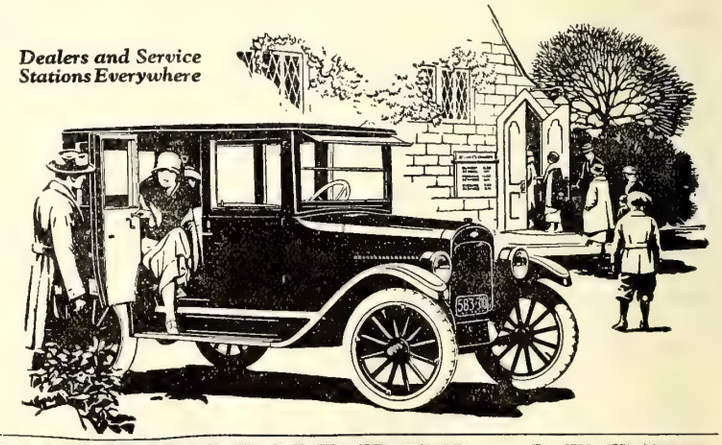
Notwithstanding our recent big reduction in prices the quality and equipment of our cars have been steadily increased, until today Chevrolet stands beyond comparison as the best dollar value of any car sold at any price and the most economical car to maintain.

Chevrolet Motor Co., Detroit, Michigan
Division of General Motors Corporation

Superior Roadster	$490	Superior Sedan	$795
Superior Touring	495	Superior Commercial Chassis	395
Superior Utility Coupe	640	Superior Light Delivery	495
Superior 4-Passenger Coupe	725	Utility Express Truck Chassis	550

All prices f. o. b. Flint, Michigan

Dealers and Service Stations Everywhere



THOROUGHBRED SEEDS

The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years

Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.

GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

HOLDER.

James W. Holder, of Randleman, N. C., passed away at his son-in-law's, Mr. Brookshire. He was within three days of 91 years old. He died January 13, 1924, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at St. Paul's M. E. Church. He was a member of the Christian Church at Randleman. He leaves several children and grandchildren to mourn their loss. Funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. W. Parker.

J. M. ALLRED.

PRUDEN.

At the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. C. W. Smith, near Suffolk, Va., January 14, 1924, Mrs. Mary A. Pruden, aged 86 years and 10 months, passed away. She was one of the oldest members of Bethlehem Christian Church. She leaves two grandchildren, two sisters, Mrs. Malvina Roberts and Mrs. Jennie Stephenson, of Windsor, Va., and many relatives and friends.

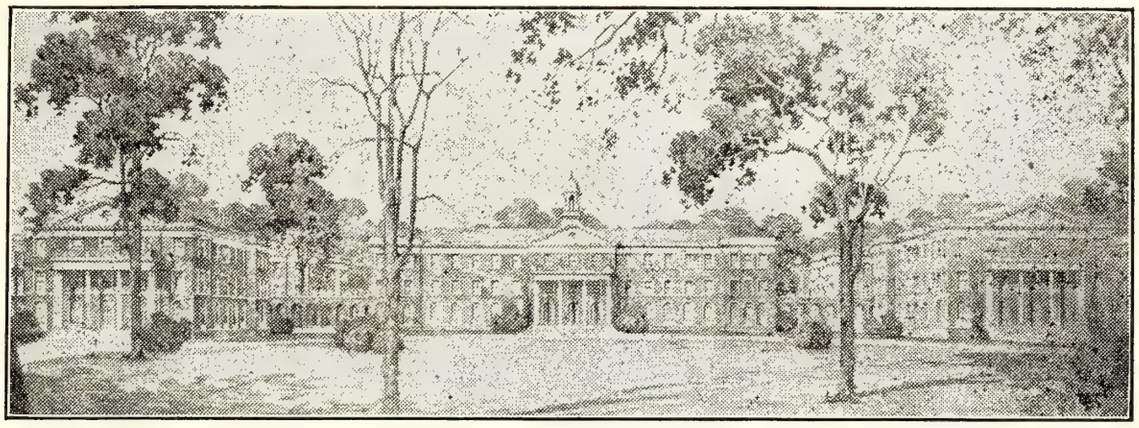
Funeral services were conducted at her Church by the writer, assisted by the pastor, Rev. E. T. White, and her remains were placed away in the Church cemetery. God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones. H. H. BUTLER.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

Big News!
on buggies
Before you make a move, send for new 1924 catalog and see what BOHON offers you. Life long durability.
At Low Prices
Send for new FREE catalog

Backed by 50 years' square dealing, and Bohon's unlimited Guarantee. 60 days Road Test. You are satisfied or all your money is refunded. Get the new complete FREE catalog and see I
THE D. T. BOHON COMPANY - 60 Main St. - Harrodsburg, Ky.

Elon is Building for the Future



Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

MAYO'S SEEDS

Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:

Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,

with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.

Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.

D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

Grow Cotton in Virginia
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS

LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM

Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

HARRIS.

Bro. Aaron Harris departed this life January 14, 1924. Bro. Harris made profession of faith in Christ when young, and united with Catawba Spring Christian Church. He remained a member there for some ten years. He then moved his membership to Plymouth Christian Church, when he was made a deacon and where he held membership till death.

Bro. Harris, according to common consent, was a good man. He had only three children, all of whom are living—Mrs. L. D. Stephenson, of Raleigh; Mrs. R. Y. Smith and Mrs. J. H. Smith, of McCullers.

The burial services were at Wentworth Christian Church, and the remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery beside his wife.

Services conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. McC. White, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Raleigh.

May God's richest blessings rest on the bereaved and lonely, and fit them for reunion.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

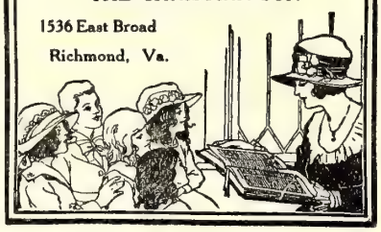
05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"

1536 East Broad Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NEEDS THE WHOLE-HEARTED SUPPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS A WHOLE, AS WELL AS THE LOCAL SUPPORT.

Help Boost Bethlehem

1. By Giving your financial support, either by cash or subscription.
2. By sending your children to Bethlehem for their education, and encouraging others to send their children.
3. By sending books for the College Library, and getting others to send books.
4. By raising $50.00 to furnish a dormitory room. Rooms furnished in this way will be named for the giver.
5. By always remembering the institution in your prayers.

For Catalogue and other information, write to

M. W. HOOK, President,
Wadley, - - Alabama.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1924. | NUMBER 7.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Flying With the Gospel.—

Record of Christian Work reports that two contributors from different sections of New York State recently sent contributions to the American Baptist Publication Society designated toward the purchase of an aeroplane for colportage work in the Northwest.

Too often we have waited until the new inventions have been pre-empted by commercial interests. In this instance, the Church seizes one of the most promising opportunities in sight. The flying machine is in the earliest stages of development. The mastery of the air will push civilization forward faster than anything else, and it is greatly wise to link up the gospel with it, so that the material side of the new order may not outstrip the spiritual.

Soviet Russia Mourns Lenine.—

During many months of serious illness, when he could have little active part in affairs of state, the magic of the name of Nikolai Lenine was sufficient to maintain his dictatorship over Russia. His death from a cerebral hemorrhage has removed the directing, unifying and harmonizing brain of the Bolshevist movement, and all the world is watching eagerly to see what turn events in Russia will take. But for the first few days after his death, the Communists of Russia appeared intent only on their grief and on paying their homage to his body. The honors to the dead chief went beyond those accorded to a czar in the old days, and their extent was indicated by the official announcement that Petrograd had been renamed Leningrad.

Britain Accepts Liquor Treaty.—

The governments of Great Britain and her dominions have unanimously agreed to the terms of the Anglo-American treaty designed to stop liquor-running off the American coast, and it has been announced that the treaty is ready for signature. The treaty, which is only three short typewritten pages in length, and embraces three main points—a special extension of the three-mile territorial limit for the United States; the right of American authorities to search British vessels for illicit liquor within one hour's steaming distance from shore; and the right of British liners to bring legitimate alcoholic stores into American waters for use on the homeward voyage. It is expected that other powers will follow the British example in this matter.

Life Secret of Wilson.—

What was the secret of Wilson? It may be learned from this. He was a Christian from his youth up. One of the physicians who attended him in his last hours says that there was a little black, well-worn Bible on the table, and that Mr. Wilson never retired without reading from it. He always said grace at the table and prayed before he went to sleep. In the great hours of crisis, he prayed before he wrote or spoke. He believed in Christ's teachings with all his heart, and he used his opportunity to put Christ's teaching into the heart of mankind as its controlling principle and power, and as its outward form and practice. He tried to organize the human race on the basis of Christ's life and teaching. When he reached the zenith of his power he tried to do the will of Christ. His last completely phrased sentence was: "I am a broken piece of machinery; when the machinery is broken—I am ready to go." He was ready to go. He was a Christian.—Ex.

The Church's Opportunity and Test.—

There is a general feeling that the Church failed as a Christian force to prevent war in the great world struggle. But the fact was that she had no opportunity. Sadly enough, human nature grows so wild at the first whisper of war that it will listen to no counsel, and heed no protest. And when the spark is once lighted it spreads like a prairie fire.

But diplomats are now finding out that it is a far more difficult task to end a conflagration than to start one—to make peace than to declare war. We do not need Lord Birkenhead, or Lloyd George, or Count Apponyi, or Friedrich Nansen to tell us that Europe is a more fiery crater today than it was in 1914. Fighting makes that burn more fiercely.

Now, however, comes the Church's opportunity. If the Church cannot prevent war, she can contribute powerfully to the establishment of peace. Much as the nations may hate each other, they have learned the futility of war. And they are now in a mood to hearken to the Church. The present is, therefore, not alone the Church's opportunity, but her test. Will she lay aside national prejudice and political hates? And in the true Spirit of Christ, exert all her influence in favor of peace? Will she insist on the Christian maxims of forgiveness, reconciliation and good will? This is her hour to regain her influence, and to prove her Christ-like agency in healing the wounds of the nations.

May the Church in this new danger, so ardently, lovingly and authoritatively insist upon the Spirit of Christ prevailing in national councils, that she may prove her power to make peace!—Christian Herald.

Woodrow Wilson.—

Great men come, and great men go; but no greater man has ever passed across the stage of America's history, who three years ago laid down the reins of government of the greatest nation the world has ever seen, and who recently gave back his life to Him who gave it. When in 1913 he was elected President, he was recognized as a man of ability and high ideals, but if it had been known the world was about to be plunged into the greatest war of all times, it is very probable that the people would have selected a different type of man. But God knew what kind of a man was needed, and He saw to it that Woodrow Wilson should come to the presidency for such a time as that. A man of strong, clear mind, he impressed his high ideals upon the nations of the world, and he dominated the whole situation until the treaty of peace had been made. Had he received the unselfish support of the people of his own country as he had secured the following of the allied nations, the world today would be resting in peace and prosperity. A son of a Southern Presbyterian minister, he had been well trained in the duty of trust in God and the unselfish devotion to duty. As the years shall pass, the greatness of his wisdom and of his high ideals will become more and more evident. His own country will esteem him as many of other countries now do. He will be honored as he should have been through those years in which he bore the heavy burdens that finally "broke the machine." All the world will eventually rise up to call him blessed. And the day will come when the principles which he enunciated will be adopted, not only by this country, but by the nations of the earth. When he found that his principles were not being accepted, he started on that arduous journey, in which he hoped to educate the people, and which was brought to a sudden close by the collapse from which he never recovered. He was of such a noble spirit that he never laid the responsibility for his calemity where it belonged, but bore with true heroism the disappointment which was so keen to him. His was a Christian fortitude and an unwavering faith that, though God might lay aside the worker, the work would go on. He was ever ready when the call of duty came. He believed in personal preparedness. So, when God called him to come up higher there was no fear or uncertainty, he could confidently say to his friends about him, "I am ready." He was fully aware of his condition, for he said to his physicians, "The machine is broken." Broken in body and even his mind somewhat weakened by the fearful strain of his eight years of leadership, such as had never been demanded of any other man under any circumstances, he fought a brave fight, and many of the wisest men of earth say that the time will come when his principles will triumph gloriously. Generations to come will rise up to call him blessed.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Are the pastors doing their duty in regard to their Church paper?

Bro. Wicker comes out for "The Budget System." See his article and then think for yourself.

Dr. C. H. Rowland is reported as having fine services in Greensboro last Sunday. The work moves off in good shape.

"Only One Faith" will bear a close and careful reading. See if you can find the truth in it; and if you cannot, then see if you can find error in it?

Rev. J. W. Wellons has not been quite so well of late, but we trust there is no serious change in his condition. He is able to be up and around a part of the time. He spends much of his time in prayer.

Rev. W. C. Carpenter, Cullman, Ala., in this issue is talking to Rev. J. Lee Johnson, and he does it in a kindly way, which is very commendable. Bro. Johnson is a man of thought, and will no doubt have something further to say. See if he does not!

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, says that the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, Va., is practically completed, except the pews and some of the furniture, which had not arrived when he left home. He was in Elon College on Monday. They confidently expect to open the Church building for public services now in a few weeks, probably some time in March. Due notice will be given through the papers.

We wish our readers may give special attention to the other goals set by Bro. Chas. D. Johnston for the Orphanage. Help him reach the same in good time. Think of what patience and continuous watching it takes for 105 children and from two to ten sick at a time and some of them very ill. Let the Orphanage not only have your contributions, but your prayers as well, for such an institution needs both, and it needs them all the while. Do not forget!

Thanks to Rev. B. F. Black, R. F. D. 3, Berkley, Va., for a list of subscribers to THE SUN. How our pastors can help when they make a special effort! Bro. Black shows what a little effort can do. Let us try to make THE SUN a real helper to the Church by greatly increasing the circulation. It can be done; a good, square effort will prove that we are right. Try it! Again, Bro. Black, we thank you, and wish you would tell our pastors generally how you do it.

From Miss Alice True, formerly one of our missionaries to Japan, we have received a copy of The Friend of Japan, a quarterly organ of the Japanese Rescue Mission. We take it that it is the Rescue Mission with which Miss Christine Penrod was during the latter years of her life connected. The Friend of Japan is an interesting publication. It is printed in English and is mailed, postage free, to subscribers for 25 cents a year. Send subscriptions to The Friend of Japan, Tokyo, Japan.

Dr. Atkinson sends in the monthly report for January for the collections in Men and Millions in the Southern Christian Convention, and he says while it is not as much as it ought to be, yet it is the best report we have in quite a while. Now, that we have gotten it started, let's keep it up and make it better as each month comes and goes. It has been a great help to the enterprises of the Church. What could we do without these funds? Well, we erally cannot tell what we would have done without the help of Men and Millions funds. Let us stick together and do our best for this helping-hand of the Church. Let us pull together and see what we can do for the month of February. If each one will but do the best he or she can do, we shall have a big report for February.

What is the matter with our brethren? So far, only one brother has written on "The Budget System," as presented by Dr. Harper. If it is the thing our people need, let us do like Bro. Hollowell did—just come out and say so. If it is not what we need, then let us say so and look for something that is better. That will be worth the effort we put into this discussion. There is no one, so far as we know, to be afraid of. If the brotherhood should favor it, an early discussion will help to make the matter clear, and if it will not do what is needed, why this same discussion will help our people to see it, and seeing it is not for the good of the cause, they will lay it aside and go to look for some other plan. Tell us what you have got to say, and say it in a Christian way, but make it talk right to the point.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention, has written an article on "The Budget System." We are still waiting for other brethren to express themselves. Bro. Kerr, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, from a recent editorial, seems to take a stand against the budget system, but if we have read his thought aright, he misses the breadth of scope which our Dr. Harper's plan seems to include. Now, the question is: "Is Dr. Harper right, or is Dr. Kerr right?" Our people ought to read these thoughts carefully. We confess we have not yet studied the question thoroughly, but we do wish our leaders would give it a fair and square discussion for the benefit of our Church people. While we are not ready to commit ourselves to this plan, we do wish it to have a fair hearing on all sides, and so enable us to get the best plans for financing the Church and its work. Let others speak out. Meantime, Bro. Kerr, with many others, will have time to reconsider the facts in our budget system, and make a real effort to get at the best possible system of financing our enterprises. Read what Bro. Wicker says, and as you read, consider what it means, and then make its meaning plain to the people, so that they can decide whether they wish it or not.

Do you enjoy the "Family Altar," by Chaplain Rountree? If so, write to him and tell him so. He furnishes his own paper, envelopes and does the work for the privilege of doing it. If you get good from it, we think you might afford to tell him so, as an encouragement. Do you read and study the lessons prepared by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle? He works on the same terms as does Bro. Rountree. If you enjoy his lessons, do write him and tell him that you appreciate his labors! Do you appreciate the many little articles and a few big ones of Dr. Atkinson? Then, write him and tell him how you appreciate his efforts to interest our people in the great question of missions. You might do so also with the "Suffolk Letter" and the "Elon Letter," and with the weekly news from the Orphanage. Why not? These brethren are at work for the cause we love, and we believe as little as we can do would be to tell them how we appreciate their labors. It would encourage them and do you good, we believe.

Dr. Harper's letter this week is a tribute to the late former President Wilson, who passed away on Sunday, February 3, 1924. Mr. Wilson was one of the great men of this country—if not the greatest. We believe he was, and we ask our readers to give Dr. Harper's letter this week a careful reading. We admired Mr. Wilson as a great man. It is true, we did not always approve what he did, but he did most of his work so much better than the rest of us could have done it, that it is poor taste to lay the stress on his failures. Mr. Lloyd George, of England, thought he stuck too close to his own ideas, and so lost much that he might have gained. Even so, but we wonder if he did not gain much by sticking to his own ideas of right and wrong. If he is to stick to anything, to what could he stick better than to his own matured conclusions? We have heard it said that all great and unselfish men, who dedicate their best to the wellfare of the country, sooner or later have to be crucified. That may be true. We sometimes think it is. Indeed, some one has said that Mr. Lloyd George was crucified by the English people after he had stood by them in the hour of peril and led them safely out of the most threatening situation that ever confronted the English. If that be true, and we do not doubt it, then Mr. Lloyd George was handed political martyrdom for his loyalty to the very people who broke his influence. The same may be said of Mr. Wilson. At the height of his life's usefulness, led by a few enemies, the people of his own country killed him, not in an outright act, of course, but they killed him; and as we see it, they did it because he had in a most unselfish way given himself to the cause of his country. He was a great man, and his political crucifixion will add some day to the greatness of the man and to the honor of his life. As we see it, the men who were responsible for his downfall are also responsible for his death. Not one of them was fit to stand in Mr. Wilson's place, for they could not have done his work. Even the man who led in his political martyrdom is not worthy to unloose his shoe-strings. But Wilson will live on as the greatest man of his day, while his enemies will be forgotten. The editor of this paper does not write from the standpoint of a politician, for he was not of Mr. Wilson's political persuasion, and yet we honored him for what he was—he was bigger and greater than any political party. God bless all that was right in his life, as it shall live on for the good of the men who crucified him in his efforts to bless not only his own country, but the world, for he was a world figure in the world's doings.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. HOLLAND,
L. E. SMITH,
I. W. JOHNSON,
Executive Board.

January 31, 1924.

BUDGET PLAN FOR CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

A study of the proposed budget plan for raising the finances of the Christian Church commends itself to the favorable consideration of the Church for several reasons. In the first place it combines the best elements of the two plans in use in the North and the South. It provides for certain standards or obpectives to strive for and to undertake as a worthy goal. This is characteristic of all intelligent methods. It is the very nature of intelligence to act for a purpose, to have an end in view, to aim at some objective. Mind acts for ends rather than from antecedents. These considerations would commend the budget plan to the intelligence of all our people.

While intelligence acts for ends, it never acts without an impulse, an inner urge, a psychic drive which arises from the emotional nature and forms the felt need or motive power for action. For this reason, the educational, enthusiastic, sporadic methods used occasionally for special calls will commend itself to those who are accustomed to the special-call method of raising finances. When we combine these two methods as suggested by the proposed budget plan, we have the two great principles of education combined. The first principle of an educative plan is that of the impulse, the inner drive, the psychic urge to satisfy a felt need. Out of this felt need is formulated a motive force. Then the intelligence goes to work to formulate a purpose to satisfy this need. Through the creative imagination, the mind first reviews methods that have worked well in previous situations. Through observation, present conditions are studied, present problems formulated, and those solutions that have worked well in the past in similar situations are approved. Purposes are evolved out of the need; plans are formed out of the situation, aims are set before the mind as an objective, and means are selected in terms of the conditions and the proposed aim.

In the budget plan of raising finances, the Christian Church, in its General Convention, will determine the goal to be reached and the percentage of distribution. This goal will be distributed to the regional Conventions according to their several abilities as determined by numbers, value of buildings, salaries paid pastors, and previous records, all of which have been fixed by the constituency of the several conventions. The regional Conventions will exercise the democratic liberty of modifying, changing, adopting, or enlarging the allotment as they see fit. Then these Conventions will in turn allot the distribution of the budget to the several Conferences composing the regional Convention. The Conferences will exercise the liberty to modify, change, adopt or enlarge the allotment. The local Churches composing the Conferences will exercise the same right to modify, change, adopt, or enlarge the allotment. This will give unity with liberty to the plan. It will focalize the entire membership of the Church on one goal and still safeguard the liberty and freedom of each constituent member of the several subordinate divisions of our organization. Unity with diversity, co-operation with liberty, and freedom with unanimity are the characteristics of the Christian Church.

The smaller units of the organization will be allowed to retain a certain percentage of the money raised for the prosecution of their own work. This is as it should be, for the success of the plan will depend on the well-being of the constituent members of the entire organization.

The educational value alone of such a system of raising our finances would be a large asset to the efficiency of the organization. Habits of thought will become standardized, responses to worthy aims will become systematic, tendencies to larger growth in benevolence will be stimulated, the mechanization of administration will become smoothe-running, and the children and the young people will become educated from their early years in loyalty, devotion, and consecration to the financial support of the kingdom.

W. C. WICKER.

ANSWER TO BRO. JOHNSON.

Some people seem to be afraid to talk on a subject—at least, if there be much chance for controversy and division. I love an earnest discussion, but not a hard-boiled argument. If a question is discussed in a right spirit, it tends to reveal truth and bring us together on the true meaning of Scripture.

My last article was written, and out of my hands, when I read Bro .Johnson's article relative to my quotations from Scripture, showing, as I think, the possibility of apostacy; hence, the necessity for another.

I will not say just how far Bro. Johnson won me by his explanation (for I am always open to conviction), nevertheless, I have somewhat to say on the passages he quotes. I am not a theologian, but I take these passages to mean somewhat different from the explanation. Since I fired the woods by my questions, I presume it is my duty to help quench the fire.

First, I am a stickler for the Bible as we have it written. We do not need, as I think, to have it rewritten, at least not nearly so much as we need to have it reread. There is far too much tampering with it nowadays. When a passage fails to coincide with my ideas, I either hunt another passage or change my ideas.

When Bro. Johnson inserted away into Gal. 5:4, so as to make it read: "Ye are fallen away from grace," he neither helped me nor hindered. The only way to salvation is through faith and repentance under grace. Paul made it clear that the law was a curse and a burden that neither we nor our fathers were able to bear. He spent his life in one ceaseless effort to get the people out from under the curse and burden of the law, and instead to accept Christ as the Rock of Salvation. So, then, if the law is a curse, and we choose it by rejecting salvation through grace, it must mean a lost hope. We read in holy writ: "The law was not made for a righteous man," as is shown in 1 Tim. 1:9, but for sinners. All sinners are lost, unless they meet the conditions of salvation. Therefore, all who are under the law are sinners and doomed, so long as they remain there. I prefer the grace of Christ, for if it were not for His intercession, we would all be lost. We are too weak to withstand the law, but where we are weak He is strong. These foolish Galatians had just rejected Christ—that's all—and I can't see how Bro. Johnson makes it equivalent to one changing his Church affiliations.

In 2 Pet. 2:20-22, Bro. Johnson says the people referred to were not saved, but only had a knowledge of the Lord, and were still hogs. But notice the twenty-first verse says it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, etc. Is it possible for one to know the way of righteousness unless he has walked therein? Do you know the way to a given place unless you have traveled that way? You may have the direction, but you do not know the way. One reason for a deferred salvation is a lack of knowledge of God. When we come to know Him fully, we love Him, and if we love Him we will keep His words (John 14:23). If we fully know the truth, we are free, for this includes a knowledge of forgiveness.

He says that Luke 11:24-26 and Matt. 12:43-45 is a plain case of self-reformation, and that while the evil spirit was out, there was no Holy Spirit within. Now this looks unreasonable, as Luke 11:23 will show. Nothing better illustrates the two spirits than light and darkness. When light comes in, darkness must scamper away. When light recedes, darkness creeps on—just like the devil sneaks in. But note one significant fact—light is master. That which causes the devil to leave when we open up the door of our heart, is the fact that Jesus, the Light of the world, has come in. I can defy the devil when I have Jesus in my heart. We know that Jesus had been in this man's heart because it was swept and garnished. That is a characteristic peculiar to Him.

Alas! for the man who loves Jesus. The devil re-enters seven-fold stronger. I have never known the devil to leave a man of his own accord. Neither can I conceive of a man, especially a sinner, casting him out by his own strength. He may clean up some, but he is liable to creep out, but he is still there and just as active as usual. Can you conceive of the consequences if God should have called for that man when neither the good nor the evil spirit was within him?

The people referred to in Heb. 6:4-6, Bro. Johnson says, advanced almost to the point of receiving Jesus, but did not. Well, read verses 4 and 5, and analyze each phrase: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened and have tasted of the heavenly gift and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted of the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again to repentance." May I ask: "What else do they lack?" Is the Holy Ghost given unto sinners? In Heb. 10 there seems to be two classes, viz: those who endure and those who fall away. Verse 39, quoted by Bro. Johnson, shows that clearly, I think. The entire passage from verse 19, through the chapter, is a continuous exhortation to hold fast. Why necessary to hold fast, if we are eternally saved?

Now, beloved reader, settle the question for yourself, but in the meantime live an upright Christian, abounding in the work of the Lord, remembering that after all we are rewarded according to our works. We must not injure one another with our meat. Your strong meat might give me spiritual indigestion. To one and all, pro and con, I bid you godspeed in all active Christian service.

W. C. CARPENTER.

Cullman, Ala.

MONTICELLO GAVE A PAGEANT.

Rev. Carl E. Gerringer, pastor of Monticello Church, was at the Woman's Conference at Burlington when we were discussing furnishing a mountain home for preacher and teachers. He had an idea that Monticello would give something, and he presented the matter to the Christian Endeavor Society.

On the night of December 31st, the society put on a pageant. This pageant was very much enjoyed by the whole community. The offering taken was $12.01, which we acknowledge with pleasure. This comes in at a most opportune time, as we are still needing funds to help equip the home. We are now under necessity of securing water for the home and putting under-pinning under the house. We are going to need funds for this necessary work, and every dollar sent in will be appreciated. We are certainly grateful to Monticello and trust that other societies will follow their fine lead.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

THE SUN'S subscription list must be increased, and you are asked to lend your services for the next two months.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

A GREAT QUESTION IN MINISTERIAL WORK—CAN YOU ANSWER IT?

Often we give a great deal of time and thought to questions of little significance, and leave untouched some question that is infinitely important. We have such a question before us now. The Presbyterian Standard of January 23rd gives us one of its best editorials on the question—

What Is a Good Sermon?

It struck us as a most vital and important question for the minister, to say nothing of all the people who are interested in sermons. May it not be possible that the great body of our ministers give too little time and thought to an honest effort to get for themselves the right answer to that question. If a minister does not have a clear idea of what a good sermon is, he can hardly be expected to give to his people a good sermon. Some person has said that the greatest thing the minister has to do is to prepare himself for his work. We believe that is highly important—very important—but it is also very important—most important—that he should himself have a good and clear idea of what a good sermon is. It is because of this fact that we are republishing the article of the Presbyterian Standard, for as we have read the thoughts of that editor, we have felt that he has a pretty good idea of what a sermon is—we mean a real gospel sermon, such as the people need! Brethren, giving your people sermons which are really good—good for the people to whom they are preached—is the greatest thought for your consideration as a minister. Will you take this matter seriously? Will you take it to God upon your knees, and there plead with Him to show you just the kind of sermon your people need, and then ask Him to give you the good sense and the courage to preach it in love, but fearlessly? If you will do that, we believe that you will find a revolution in your study and a new life in your sermons. The following is his answer to the question. Read it and study it thoughtfully and prayerfully:

A good sermon is not necessarily a popular sermon. It is not uncommon to hear a congregation pay a warm tribute to a sermon that had none of the elements of a good sermon. They had enjoyed the performance, and that was the sole basis of their judgment. The preacher who can bring tears is certain to be rewarded with compliments. People enjoy the luxury of pathetic emotions, and fancy that they have had a very pious experience. A good sermon does not necessarily make the hearers feel good. That was a splendid sermon which Nathan preached to David, using the little ewe lamb as an illustration, but it left a very bitter taste in David's mouth. Charles Spurgeon, that prince of preachers, said the next best thing to converting a sinner is to make him mad. From which we gather that he thought a sermon might be a good sermon even if it provoked hostile criticism. This saves Jeremiah's reputation. His sermons provoked persecution. As this seemed the only result, he decided to stop preaching; but the Lord would not let him stop. Doubtless his sermons were good. The judgment of the hearers is not a correct standard. What they like is not always what they need. Some of our Saviour's preaching was very unpopular. The same is true of some of Paul's preaching.

Here is a subtle temptation to which the preacher is exposed. He is human, and compliments are sweet to his taste. Naturally he is concerned to please his audience, and he may persuade himself that the more he pleases, the more he benefits. He is the physician of souls. A physician often has to give medicine that is not palatable, and sometimes must use the knife. But this does not exhaust the preacher's mission. He should not be always administering nauseous doses. He is the shepherd of the flock. Christ did not say "beat my sheep, wallop my lambs." Most of the shepherd's ministrations should be a kind that the sheep will enjoy. Still the feelings of the people are not the test by which to measure the sermon.

What is a good sermon? A cotemporary gives this: "The purpose of a sermon is to explain and enforce a part or passage of the Bible in a way that will help men to think and live in line with Bible principles." This is not bad, and yet one might fulfill this purpose and never preach anything but the ethics of the Bible. Another definition: "The object of preaching is to convey truth by a person to a person about a person." This may seem too narrow, but it covers about as much ground as the apostle's determination to "know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Inasmuch as Christ is the sum and substance of Christianity, preaching should never get very far away from Him. One of the old divines said he had never found a text in the Bible that did not have a pathway leading to Christ; and he further said that if he should find such a text he would make a pathway, "I would jump over a ditch or a hedge to come to my Master, for no sermon is worth anything that does not lead to Christ."

It is the preacher's business to explain and enforce the Scriptures, and no sermon is a good sermon that fails in this respect. But to make the definition adequate we must add, "For man's salvation." Always the preacher should keep this end in mind--the salvation of man. He can never have more than two classes of hearers—the saved and the unsaved, saints and sinners. The need of the one class is sanctification, of the other conversion. Both of these are parts of the one salvation. If the sermon is to the unsaved, the preacher's aim should be to lead them to Christ; if to the saved, the aim should be to deepen their consecration. We doubt if the preacher should ever use the Bible merely as a source of instruction in good morals, merely to show men how to make better citizens, to be better men and women. He should ever use it to show men and women how to be Christians, and then how to be better Christians. The Bible is able to make one "wise unto salvation," and the preacher should ever use it to this high end. If it stops short of this, it has done nothing worth while.

Of course, there are degrees of merit in good sermons—there are good, better, best. All sermons that explain and enforce the Scriptures with a view to man's salvation are good sermons. But such sermons may vary as to the methods used. Some are more lucid in their explanations and more forceful in their applications. Some are more logical in their arrangement, and are so constructed as to aid the memory. Some are more felicitous in the choice of language and more skillful in the use of illustration. A really good sermon is one that unfolds the meaning of the text with crystaline clearness, clothes the truth with appropriate language, illumines it with apt illustration and then drives it home with invincible logic and tender persuasiveness. Such a sermon should be the preacher's ideal, but he need never hope to attain perfection. However earnestly he strives, his ideal will ever go before and beckon him from a distance. The preacher with a high ideal is likely to suffer frequently from discouragement. Dr. Jeter, at one time a great preacher of Richmond, Va., is quoted as saying in his old age, one Sabbath afternoon: "Well, I must get ready to preach tonight. But I can't preach—I never did preach. Oh, I never heard anybody preach." A good sermon is like the good speech of the lawyer—"It is the one that wins the verdict," not the verdict of popular applause, but the verdict of the one or the many, who say, "I will arise and go to my Father."

THE UNMATCHED PHILOSOPHER AND PREACHER OF VIRGINIA.

AN OLD-TIME CONVERSION.

Some years ago we read Hatcher's "Life of John Jasper," and it profoundly impressed us. John Jasper was a slave of the old time, before the war. He lived in Richmond, Va., and worked there as a slave of Mr. Samuel Hargroves. It was while he was a slave that he became a Christian. He had been born a philosopher, and after his conversion he became the foremost colored preacher of Virginia, establishing one of the largest and most useful of the colored Churches of Virginia. He was a plain negro, with but little education. He was very gifted in the use of the negro dialect. At times it is difficult for one who is accustomed to the negro dialect to understand him, but when you do understand him he will give you something to think about. Yes, he was a plain black negro, but he became God's negro, and he did a great work in his day. He became somewhat famous by his celebrated sermon on "The Sun Do Move." He was laughed at, he was ridiculed, he was criticised, but John Jasper stood by his guns and insisted that "the sun do move." He may not have understood the scientific side of his own thought, but he believed what he said, and then he stood by it. After reading his sermon on "The Sun Do Move," we were so impressed with his sincerity and his faith in what he said that we wrote to three distinguished astronomers and asked them if the sun does actually move. The answer from each of these distinguished scientists was to the effect that the sun does move, that it has been doing so from the beginning, and moving at a rapid rate. When we read these letters we could but say: "Hurrah! for John Jasper, the unmatched philosopher," as Dr. Hatcher, his biographer, called him. He did not understand the scientific side of the question, but he was morally certain that the sun do move, and in the face of ridicule he dared to say so, and after he said it, he was brave enough to stand unfalteringly by his statement, and he did so to the end of his life. That is braver than some of his fellow-men have done—for there be not a few among mortals who can be laughed at till they will surrender anything for which they may have stood. When the educated colored men laughed at him and ridiculed his thought, he called them "the new ish," and went on his way as if he had only heard the croaking of a frog. He had the most perfect contempt for any effort to discredit the Bible as the Word of God.

But what we wished to do was to give our readers some account of the conversion of John Jasper. He was a Baptist and pastor of a large colored Baptist Church in the city of Richmond. The Methodist Quarterly Review for July gives a graphic account of his conversion, and we commend a careful and prayerful reading of the same to our readers, to one and to all. You may think you do not care to read of a negro's conversion, but you will be the loser spiritually, we believe, if you refuse or fail to read it. The following sketch was prepared by Dr. H. H. Smith, and we ask for your careful reading of the same. We believe it is genuine and true. The following is the sketch:

"I was seeking God six long weeks—jes' 'cause I was sich a fool I couldn't see de way. De Lord struck me fus' on Cap'tal Squar', an' I left thar badly crippled. One July mornin' somethin' happen'd. I was a terbacker-stemmer—dat is, I took de terbaker leaf, an' tor'd de stem out, an' dey wan't no one in dat fact'ry could beat me at dat work. But dat mornin' de stems wouldn't come out to save me, an' I tor'd up terbacker by de poun' an' flung it under de table. Fac' is, bruther'n, de darkness of death was in my soul dat mornin'. My sins was piled up on me like mount'ns; my feet was sinkin' down to de reguns of despa'r, an' I felt dat of all sinners I was de wust. I tho't dat I would die right den, an' wid what I supposed was my las' breath I flung up to heav'n a cry for mercy. 'Fore I kno'd it, de light broke; I was light as a feather; my feet was on de mount'n; salvation rolled like a flood through my soul, an' I felt as if I could knock off de fact'ry roof wid my shouts.

But I sez to myself, "I gwine to hol' still till dinner," and so I cried, an' laffed, and tore up de terbacker. Pres'ntly I looked up de table, an' dar was a old man—he luv me, an' tried hard to lead me out de darkness; an' I slip roun' to whar he was, an' I sez in his ear as low as I could: "Hellelujah! my soul is redeemed!" Den I jump back quick to my work, but after I once open my mouf it was hard to keep it shet any mo'. 'Twa'n' long 'fore I looked up de line ag'in, an' dar was a good ol' woman dar dat knew all my sorrers, an' had been prayin' fur me all de time. Der was no use er talkin', I had to tell her an' so I skip along up quiet as a breeze, an' started to whisper in her ear, but jest den de holin-back strap sof Jasper's breechin' broke, an' what I tho't would be a whisper was loud enuf to be hearn clear cross Jeems River to Manchester. One man sed he tho't de fact'ry was fallin' down; all I know'd I had raised my fust shout to de glory of my Redeemer.

But for one thing thar would er been a gen'ral revival in de fact'ry dat mornin'. Dat one thing was de overseer. He bulg'd in de room, an' wid a voice dat sounded like he had his breakfus' dat mornin' on rasps an' files, bellowed out: "What's all dis row 'bout?" Somebody shouted out dat John Jasper done got relig'n, but dat didn't wurk 'tall wid de boss. He tell me to git back to my table; an' as he had sumpthin' in his han' dat looked ugly, it was no time fur makin' fine p'ints, so I sed: "Yes, sir, I will; I ain't meant no harm; de fust taste of salvation got de better un me, but I'll git back to my work." An' I tell you I got back quick.

'Bout dat time, Mars Sam he come out'n his orfis, an' he say: "What's de matter out here?" An' I hear de overseer tellin' him: "John Jasper kick up a fuss, an' say he done got relig'n; but I dun fix him, an' he got back to his table." De devil tol' me to hate de overseer dat mornin', but de luv of God was rollin' through my soul, an' somehow I didn't mind what he sed.

Little aft'r I hear Mars Sam tell de overseer he want to see Jasper. Mars Sam was a good man; he was a Baptis', an' one of de hed men of de old Fust Church down here, an' I was glad when I hear Mars Sam say he want to see me. When I git in his orfis, he say: "John, what was de matter out dar jes' now?" and his voice was sof' like, an' it seemed to have a little song in it which played into my soul like an' angel's harp. I sez to him: "Mars Sam, ever since de Fourth of July I been cryin' after de Lord, six long weeks, an' jes' now out dar at de table God tuck my sins away, an' set my feet on a rock. I didn't mean to make no noise, Mars Sam, but 'fore I knowed it de fires broke out in my soul, an' I jes' let go one shout to de glory ob my Saviour."

Mars Sam was settin' wid his eyes a little down to de flo', an' wid a pretty quiver in his voice he say very slow: "John, I b'l'eve dat way myself. I luv de Saviour dat you have jes foun', an' I want to tell you dat I don' complain 'cause you made de noise jes' now as you did." Den Mars Sam did er thing dat nearly made me drop to de flo.' He git out of his chair, an' walk over to me and giv' me his han', and he say: "John, I wish you mighty well. Your Saviour is mine, an' we are brothers in de Lord." When he say dat, I turn 'roun' an' put my arm again' de wall, an' held my mouf to keep from shoutin'. Mars Sam well knew de good he done me.

Aft'r a while, Mars Sam say: "John, did you tell any of 'em in thar 'bout your conversion?" An' I say: "Yes, Mars Sam, I tell 'em 'fore I know'd it, an' I feel like tellin' everybody in de worl' about it." Den he say: "John, you may tell it. Go back in dar an' go up an' down de tables, an' tell all of 'em. An' den if you wan' to, go upstairs an' tell 'em all 'bout it, an' den downstairs an' tell de hogshead men an' de drivers an' everybody what de Lord has done for yer."

By dis time, Mars Sam's face was rainin' tears, an' he say: "John, you needn't work no mo' today. I giv' you holiday. Aft'r you git through tellin' it here at de fact'ry, go up to de house, an' tell your folks; go roun' to your neighbors, an' tell dem; go anywhere you want to, an' tell de good news. It'll do you good, do dem good, an' help to hon'r your Lord an' Saviour."

Oh, dat happy day! Can I ever fergit it? Dat was my conversion mornin', an' dat day de Lord sent me out wid de good news of de kingdom. For mo' den forty years I've been tellin' de story. My step is gittin' ruther slo', my voice breaks down, an' sometimes I'm awful tired, but still I'm tellin' it. My lips proclaim de dyin' luv of de Lam' wid my las' expirin' breath.

Ah, my dear ol' marster! He sleeps out yonder in de ol' cemetery, an' in dis worl' I shall see his face no mo', but I don't fergit him. He give me a holiday, an' sent me out to tell my friends what great things God had dun for my soul. If he wuz here now, I think he would lif' up dem kin' black eyes of his, an' say: "Dat's right, John, still tellin' it; fly like de angel, an' wherever you go carry de gospel to de people." Farewell, my ol' marster; when I lan' in de heav'nly city, I'll call at your mansion dat de Lord had ready for you when you got dar, an' I shall say: "Mars Sam, I did what you tol' me, an' many of 'em is comin' up here wid da' robes wash'd in de blood of de Lam' dat was led in de way by my preachin', an' as you started me I want you to share in de glory of de salvation." An' I tell you what I reckon, dat when Mars Sam sees me, he'll say: "John, call me master no mo'; we're brothers now, an' we'll live forever roun' de throne of God."

FOUR GENERATIONS OF PREACHERS.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I would like to mention a few thinks that I remember from my boyhood about the founding of the Christian Church in Alabama. A few that are living now, remember Rev. Wytch Elder, founder of New Hope Christian Church, which is about seventy years old. He was my grandfather, and I remember hearing him preach. He was followed by two sons who were ministers—Rev. T. H. Elder and my father, Rev. J. D. Elder.

They were the pioneer ministers in the Alabama Conference. I remember well the sacrifices that they made and the hardships they endured. This was the second generation of our family I had heard preach the gospel. Following these, I have two brothers that are ministers—Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga., and Rev. J. W. Elder, in North Alabama. Naturally, I have heard these preach also, making the third generation I had heard preach. Then the fourth generation is marked by hearing my own son, Chaplain W. W. Elder, at present stationed in Cuba, making four generations I have heard preach without a single omission. It is said that the iniquities of the parents shall be visited upon the children down to the third and fourth generation.

As I think, upon this Scripture, if it had been possible for my grandfather to have foreseen how the work which he helped to begin had lived, and if he could have known that it was helped so by his posterity, I am sure he would have felt amply rewarded for all his efforts to further the cause.

When I was a small boy my father took THE CHRISTIAN SUN. In those days the opportunities of learning were small, and especially so in the country, and well do I remember learning my A B C's from the large black capital letters of THE SUN, and in this way I learned to read THE SUN, and so for fifty-five years I have continued to read it. Well do I remember the morning, being with my father at the post-office, when he received THE SUN which was draped in mourning for Rev. W. B. Wellons.

It is a source of satisfaction to me as I grow older to see the realization of my father's dream coming true, namely: in the erection of Bethlehem College near his old home. I wish to say in closing that I feel as the poet has said:

"I love Thy Church, oh God—
Her walls before Thee stand;
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
Engraven on Thy hand."

Fraternally,

Columbus, Ga. J. L. ELDER.

Bro. Elder quotes only a part of the promise, and the part not quoted is possible, the better of the two parts, as it occurs in Exod. 20:5-6. The part omitted reads as in verse 6: "And showing mercy to thousands (of generations) of them that love me and keep my commandments. With the wicked, God visits the children with their father's sons only unto the third and fourth generations, and then He says he will shew mercy unto thousands (of generations) of them that love me and keep my commandments." With the wicked, the evil follows only to the third and fourth generations, but with them that love Him and keep His commandments, He will shew mercy to thousands (of generations), for that is evidently what He means by thousands. How far does His mercy exceed the limits of His visitations upon the wicked? To the wicked He follows them to the third and fourth generations, but to them that love Him, to thousands. The difference is marked indeed.

DANVILLE, VA.

The Third Avenue Christian Church held its first quarterly conference on February 2nd. I may say it was a very happy and most satisfactory session. The business was of such a character that we believe it will be helpful to the Church. During the session, two splendid men—Bros. W. W. Perry and J. E. Jones—were added to the board of deacons. The ordination of these brethren took place in the presence of a large audience Sunday evening at 7:30 P. M., after which the sermon and the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants. One member was received. The Sunday School and Woman's Missionary Society, we think, are doing well. We are praying that God will give us a real revival from heaven, such as will put the Church on her feet in spiritual power, for greater service. The Church has adopted the budget system and put on the every-member canvass. Pray for us. P. T. KLAPP.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Men and Millions are terms of vast significance. Man is the crown of creation, and there is nothing so great as great men. This, of course, does not exclude great women, for man is the generic for mankind. The greatest of men, historically, were religious. Alexander does not rank with Moses, and Napoleon does not rank with Luther. The meaning of men in the plan of Men and Millions was the discovery and surrender of men for kingdom service. The emphasis, all the way through the campaign and through the vast amount of literature sent out, was placed upon "men." That is what the Church needs first of all—men and women devoted to kingdom service. This emphasis should not be limited to those who enter for life-service as ministers, missionaries, social worker, Chritian leaders; but there is a larger number and even greater need for an army of faithful workers in the local congregations. The call in the campaign for that larger number may have been neglected somewhat, but it is none the less important. The army does the fighting and wins the battle, and "like a mighty army moves the Church of God." Numbers are a mighty force, and all the mightier when obeying God. Under the movement of obedient followers, seas and rivers open at their approach, and Jericho walls fall flat when they shout. The campaign for men should not end in 1925. That part of the campaign should be continued till the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ."

Millions is another big term. It is the big thing in the world of business. What men are among men, millions are in business. The King's business is really the greatest business in the world, because its purpose is the largest and its motive are the bet. The richest men are in Christian nations. The largest industries are in Christian nations. The greatest inventions have been made in Christian nations. The greatest benevolent institutions are in Christian nations. The greatest civil governments are in Christian nations. All these require millions; and the great men in these must control millions. These millions are made up of small contributions, no matter how they are collected. The millions of small buyers, investors, contributors, make up the vast sums we call millions. Think of matches, pills, pins, needles, nails, pens, paper, ink, eggs, and the catalogue is almost endless; yet these items run into millions in the great world of business. Millions are just as important in the Lord's business. It is not the big gifts at long intervals, but the little gifts by many oftrepeated that keeps the work active and hopeful. Men without millions could never build railroads, steamships, and great factories; and millions without men could do nothing. It requires both working together. In the Church, it is the same. Men without millions are powerless, and millions without men even more powerless. It is the bounden privilege of every member of the Church to pay the pledges made to Men and Millions to carry out pledges Church boards have made to Church enterprises and to receive the personal and spiritual benefit of discharged obligations. It is not simply the fulfillment of a pledge, but the discharge of an obligation inherent in Christian life.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

Woodrow Wilson sleeps with his fathers. The voice that thrilled the world is still in death. The hand that wielded the pen more deadly than any sword will never indite for us again the words that had in them the inspiration that means immortality. And now that he is gone, we think of him not as a party leader, not even as a great American, but as a world citizen, the man who in the days of his ascendancy spoke for all men as no man ever before spoke, a modern Moses interpreting God's will to a world. We are too near him properly to evaluate his life and work, but we may be sure that the true appraisal of his worth will take into account three outstanding characteristics.

The first of these will be his sympathy with and faith in men—common, every-day, ordinary men. Wilson was a man of innate democracy. He believed whole-heartedly in the rule of the people. He had no commerce with autocrats or plutocrats or aristocrats. When the board of trustees of Princeton wanted to introduce the English atmosphere of cultured aloofness in the management of that institution's graduate school, he opposed it, and when he could no longer withstand the pressure of a large endowment conditioned on the carrying out of that design, he promptly resigned.

With him, democracy was more than a political creed. It was a life-principle, and he backed it up with a sublime confidence in the common man to react wholesomely toward democratic aims and projects when he was properly instructed. When Orlando was about to disrupt the peace conference by insisting on certain selfish nationalistic aims for Italy, Wilson appealed over his head to the Italian people. Their response justified his faith. When our own partisan Senate opposed the League of Nations, though broken in health and contrary to his physician's advice, he appealed to the people. He said before beginning his incompleted swing around the country that he was willing to sacrifice himself in the interest of the cause which he placed above life itself. We know the result. We can never know the aching sorrows of the nearly five years that followed that willing self-sacrifice. He was ready to make such self-sacrifice because he believed his fellow-citizens would react favorably toward the league if they could but thoroughly understand it. Such faith the world will not forget. It approaches the faith of another who resolutely chose the way of the cross, because of His confidence in His brotherman.

A second characteristic of Woodrow Wilson was his devotion to duty. In this respect, he reminds us of Robert E. Lee and of Lee's famous adage: "Duty is the sublimest word in the English language." Wilson translated the word into action. The public generally does not properly evaluate Mr. Wilson at this point. Some thought him weak and vacillating; others equally regarded him as cold and stern, even autocratic. He was both. Before he had matured his judgment on any point, he was the readiest man in the world to listen to any one who had an intelligent grasp of a situation, but when once he had glimpsed the goal of duty, he was invincible in his determination to reach it, no matter what the cost. In such a case, he unflinchingly set his face toward Calvary.

His Mexican policy and his neutral attitude toward the World War prior to our entrance are cases in point. "The note-writer," the comic press represented him to be. He was trying to arrive at a course of action in terms of our duty. When that was settled, though a man of peace, he stirred this nation in the support of war as it has never been stirred before. His notes and speeches during those tumultuous days fired the conscience of mankind and more than ever our military and naval forces broke the Hindenburg line, because they broke the spirit of the German nation. Once he had determined on a course as predicated by duty, no person in the world could balk him or change him. His breaks with Lansing, with Tumulty, with House and with numerous others were in consistent pursuit of duty as his conscience had sensed it. We cannot but respect the man who sacrificed his personal friendships, just as he sacrificed himself, in the cause to which duty's voice called him.

But he will be chiefly remembered as a devout, sincere Christian. The Christian life was something real to Woodrow Wilson. So vital was his religious experience that not once did he ever seem to notice the warfare between modernism and fundamentalism. What a pity that it should be otherwise with our would-be leaders in religious matters! The songs he loved—"The Son of God Goes Forth to War," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and "How Firm a Foundation"—are indicative of the man's militant faith. No wine was served in the White House while he occupied it. He never ate without invoking the divine blessing, and Bible reading was his unbroken daily habit. These acts were but symbols of his inner life. To him, religion was a living principle and a mockery unless incarnated in all the attitudes of life and conduct.

Well do I remember the last meeting I had with him personally. Our army and navy were not adequately provided with chaplains. Protestants, Catholics and Jews united in presenting him a signed petition. He received the petitions and petitioners in the White House. He read it carefully and then assured us it would have his earnest endorsement. Then he thanked us for bringing it to him and added, in substance, "I wish to take this occasion to express to you and to the country my firm conviction that the war will not be won so much by our guns and other fighting instrumentalities as by the Christian morale of the nation and of the men in uniform who represent us." I cherish that moment as one of the priceless experiences of life.

The war was to make the world safe for democracy, which, to his mind, was but another term for the Christian way of life, for the brotherhood of men and nations. The League of Nations was nothing more nor less than the fruition in proper time of the effort to make the world safe for democracy. To his mind, it was the Sermon on the Mount translated into international law. Since he was ready to be a martyr for his Christian principles, he was ready to die for the League of Nations. He could not accept reservations to it any more than he could to the Gospel of Jesus. He felt that it embodied the principles of that Gospel. The only thing this modern martyr could do was to die with a clear conscience.

He never doubted but that eventually the cause God had given him to espouse would triumph. He had confidence in the rising tide of altruism swelling in the hearts of men, another of his undying phrases. This rising tide of altruism he was sure men would be powerless permanently to resist. Eventually this tide, he believed, would engulf those who undertook to oppose it. He died with this conviction undimmed by the stabs of enemies or the sufferings of his own broken body.

And when the faithful doctor who had cared for him with the tender love of a father for his son, told him that the end was near, without a moment's hesitation he declared: "I am a broken machine; I am ready to go." And you may be sure he was ready. "A broken machine"—that was the way he regarded himself. The people never knew that he lost an eye from overwork during the terrible strain of the war days. They never knew for a certainty that he was paralyzed until after his death. He considered himself a machine in the factory of life, and when his days of service were ended, true to his fundamental conception, he was ready to be laid aside without a word of complaint. His favorite poem was Wordsworth's "Happy Warrior," and as such he laid down to sleep, confident that he had fought a good fight. In that confidence, we may all confidently acquiesce, and in his beautiful Christian life we may all greatly rejoice.

W. A. HARPER.

THE HAPPY WARRIOR.

(Woodrow Wilson's favorite poem.)

Who is the Happy Warrior? Who is he
That every man in arms should wish to be?
It is the generous Spirit, who, when brought
Among the tasks of real life, hath wrought
Upon the plan that pleased his boyish thought:
Whose high endeavors are an inward light
That makes the path before him always bright;
Who, with a natural instinct to discern
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;
Abides by this resolve, and stops not there,
But makes his moral being his prime care;
Who doomed to go in company with Pain,
And Fear, and Bloodshed, miserable train!
Turns his necessity to glorious gain;
In face of these doth exercise a power
Which is our human nature's highest dower;
Controls them and subdues, transmutes, bereaves,
Of their bad influence, and their good receives;
By objects, which might force the soul to abate
Her feeling, rendered more compassionate;
Is placable—because occasions rise
So often that demand such sacrifice;
More skillful in self-knowledge, even more pure,
As tempted more; more able to endure,
As more exposed to suffering and distress;
Thence, also more alive to tenderness.
'Tis he whose law is reason; who depends
Upon that law as on the best of friends;
Whence, in a state where men are tempted still
To evil for a guard against worse ill,
And what in quality or act is best
Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
He labors good on good to fix, and owes
To virtue every triumph that he knows;
Who, if he rise to station of command,
Rises by open means; and there will stand
On honorable terms, or else retire
And in himself possess his own desire;
Who comprehends his trust, and to the same
Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim;
And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait
For wealth, or honors or for worldly state;
Whom they must follow; on whose head must fall,
Like showers of manna, if they come at all:
Whose powers shed round him in the common strife,
Or mild concerns of ordinary life,
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But who, if he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Great issues, good or bad for human-kind
Is happy as a lover; and attired
With sudden brightness, like a man inspired;
With sudden brightness,
And, through the heat of conflict keeps the law
In calmness made, and sees what he foresaw;
Or if an unexpected call succeed,
Come when it will, is equal to the need;
He who though thus endued as with a sense
And faculty for storm and turbulence,
Is yet a soul whose master-bias leans
To homefelt pleasures and to gentle scenes;
Sweet images! which, wheresoe'er he be,
Are at his heart; and such fidelity
It is his darling passion to approve;
More brave for this that he hath much to love:
'Tis, finally, the man who, lifted high
Conspicuous object in a nation's eye,
Or left unthought of in obscurity—
Who, with a toward or untoward lot,
Prosperous or adverse, to his wish or not,
Plays, in the many games of life, that one
Where what he most doth value must be won:
Whom neither shape of danger can dismay,
Nor thought of tender happiness betray;
Who, not content that former worth stand fast,
Looks forward, persevering to the last,
From well to better, daily self-surpast:
Who, whether praise of him must walk the earth
For ever, and to noble deeds give birth,
Or he must fall to sleep without his fame,
And leave a dead unprofitable name,
Finds comfort in himself and in his cause;
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
His breath in confidence of Heaven's applause—
This is the Happy Warrior; this is he Whom every man in arms should wish to be.

—Wordsworth.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Six months ago this morning (February 2nd), Rev. G. D. Hunt performed the ceremony that ushered me into the old married-folks' club. On the evening of the same day, after motoring to Montgomery, Ala., the "Bethlehem Letter" which appeared the week following was written. Since that time the problems of the work have become no less, yet it has been a joy to have some one with whom to share them. Again, this evening, I shall endeavor to tell you something of Bethlehem's progress.

The needs of Bethlehem College are many, and seem to increase rather than diminish. Much work is being done, but the problems and needs seem to grow faster than the support of the institution. As has been said before, many of our Church members seem to have heaved a sigh of relief when they knew that Bethlehem College had begun to function as an institution of learning, and feel that their responsibility has ended. I should like to remind them that Bethlehem is an infant institution and needs the unreserved support of the mother Church, both near and far.

Some good people, however, are showing their interest—some by paying their pledges or making cash donations; some by sending books to the library; some by contributing foodstuffs to the dormitory, and some by furnishing rooms in the dormitory.

The financial secretary has the list of those paying pledges; therefore, I am leaving that part of the report to him.

The following have donated books to the library: Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Dr. J. T. Clack, Abanda, Ala.; Dr. C. A. Dinsmore, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.; Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala.; Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the faculty of Bethlehem College.

Food supplies have been contributed as follows: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Elliott, four messes of green corn, three pounds fresh sausage, one mess of sweet potatoes; Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Edge, three bushels of sweet potatoes, two gallons of sugar-cane syrup, three and one-half pounds of butter, eleven cans of tomatoes, three large pumpkins, five pounds of pork sausage, eight pounds of fresh pork, and four pounds of pressed meat.

The ones listed below have paid their $50 to furnish a room in the dormitory: Mrs. A. M. Johnson, Norfolk, Va.; Mr. A. S. Peak, Lineville, Ala.; Mr. J. S. Stephenson, Kite, Ga.; Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; Class No. 2, Wadley Christian Sunday School; Philologian Literary Society, Elon College, N. C.

We appreciate the help of these kind friends, and we hope that many more will follow their example.

M. W. HOOK.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

Some more good things to eat, and then something else. It seems that the pounding mentioned in a previous item became contagious, for soon after that I was out visiting one day and a sister from a Baptist Church gave me a chicken, some potatoes and a dollar in cash. A few days after this, when I was to see Sister Martha Gay, she gave us a nice string of sausage. One day soon after this, while out visiting the sick, I passed Bro. M. T. Barrett's on my way to see Uncle Jim Carr, and Aunt Martha, his wife, she being confined to her bed from a paralytic stroke. I talked with Bro. Barrett and his wife for a few minutes and hurried on to see those that were sick. (These, Uncle Jim and his wife, are colored people, but loved and respected by all; dark of skin, but clean of heart and character, and highly respected by all that know them as good neighbors, and earnest Christians.) I went in to sing, read the Book, and have prayer. I left my Ford in front of the house, and when I returned to it I found two chickens in a bag. I inquired of all at Uncle Jim's as to why they were in my Ford, but no one knew anything. I looked towards Bro. Barrett's, and thought to myself, these chickens did not get in this bag and in this Ford by themselves, so I accuse Bro. Barrett of the offense, so I did, and left with the chickens for their new home.

Bro. Barrett is one of the faithful members of Old Antioch; I would like to give much praise to him, and that community as to the sweet association I had with them while living in their midst, but time and space will not permit it, so will say thank you, if he sees this before I see him. When I reached home, I found that Bro. E. W. Ballard had been and brought us potatoes and fresh meat.

A few days later, I was to see Bro. J. H. Duck, and he gave me a nice string of sausage. We enjoy these good things very much, but most of all the love and good feelings that accompany them. To all we would say, thank you, and pray God's richest blessings may rest and abide with you.

The work at Mt. Carmel, I feel, is taking renewed interest in Church and Sunday School. Bro. Otis Joyner, our superintendent, seems to be interested in the work. We are looking forward to a larger and better Sunday School. We have decided to have preaching each second and fourth Sunday night. We had our first service Sunday night, January 14th. We had a good congregation, an interesting service, and two joined the Church at this service. We are praying and working that this may be the best year in the history of the Church.

Asking the earnest prayers of all who see these lines, that God may use me in His own way to glorify His name and hold up the Christ as the Saviour of man.

Walters, Va. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Since there are those who do not approve the giving of commissions or prizes for subscriptions to THE SUN, they are now asked to solicit from a sense of duty. It is expected that a large number of such will avail themselves of this opportunity, as but few joined in with those desiring remuneration.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A GREAT CONFERENCE.

(Continued from Last Week.)

(The North American Foreign Missions Conference, Atlantic City, January 8-11, 1924, continued.)

ARTICLE III.

The topic Wednesday night was, "Jesus Christ in the Thinking of the Orient." In this discussion, four nationalities took part—American, Chinese, Japanese and Indian. Dean Hatanake spoke for Japan. There are 4,667 Christian workers in Japan. A distinguished friend of Dr. Hatanaka's, who was speaker of Parliament, said he considered it more honor to be a deacon in a Christian Church than to be speaker of the highest legislative body of the empire, and this friend was as punctual and faithful in his duties as deacon as he was to his duties as speaker of Parliament. Jesus occupies a very high place in Japanese thinking. Many high officials and journalists and scholars are profound Christians—leaders in the thought of Japan. There are over 1,800 Churches and 2,820 Sunday Schools in Japan. These Churches have 200,000 members, and 400,000 people in Japan are receiving Christian instruction in one way or another. Not a prisoner left when the walls of the prison at Tokyo were shaken down by the earthquake. Why? Because the prison-keeper was a Christian and the prisoners remained out of respect to him. Jesus is working outside of the Churches. The best-selling books and the ones most read in Japan are books about Christ. The entire Sermon on the Mount is in one of the text-books studied in all the public schools of Japan. Of the four leading journals of Japan, two last year ran serial stories with devout Christians as their heroes. Four Buddhist priests attended the speaker's Church Sunday after Sunday, earnest seekers after the truth. There is everywhere in Japan a deep interest in Christ—not a Christ to argue about, but Christ as a compelling force! "We are looking for a larger Christ in Japan, one who controls society, State and nation—a Christ who will take interest in all our activities."

Prof. Yohan Masib spoke eloquently and enthusiastically for India. "India is the land of tigers and snakes. Also of 318,000,000 human beings who speak 147 different languages and dialects. The people are sharply divided into 2,000 castes. Some of these castes are so low that to touch them means pollution. There are 50,000,000 of these untouchables in India. There are at present only seventeen missionaries to each 1,000,000 souls. Recently 1,200 young men were condemned and sent to prison. Each one was allowed by law to take with him what he most desired. Three hundred of them took the New Testament. Nowhere on earth is the Church making such headway as in India. We read in the New Testament of the Day of Pentecost when 3,000 souls were converted in a day. This is a usual occurrence in India, where Church members have been received at the rate of over 7,000 a month for the past ten years. India does not need men to show them how to play billiard and bridge, but to preach Christ, baptize and receive them into the Church. It is a change of heart that India needs. We are grateful beyond words for the missionaries America has sent us, and the missionaries, through Jesus Christ, are remaking our land."

Mr. Y. Y. Tou spoke eloquently and grippingly for China. "In China, many Churches on Sunday practice the presence of God. First, Jesus in China has made us see the Father. Only Christ has made us see God. Great Greek and Hindu philosophers sought God and tried to teach us about Him, but only Jesus revealed Him to us. The cry of China today is, 'Show us the Father and it sufficeth us.' Second, Jesus has made us see and need our brother. Christianity presents us to our brother and introduces him to us. We can only know brotherhood as we realize it in Christ. We are brothers indeed only as we are filial in Christ. Third, Jesus has let loose in China the main-springs of human sympathy. He has opened up wells of human sympathy in our land. Fourth, Jesus has made prayer articulate in China. All peoples pray, but only Christ has made prayer articulate. My mother, father and grandparents were praying people, but only as one would turn a wheel. They knew not how to pray because they knew not Christ as Lord. Jesus is making religion personal, and God real to us in China. What China needs now is the spiritual message. China is trying to clean up, and if a spiritual message will come she will set her house in order. China, too, owes a debt of gratitude to Christianity which it can never pay." It was a great evening with these statesmen from Japan, India and China.

(To be Continued.)

J. O. ATKINSON.

GOD WAS IN THE EARTHQUAKE.

No doubt, many of us readers are thinking that the loss to our missionary Churches in Japan during the earthquake was a total loss and without recourse. In this we are mistaken. Speakers just from Tokyo and other parts of Japan, at the recent North American Missionary Conference in Atlantic City, reiterated the fact over and over again that the material loss had already been a spiritual gain. Prior to the earthquake, many Japanese were saying that our religion was only a name. They are now saying that there is power and might and helpfulness in it. For when we could have harmed, we helped, and when their need was greatest we of a Christian land were the first to carry food and the necessaries of life. We were assured by these speakers, who had just come from the scene of the catastrophe, that the whole attitude of the Japanese mind had changed and where we were heard before with difficulty we are now heard with sympathetic interest and deep concern. God was in the earthquake.

We Christians may not see how a just and righteous God could slay hundreds of thousands through an earthquake, almost in the twinkling of an eye, and set fire to untold millions of property and carry death, suffering and destruction in its wake. But in all this we may now see an opportunity to advance, for suspicion and hatred and prejudice against us in Japan have been done away. The whole state of mind in Japan is favorable to the preaching and teaching of Christianity now. It is safe to say, according to these eye-witnesses, that Japan has never been in so open and so ready and so susceptible a mind to receive the gospel message as it is today.

Instead, therefore, of relaxing our efforts, we Christians should more than redouble them in our relief and reconstruction work now necessary. Thousands should now be pouring into our treasury instead of hundreds. What man could not do in a century, God has done in a day. Instead of our properties being lost, it would seem from the opportunity now before us that all new work done in the name of Christianity in Japan will have far more weight and influence and worth than all previous undertakings.

Brethren and friends, if we are ever going to put forth an effort for Japan, now is the strategic moment. There should be a most ready and liberal response on every hand to our mission plea and call for Japan this year. A dollar now for Christian activity in Japan may count more, and likely will count more now, than tens and twenties have counted in the past. God spoke to the children of Israel that they go forward. He is certainly speaking to us Christians at this time that we go forward in our work of Christianizing Japan.

J. O. A.

MEN AND MILLIONS PAID IN JANUARY.

The following amounts were paid to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston during January. Shall we not largely increase this amount in February? It can and should be done:

North Carolina Conference
Fuller's Chapel	$ 7.00
Franklinton	13.00
O'Kelly's	15.00
Pleasant Grove	20.00
Mt. Auburn	204.00
Liberty, Vance	137.00
Concord	15.00
New Center	5.00
Union	49.00
Zion	23.00
Pleasant Hill	2.92
Burlington	30.40
Pleasant Grove	55.00
Park's Cross Roads	8.00
Pope's Chapel	56.00
Danville, Va.	45.34
		$ 685.66
Eastern Virginia Conference.
Berea, Norfolk	$ 54.25
Antioch	200.00
Oakland	5.00
Newport News	10.00
People's	14.00
Spring Hill	1.00
Union, Surry	50.00
Burton's Grove	38.00
Barrett's	46.00
Suffolk	1,130.25
Franklin	600.00
Holy Neck	742.00
Wakefield	63.00
Waverly	121.00
		3,074.50
Valley of Virginia Conference.
Leaksville	$ 28.00
Antioch	16.00
New Hope	15.00
Winchester	30.00
Joppa	1.50
Lineville	1.00
Bethlehem	16.00
Palmyra	.50
		108.00
Georgia and Alabama Conference.
Rock Spring	$ 10.00
Cragford	10.00
		20.00
Total		$3,888.16

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

ONLY ONE FAITH.

Faith is a word of immense significance, a word of constant use in the Scriptures, and filling a large space in all Christian literature; and it has been universally conceded that it is the measure or the test of Christian character—a religious state of the soul; a believing temper or tendency of the mind, taking a spiritual and moral direction. It is that state or tendency by which the soul is disposed or impelled to regard spiritual existences and moral distinctions as realities and as the surest and greatest realities; to discern a Creator in His works, a Law-giver in the working of His laws, a Father in the tokens of His care and love. It is something that makes the soul feel child-like and trustful, and makes it look up and behold, with devout joy, a being to trust in and to lean upon. It is the spiritual or religious element in man—that which disposes him and enables him to worship and obey, and to trust a something higher than himself, and to do nobler deeds and to live a pure life, and realize higher ideals of right and love than he has yet attained to. It is the element of the human constitution that has produced noble and saintly characters, and lives in every age of the world and under all religious dispensations. All religious systems are but efforts of this believing spirit to put itself into concrete and substantial forms.

Christian faith is that same religious element, or believing and uplooking spirit, as especially called forth, directed, and shaped by Jesus Christ by His teachings and His personal character and history and inspiring appeal and example. And seeing and feeling that He presented the very pattern of a perfect life, that He was true and holy, and finding that through Him there comes to every one that comes to Him and cleaves to Him an inspiration that kindles what is best in man, even the desire in all excellence, of pardon and peace and a better life, imparts strength, awakens hope, quickens love, gives a voice to the prayer of faith, and brings on the repose of perfect trust.

The great error of Christendom has been to regard Christian faith as consisting in the belief of a set of theological doctrines; and then, if faith is, as all admit it to be, the vital principle of the religious life, and if it is the belief of certain speculative opinions, then of course those opinions or doctrines become vital and absolutely necessary to true religion in the soul. The conclusion is inevitable, if we admit the premises; but we deny the premises. We deny that speculative opinions about the historical Christ and his teaching constitute the Christian faith. We have nothing to do but to go back to Christ Himself to clear this matter up. In several instances he strongly commended persons for their faith, who knew nothing about our doctrines which we call fundamental to Christianity, for He had never said a word upon these subjects. He had never said a word about His own nature, never called Himself by any other title than that modest one which He loved best—the Son of Man; had never spoken of His own blood and death, unless it were to give an intimation to His friends that He should not be long with them. He had only spoken such things as the Sermon on the Mount and a few simple parables illustrating the character of good men and the love of God, and gone about comforting the afflicted and healing the sick and telling men of the Heavenly Father and what it was their duty and their joy to be and to do in all simplicity and purity of living, and how He knew that what He said was approved by God and was the very truth. This was all He had taught—nothing that men would now call a theology, or a scheme of salvation—mere goodness and piety. And yet those who had heard nothing else, and knew nothing else, received from Him the hearty commendation of having faith: "I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel." They did not even take in all that He had said, sometimes only a very little of it, perhaps could appreciate nothing more about Him than some beneficent act; and yet their simple coming to Him in a believing spirit, having so much sympathy with Him, so much readiness to listen to Him and learn of Him any such little bond of union with Him He called faith, and was glad in it, and gave it His benediction, and so stamped it as Christian and a saving faith. I most gladly and whole-heartedly subscribe to the fundamental principles of Christianity as taught by Christ in the gospels, and yet my present and future salvation does not depend upon my faith in a set of principles, but upon faith in a life—Jesus Christ: He is the way, truth and life. Should the test of Christian faith be any different now from what He made it? Was not His good enough and high enough? What right has the disciple, managing His Church in His name, to require such different tests from those of the Master? Jesus was indeed no theologian, in the modern sense of the term; He had no idea of religion, but a simple goodness.

It sounds unkind to say it, but if Jesus were on earth today, there is no creed Church into which He could be admitted as a member by simply repeating anything He said when He was on earth. He would have to add something to that, assent to many doctrines which He never said a word about, or else be excluded as unsound in the faith. Not but that they love and honor Him as much as anybody can, and would fly to Him with rapture if they knew who or what He was; but, if they did not know that, and tried him by their creeds and standards of faith, and He had nothing to say but just what He said there in Palestine, he would not pass—they would have to reject Him. The opinions, and the theology of those Churches may be absolutely true and sound—that is not the question. Supposing them to be so, is it not obviously a great mistake to regard them as a test of faith or religion, and the only test of faith, when we see that such a view would exclude from among Christians the Master of Christians Himself. It martyred its millions during the dark ages, drew the strict lines of demarcation between the numerous sects of Christianity, causing dissension and bitterness among the hosts of the Lord, and has divided Church through the past centuries. Faith in Jesus in all He represented Himself to be and do, instead of in the doctrines of speculative theology would bring about harmony and true fellowship between brethren instead of the branding each other as heretics—there would be no fundamentalists or modernists; they would be simply Christians, all one in Christ. There are many theologies, but there can be only one Christian religion; a diversity of dogmas, but only one faith. The Bible itself contains more than one theology—the theology of John, James, Peter, Paul and others—and yet they have but one faith in common. They all look to Christ as with a single eye, and beneath the theologic veil they saw but one and the same Christ—one who showeth us the Father, His will and His love; one who embodied in Himself all goodness and inspired all goodness. They had no difference of opinion as to the temper their Master would have them cherish, the life He would have them lead, the hope and joy He would have them feel. There was but one tie that bound them all to Him—that of a reverent and confiding love, a believing sympathy which drew them to him, the beautiful and sinless one, whom to listen to and follow and resemble was to have Him for their Saviour, their inspiring guide on earth, their forerunner within the veil. There is at present a great diversity of forms and opinions among Christians, and yet but one faith among them all. There is a loud jangle of disputation, but it is only theological. Most of the discussion which goes on is about theology, while in matters of real religion there is silence and a reserve which seems to put them in the background; and, as a consequence of this, many of them come to think that their theology is their religion or something higher or better than religion, and that correctness of theological opinions is more important than goodness of heart and life. It is the theology that makes the noise and the show, while the faith that works below is silent, unproclaimed, and almost unobserved, because it makes no din or discord. There are times when good men forget their superficial differences, and feel and recognize the deeper unity.

A few years ago one of the great ocean steamers was crossing the Atlantic, with a very large company on board, and among them many clergymen and others eminent in Church affairs, who had been attending the world's convention at London. A terrible storm arose and continued thirty-six hours; all on board expected death hour by hour. They saw their ship dismantled, deluged, and, as they believed, breaking to pieces before the fury of the elements. They gave themselves up for lost. On their last night on earth, as they believed, they held a Communion service in the cabin; all gathered around the table and partook together of the symbols of the Redeemer's body and blood and all felt comforted by the blessed ordinance. They separated, in family groops or alone, to die. How was it that they could all sit down together to observe the ordinance, as if they were of one fold, knowing no differences. On shore, the Baptist would not sit down with the Congregationalist; the Trinitarian could not join the Unitarian in that sacred ordinance. And why? Because on shore, in all fair weather, theology would be uppermost; but there in the face of death, faith was one and made them one. It was no time for quibbles of criticism, or the drawing of artificial lines, or the setting up of speculative tests. In the immediate presence of death, the departing one forgets the distinctions of his theology, and reposes in faith, feeling that it is the same faith that soothes all pious and hopeful death-beds. In all deeds and enterprises of Christian love, when the heart goes forth in disinterestedness, followed by foot and hand in errands of mercy, faith which works by love grows paramount, and theology is deposed; and they who meet and co-operate in such things find they have but one religion, and receive one and the same message and commandment from their common Master. In all the great hours of noble resolve and high aspirations, or cleansing repentance, or heartfelt prayer, and the love of God warms and shines round the soul, and the tie of brotherhood is reknit, and the grace of God is pouring in, and the soul feels itself thereby growing whole cubits of stature in an houre—who then thinks of dividing the lines of doctrine? It is the hour in which faith triumphs and a man discovers that all good men are his brethren in the faith—brethren to help and be helped by, brethren to learn from, to take inspiration and impart it, all dear alike to the one Father of spirits. Yes, faith is everywhere one and the same thing; it is that which all good men hold in common. It is that which yearns toward the glorious and beautiful Christ, and stretches out its hand to take hold of his hand, and sits down at his feet to learn of him. It is that which reveals a brother to pity and to save in every man that lives, and twice a brother in every good and pure and living man. It lies back of all theologies; it breathes in the true worship of all the Churches and runs its fine veins and lovely tints through the skeleton of all honest creeds. Where it is present, it sanctifies all opinions; where it is absent, all opinions are but a sham and a delusion. In the still closet hour it is a prayer; abroad, amid duties and trials, it is a law; in human intercourse it is love; in temptation it is a shield; in suffering it is patience; in sorrow it is peace; in death it is a vision of the heavenly glories. There is but one faith—it is the soul of all goodness.

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

February 24, 1924.

Subject: The period of the judges.—Judges 2-16. (Print Judges 2:16-18, 7:2-8.)

Golden Text: "I will heal their backsliding; I will love them freely."
—Hos. 14:4.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 32:1-7.

The fifteen chapters of today's lesson cover an interesting period of Israel's history. It is known as "the period of the judges," because the main events of the period center about "judges"—eleven men and one woman—who vindicated right and held the scales of justice in time of peace, and wielded the sword against enemies in time of war. "Through judges, Jehovah secured to the people of Israel their rights over against their enemies, and as rulers the judges secured to individuals their rights." Only a few of the judges—Deborah, Barak, Gideon, Jephthah and Samson—are familiar to the general reader.

The period of the judges was a time of invasion from without, and of dissention from within. The Israelites had made only a partial conquest of the land of Canaan at the time of Joshua's death. In fact, the land was not entirely subdued until the time of the kingdom. Thus it was that the Israelites were exposed to two serious evils, the one as great as the other. On the one hand, they are continually harassed by hostile and marauding bands which pillaged their homes, played havoc with their crops, and created such a reign of terror that in some instances the Israelites hid in caves. On the other hand, where they dwelt in peace with their neighbors they were exposed to the degrading influences of Baal worship. There was intermarriage, blending of religion, the monotheism of Moses with Baal worship, and a general moral corruption. Conditions went from bad to worse.

An unnamed prophet saw that there was a causal relation between the compromise and corruption of Jehovah worship, and the disasters which came upon the people. Their sins had found them out. Thus it is that the Book of Judges is simply a story of sin, punishment, appeal, deliverance, peace. Jehovah would raise up a judge; He would deliver the people, there would be peace in the land. But as soon as the judge died, the people would lapse into their sinful ways, and Jehovah would bring punishment on the land and people.

One thing stands out in the lesson. The men who judged Israel were not, in most instances, men who should furnish us with our ideals of character and conduct today. They were the rough, unhewn timber, but they were the best that Jehovah could find, and He used them as chosen vessels for His purpose. We find here a wonderful illustration of the fact that "He remembereth our frame, He knoweth that we are dust."

The lesson as printed is concerned with Gideon and his faithful band of three hundred. And it is well that it is so, for he was about the best of the lot of judges, with the possible exception of Jehovah. He was modest, practical, shrewd, loyal to Jehovah, unambitious for power or position for himself, courageous, and devoted to his people. He was also reverent. Teachers will find in this story material that will grip the boys and girls, inspire the young men and women, and yield wise counsel to the adults.

Some Teaching Points.

1. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."
2. It is not the number of heads, but the quality of hearts, that count.
3. God usually chooses for His work those who are efficient in their work.
4. Jehovah makes himself known to those who will do His will.
5. It makes a difference as to what kind of companions we have.
6. Many "soldiers of the cross" turn back from faintness of heart when the real battle comes on.
7. It is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord God of Hosts.
8. Man by himself is not much; man with God is everything.
9. "Those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord."—Lincoln.
10. A few earnest, consecrated people in the Church are worth more than a large membership of nominal members.
11. God can use rough material to accomplish His purposes.
12. "Piety and patriotism are found in all parts of the country."
13. So-called trifling acts are often a revelation of, or index to character.
14. True leadership seeks nothing for itself.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

February 24, 1924.

Topic: One-half the world lacks the gospel. What shall we do about it?—Matt. 9:35-38.

Jesus was a great Missionary—the greatest that the world has ever seen. While He was in the flesh He "went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing every sickness and every disease among the people." He had such an enthusiasm and such a passion for helping others, that on one occasion his friends thought that He was "beside himself," while His enemies often said He was mad. They could not conceive of anybody being so interested in others, especially in those "who were down and out."

The secret of Jesus' missionary spirit was His knowledge of God and His vision of man. He knew God as a Father, and He saw the infinite possibilities of man. Because God was the Father, He loved all men, and no matter who they were or where they were or what they were, God wanted to save them all. Thus it was that "Jesus was moved with compassion" when He saw men as sheep without a shepherd, and living mean, sordid lives because they did not know God or the real meaning of life. He, therefore, gave all that He had and was in a glorious sacrificial effort to tell "the good news of the kingdom" to all men.

He knew that He could not do it all Himself, and He gave to His disciples—and to us—the great commission "to go," and teach all nations to observe all things whatsoever that He commanded. And they—and we—were to go because all power had been given unto Him, and because He would be with those who carried out His commission, even unto the end of the world. The whole world was to have the good news.

And yet today, after nearly two thousand years, the whole world does not have the gospel. In fact, over one-half of the world does not have the gospel! In some cases there are whole sections of the world which have never heard the name of Jesus. In other cases there are literally millions of people who do not have any missionaries. For instance, "there are still 480,000 square miles of territory in China proper with thirty-five to forty million inhabitants utterly unclaimed by any missionary agency, and in Turkestan, Tibet, and Mongolia there are eleven or twelve million more forgotten non-Christians." There are approximately 160,000,000 people of non-Christian lands utterly untouched by missionary effort. And there are many, many sections where, although there are missionaries, there is only one missionary for every 55,000 or 65,000 people. Figures could be given which would serve only to impress us with the fact that we have not really taken Christ's command seriously. Why call we Him Lord, Lord, and do not the things which He commands us?

What shall we do about it? For we must, most assuredly do something. I will suggest several things.

1. Seek to learn something of the need. We must know.
2. Try to find God's will for our own lives. No young person has a right to plan His lifework without first of all yielding his life to God to be used where He wills. We will have more missionaries when young people will present their bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable to God.
3. Parents must be willing to give their own children for service either at home or overseas.
4. We must pray. Jesus said that we were to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the harvest.
5. We must pray for the missionaries who are already on the field.
6. We must pray for the student volunteers who are in preparation.
7. We must seek to develop a deep compassion for other people.
8. We must give more liberally. If we cannot go in person, we can go in money.
9. We must be more charitable and brotherly toward all people of other races with whom we come in contact.
10. We must apply the principles of Christ to international problems.

They say that there is, or was, a grand jury in Baltimore who desired light wines and beer and a segregated district for vice. Well, what can be said of that grand jury? They want beer and wine and a district for social vice. We are sorry for Baltimore if it has such grand juries as that. Why, they would most likely be willing to have a place set apart for the wicked one himself in human society. They think more of money-making and the privilege of enjoying (?) sin than they ought to do, even for their own good. Let us keep such men off the grand jury, as far as possible.

"FOLKS IS FOLKS."

By Hermon Eldredge,

Secretary of Administration, Christian Education Department, Christian Church.

Robert J. Burdett, that quaint combination of humorist and minister of the gospel, once said that he had traveled the earth around and had seen the kings and queens and the common run in all lands. He had seen them with rings on their fingers and bells on their toes, and in their noses, and he had preached the same sermon in a fashionable Philadelphia Church that he had preached in Sing Sing Penitentiary, and he had finally come to the conclusion that all the people of all ranks are just "folks" when you get to know them.

And I want to agree with the honorable Robert, for it is a refreshing thing to find real folks everywhere you go. They may eat pie and baked beans in New England, or red meat in Kansas, or chicken in the Southland, or ham in the mountains; but they are "just folks" when you come to know them.

They are interested in the same good and bad things. They eat and sleep and work and loaf and make money and spend it everywhere. But inside, there is something mighty common between us all if we look for it.

Kipling said that "The colonel's lady and Julia O'Grady are sisters under the skin," and Burns said that "A man's a man for a' that," and there is something wonderfully alike in all of human nature if you just dig deep enough.

They used to say that the fellows in "the remount" were different and more like the mules they drove and cared for, but I remember that night with the boys when the "Old Story of Love" was told in a very simple and plain way to them, and I remember and can never forget how quiet they were and how the boys came up to talk about it afterward and how a Roman Catholic "puncher" told me the story of the night his mother died and he sang her to her endless sleep, and I thought again and again since, that if we could only learn to tell the old, old story in the simpler way that Jesus talked and taught, that we would not complain of a lack of a hearing.

The folks need a new presentation of the gospel. It is not a new gospel that their hearts are longing for, but it is a more plain, simple, heart-to-heart presentation of the old, old story.

An acquaintance of mine was soundly converted at forty years of age. He had been attending Church regularly for all his life, and every Sunday morning he was found in the pew of a great Church with his family as a "duty" he owed to the community. But when a plain, practical preacher came to town, this man of great affairs in business came to the mourners' bench and has been on fire for God for the past ten years. I saw him awhile ago and asked him why it was that he had not given his heart to God sooner as he had sat under the preaching of one of the ablest Pennsylvania ministers of the gospel for years, and he replied: "To tell you the honest truth, I didn't know what our pastor was talking about half the time, and I could take but mighty little of his good advice home with me. But when ——— came to town and preached, he used 'newspaper English,' and I knew what he was talking about all the time, and he got me."

The great preachers and teachers of religion in America know how to use simple language, and I submit that in doing it that they are following in the way of Jesus and after the manner of His presenting truth in plain and simple language. You knew what he was talking about all the time, and he lighted it up with illustrations from the common life and "the folks" from the streets and the folks from the palace and the folks from the sea, and the folks from the country and from the town crowded to hear him and went away saying: "Never man spake as this man spake."

I remember the night that "Uncle Billy" was to tell the story of his conversion in the "Old First Church," and the pastor, in announcing the coming of this plain old fellow, who had found God and was so full of zeal in His service, said (apologetically) that of course we couldn't expect much from "Uncle Billy," as he was a diamond in the rough and never had known the schools. But some of that fashionable preacher's parishioners afterward said that they had heard more real religion in Uncle Billy's talk than they had heard in their pastor's sermons in a year. This statement was an exageration, but it was a fact that "Uncle Billy" and his talk were both so plain and simple and heartfelt that he got "under the vests" of those big men of business in a way that their scholarly pastor had not been able to do, and, as one of them said in referring to Billy's being "a diamond in the rough," "Well, he may be a diamond in the rough, but he's a diamond sure enough."

This is not a plea for us all to preach and teach in the ungrammatical way of "Uncle Billy," but it is an appeal for a more simple, plain-worded presentation of the truth. Let us not "put the fodder too high" and make our work a spectacle instead of a feast. Let teachers and preachers of the Word know the language of the people and the incidents of their common day and the message will reach farther and sink deeper than polysyllables. William Jennings Bryan is a great orator and has been paid great sums for his appearance on platforms, and he says that the greatest illustrations that he can find or use are illustrations from the work of the common day. His hold on the people is not only because of his wonderful voice and his reserve power, which is evident, but also because he always talks so the people who hear him understand what he is talking about, and they enjoy it and have come again and again for the last thirty years to hear him. It is probably true that he has addressed more men and women in more places in America than any other man who has lived in the last quarter of a century. And he frankly says that this is one of the secrets of it. And so is it really true that "folks is folks," and that whether they are rich or poor, or town or country, or cultured or unlearned, there is a common bond of interest and the man who preaches and teaches God's honest truth to the cultured alone will get some of them to listen to him with pleasure and profit, but the man who gives the same content to the cultured and to the unlearned in plain, simple, true and sympathetic word and manner will catch the crowd of the unlearned and will be surprised at the number of scholars who will join in with great pleasure and profit—more than the number who came to hear the more elaborate presentation.

For, after all, we are to present the truth to hearts and lives for comfort and inspiration and living as well as to heads for clear-thinking, and we may well take our model and our method from the great Master-Teacher, who used both simple language and common illustration, that He might reach "the folks"—and, lo and behold! the kings and the priests and the "folks were drawn to hear Him and to testify to the power of His message. We are all different and have our different ways, but it will help us all to be as much like Him as He may help us to be. Let us dig deeper into His methods of teaching and preaching, even if we have to neglect some of our rules of elocution and our pet methods of delivery.

Some years ago, I heard the story of a young preacher whose Church was near Lane Seminary and who went to an aged friend and pastor for advice, as he wanted to change his field. He said: "My congregation is too intellectual. If I refer to some historical fact, I feel that professor of history in my congregation knows more about history than I do—a hundred times over; and if I refer to science, I feel like a school-boy—and it is so all along the line, and I have come to you for advice." And the wise old minister to whom he came for counsel and instruction just said to him: "Preach the plain, simple gospel, my boy, in a plain, simple, straightforward way—they know mighty little about that."

Erie, Pa.

QUARTERLY REPORT.

The following is the quarterly report of the treasurer of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, ending January 15, 1924:

Women's Societies.

Antioch	$ 5.00
Berea, Nansemond	14.90
Bethlehem	14.95
Christian Temple	66.70
Cypress Chapel	14.80
Damascus	11.80
Dendron	11.70
Dover	11.20
Elm Avenue, Portsmouth	7.80
Eures	7.00
First Church, Norfolk	6.30
Holland	23.75
Holy Neck	18.65
Isle of Wight	9.50
Ivor	3.90
Liberty Springs	8.80
Mt. Carmel	24.51
Newport News	5.90
Oakland	11.34
Portsmouth, First Church	25.82
Rosemont	66.14
Richmond	3.60
Suffolk	2.30
		$ 467.46

Young People's Societies.

Berea, Nansemond	$ 10.00
Christian Temple	6.51
Cypress Chapel	2.50
Dendron	4.30
First Church	13.71
Liberty Springs	13.20
Richmond	6.58
Suffolk	10.45
Antioch	6.45
Damascus	5.00
		78.70

Willing Workers.

Berea, Nansemond	$ 3.48
Holy Neck	7.71
First Church, Norfolk	13.35
Rosemont	3.04
		27.58
Total		$ 573.74

Mrs. M. L. Bryant,
Treasurer.

201 Poplar Ave., Norfolk, Va.

Secretaries, please note change from 41 to 201 in street number. I haven't moved, but my home has been renumbered.

Ask your pastor what is being done to increase the subscription list of The Sun. He should have first-hand information.

Get a subscriber for The Sun, and do it as quickly as you can.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE QUIET HOUR.

"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and, having shut thy door, pray to thy Father, who is in secret, and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall recompense thee openly." —Matt. 6:6.

The purpose of this prayer page is an endeavor to fulfill this Scripture. Thy "inner chamber" is within thee. "Thy door" is the shutting out the world and the shutting in Christ. When this is done, thou art alone with Him. Thou canst pray.

Alone with God for one sweet, solemn hour,
The quiet charm enfolds in peace and power,
And love steals o'er the heart a radiant shower,
Ennobling and enriching by its dower!

Alone with God upon the sunlit height,
When glorious morn dispels the gloom of night,
When evil fades and all is good and right,
When hearts are strengthened for the coming fight.

Alone with God, oh, blessed hour of prayer,
When men with the dear Maker all may share,
And on Him lay the burden of life's care,
Which grows too great for human hearts to bear.

Alone with God, forgetting self, desire,
Laying our lives upon His altar fire,
Lifted from sin and misery's smirching mire,
Growing in grace and soaring ever higher!

Alone with God, oh, priceless gift so rare,
When comes the heartening to do and dare,
Emboldened by the spirit of true prayer,
That speaks the words of life so pure and fair!

—Louise Hollingsworth Bowman.

Prayer.—O dear Father, help us to realize just how much we need to be alone with Thee, and may we, in our prayers, draw from Thee peace and power. Drive evil from us and strengthen our hearts for every problem and struggle. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

REPUTATION.

"A good name is better than precious oil."—Eccl. 7:1.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than riches."—Prov. 22:1.

Reputation is a relentless thing. A good one must be constantly watched; it must be shielded and polished all the time to keep it good. But a bad one is kept so easy that we don't have to worry about it. You won't have to work to spoil a good one—and when a good one falls, mighty is its fall. But once acquire the name of bad and you'll be in a devil of a sweat trying to live it down. The compensation here is that when you have finally convinced people that you are at least sincere they accept you more heartily—with an "I told you so" look at their neighbors. The people seem to love paradoxies and contrasts.

What good is a reputation? Well, it is worth a whole lot more than you think. If you wish to rise in the minds of those above you, if you cherish the thoughts of those that mean the most to you, and if you wish to live in better society, acquire a good reputation. And vice versa.

How to get a good reputation? By showing people that you are honest and sincere, by cutting out borrowing and bumming, and by showing your work to be of a quality befitting an honest man, you will acquire a good reputation. Believe us, it is certainly worth while.—Catapult.

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, in Thee we live and move and have our being, and we praise Thy name for all Thy blessings. We acknowledge our sins before Thee, and we pray for forgiveness. Out of a pure heart, help us to win a reputation and name for honor, justice, peace, love, mercy, kindness, brotherly love and devotion to God. We ask this for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MENTAL LAZINESS THE ROOT OF MANY TROUBLES.

"Study to show thyself approved of God, a workman who needeth not to be ashamed."—2 Tim. 2:15.

You know your own weakness better than any one else. Are you correcting them, or are you allowing them to go on year in and year out, hiding the fact of their existence from others?

Do not make the excuse that all men are failures in some degree or in some particular line, hence you cannot be expected to be perfect.

Such reasoning as this is fatal to ever improving on your weaknesses.

You cannot let yourself down easy by saying merely, "others are worse than I in this or other respects."

Because another is worse than you are does not excuse you at all.

You came into the world alone and you must go out of it alone, and you alone must stand and take the responsibility for what you do, regardless of how much better or how much worse the next man is.

Mental laziness is the root of the matter usually when a man is willing to make the excuse that others are as much of a failure as he in some particular.

It is by thinking, that anything worth while is attained.

Are you not going through life with as little mental effort as you can?

You are mentally too lazy to think—that is the plain fact. Believe it?—Virginian-Pilot.

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us this day Thy Holy Spirit, and all through today and every day that follows help us to study to obtain the noble and the true things and to defeat the unworthy. Help us to correct our faults. Strengthen Thou our weaknesses until they shall become strength. Quicken our minds to the alertness of the true inner man. Spur us on to be satisfied with nothing less than the best of life. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

KEEPING CLEAN.

"Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart."—Ps. 24:3,4.

"The people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me."—Matt. 15:8.

"Not that which goeth unto the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth." —Matt. 15:11.

"These things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man."—Matt. 15:18.

"Evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesses and blasphemies, these are the things which defile the man."—Matt. 15:19-20.

"If so be that ye have heard Him (Christ) and been taught by Him, * * * put off concerning the former conversation, and the old man, which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."—Eph. 5:21-24.

"The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." —Gal. 5:22-23.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

18—CHRISTIAN SUN— ... ... pTTofofhf'

How one may wash their robes. (Read Eph. 5:25-6:21.)

Prayer.—Our Father, we lift our hearts unto Thee in praise that there is so much joy in Thy Word, in Thy law, and in Thy cleansing power. And we pray Thee to inspire us daily to search for the wealth of Thy heart and know Thee the true God. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

(Read Matt. 5:1-16.)

*"The kingdom of God is * * * righteousness and peace."*—Rom. 14:7.

Let Us Pray.

Dear Father, we rejoice that Thou hast created in us Thy kingdom—thine own image, thine own love, and endowed us with spiritual substance, with thoughts that reach through eternity, with a conscience that bears witness of eternal righteousness, and with affections that make life sweet, that reach forth to one another and to Thee. Help us thus to pray as Thou didst teach us "Thy kingdom come."

We thank Thee that we live in these times and have recourse to this world's vastness, riches and glory, and that we are a part of it. May we ever be reminded of our part and keep near to Thee in body and spirit that the kingdom may come nigh unto us.

The world's evils, its delusions and pleasures, life's troubles and experiences, cast us down and easily disquiet us. It is so easy for us to wander from Thee and lose consciousness of Thy presence, and forget what Thy kingdom is. Forbid this, Lord, and teach us how to understand, and to sing and pray, and to know that the deepest yearnings of the soul are in Thee.

May we never forget that nothing less than Thyself can satisfy our hunger, quench our thirst and comfort our souls, with which Thou hast endowed us. Enter Thou into our house today and dwell there forever. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM.

(Lesson: Lk. 17:11-21; Eph. 2:1-10.)

"And being asked by the Pharasees when the kingdom of God cometh, He answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! The kingdom of God is within you."—Lk. 17:20-21.

Let us turn to Ephesians 2:1-10 and read together. Look at it. This is the finest passage in the Bible. It is a very brief story, but it contains the entire argument of fallen man, his lost condition, and salvation through Christ, which comes not by any good works we may do, but by faith and an humble walk with Him.

Some people have a conception of the coming of Christ as a great day when wondrous things will take place and Christ the Deliverer will come and smite the enemy and bring His children into the possession of the world. This is the kind of deliverer the apostles looked for. They were not looking for one who was to teach the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

How do we look for the fruit on the tree? We must go back to the nursery where the keeper takes the ordinary stalk of any spontaneous growth, sets into it the graft of the cultivated tree, watches and cultivates it for a year or two and then transplants it into thy garden where thou dost watch and cultivate it for a few more years. Then, in the springtime, thou dost watch the bursting of the buds, and the blossoms, the appearing of the little fruit, and thou dost say, "Fruit is coming." For a year yet thou dost wait till the fruit is full-grown and ripe. Then fruit has come. How will Christ come? He will come to thee by the taking of Him into thy very life as a graft; by forcing all the powers and passions of thy being through Him, nourishing His life in thine until thou shalt be like Him. Christ will be fully come to thee.

(All join in the Lord's Prayer.)

SUNDAY.

AN OLD-FASHIONED PICTURE.

"Lest there should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the Lord our God."—Deut. 29:18.

We were shown about in a great city Church famous for its ministers and prominent families. Verily, it was a great Church, a noble institution of brilliant personnel and public celebrities. Several weeks later, we found ourselves in a country hamlet, and on the Sabbath made our way to "the little brown meeting-house in the dell." The preacher was not known beyond the borders of the country. The members of the Church were just every-day sort of folks, interested in their farm labors, busy raising crops and herds for the market outside beyond the hills. Yet there was an appeal in the service that Sabbath morning that could not be escaped. We saw not the pews of famous men or women, but we saw the family pews of many a godly household. It was a wonderful picture, a picture representative of the nation's strength and suggestive of its righteous progress. As we looked upon the various groups of young men and women, worshiping with their elders, we felt we were looking upon the key to the success and strength of the city Church and the sound and sturdy stuff out of which are built all worthy religious and civic institutions. And we asked God to bless the family pew.—Rev. Richard Braunstein.

(Lord's Prayer—all the circle joining.)

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged through Sun...		$ 680.98
Burton's Grove, Va.	$ 2.65
Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.	22.65
Suffolk, Va.	39.85
Barretts, Va.	3.15
		68.30
Total		$ 749.28
Plymouth Church, N. C.	$ 6.25
Windsor, Va.	10.00
Zion Sunday School, N. C.	6.50
		22.75
Total		$ 772.03

J. O. ATKINSON,

OTHER SCHOOLS JOIN THE PROCESSION.

Dendron Sunday School, Dendron, Va., has cast its lot with the list of our other progressive schools in deciding to give one offering a month to missions. Because we know that this is the best thing for all our Sunday Schools to do, it rejoices the heart exceedingly when a new school writes of its decision to do this goodly thing. Surely all our schools will finally do what the Convention has decided long since!

J. O. ATKINSON,

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Since our last letter, we have had another critical case of pneumonia. For thirty-six hours we nursed the little boy with every attention we knew how to give, and in spite of all the help of the faithful nurses it looked as though death would win the fight and we would lose one from our family; but God was kind and good to us, and spared the little boy and he is now passed the crisis, so far as we can tell at this writing. We have two in bed at this time and truly hope that within the next week we will get back to normal again. The matrons who have had charge of the sick ones and who have been so faithful in giving them every attention possible will be greatly relieved. There has not been a night or day since the first of January that they have not had from two to ten patients to look after, and most of the time we have had at least one critically ill. We pray that the kind Master will continue to bless us and stay the hand of affliction, and good health will soon be our portion again.

We have two other goals we want to add to the goals already set. First, we want to get every Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention to give a monthly offering to help support the Orphanage. Every Church in the Eastern Virginia Conference made an offering last year except three; let us make that Conference 100 per cent this year. The North Carolina Conference was not far behind; let us make it 100 per cent this year. Second, we want each Church and Sunday School to elect some one to make a talk in behalf of the Orphanage on the Sunday the special offering is taken.

The superintendent of the Orphanage will be glad to assist in any way possible in giving information to help out. Let us make this year the best yet.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR FEBRUARY 14, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$1,134.87
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Mt. Pleasant	$ 1.25
Mt. Carmel	5.95
Mt. Carmel, Class No. 6	1.10
Morrisville	2.00
Mebane	1.00
Turner's Chapel	1.55
Henderson	5.38
Haw River	5.96
Pleasant Hill (A)	2.85
High Point	2.44
Berea, Alamance County	2.79
		32.27
Valley of Virginia Conference.
Bethlehem	$ 1.36
Dry Run	3.51
Leaksville	2.50
		7.37
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Isle of Wight		2.50
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Richland, Ga.	$ 1.00
Mt. Zion, Ala.	1.63
Beulah	1.50
Kite	2.15
		6.28
Special Offerings.
Board	$ 30.00
A Friend, Durham	15.00
W. W. Brown	15.00
J. F. Burnett, secretary	9.15
Mrs. I. G. McCullock, Sec., support of Clallie M. Cauthern	14.00
Home Mission Board, Omer S. Thomas, Treas.	24.90
Tawanda Christian Church, Kans.	3.15
Citizens' Bible Class, Elon	.41
M. Orban, Jr.	100.00
Interest	6.00
		217.61
Total		$1,400.00

ELON NOTES.

Students and faculty of Elon College paid tribute to the memory of Woodrow Wilson in a memorial exercise held here today at the chapel period when a eulogy in the form of a symposium of his life and works was given. By unanimous action the students ordered resolutions of respect and sympathy to be drawn up and sent to Mrs. Wilson from the college.

The memorial service opened with the singing of favorite songs of our war President—"The Son of God Goes Forth to War," and "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The college pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman, read as the Scripture text the thirteenth chapter of Romans.

President Harper presided over the memorial exercises, and in a brief introductory speech stated that the students were met to do respect to the memory of Wilson and the things for which he stood, not as a party man, because he was above that; not as a citizen of this country, but as a world figure.

Dr. T. C. Amick then spoke on "Wilson as a Military Leader." Dr. Amick began by saying that primarily Wilson was a man of peace and that he had become a military leader only by the force of circumstances. He called attention to the many fruitless notes to Germany, the manifold attempts to keep peace. He reviewed briefly the events from the time Wilson went before Congress to declare that the hour had struck to make the "world safe for democracy," until the close of hostilities, concluding with the opinion that Wilson was the greatest war leader ever produced by this county.

Prof. O. W. Johnson gave briefly a biography of the life of Woodrow Wilson. Prof. P. S. Kennett then spoke of "Wilson as a Historian," telling of his interest in history, government and law in his early days of education, mentioning a number of the standard text-books used in colleges of which Wilson was the author, and calling attention to the fact that at the time of his death Wilson was president of the American Historical Society.

Dr. W. P. Lawrence spoke on "Wilson's Idealism," and placed him in the class of the Apostle Paul and Cardinal Newman because of his idealism. He declared that Wilson was the spokesman for humanity, and a practical idealist. Prof. H. Babock spoke of "Wilson as a Master of Expression," stating that to his knowledge Wilson was the Ph. D. man in the White House, and that he was above reproach as a master of composition. Woodrow Wilson and Thomas Jefferson were the two Presidents who excelled in the literary world, Prof. Babcock declared.

Another favorite hymn of President Wilson, "How Firm a Foundation," concluded the exercises.

C. M. CANNON.

Experimenters in a Hudson River tunnel, ninety feet below the surface of the river and 1,600 feet from an exit, tuned in with a radio set and heard concerts as far away as Pittsburgh. This experiment may lead to something of value to entombed miners.

BRYANT.

John W. Bryant was born September 25, 1847, and died January 7, 1924, aged 76 years 3 months and 12 days. Bro. Bryant was a member of the New Hope Christian Church, and was a man well thought of by a host of friends. He is survived by two sons and one daughter. He was the father of Rev. M. L. Bryant, who did such a splendid work in the ministry for a few years and passed from labor to reward several years ago. Funeral services were held at Keezletown Methodist Church, January 9, 1924, and the remains laid to rest in the cemetery nearby. The writer was assisted in the services by Rev. R. P. Crumpler, the new pastor at New Hope, and by Rev. W. D. Eye, of the Methodist Church.

A. W. ANDES.

CLINE.

Maggie Henrietta Cline was born August 30, 1853, and departed to the great beyond January 16, 1924. Her age was 70 years 4 months and 16 days. Sister Cline united with the Timber Ridge Christian Church in childhood, and remained a faithful member until death. She was regarded by all as a splendid Christian woman, and leaves an impression for good by her pious Christian life. Surviving are her husband, Evan N. Cline; one son, and one daughter. Funeral services at Timber Ridge, January 20, 1924. A. W. ANDES.

WHITE.

Died at her home, Hopewell, Va., December 30, 1923, Mrs. Dana M. White, beloved wife of R. B. White, of Hopewell, Va., aged 32 years 7 months and 5 days. She was a faithful member of Antioch Christian Church. She will be missed in her home, community and Church, but our loss has been no doubt her eternal gain. She leaves a devoted husband, two little girls—Erma and Hettie White—a beloved father, Mr. W. H. Boyett, of Hopewell, Va.,; four brothers, two sisters and many relatives and friends. Funeral services conducted at Antioch Christian Church by her pastor on the 1st day of January, 1924, and her remains were placed away in the Church cemetery to await the second coming of her Lord. God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

ATKINSON.

Mrs. Minnie Hobby Atkinson, daughter of the late S. C. Hobby, and wife of Moses A. Atkinson, died at her home, Elon College, N. C., February 2, 1924, after a long and brave fight against disease and suffering, aged 48 years. The funeral was conducted at the home by the writer and the body laid to rest in the Elon College Cemetery. There was a large gathering of friends and relatives, and the floral offerings were many and beautiful.

Mrs. Atkinson was a member of Elon College Christian Church and was active in the Church and social life of the community whenever her health permitted. She is survived by her husband, M. A. Atkinson; her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Hobby, Raleigh, N. C.; three children—Lane, Wilkesboro, N. C.; Homer, U. S. Navy, and Alberta, who remains in the home; four brothers—W. B., John T., and S. M., of Raleigh, N. C., and W. R., Carey, N. C.; three sisters—Mrs. W. L. Wells, Portsmouth, Va.; Mrs. Clarence Beauman, Raleigh, N. C., and Mrs. Ethel Seltzar, Washington, D. C. To all of whom we extend our sincerest sympathy and pray the Father's richest blessings.

N. G. NEWMAN.

RICE—PITTS.

On the 22nd of January, in the Third Avenue Christian Church, Danville, Va., after Dr. J. O. Atkinson had preached us a fine sermon, he united in holy matrimony Fred S. Rice and Bertha Pitts, both of High Point, N. C.

After congratulations, the newly married couple left for their home. May happiness ever be theirs.

Elon College. P. T. KLAPP.

Get My New Buggy Catalog
Buy Direct from Factory
Save the Middleman's Profit
FREE BOOK describes my splendid Full Wrought Highland Hickory Buggies. Sold on 60 days Road Test. Money-back Guarantee. Write!
The D. T. Bohon Co.
60 Main Street Harrodsburg, Ky.
LOW PRICES

FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.

Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Name .....
Address .....
Shipping Point .....
(Please write distinctly.)

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

FORDS run 34 Miles on Gallon of Gasoline
Low Gear Seldom Used with Air Friction Carburetor

And we guarantee all other cars nearly double present mileage, power and flexibility, make hills on high formerly difficult on low. Models for any car, truck, tractor, marine or stationary engine. Makes old cars better than new. See our wonderful mileage guarantees for other cars.

Ford.....34 mi.	Reo.....24 mi.	Chevro't..32 mi.
Buick 4...30 mi.	Chalm's...23 mi.	Max'l (25) 30 mi.
Buick 6...24 mi.	Olds. 6....23 mi.	Nash 6....23 mi.
Hudson...30 mi.	Paige 6....20 mi.	Lincoln 8..17 mi.
Hupp.....25 mi.	Oakland 6..24 mi.	Stdbkr.Lt 6 23 mi.
Dodge....28 mi.	Overl'd 4..32 mi.	Cole 8....17 mi.

If your car is not mentioned here send name and model for particulars and our guarantee on it. Agents wanted.
SENT ON 30 DAY'S FREE TRIAL
You can drive any car in heaviest traffic without shifting gears. Starts off on high in any weather without priming or heating—no jerking or choking. No more foul spark plugs or carbon in cylinders. No leaking of gas into crank case. Try it 30 days on our guarantee of money back if not entirely satisfied. No strings to our guarantee. YOU ARE THE JUDGE. Anyone who can handle a wrench can attach it. No boring of new holes or changing of operating mechanism. Write today. AIR-FRICTION CARBURETOR CO. 186 Raymond Bldg. Dayton, Ohio, U. S. A.

THROAT IRRITATIONS
Throat irritations quickly disappear when you take Brown's Bronchial Troches. A dependable remedy—not a candy. Used for more than 70 years by singers and public speakers. Promptly relieves hoarseness, loss of voice, coughin. At all druggists.
JOHN I. BROWN, & SON, Boston, Mass.
General Sales Agents:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York..London..Toronto
BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH and VOICE LOZENGES
IN 5 SIZE PACKAGES

Is Iron Hunger Starving Your Blood

Keeping You Weak, Nervous, Irritable and Run-down?

WHAT TO DO

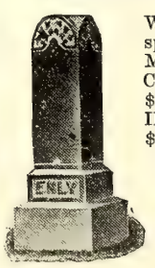
ANY doctor will tell you that if you expect to be strong and well, your blood must have iron just as your stomach must have food or a furnace must have coal. Iron is the food which keeps the blood working for you day and night. Only by satisfying this iron hunger of the pale, thin, watery blood can you build up rich red corpuscles that repair wasted tissue, renew the vigor of your body, and ward off germs of disease. Once you supply this red blood food in the form of organic iron—NUXATED IRON—a most amazing change often quickly takes place.

Nuxated Iron contains iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron in your blood. It acts as a powerful strengthi and body builder, steadies the nerves, puts color in the cheeks and spring in your step. It helps make strong, vigorous men and healthy attractive women.

When you get up feeling tired in the morning; when you find yourself nervous, irritable and easily upset: when you can no longer do your day's work without being all fagged out at night: pains across the back and your face looks pale and drawn, do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration, or until in your weakened condition you contract some serious disease. Simply try taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks and note the amazing change in your health, vigor, energy and endurance. You should be astonished at the results in even a few days time. Success guaranteed or money refunded. At all druggists.

NUXATED IRON ENRICHES THE BLOOD-GIVES YOU NEW STRENGTH AND ENERGY

$362.80 Commission on One Order



We offer a very attractive commission proposition to responsible men selling our line of guaranteed monuments, in Marble and Granite. On one deal our Mr. Fuller of North Carolina, made $362.80; Mr. Bryan of West Virginia, $206.25; Mr. Duncan, of Tennessee, $193.25; Mr. Willard, of Illinois, $131.25. We have many other agents making from $200.00 to $400.00 per month.

Our monuments are well finished. No trouble to sell. Write for full particulars and confidential contract.

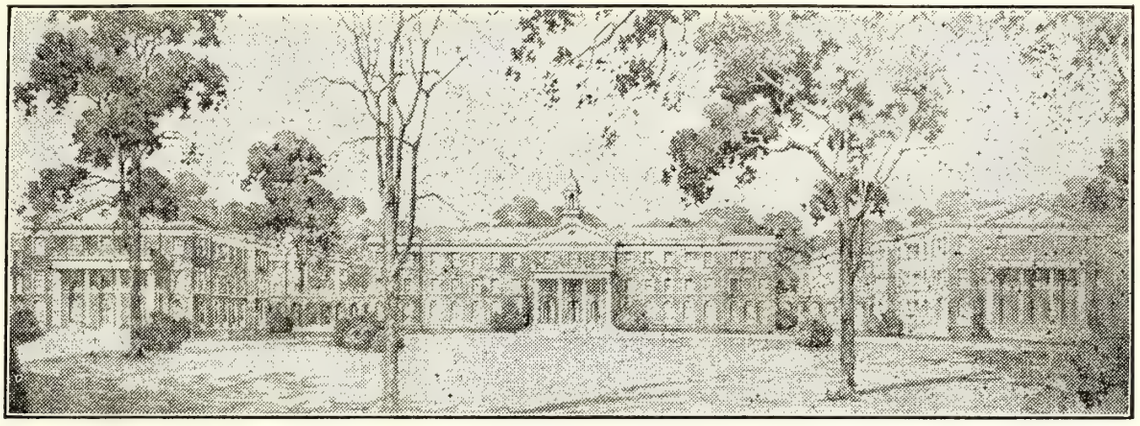
National Marble & Granite Corporation
Dept. P., BALL GROUND, GA.

'PIRATES!' ROARED THE COLONEL.

"As You Please," Responded Peter Blood, Captain of the Arabella—He Gave an Order—A Plank was Run Out Over the Vessel's Side, and—

Washington, D. C. (Special).—The adventures of this gallant soldier-of-fortune constitute one of the finest romances ever written—equal to Stevenson's "Treasure Island." It is by Sabatini, a writer whose fame is world-wide, and the name of it is "Captain Blood." It is one of the current best-selling books, which retails at $2, but those who read this notice can get it for 15 cents. The publishers of the Pathfinder, in order to acquaint new readers with their fast-growing national news weekly, which already has over half a million subscribers, will send their magazine 13 weeks, including this splendid serial, for only 15 cents. Besides giving the best of fiction, the Pathfinder keeps its readers informed on domestic and world affairs. It is a veritable mine of information on all subjects. There is no other magazine like it. Send your 15 cents without delay. This exciting story will begin in the January 5th issue. Address The Pathfinder, 143 Langdon Station, Washington, D. C.

Elon is Building for the Future



Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

FRECKLES
Quickly and Easily Removed During Winter Months With Othine--Double Strength
Why not rid yourself of those unsightly deep-seated freckles while the sun is not so active? Get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your drug or department store and apply like ordinary face cream. Thousands for over 15 years have gained a beautiful clear complexion by this simple, easy method.
At the same time Othine imparts that natural glow and color so much desired. Many use it every night in the year in place of cold cream and secure greater satisfaction.
Always ask for the double strength Othine—willingly sold on the money back guarantee.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

TRAVEL INFORMATION
EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS
LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM
Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Grow Cotton in Virginia
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown
Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.
Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.
Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.
For full information, address:
K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.
One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

There was a gloom cast over our community on Friday morning, December 7, 1923, when it became known that the death-angel had come suddenly and claimed one of our beloved members, Mr. N. M. Rodgers. He was a faithful member of the Church and Sunday School at New Hope; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Church has sustained the loss of a faithful and generous member, which has brought sorrow to our hearts, but, though there be an aching void, we bow in resignation to the will of God.

2. That words cannot portray the many beautiful qualities that crowned his life as a Sunday School teacher. Our Sunday School has indeed lost a valuable member, but let us cherish his memory and emulate the many virtues he so faithfully exemplified.

3. That to his wife and those to whom he was nearest and dearest, we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and commend them to the God of love and mercy. May this sad hour in life be to them a connecting-link between earth and heaven, where they may be reunited and form an unbroken circle around God's throne.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and a copy to The Christian Sun and Franklin Times for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
W. A. WHEELESS.
MRS. W. R. PERRY.
FRANCES CHAMBLEE.

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high. Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

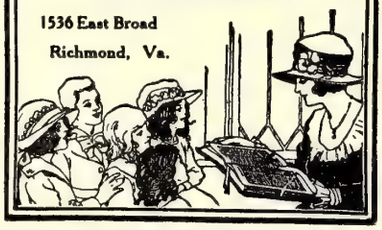
C5453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5⅛ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1924. | NUMBER 8.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Four Looks.—

If we look around like Moses, we will be afraid.

If we look down like Peter, we will sink.

If we look on others like Miriam, we will be envious.

If we look up to Jesus, we will be transformed.

United States Recognizes Greece.—

The American government has officially recognized the Greek government, as Great Britain had done a few days earlier, but the appointment of a minister to Athens is to be deferred until Greece determines whether her government shall be republican or monarchial. Despite the added strength which foreign recognition gave him, Premier Venizelos was having a stormy time in straightening out Greek affairs, and after one heated clash with opponents in the National Assembly he suffered a new heart attack which alarmed his followers.

Turkey Repeals Prohibition.—

Turkey's era of prohibition came to an end on January 27th, when Premier Ismet's proposal to restore the production and sale of intoxicating liquors as a State monopoly, was unanimously accepted by the Nationalist party. The repeal is said to have been brought about in part by the difficulties of enforcement, but was principally due to the desire for the liquor revenues. This is not the first time that the matter of revenue has proved the determining factor in the settlement of moral questions. We remember, with shame, that the organized liquor traffic got its stranglehold on our government when it was licensed for revenue.—Exchange.
possible.

Dr. Machen Says.—

"The crisis in the Presbyterian Church is whether the pulpit shall continue to proclaim the Bible as true, and the confession of faith as the doctrine taught in the Bible, whether Presbyterian ministers shall be allowed to use their offices to preach anything and everything, regardless of its veracity." This was the declaration of Dr. J. G. Machen, of Princeton Theological Seminary, in an address at Gettysburg Presbyterian Church. Dr. Machen scored the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, of New York, declaring that Dr. Grant told "a pack of lies from his pulpit," and was not fit to hold his position.

North Carolina's Governor to the Front.—

The North Carolina State Board of Education, headed by Governor Cameron Morrison, at a meeting on January 23rd, voted against the teaching in the public schools of the State any form of evolution which makes it appear that man descended from any of the lower order of animals. The board's position was embodied in a vote to bar from the list of biologies to be adopted by State high schools all textbooks which in any way intimate an origin of the human race other than that contained in the Bible. The Governor, in commenting on the action of the board, made the following statement: "Evolution means progress, but it does not mean that man—God's highest creation—is descended from a monkey or any other animal. I will not consent for any such doctrine or intimation of such doctrine to be taught in our public schools." Which will appeal to thousands of honest souls as good, common sense.

To Shoot the Moon.—

Prof. Goddard, instructor of physics at Clark University, Worcester, Mass., is working on a gigantic rocket which is expected to travel through space to the moon, speeding along by successive combustion explosives. The professor tells us that there is but one more step to be made before he can prepare a model for flight, and this step does not involve any unknown factor. He thinks that a speed of six miles a second would be sufficient to release a projectile from the law of gravitation, or the attraction of the earth, after which it would go on until it was drawn to some other heavenly body. Professor Goddard claims to be backed by the Smithsonian Institution and the United States government, and expects to launch his rocket some time this year. We are glad he has given us due warning of his intentions. For, if at any time in the near future there should be an unusual and unexpected eclipse of the moon, or if the familiar features of the man in the moon should suddenly appear shattered and distorted, we will know that the professor has fired his rocket with deadly aim!

Results of Prohibition.—

At the thirteenth annual convention of the Anti-Saloon League, held in Washington last week, the beneficial results of four years of prohibition are summed up in a series of resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the convention. These resolutions contain the following encouraging facts: More than 873,000 lives have been saved by the reduction in the death rate, giving to insurance companies a "gain in mortality" of $678,769,000. The ratio of arrests for drunkenness to population is 500,000 fewer, or a decrease of 2,000,000 in the four years. Commitments to penal institutions have fallen off by 20,000 since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. Reports from charitable organizations indicate that $74,000,000 is now available for constructive welfare work from funds formerly used for destitution caused by drink. Industrial accidents have decreased by a quarter of a million annually, lowering production costs and adding to human values. The billions of dollars formerly spent for intoxicating liquors are now turning many mill-wheels of industry and business. More than $5,000,000,000 was expended for automobiles during 1923. Drunken drivers would have made our roads into shambles of death if it had not been for prohibition. More than a billion dollars was added to savings accounts and more than $11,000,000,000 to insurance policies. Home buildings averaged 2,000 more homes per month than in 1919, in spite of the cost of labor. The "wets" are to have a "face the facts" meeting in Washington. We sincerely hope that they will be made to face these just mentioned, among others.

Are the Young the Criminals?—

At a recent meeting in Indianapolis, under the auspices of the Indiana Sunday School Council of Religious Education, Mr. William H. Remy, prosecuting attorney of Marion County, which includes Indianapolis, presented startling figures of youthful delinquency, showing that most major crimes are committed by boys between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one. Mr. Remy pointed out that in the ten-year period of 1913-23, the average age of criminals had dropped from six to eight years, and declared that the court records indicated a striking correlation between the figures he gave and the lack of adequate religious training of the youth. Dean Walter S. Athearn, of Boston University, referred to Mr. Remy's statement in disputing Police Commissioner Enright's charge that the prevalence of crimes of violence in New York recently was traceable to ex-soldiers, who had become accustomed to violence during the war. He said in that connection: The investigation of the Indiana survey of religious education and of Prosecuting Attorney Remy take the blame from the shoulders of the American doughboy and place it upon commercialized amusement, parental neglect and inadequate provision for moral and religious education by State, Church and home. Mr. Remy's figures show thatt he majority of the crimes committed in recent months were the work of persons too young to have been in the recent war when that war broke out. Instead of going to war, these lads went to the movies, where gun-play and crime were burned into young minds. Parents failed to give them proper supervision." Dr. Athearn directed the recent $100,000 survey of religious education in Indiana, which found so many awful things wrong with that unhappy State.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., was in Elon last week and made a talk to the students. He also attended the fortieth anniversary of the Burlington Church on Sunday, February 17th. He seems quite himself again after recovery from his illness of last fall.

What are you doing toward paying up your pledge to the Men and Millions? It is time you were doing your best to pay up, for the time will soon be up, and the money is needed. Certain contracts have been made, and the brethren, who, acting for the Church, made these pledges, feel that they must pay or some of our work will suffer. Do your best just as soon as you can.

If you cannot trust the Lord, then what can you expect Him to do for you? If you had a neighbor and you knew he did not trust you at all, what would you do for him? Even so, if you cannot trust the Lord, how much would you expect Him to do for you? If you wish His help, then trust Him all the while. Trust is a great word, and it means a great deal in your life. Do not abuse the Lord by not trusting Him?

Dr. Chas. H. Rowland evidently means to make the First Church at Greensboro a missionary Church. He has already three classes in mission study in his Church? He is teaching one of them. Prof. Myrick is teaching a second, and Mrs. Rowland is teaching the third. A Church that will study missions in earnest after that manner, will have no trouble to become a mission Church, and a growing one at that.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor of the Christian Church, Richmond, Va., begins on February 17th, a series of sermons to be preached at the 11 o'clock service each Sunday morning. The following are the subjects: February 17, "What is Religion?" February 24, "Religious Feeling"; March 2, "Need of God"; March 9, "Knowing God"; March 16, "Worship"; March 23, "Fruits of Religion." A cordial invitation is extended to all, including visitors, to hear these sermons.

The man who gambles shows a little more of himself than he is willing to have the public see, and at the same time wounds himself seriously in two ways: (1) He shows that he is not an honest man himself; (2) he also shows that he is willing to gain through doing his fellow-man a great wrong. If I gamble, then I show that I am not what I ought to be myself, and second it shows that I am willing, in an effort to help myself, to do so by injuring another. Indeed, gambling is the badge of dishonor and injustice. The man who wears that badge needs to be watched when he is where he can get a chance to win from another that which does not belong to himself. Beware of gambling!

"The death of Woodrow Wilson has given fresh emphasis to the greatness of his life and the sublimity of his ideals all over the world. Among foreign tributes to him we quote the following—the Sunday Express says: "Woodrow Wilson is the greatest American since Abraham Lincoln. He was a failure like Moses, because he was not allowed to lead Europe into the promised land. But in a hundred years the historian will rank his failure as a peace-maker higher than the success of any other figure in the great war. Already the limelight of fame is dim on the faces of the men who slew Wilson's dream. Five years of disenchantment have restored our lost perspective. Wilson, on his death-bed, dwarfs his betrayers on both sides of the Atlantic. He is more than a politician. He is a seer. His blessings of peace will be the homage of history. The failure of Jesus in Palestine gave the world Christianity; the failure of Wilson at Versailles will give the world the peace of brotherhood."

On Sunday, February 17, 1924, the Christian Church at Sanford, N. C., was destroyed by fire. We have only a brief telegram from Rev. R. L. Williamson, the pastor, stating that the house was burned on Sunday. We have no further particulars. Much sympathy is felt for both the pastor and the people in the loss they sustain. Only last year, if we mistake not, they had remodeled the house and added a number of improvements to it, making it much more comfortable and also more attractive. We hope soon to hear that the Church has decided to rebuild, and at once. Let every one who can, even by sacrifice, give this pastor and people a helping hand.

Dr. Harper has some rather striking things to say in this issue on the financial plan for the future work of the Christian Church. One thing on which he insists, we believe is reasonable, and that is that the subject deserves pre-Convention discussion. If the plan is to be adopted, the discussion will enable the people to act intelligently in adopting it; if it is to be rejected, then the discussion of the merits or demerits of the plan will enable our people to act, in rejecting it, with their eyes open. Dr. Harper is certainly fair in his desire for the discussion of the matter, so that it may be either adopted or rejected in the light of its merits or demerits.

The Presbyterian of the South says it is claimed that legislation will not save a man, and that is true; but the lack of legislation has caused many a man to go down in ruin. If legislation will not save, let us do our best to see that no man shall be lost through a lack of legislation. You cannot legislate whiskey out of a man, but you may legislate the man out of whiskey, and that is just about as safe for the man as if you had legislated whiskey out of the man. Law can be made very useful to all, and especially to the weak. We may not legislate good into a man, but we can give strength to the weak and legislate temptation out of his way, and that will be a big thing for the weak man, and it will not do the strong man any harm. Keep that thought in mind, that from the moral standpoint, what helps the weak man in legislation will not hurt the strong man.

Rev. B. F. Black, Norfolk, Va., R. F. D., has been on a visit to Elon for a few days past. He has a daughter in school here, but aside from her presence here, the museum is claiming his attention. He is the custodian of the museum, and has real tact for the work. The old museum was totally destroyed in the fire of last year, so Bro. Black is building, or rather rebuilding, from the ground up. He is doing a lot of work which the public does not see and know about. He tells us that he already has almost enough to fill one of the large rooms in the administrative building. He expects the Elon museum to be a great institution for Elon. It will be finally housed in one of the new buildings, with apartments specially prepared for it. Let us give Bro. Black every encouragement within our reach, for he is doing a work which almost any college in the land would be proud to have as its own. Now, that it is Elon's, let us do our best for it and help Bro. Black to make it grow.

If you would have your Christianity bud, bloom and fruit, then keep it under the power of the Holy Spirit, as otherwise a drought will do much harm, just as truly as a severe drought will destroy one's crops. The weakest point in the life of all Christians, with perhaps a few exceptions, is the absence of the life-giving Spirit. If He is absent, you have a drought. If He is present, you will have a flourishing growth and a fine harvest of the fruits of the true Christian life. At all costs, keep filled with the Spirit.

The sad news comes to us in a telegram from Bro. C. B. Duke, Suffolk, Va., that Rev. H. H. Butler died at his home on Saturday afternoon very suddenly. So far as we are informed, he had been in about his usual health till he was so suddenly called to go. Dr. Staley was called from North Carolina to attend the funeral, which was held on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, February 19th. Bro. Butler has been in the Christian ministry almost fifty years, perhaps fully that long, and in that time he served in a large territory, covering in part Isle of Wight, Nansemond and Norfolk Counties in Virginia, and Gates County in North Carolina. He had been pastor of old Antioch, in Isle of Wight, for nearly twenty-nine years. Many will sorrow now that he is gone, so that we shall see his face no more in the flesh. We were boys together, we were in school together, we have many a time labored together; but now no more till we meet in the better life. God bless his memory and the many labors of heart and hands. Dr. W. W. Staley will prepare a suitable sketch of his life for these columns in the near future.

RECEPTION FOR DR. ROWLAND.

The First Christian Church of Greensboro, N. C., on Friday evening, February 8th, gave a reception in honor of its incoming pastor, Dr .C. H. Rowland, who came to us from the Christian Church at Franklin, Va.

This reception was given at the lovely home of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Pearce, 331 Church St., from 8 to 10 P. M., on the date above mentioned. At the front door Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Petty and Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Caveness met the guests. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Clements introduced them to the receiving line, in which stood Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Pearce, Dr. and Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. F. M. Cook and Mrs. H. V. Simpson. Inviting the guests into the dining room were Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Truitt. Mrs. M. H. Newlin and Mrs. L. M. Clymer poured tea and coffee. Sandwiches were served with the drinks by Misses Lois Dorsett, Tommy Strader, Ellen Shelton, Wyonna Reberson, Callie Burch and Bertha Allen.

Miss Effie Lowe and Miss Christine Thompson stood at the door to the hall, directing the guests into the living room where they were served punch by Misses Louise Caveness, Dorothy Thompson and Lois Tucker. Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Phillips bade the guests farewell at the door upon their departure.

The home was beautifully decorated in quantities of red flowers. Red candles were lighted which added much to the loveliness of the scene.

It was unanimously agreed by the guests present, as one could learn from the conversations round about, that it was one of the most successful receptions given by the church. This being the case, it was nothing more than befitting for Dr. and Mrs. Rowland who have been very highly esteemed from their coming into our midst.

We bespeak for the First Christian Church of Greensboro a happy and successful year with Dr. Rowland at the head and his Christian wife to assist him with her excellent ability for leadership.

F. F. Myrick.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—I understand some do not believe that the last chapter of Mark is genuine. They seem to believe that it was added to that book by some one who had no right to add it. Have we any more right to believe that it was not written by Mark than we have to believe the whole Book a fake. As I understand it, we are commanded to believe the whole Book as the truth. —Mrs. R. J. N.

Answer.—We deeply sympathize with honest Christians who hear of such things, and feel most anxious to know if there be any truth in the claim that from verse 9 to the end of the last chapter of Mark is not genuine. It is true, that there are some people who have claimed that the portion of the last chapter of Mark is not genuine, but if you rule out all of the Bible which some scholar has declared not genuine, you will have nothing left, or practically so. There have been a few wise heads (?) who have declared their belief against the last part of Mark 16, but there are strong men, who are first-class scholars, who accept it heartily and believe it is true. Burgon and Miller and Salmon believe it to be genuine, as do many others. The reason which most of the scholars give for rejecting it (we mean most of those who do reject it) is unsatisfactory. For instance, one reason given is the fact that from verse 9 to the end, they imagine that the language is not the language of the man who wrote the other part of the gospel, and so they pronounce it an addition from some unknown source. Alas! for such a reason. The reason, as we see it, is purely imaginary, and therefore not reliable and should not influence any true Christian to think of such a thing as discarding that part of the last chapter. The fact that these scholars imagine that the language is not the language of the person who wrote the other part of the gospel of Mark seems to us absolutely unreliable, and unreliable because the reason given is not sufficient to draw such a conclusion. We, therefore, advise Mrs. R. J. N. and all other Christians who have been troubled over this claim to lay their troubles aside and go on with the same faith which has given them strength to believe the Word of God all the way of life's journey. Have no fears, but trust in God and believe the last part of Mark's gospel just as truly as you believe the first part.

Question.—In Rev. 4:6, we read: "And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal; and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne were four beasts full of eyes before and behind." Will you please explain what were these beasts?—P. T. K.

Answer.—Let me first explain one thing, and that is that these four beasts were not beasts, but living beings. In Rev. 4:6, the word used is zoon, and that means not a beast, but a living creature. In Rev. 6:8, we have the word beast again, but it is not the same word in the Greek as the word used in Rev. 4:6, where it really means a beast. The Greek word used is therion, and that means a wild beast. The two words are wholly unlike. One means a living creature, and the other means a wild beast. In Rev. 4:6, we get evidence to prove that zoon does not mean a wild beast, or any other kind of a beast. The internal evidence which shows that it cannot be a beast at all, we may get by a study of the language used. John had had a door in heaven opened to him. See the first verse of chapter four. As John looked in at this opened door, he saw some very wonderful things, and no wonder, for he was not gazing upon the things of earth, but looking into heaven, and there he saw things he had not seen before. The things which attracted his attention especially were these:

(1) He saw a throne in heaven. (2) He saw a glorious One seated on the throne. It was the seat of honor, authority and judgment. (3) He saw a rainbow about the throne like unto an emerald. (4) He saw four and twenty seats, not vacant seats, but occupied by four and twenty elders. (5) He saw lightnings and heard voices proceeding from the throne. (6) He saw seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, and these lamps, as it is explained in verse 5, were the seven spirits of God. (7) He saw before the throne a sea of glass, and it was like unto crystal. (8) He also saw four beasts, really four living ones, between the throne and the circle of the elders who were occupying the twenty-four chairs. Now, keep in mind that John did not see these things on the earth. They were in heaven, and he saw them through a door which had been opened to his vision in heaven, so what he saw could not have been beasts, and when we turn to the Greek language in which the Book of Revelation was written, we find the word used does not mean beasts at all, but living creatures. Maybe you will ask me, what were the living creatures? They were four servants of the living God, standing in His presence to do His bidding. I do not know any more than what is said of them, and so while I feel reasonably certain that they were special servants of God, I cannot go further and say just what they were, but I suppose they were angels, servants of God. John's description of these four living creatures is most interesting, and conclusively proves that these were not four beasts, as we now understand this word.

(1) He said they had many eyes, denoting, as some think, sagacity, vigilance and diligence. (2) They had a lion-like courage and sublime affections. (3) Their continual employment was praising God, day and night. Each of these living creatures had six wings about them, and they were full of eyes within, they rested not from their employment, day nor night, and the song they sang was "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," which was and is, and is to come. We are told by the Word that they were giving glory and honor and thanks to Him that sat on the throne, who liveth forever and ever. Perhaps you will ask me why these living creatures were called beasts, if they were not beasts. That is a good question and must be answered truthfully, as much as we regret the necessity. When the King James translators were translating the Bible from the Greek into the English, in some way we cannot explain, they mistook the word zoon to mean beasts, but as learning has advanced it was discovered that the word does not at all mean beasts, but living creatures. This gives the words a very different meaning. But were they (the translators) not to blame for making such a translation? Perhaps so, but more than likely they did the best they knew, and none of us could do more than that. This shows the wisdom of consecrated learning. The men of the nineteenth century were more learned than were those of the seventeenth century, and threfore they delivered the people from this error. The Greek word was right all the time, but the translators did not understand it. Later it was given to men to explain the passage according to the true Word. This does not mean that the Bible has been wrong all this time. It simply means that the English translation was not correct, but the Greek was correct, and these learned men brought out the correct meaning. So keep in mind that the original meant living creatures—not beasts.

If you have not done so, let us urge you to notice Dr. J. O. Atkinson's report each month of the offerings of our Sunday Schools for missions. Our Sunday Schools are doing more under a little encouragement for the cause of missions than the whole donomination was doing forty years ago. And, so far as we are informed, every Sunday School which has tried the rule of giving the collection of one Sunday a month to missions and one Sunday a month to the Orphanage and the other two Sundays a month to the needs of their own class, have found that the offerings for the two Sundays given to their own needs bring a better collection than did all of the four Sundays when they were using it all for themselves. That is a fine showing. We were in one class not long ago which decided for the first time to follow this plan of giving, and from the start the collections for the two Sundays for their own school was larger than were all four of them before they adopted this plan; meantime, the collection for missions and the Orphanage were very good, better than before, and they actually seemed surprised at such results, but there is no occasion for surprise, for it is the Lord's way to add His blessings to the work we do for others, as well as for ourselves. Perhaps the greatest drawback to the Christian Church through its history is the fact that we have been too much concerned about ourselves and not enough for others. Let us reverse the old order.

Although our Dr. D. A. Long is out of his pastorate for the winter months, it is evident that he is not out of work, as he has been called to teach a large Bible class in Tampa, Fla. The Tampa Daily Tribune of January 26th says: "Teaching from personal experience in the Holy Land has proved a marked success in the Bible class of the Hyde Park Methodist Sunday School, there having been a marked increase in attendance since Dr. Dan Long took over the class a few weeks ago. Dr. Long, a native of North Carolina and a veteran of the Civil War, made a long stay in the Holy Land, and his manner of imparting his information to his class has proved highly interesting and entertaining. He is a man of broad vision and high mental attributes, having been for many years president of the university at Yellow Springs, Ohio. Dr. Long has been a winter visitor to Tampa for a number of years, and only recently consented to take over the Bible class during his stay in the city. Officers of the Sunday School are E. H. Robson, president; Hewitt Hill, vice-president, and Henry Johnson, secretary. Sessions of the class begin each Sunday morning at 9:45 o'clock, and the public is invited to attend."

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. Holland,
L. E. Smith,
I. W. Johnson,
Executive Board.

January 31, 1924.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE BOOK.

Some one has said that there is no arithmetic by which the value of the Bible can be calculated; there is no rule by which its influence for good can be measured, or even approximated. That is well said, for the Bible is the most influential Book in the world. It has been the guide of millions and the strength of nations, and it stands today as the bulwark of virtue and the light of the world.

It is said that a distinguished heathen visited Queen Victoria on one occasion and asked her to what did she attribute the success of the British empire, and at once she pointed to the Bible and affirmed that the influence of the Bible had shaped the high ideals of the greatest empire in the world. No doubt, she said what was true—the Bible has been the greatest civilizing and Christianizing influence that ever entered the British empire, or any other, as for that. There are no truly great nations which are not Christian, and that seems to declare that the Bible—for that is the Book of Christian peoples—is the mighty agent for exalting and perpetuating the greatness of any people in the world. Indeed, is it not a fact that every nation on earth, every strong and mighty people, have had as the foundation of their life and faith the high ideals and far-reaching principles of the Bible—the Book of the true God?

It is hard to believe that such a Book of far-reaching influence had no place in civilized society, in a printed form, till 1456. It seems that it cannot be of such recent availability for the people. Even though it was very limited in its opportunity to reach the people before that time, yet its influence was felt long before that day. The Bible kindled the fire of truth long before it was given to the world in printed form, but in its limitations it had enough influence to work wonders among the people. While the Bible was known and used and loved in the dark ages, it did seem to be unequal to the great task of giving the people the light of God in sufficient power to awake them to their high privileges, not that the Bible did not have the strength to do for the people what they needed to be done for them, but because the Bible in those days was literally chained. Later, when the printing press gave to the people the Bible in a readable form, the chain that held it was broken and the Book became an open treasure-house, throwing out the light to all English-speaking peoples, and from that day till this it has been reaching out its long arms of power and setting the people free, and as they were set free, they began to go forward, and a great upheaval in human thought was the result.

You have only to call to mind the facts bearing upon this matter to see just what it has done for the world since its chain was broken. You have read in history. Up till the date when the printing press made it possible to give the light of God to the world, we know that darkness—spiritual darkness—covered the greater portion of the civilized world. We know also that in a short time after the printing of the Bible, that the sun arose and drove away the darkness which, for almost a thousand years, had kept the world in darkness. It was following the date of the printed Bible that the Reformation dawned, and when that dawned, the light was speedily chased away and an open light was given to the world. If there were no evidence of the power of the Bible, the fact that so soon as it got loose from its chains it flooded the world with the light of God, and from that day till this it has gone marching on and giving light to them which had been so long sitting in darkness. A chained Bible meant the dark ages. A Bible given the opportunity to shine for the light of man, meant the dawning of a new day and the giving of light to a world in darkness. From that day till this, its influence has been widening and reaching out after the darkened peoples of earth.

The wide influence of the Bible is further attested by the fact that it is reaching out into every avenue of power. It has reached and largely shaped the character of all good modern literature. The best thought of modern literature has been largely stimulated by the Bible. Today it is spreading, not withstanding the opposition to it on the part of many, as never before. Let us look at the facts and figures for a few minutes. During the year of 1923, the American Bible Society printed and distributed 800,000 copies of the Scriptures, and they were printed in sixty-six languages. And that is the work of one society, when there are many throughout all Christendom. Over 82,000 copies of the Scriptures were distributed to the immigrants arriving at Ellis Island. It also distributed 70,000 copies to sailors and seamen from all parts of the world. One copy was furnished the ships of the American Marine Library Association, that none of their ships should sail without the Bible.

If we wished to destroy some great book from the face of the earth that it might never again reach and influence the lives of the people, we would certainly not choose the Bible as the book to be destroyed, for before we could get the work started, the Bible would be coming again to take the place of those destroyed and its agents would run faster than the slow feet of man. Unbelief has no chance to out-distance the Bible in reaching the people. The man who thinks that he can out-run the Bible, under the power of the Holy Spirit, ought to know that he is in an unequal race; that he cannot hope to win. The influence of the Bible is a mighty tide rolling on and covering this country, and in fact all Christendom, so fast that the highest speeded automobile cannot hope to keep out of its way—it will overrun and break down the strongest opposition that can be given to it.

The Rev. George William Carter, the secretary of the American Bible Society, in his last report, says:

"In these times of strain, stress and uncertainty, there is need for a larger free distribution of God's Word. There is a widespread mental activity which is in opposition to the teachings of Revelation and seeks to cast dishonor upon the divine record. There is a social program being promulgated that would blot out the Sabbath, nationalize property and destroy the government. With all this, and perhaps springing out of it there is a growing disregard of human and divine authority, a spirit of restless unbelief and often aggressive infidelity. Human life with many has lost its sacredness, and there is a frightful indifference to spiritual truth. No human expedient and no human philosophy can avail to save us and our beloved country from the storms of atheistic socialism and anarchy. There is one bow of promise that spans the dark background. It is the divine assurance that, though heaven and earth pass away, the Word of God shall not pass away. Coming through nineteen centuries, this assurance is as true today as ever.

"The best way to meet the storm of pernicious literature is by a larger scattering of Bibles, 'the leaves of which are for the healing of the nations.' The need of the world is more Bibles."

THE DUTY AND PRIVILEGE OF PRAISE.

It seems as if praise for God is not so common today as it was in the not very long ago, especially is not so common as it was in the days of old; say, in the time of David, Israel's sweet singer.

I once heard of a man who had a fine big Newfoundland dog. In his absence, his little son started across a field in which there was a vicious bull. The boy had only gotten a good distance from the fence when the big animal went plunging through the field after the boy, who could not possibly reach a place of safety before the animal would be upon him. It was a moment of peril. There was not a person near enough to come to his assistance; but just then the big Newfoundland dog took in the situation and went to the rescue on double-quick time. He reached the bull, and, seizing him by the nose, held him fast till the boy could escape. Members of the family witnessed the scene, but could in no wise reach the boy in time to be of real help; but they saw the faithfulness of the dog and the deliverance he made. What a valuable dog was that Newfoundland!

When the gentleman came home, he was told of the peril of his son on account of the big and furious bull, and then he was told of the heroism of the dog in going to his rescue. He looked for the dog and saw him stretched out on the lawn. He went to him and lay down beside him, and then began to tell the dog how he loved him and how he appreciated his fine work in saving his boy. That was not the work of a passing moment, but the man stayed with the dog and kept on praising him for what he had done in saving his dear son. That was praise—praise out of the heart of a loving father for the dog which had rescued his son in a moment of great danger. The poor dog could not grasp its meaning—did not know what the grateful father meant by all of his praise

I wonder how many real Christians have done as much today for the God who has done everything for them that was needed to be done! And yet why should we not give praises to God for all of His goodness to us, even more truly than this man gave praise to a dog which could not appreciate it for the noble part he had taken in saving the man's son from great danger?

Ah! surely God has done great things for us, whereof you are glad; but have you told Him of the gladness of your heart because He has delivered you or your son or daughter from the awful dangers of a hell that is to endure forever? Would it not be much more for you and me to get down upon our knees before God and tell Him how we love Him and how we mean to serve Him because He has done so much for us? If the Lord has saved your son from peril, in a time of great danger, how much more should you offer praise unto Him for His ever-watchful eye, as it has followed you all your days, and yet how many have gone on forgetting God and praising your son or your daughter, or your wife, or your husband, or your friend? If we owe praise to a dog, how much more do we owe to God for all the great things He has done for us through the days and weeks and months and years that have come and gone since we began life?

The sense of praise we do not cultivate. Will we come to take it for granted that it was all due us, anyway? Alas! but for the goodness and love of God which has kept a close watch over us through all our days and has kept us from evil and danger, we should long since have been ruined, and yet have you even this day given praise unto God for what He has done for you, and that in a moment when there was no other hand to deliver, to save you from the dreadful dangers to which you have for these long and weary days been exposed. Alas! how ungrateful we are. Let us have more praise-meetings in our homes and in our Churches, and Sunday Schools and in our prayer meetings. Let us tell Him over and over what great things He has done for us, and as we tell him, let us give Him the praise due unto His name from us for all that He has done for us.

Rev. T. F. McCarty has recently published some "Praise Reminders," as follows:

Praise Him for bringing our missionary family safely through the great catastrophe in Japan.

Praise Him for giving some marvelous victories in India in answer to prayer.

Praise Him for the excellent spirit of evangelism that is so manifest on all the mission fields.

Praise Him for the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, and for all its attendant blessings to all believers, both in the homeland and on the foreign field.

Commit these reminders to memory and frequently repeat them, and as you repeat them give God a word of praise from your heart for all He has done in saving you from moments of peril and give you the hope of eternal life.

BASIS OF GROWTH IN CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Is that an old and hackneyed subject? And are you going to pass it by without reading it, just because you think the subject is not new and startling? It may not be so very new, but that cannot be said of the other side of the question. But to the main question—

What is the basis of growth in the Christian life? Some say one thing, and some another; but let us get down to the facts. Why is it that now and then we meet a Christian who, though he has been in the Church for forty years, has grown very little like Christ? Then we meet another who has been in the Church for ten years, and yet you cannot be with him for an hour till you are impressed that he or she is a devout Christian. What has contributed to make this difference in the two? One having been in the Church for forty years and the other for ten years, and the strange part of it all is that the man who has been in the Church for only ten years seems to give more evidence of the Christian life than does the one who has been in for forty years. Now, why is this the case? Who can tell us what makes the difference between the two men, and especially the difference is in favor of the man who has been in the Church for only one-fourth as long as the one who does not so impress you?

There must be a cause for this difference—a reason why the man who has been in the Christian life for only ten years should give more evidence of a true Christian life than does the one who has been in for forty years. There is a difference, and for that difference there is a reason. What is it?

The whole secret is told in one sentence. The man who truly worships God, most truly and genuinely, will be more like the Master. Then it is worship that tends to give us the true likeness of Christ. That is what the sacred writer says in 1 John 3:1: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God: Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doeth not yet appear what it shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." That makes it plain in part as to the basis of growth.

There is a strange law of growth with which few people seem to be acquainted. It may be called in a common way the law of association. The grain of wheat planted in rich soil will be very much more thrifty than the grain of wheat which has been cast into a very poor soil. In other words, the law of association determines the growth of these two grains of wheat. One had association with rich soil, and it was thrifty; the other had association with a poor, thin soil, and it did not grow but little. The difference was in the character of the soil in which the two grains were associated.

Now, may not the same law prevail in the life of two Christians? I see no reason why they should not. Here is a man, a Christian man, who has devoutly worshipped God. He has lived with Him. He has drunk in the very essence of the Christian life from the presence of God. He has developed—he has grown amazingly, and with his growth has come fruit-bearing. Here is another man, a Christian man—at least he is so considered, but he is weakly and sickly. He has not much of spiritual vigor, and less of Christian faith. What is the matter? Why has one grown so rapidly and the other has not, when they were both Christian men, both had access to the same Father and to the same Saviour? The law of association comes in here again, as we think. The one was a devout worshiper of the true God. He has lived much upon his knees before the Lord. He has fed upon the divine life. He has become a partaker of the divine nature, and the result is that he has grown amazingly in the divine life. The other professed faith, but was not clear and outspoken as to his regeneration, and even less so of the testimony which he had that he knew his sins were forgiven, and he is weakly and sickly—has not much spiritual strength. What makes the difference? One man has been a student of the word and a devout worshiper of God. The other has neglected his Bible and has prayed but little; he has not worshiped God with any fervor, or, if any, then with but little fervor, and the outcome of it is that one man had worshiped God in deed and in truth, and he has grown wonderfully. He has only given God a chance to put His own life into the worshiper's life. The other one has neglected God, failed to read His Word, and has done little in prayer. One has grown and become strong; the other has steadily declined. There is a reason. Can you give it? Try!

Finding fault with the preachers of our day may be just in some cases, but the wholesale fault-finding against preachers' children is a piece of injustice. One of the common faults of ministers, as Tom, Dick and Harry put it, is to fail in making money. Suppose that is true; it is no worse than many of the fault-finders do—they fail to make money, and not much is said of it. Then, why should so much be said of preachers because they fail to make money? The truth is, the preacher does not usually make much money, and for the reason that he has no opportunity to do so. His members are usually out during the week, making all the money they can. They come home at the week-end and either stay at home and give nothing, or at most but very little, and then go out and if they hear that Rev. So and So has not paid his grocery bill, he remarks that these preachers do not know how to make money or to take care of it. We should like to know how a preacher can take care of his money when it is in another man's pocket, and it is there because he has refused to pay the preacher what he ought to do. We have heard of preachers who on a very small salary educated their sons and daughters and dressed them decently, while the other man who is making the complaint, was refusing to pay his part toward the promised support to the preacher. Alas! the preachers do wonders on what they have with which to do. The Presbyterian of the South says: "Preachers, it is often said, do not know how to make money. It is true that very few of them make money preaching. But, according to Roger Babson, the great statistician, it seems that they know how to train their sons, so that they can make money. Mr. Babson says that 40 per cent of the millionaires of the United States and Canada are sons of ministers. Bruce Barton, of Chicago, says: 'All the money ever given to the Church would have been well invested had it done nothing more than enabled preachers to raise sons.' "

THE SUN has nothing to do with politics, but when great ethical questions come up for consideration, we feel that we have a right to be heard. The politicians in Washington, D. C., have a mess on their hands in the Teapot Dome oil cases. There was a demand for investigation and the punishment for the men who had done the wrong. We cannot undertake to recount all the events which seem involved in the scandal, but Mr. Albert B. Fall, who was Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Edwin Denby, Secretary of the Navy, seem to come in for a large part of the blame. Mr. Fall was before the examiners in this matter, and they did seem determined to make him come up with the facts. One day, in the examination, Mr. Fall said, if you make me tell more, I am going to tell all I know, and it will reach some of the men higher up, or words to that effect. The next thing we heard of special importance in this matter was that the committee would not examine Mr. Fall any further. We find ourselves wondering if Mr. Fall's threat did not scare some one and cause the examination to stop. They are going on with the examination, so far as it relates to Mr. Denby and others, but why is Mr. Fall excused just as soon as he threatens to tell all he knows? Why, that is the man that ought to be examined to the full. Let us know who are the guilty men involved in the oil scandal. It does seem like a shame that we cannot get men to fill these positions who cannot be induced to sell their honor for a mess of pottage. Money is awfully tempting, but it burns every one who gets it by wrongdoing.

Stewardship, Christian stewardship, has too small a place in the thought of Christian people of today. It is not a question for any one class, whether they be rich or poor, ignorant or learned; but all classes need to be interested in Christian stewardship. We all need to be taught that what God has given to us is not to be used solely for ourselves—we are stewards of the Lord, and we are to give His bounties out to the needy without regard to personal favors. We give of what He has given us to such as are in need and in our reach, because God gave us more than we need to consume upon ourselves. He gave us more than we need because there are many others who are in need as much so, and maybe more, than ourselves. We need to think more about the needs of others, rather than to think so much about the luxuries for ourselves. If you will study this line of thought till you get your heart and mind saturated with the idea of Christian stewardship, then you will find yourself doing much good with what God has given, not merely for yourself, but to all the needy ones as you have opportunity. And certainly an opportunity is by no means a thing to be despised, but used, and used gladly, according to your opportunity and ability. That done, then you have cause to rejoice in having done your part for your fellow-man. Let us not waste these opportunities, for when we waste them, we are just throwing "diamonds of the first water" away. Let us daily pray for grace to rise equal to every call to serve, and so distribute to all we may pass in life the good things and the helpful things which God has given to us.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The easiest thing in the world is work! Even a stream is dull when it ceases to flow. It is beautiful as it runs over sand and falls over rocks. Nature works and rests. Animals do the same. Man was made to work; and the world is his workshop. He develops the world, and the world develops him. Nothing could be more repulsive than heaven with nothing to do. One would hate to sit down on a seat of down through eternity. It would be bad enough to do nothing for a lifetime here. God Himself works. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," said Jesus. And He said: "Son, go work." It would be worse than work to lie on a felt mattress for a year. Nothing is so conducive to health and happiness as honest work. There are at least three spheres of work—work for self, work for others, and work for God; and the normal human being works for all three. The abnormal man works for himself. His thought is of self. His contacts center in self. Such a worker is a poor mechanic, farmer, teacher, merchant. The least man in the world is the man who serves himself. The miser is the type. There are not many of this type. There are those who work for others. Their thought, their energy, their investments, their talents are devoted to others. "Christ pleased not Himself." Mothers are the best human types of those who work for others. Statesmen do the same. True ministers are in that class. No being but Jesus works absolutely for others. Work for God is in a class by itself. The highest form of work is in the vineyard of the Lord. In this sphere the whole man can work—body, mind, heart. The whole being is absorbed in kingdom service. With the heart, one believes; with the mouth, confession is made; and with the hands, work is done. No life is complete that does not work in all these spheres; and no life can fail that works for self, for others, and for God. The least is for self, the greater is for others, and the greatest is for God. The value of a machine is measured by its motive power. It is the motive that determines the value of human service. What inspires action and what motive leads men to work? Is it wages? Is it salary? Is it necessity? Why do you work? Do you love to work? What does the day mean to you? We can see why a hog roots, why a squirrel knaws, why a bird scratches, why a hawk preys upon the barnyard; but why do we go to our task? Is it of choice or necessity? Is it for self or for others and God? The more the world knows, the more men work. The more men have, the more they work. This is the wisest and the richest age and the busiest age of the world. Girls work now more than men used to work. And this age works more than any other for others and for God. More is done for the poor, the ignorant, the afflicted, the criminal, than ever before. The Church is a busy institution, and the people of God keep busy all the time. Every new machine increases work, and every new idea quickens human activity. "We'll work till Jesus Comes," and then continue His work forever.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

The field staff of the Board of Christian Education met in initial midyear session with the general secretary at Dayton, Ohio, Friday and Saturday of last week. It proved to be a most practical meeting, and the decision was reached to make it an annual occasion, immediately following the midyear meeting of the executive committee of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education, which always occurs in February.

The work of the board was reviewed from every angle and plans laid for the future development of our program. Of the plans adopted, those of general interest and concern include the following:

The assignment of the field workers equitably to the five regional conventions. Mr. Hermon Eldredge was elected superintendent of the field force, and with the regional directors and other organization leaders, will construct itineraries for the best possible use of the field workers in their visits to our Churches.

The final adoption of a survey blank for the Church School.—Miss Lucy M. Eldredge was assigned the duty of making this survey. She cannot do it without the aid of pastors and superintendents. I hope that every leader in our Church will co-operate whole-heartedly with her. We must know our situation before we can prescribe for our needs intelligently.

The adoption of a uniform standard for leaflets and posters.—Two posters and four leaflets are now available free. Several others are in process of publication. In this connection, the other departments of the Church were asked to make their posters and leaflets available to the Board of Christian Education, in order that a consistent program may be presented by our field workers as they visit the Churches.

The declaration that it is the sense of the Board of Christian Education that it is responsible for our summer schools of Christian education.—The colleges were asked to furnish their plants free, such professors as were needed from the regular faculty, and $100 in money each year. The other Church departments were asked to furnish their secretaries free for these schools. The Board of Christian Education will undertake to build curricula, secure attendance, and otherwise to be responsible for the success of these schools. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge was chosen the board's superintendent of summer schools. Should it seem impracticable to begin this plan this year, any particular school is privileged to proceed on its present basis till 1925. Leadership training is a prime need now. In this way we hope to supply it.

Definite arrangement for group graded lessons.—Miss Helen Stearns and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge were selected to prepare suggestive outlines for the three years, respectively, of the primary and junior departments, keeping in mind our correlated program. These will be carefully studied by the board's curriculum committee. Then sample lessons will be completed, both for pupils and for teachers, tested in strategic centers, and submitted to the full board at its October meeting.

Institute work in local Churches is to be the chief approach to our problem. Definite suggestions of a helpful character will thus be left, it is hoped, with each Church visited, which will be expected to provide entertainment and receive an offering for the support of the board's work. This last, however, is not an absolute requirement.

A full list of standards is soon to be published and made available to our Churches. There is to be included in this list a standard for the Church school, which will aim to provide an ideal toward which our more progressive schools may work. This standard will indicate fully our correlated program.

Daily vacation Bible school work is to be made especially an objective for the future. Mrs. F. E. Bullock was made the superintendent of this work. She is expert in it.

The rural Church presents us a specific challenge. We are 90 per cent rural. Rev. W. P. Fletcher is an expert in this work, and is to concentrate his energies (and he abounds therein) on the Christian education problem of the rural Church as well as promote the work of the adult division.

Our work grows on us with such alacrity that we feel bewildered in its contemplation. We shall make mistakes. We crave the forgiveness of the brotherhood and solicit their prayers for the work committed to us and for our faithful and efficient field force.

W. A. Harper.

MENTAL LIFE vs. MATERIAL LIFE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The thoughtful person must decide as to what division of time he will make between the mental and the material things of life. The purely thoughtless will be disposed to become so absorbed in the material things of his life that no time is left for anything else. On the other hand, if one devotes all his thought to the mental and spiritual side of life he becomes more of a dreamer than an actor in the affairs of his time. There is a happy balance; there is a proper subdivision of time that ought to be arrived at by due consideration. As the servant told the Chinese philosopher: "You should not carry your head always among the stars so long as you live upon the earth." Yet it is very true, that a life that never lifts itself among the stars becomes a very sordid and tame affair. There is plenty of time and abundant place for both the mental and the material demands of life. It is a man's full-sized job to make the just discriminations between the two. It is evident that one of the struggles of this age is to see that the material demands do not too much encroach upon us. A life devoted to material things alone is a failure; a civilization given over to the material alone must lose its finer self, and perish in oblivion. The material may be made glorious, nay, even sublime, when directed, and shaped, and illuminated by the finer things from the mental and spiritual realms that open as possibilities to those who dare the conquest.

William Wordsworth had something of this idea in mind when he penned one of the finest sonnets in our language. Not alone is it a very fine specimen of the difficult attainment in poesy, the writing of a great sonnet, but it is as well a strong sermon on the just value and adjustment of one's time and effort. It will well repay the study of the student of verse forms; it will even better repay the student of the true philosophy of living a life worth while. It breathes the divine wrath and righteous discontent of one who does not propose to allow his life to sink to the lower levels of living. It has the courageous note of one who is willing to wage the battle demanded by his own soul in its struggle to find its higher expression and growth. Let us give it a careful reading and try to catch its spirit:

The world is too much with us: late and soon
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers:
Little we see in nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!
This sea that bares her bosom to the moon;
The winds that will be howling at all hours,
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers;

For this, for everything, we are out of tune;
It moves us not—Great God, I'd rather be
A pagan suckled in a creed outword;
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.

The pallid dreamer who separates and isolates himself from his fellows loses a great opportunity; no less in error is that one who absorbs and devours the material side of life like an intoxicated Berserker on a senseless rampage. There is a happy medium ground where the best elements of both may find play. We may work among the material, and work with the material, and transmute and change the material into the finer and nobler shapings of a high mentality and spirituality.

Let the soul then respond eagerly to its higher longings. Let our efforts run out to the fullest possible development and culture of the immortal mental gifts which we possess. Let the divinity within us find us prompt to answer its every call. The common struggles of life thus become irradiated and glorified with a divine discontent that repays us by its continual uplift to greater heights. The snows of winter and the frost of years are powerless against such a life; it carries with it the spirit of immortal youth, for it feeds richly upon the things that know no death.

The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.
—Milton.

FRANKLIN CHURCHES UNITE IN FAREWELL SERVICE TO DR. ROWLAND.

From the Tidewater News, Franklin, Va., we get the following very appreciative words concerning the leaving of Dr. Rowland and his family, of Franklin, and his going to the First Church, Greensboro, N. C. Not many ministers are permitted to live in a community for so long a time and then leave under such flattering conditions. The News says:

Franklin people united in a farewell service to Dr. C. H. Rowland on last Sunday evening, meeting in the main auditorium of the Franklin Christian Church, the building itself being one of the many monuments which Dr. Rowland has reared during his twenty-three years' service here as minister, pastor and useful Christian citizen. The Church was packed to capacity as the congregations of the Christian, Episcopal, Methodist and Baptist Churches met in this unique service, although the night was one of the worst of the entire winter, our townspeople expressing their regret at the departure of Dr. Rowland and his family, and their appreciation of his long and faithful service in the town and community.

Rev. R. D. Stephenson, of the Baptist Church, presided over the meeting, and the Scripture lesson was read by the Rev. Winfield Shiers, of Emanuel Episcopal Church. Dr. J. D. McAllister, pastor of High Street M. E. Church, spoke in behalf of the ministers and Churches of the town; R. E. L. Watkins spoke on Dr. Rowland as a neighbor, and E. Frank Story, on Dr. Rowland as a citizen. All of the speakers paid fitting tribute to the life of Dr. Rowland here, to his zeal for the cause of Christ, his untiring efforts to always live the part of a public-spirited citizen, and of the great-heartedness which has made his name a synonym for benevolence among the poor and distressed of the community.

Dr. Rowland spoke briefly, taking his text from Hebrews 11:40, "God having provided some better think for us, that they without us should not be made perfect," and his message was one of the best he has ever given during his long pastorate here, according to the opinion of many of his oldest members.

Dr. Rowland came to Franklin in 1900, this being his first regular pastorate after graduating from Elon College. During his ministry here, the membership of the local Church has increased from thirty-two to 259, and the handsome new Church building which that congregation now occupies was largely erected through his efforts. It is easier, perhaps, to recount material things than the less tangible, but infinitely more worthwhile, work he has done among men, always interested in them because he loved humanity and ever as ready to help one not of the Church as those nearest to him in Christian fellowship. He was indeed a minister to every man, and no worthy civic movement has ever been launched in the town or county without receiving the force of Dr. Rowland's efforts and influence in its accomplishments. In all of his work, he has had in Mrs. Rowland a strong right arm, and she will be as greatly missed in her sphere as will her husband from his pulpit and his place in the civic life of our town. Dr. and Mrs. Rowland will leave in a few days for Greensboro, N. C., where Dr. Rowland will begin at once his work as pastor of the First Christian Church of that city. They will be accompanied by their youngest daughter, Birdie, the other two daughters, Misses Margaret and Annie Graham Rowland, being students in Elon College.

In addition to the resolutions previously published in this paper, expressing the regret of our people at the leaving of Dr. Rowland, one by the vestry of Emanuel Episcopal Church and one by the Colored Ministerial Conference of the town, resolutions are being published in this issue from the Franklin Christian Church and the Franklin Baptist Church, and a special committee was appointed at the Sunday evening service, headed by Hon. E. Frank Story, as chairman, to express the appreciation of the community of Dr. Rowland's work here.

Resolutions From Franklin Christian Church.

On October 26, 1900, Rev. C. H. Rowland and his bride arrived in Franklin, taking charge of the Franklin Christian Church. For nearly a quarter of a century he has served as its pastor and as a true minister of our precious Saviour to the entire community.

It would be a difficult task to undertake to review the great work that has been accomplished under their leadership, the increasing of the membership from a bare thirty-two to the present number of 259, with the remodeling of the Church twice and the rebuilding of it entirely speaks for itself. A like increase in the Sunday School, the organization and leadership of the Christian Endeavor, the mother of the missionary movement in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, leaders in civic matters for the good of our town and community, all point to the faithfulness of these good people and their daughters, besides the giving of spiritual comfort, dispelling distress and ministering to the poor and needy.

Our lives have been enriched by their deeds and magnified by their service, and life has been more worth living, our burdens lightened and we have rendered better service to God and man by our associations. We have become bound in common union with blended and inseparable interests, temporal and spiritual. Together we have dwelt in the temple of the Lord and become a common family with common interests, but they have taught of the home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, and there in the final day we shall be united.

Whereas, our beloved pastor, the Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., and his beloved wife, Mrs. Bertha Graham Rowland, have, after serving our Church for a period of more than twenty-three years, been called of God to another field; and,

Whereas, though regretting to lose their valuable services and the radiant influence of their daughters just budding into womanhood, yet we are submissive to the will of Him who safely guides us through the tempest of life; now, therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we express our appreciation of the untiring work of our retiring pastor and his family who have labored with us with love and zeal through nearly a quarter of a century, leading us toward the golden goal with a faith resplendent in divine direction, and that we bow our heads in gratitude to God for this chosen under-shepherd, counselor and friend;

Second, That we congratulate the Church which has chosen them as their leaders and the city of Greensboro upon so valuable an acquisition to its citizenship, and especially the Church upon securing the services of a devoted and true servant of the living God;

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our Church records, a copy be presented to the Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., and a copy be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and our local papers.

Respectfully submitted, Mrs. E. L. Beale, Mrs. J. B. Gay, W. H. Norfleet, W. A. Daughtrey, Geo. I. Earnest, J. C. Presson, committee. Franklin, Va., January 16, 1924.

Last Sunday, February 17th, was the fortieth anniversary of the Burlington Christian Church, and the occasion was suitably celebrated, and though the weather was threatening, the attendance was very good, especially at the morning service, when Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., preached a splendid sermon and greatly interested the people. Text was Joshua 1:5. In the afternoon, during a heavy rain, we had a good attendance—very good for the kind of weather—when several spoke. Mr. Coulter, the city attorney for Burlington, spoke on what the Church means to the community, and the pastor of the Presbyterian Church spoke for the Ministerial Association; Dr. Atkinson spoke in the morning, and Dr. Harper in the afternoon, and all did well. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va., was the principal speaker in the afternoon. He gave a most interesting account of the missionary work in Madagascar. It is needless to say that Dr. G. O. Lankford was the happiest man present, for he received forty-eight members into the fellowship of the Church at the morning service, which is an evidence of the prosperity of his work under the blessings of the Lord. When the Church was organized forty years ago, it had only eighteen charter members. Dr. Lankford gave a brief history of the Church from its organization. Its growth has been steady and good. Dr. P. H. Fleming was pastor here for sixteen years and was present on this occasion (in the afternoon) and offered prayer. All in all, it was a great day for the Burlington Church, and the outlook is fine.

Our people are slowly paying up their Men and Millions pledges, but that is just the way the big denominations have found it in their work—some have paid, but many are holding back for better times. But, brother, better times have already come. You may as well get busy to pay your pledges now as to wait, and better too, for waiting accomplishes very little.

Do not forget THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Keep your subscription paid up and so do not miss a copy.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A MORAL OBLIGATION.

Dr. W. W. Staley has repeatedly called to our attention the indisputable fact that an obligation to the Church is morally binding, and unless this moral obligation is met, the one failing is weakened in his moral purposes and pursuits. There are yet many unpaid pledges to Men and Millions. No holier movement was ever started and carried out in any Church. However much we may complain at the methods of the movement, we cannot complain at the motive and the objects of the movement. This movement makes for the progress of the kingdom of God, along every line thus far endeavored by the Christian Church. The one who meets his or her obligations to Men and Millions, not only measures up to a moral obligation, but helps the Christian Church in all its enterprises, institutions and activities.

We are now in the fourth quarter of the fourth year. February, March and April constitute this crucial period. I believe that if every one who made a pledge knew exactly how much had been paid on it and how much was yet due, an honest effort would be put forth to pay something this quarter. To this end, I am calling on the pastors and on the captains to let the people know of their obligations and to urge them to find out just what their obligations are. In cases where the captains have requested the mission secretary to take the books and send out the notices, he has done so or is doing so. Notices are going through the mails to every subscriber to Men and Millions in those Churches whose captains have sent us their records.

We are very happy to say that the responses to these notices have already been most gratifying. I have faith in the folks and feel that they will pay as they are able, provided the matter is kept straight in their thinking. I only wish that our people knew just how they stand on the books and what their money has accomplished in kingdom service. To this end, I am bending my energy and crave help of the brotherhood, both of the ministry and layety. My plea is that we give the people a chance by letting them know just what they owe and just what their money does when they pay it.

Here's hoping that all the captains and all the pastors will call especial attention to the movement during this, the fourth quarter of the fourth year. After April 30, 1924, we will only have one more year in which to pay these pledges. If we make some payment on them now, it will be so much easier to make the balance next year. Let us do our best for this great movement now.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

I understand that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, collected in the five-year period, ending January 1, 1924, nineteen millions out of thirty-five millions, and that the Southern Baptists have collected forty-two millions out of seventy-five millions. The Methodists have extended their collecting period to May, 1926, and expect to collect from twenty-five to twenty-seven millions by that time.

What shall we members of the Christian Church do? Four out of five years will expire on May 1, 1924. We must make a long pull to collect 40 per cent by that time, but it is easily done if we want to do it. Do we really wish to see the movement a success? Are we really interested in the various denominational enterprises? Have we denominational loyalty sufficient to put over any big proposition? Do we believe in keeping our obligations only to men and not to God? Do we wish to go forward? What is the matter? These are the questions that pass through my mind.

If you are a minister and don't stand behind this movement in your Church, we welcome your influence as to any other movement you may wish to project. If you are a layman and don't stand behind this movement in your Church, your usefulness as a leader will wane. Inactivity as to the movement spells disaster to ministers and laymen who fail to do their duty. We have reached a crisis in our work.

Look up THE CHRISTIAN SUN of February 7, 1924, and reread the article "Men and Millions Collections," clip it out and read to your Sunday School and Church. Ask your Church, if not already 40 per cent, to pay 40 per cent by May 1, 1924. What Church will be the sixth to pay full quota of 100 per cent?

J. E. WEST,
Chairman.

LET'S GIVE OUR PEOPLE A CHANCE.

AN APPEAL TO CAPTAINS AND PASTORS.

I think our people ought to know just where they stand as to their Men and Millions obligations. If I owe the bank or a neighbor on a note or an obligation, I want my attention called to the same, and to know how much I have paid on it, if any, and when the balance is due. Don't you? This is only fair to debtor and creditor. Now, our people pledged to Men and Millions in good faith. It is a solemn moral and religious obligation. They do not wish to shirk or to go through life with these obligations unpaid and hanging over them. Let's be perfectly fair and square with our people and let them know just where they stand. I have the faith to believe they will pay, if so informed. Have we done our duty in informing them? I certainly do not wish to "dun" or annoy them, or to vex any one unduly. I want to do my duty in giving all a fair chance.

Some Churches have already paid 100 per cent; some 75 per cent; some 50 per cent. Why? Simply because the people were given a chance, and had their attention called frequently and directly to the matter. May I help now; and, brother, will you help now? Not in vexing the people, but in simply giving them a chance?

Fraternally yours,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

ANOTHER GOOD SCHOOL GOING RIGHT.

"Danville, Va., Feb. 11, 1924.

"Dear Bro. Atkinson,—I am glad to inform you that on last Sunday we adopted a resolution to give one Sunday's collection each month to missions and also elected a missionary superintendent to have charge of the school on "Missionary Sunday." You will hear from us in the near future. Yours fraternally,

"W. W. STEPHENS."

The good list of loyalty, faith and honor steadily grows. And somehow we have the faith to believe all our Christian Sunday Schools will get on the list. To this end, we are longing, laboring and praying. The school has all to gain and nothing to lose by such a step. J. O. A.

TWO LETTERS BY SAME MAIL.

"Whaleyville, Va., Feb. 15, 1924.

"Dear Bro. Atkinson,—I herewith enclose $5, which amount is second payment on my Men and Millions pledge. I have not been able to pay pledges as they were due, but with the Lord's help I am going to pay in full by the time the five-year period is up. My pledge was made at Holy Neck Church. I hope all who pledged will feel it their duty to pay up. Sincerely,

"MRS. W."

Thank you, sister; many are feeling as you are, and will pay all they pledged, the Lord helping them.

"Suffolk, Va., Feb. 15.

"Dear Dr. A.,—Just get Bro. J. E. West to keep writing in THE SUN about Men and Millions. His letters are doing good and will continue to do good."

Amen, dear friend. Lieutenant-Governor West has written out of his own heart about this great vital matter, and we devoutly trust his messages will continue in THE SUN.

J. O. ATKINSON.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged in The Sun....		$ 772.03
Wakefield, Va. .....$	14.00
Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College...	3.00
W. E. Alderson, Danville, Va.....	1.00
Mrs. W. H. Williams, Danville, Va.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. Geo. W. Smith, Danville	1.00
P. H. Ricketts, Danville, Va.....	3.00
Mrs. J. T. Simms, Danville, Va...	1.00
A. W. Haraway, Danville, Va.....	2.00
G. M. Spain, Mt. Auburn, N. C...	1.00
Mrs. G. M. Spain, Mt. Auburn....	1.00
Virgil E. Spain, Mt. Auburn.....	1.00
Mrs. Linda Seawell, Sunbury, N. C.	5.00
Rosemont S. S., Berkley, Va.....	26.25
		60.25
Total		$ 832.28

We are grateful, and could wish with all our heart that every Church would take one offering for this great need.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Elon College, N. C. Mission Secretary.

FULLER'S CHAPEL.

At the close of our first quarter at Fuller's Chapel, we are glad to report that the work is in good condition. During this time a junior congregation of over thirty little folks has been started. It is a wide-awake and active group of youngsters, and we are hoping and expecting that more will be heard of them later. The members of the Church are now considering a bi-monthly service in place of their monthly service, which shows that they are looking to the future with a determination and expectation of greater things.

The Church as a whole has given us a most hearty welcome. We have not, as yet, been able to do any extensive pastoral work, but the homes in which we have called and visited have received us most cordially.

We are looking forward with genuine pleasure to our labors in this field.

A. H. HOOK, Pastor.

NOTICE.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., expects to preach at the following places during the month of March, 1924: At Mount Auburn, second Sunday; at Franklinton, third Sunday, and at Pope's Chapel the fourth Sunday.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

For some time I have been thinking I would send a few lines to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but owing to the busy life that confronts us here I have neglected this, regardless of how anxious I was to let our good people hear from us. Mrs. Sorrell and myself began the work here in September. We like the work as well as any one could ask for, under the conditions. The people have been very kind and have given us their hearty support in our work. We are finding our work very hard at times, as well as really enjoyable. It seems that after going over some of the territory we had not yet touched, that our work has only begun in a small measure.

Our work is going well at Sandy Ridge, Rocky Ford and here. The people have attended services well this winter, regardless of the bitter-cold weather we have had. We are hoping to open services and also give a summer school, should we have some one to volunteer for this work real soon, at a place known as Flint Hill. We will most likely start work also along in connection with this on Ward Gap. We are sure that these names do not mean very much to those that know nothing of the rough way and needy circumstances, as it was to one person on arriving here to help us out in the work when inquiry was made as to just where she would be located. We replied that "she would be just above Sugar Loaf, just below Buffalo, between Devil Den and Elk Spur on Crooked Creek at R. F." When this person had gone into the section, she soon realized that we had a field of labor that none but those that had a real self-sacrificing spirit and love for the people could stand to remain in such a work so nearly shut away from the outside world.

Now, as to our new home. We have a very beautiful little home built here at Elk Spur. It is twenty-eight by twenty-eight, with a very small cook room extra. We have four very neat little rooms. The house is well papered with a very nice paper, which adds to the comfort very much in such a windy and cold place. The house has not yet been completed; that is, it is yet to underpin, paint and a well to dig.

We are very thankful to Mr. J. E. Meredith and his family, Mr. A. McMillian, Mr. J. L. Guynn, Mr. Cable Strickland, Mr. Wash Edwards, Mr. Dave Tate, and Mr. McCrary, who was the carpenter. All who were very kind in helping us in the work, regardless of having their produce to carry off at the time. We further want to thank all of those that helped us in the work. We feel very grateful indeed to Dr. Atkinson and those that assisted him in helping him give us the much-needed Christian workers' home.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Virginia and North Carolina furnished the home. We all feel very grateful and thankful to them for their favor to the work.

We have received some very needed donations from different ones. The Young People's Society of Elon College sent a donation of cooking utensils for the kitchen recently. There have been many other donations from the good people. All we wish to thank for your kindness in remembering and helping us in the work.

We wish to state that our good people made it possible for us to have a very good Christmas tree, and one that will be long remembered by both parents and children here and also at Rocky Ford.

We wish to thank all who have been so kind to help us in the work in any respect. Our home awaits your visit to see and go back with the message to tell others of what the Lord is doing here for the people.

We notice that some of our good people have been sending clothing and other donations to some of the people up here. We are very glad, and wish to thank all that have been so thoughtful and kind as to remember the people in this way. We wish to state that it is very unwise to send clothing to individuals. Some, in this case, receive clothing that are not in need as much as others, while some receive clothing that are not at all in sympathy with the work.

Should you desire to send some particular family a donation of clothing and will send them through us, we will be very glad to distribute them for you, should we deem it best. And should we not, we will write you, giving reasons.

All donations of any kind should be sent to Miss M. H. Morey, Mrs. M. T. Sorrel, or to myself, as we have the work at heart and in charge at this time. M. T. SORRELL.

"COTTEN" IN CANADA.

Canada is a cold country, and ordinarily cotton does not do well there, but there are exceptions to many rules. It is so in this case, for while cotton does not do well in Canada, yet Cotten is doing well there, as is evidenced by the following facts:

The Oshawa Daily Telegram tells us something of the recent growth of Cotten, when it says:

"Reports presented at the annual banquet and business meeting of the Oshawa Christian Church held last night, showed the Church to be in the best condition in its history at the present time. The reports gave evidence that during the last year more new members had been received, the finances were in btter shap, and the opportunity for good was greater than in any previous year. This splendid condition was commented on by many of the older members of the congregation during the meeting, which was presided over by the pastor, Rev. E. T. Cotten.

"There was a large attendance present when the annual home-coming banquet was opened last night with the singing of the Doxology. Although arrangements were made to seat some 160 at the tables, extra places had to be provided, but there was such an abundance of good things to eat that much was left untouched.

"Following the banquet, a short address of welcome was given by the pastor, and then the reports for the various Church organizations were presented. The treasurer's report was most gratifying and showed that despite the many big expenditures made, there was still a substantial balance left in the treasury. The mission treasurer also stated that the foreign mission contribution due to date had been sent, and also reported a balance on hand. The Sunday School report showed great growth, almost beyond the capacity of the school room. A favorable report was also received from the Ladies' Aid Society, while the president of the Christian Endeavor Society gave a very optimistic account of what had been done. A vote of thanks was tendered the W. R. Girls for the two gas heaters given and installed in the pastor's study.

"A short talk was given by the Sunday School superintendent, Mr. R. F. Bennett, also clerk of Church.

"A feature of the meeting was the calling of the roll of all members, to which responses were made by verses of Scripture, testimonies, etc., making it very inspirational and spiritual as well as sociable. It was announced that sixty new members had joined the Church during the year. The first to respond to the roll call was B. J. Rogers, who was one of the most prominent workers in the earlier days of the Church, while the last to respond was Miss Hazel Wilson, who joined the Church last Sunday.

"During the meeting, several strong statements and testimonies in the appreciation of the services rendered by Rev. Mr. Cotten, and his untiring efforts in advancing the work of the Church, were voiced by the various speakers."

From another local paper comes another item along the same line, showing that Cotten in Canada is a possibility—its thrift though is more than a possibility; it is a living reality. The paper says:

"The subject of Rev. E. T. Cotten's sermon last night was "Rocks in the Road." He dealt with the rocks in the road that leads to eternal life in Jesus Christ—the rock of sin, of money, of fear, of the unforgiving spirit, and of pride. After the sermon, thirteen new members united with the Church, a total of seventy-three the past eleven months. Miss Mollie Spencer contributed a solo, which was a delight to all."

WINCHESTER, VA.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

On the evening of February 8th, we held an increase-attendance banquet, the theme of which was how to increase the attendance at the services of the Church. This was a most helpful meeting and very fine addresses were made on "Why I Attend Church Regularly," by Roy A. Larrick; "Why Should Young People Attend Church Services," by Miss Anna Amelia Seabright; "How Regular Attendance Helps Church Finance," by John A. Spaid; "How Regular Church Attendance Helps the Organizations of the Church," by Miss Madeline Muse; "How Our Church Organizations Can Help Increase the Attendance at Our Church Services," by Irvine Cather, and "Church Attendance Both a Duty and a Privilege," by Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

All these messages were very helpful, and also very much enjoyed. Mr. Roy Larrick, who spoke first, has heard every sermon I have preached in his Church since I came here nearly two years ago, and was therefore suited to speak on the topic mentioned above. A splendid number of others have also been faithful in their attendance at their Church.

Our Sunday School had a part in the union Sunday School institute held here just a few days ago, under the auspices of the pastors and superintendents of the Sunday Schools of our city.

Since coming to this field we have received into the Church forty-eight new members, and the finances of the Church have very much improved. Our most difficult problem seems to be getting our people to attend Church, but we hope this problem will be solved one of these days and that our Church here may be one of which our own Valley Conference and the whole Christian Church will be proud. J. F. MORGAN,

Winchester, Va. Pastor.

BRO. CARDEN IS "IN CLOVER."

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

I wish to acknowledge in this way the following facts: I received a pounding from Bethel Christian Church, in Caswell County, N. C., December 26, 1923, in which I found 40 pounds of sugar, 10 pounds of lard, 10 cans of fruit, 10 pounds of sausage, coffee and many other things of real value and highly useful in the home, and especially in the dining-room. To all who gave so generously for our good, may the blessings of God abide with them. It is surely good to have good friends, and I know I have many around about Bethel. I served this Church eight years. May God's richest blessings abide with this dear people and their new pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, is my prayer. J. S. CARDEN.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 2, 1924.

Topic: "The Revival Under Samuel."

Lesson: 1 Sam. chs. 1-7.

Golden Text: Direct your hearts unto Jehovah and serve Him only.—1 Sam. 7:3.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 51:1-10.

Samuel was one of Israel's great men. He merits a place in Israel's "Hall of Fame." Both from the standpoint of character and achievement, he stands high in the list of national heroes, second perhaps only to Moses. In a sense, he was a connecting-link between the old and the new, being the last of the "judges"—and perhaps the best—and the first of the "prophets." He was, in a way, the father of that prophetic line, which clarified the ideals of the Jewish religion, and spiritualized its content. No biography of really great men is complete without an account of Samuel's life.

By way of introduction to the lesson as printed today—the lesson really includes seven chapters, but only 1 Sam. 7:5-12 is printed—we will do well to study Samuel's life as recorded in the book which bears his name, and learn the factors which entered into that life, and made it great. They were four or five in number. First of all, Samuel came from God-fearing and God-serving parents. His father made regular trips to Shiloh "to worship and to sacrifice unto the Lord of Hosts," and his mother was a woman of deep piety and prayerful spirit. Religion was a vital factor in the home life of the boy. We can never understand Samuel's life unless we keep this fact in mind. In the second place, Samuel was dedicated to the Lord, even before he was born, and that dedication was made concrete to the lad himself. He knew that he had been dedicated, and he never knew anything else. There is never going to be an adequate supply of Christian workers until parents are willing to do with their children as Samuel's parents did with him. In the third place, Samuel was responsive to the voice of God, even when it was faint and unintelligible in a sense. And in connection with this responsiveness there was a faithfulness in service. He did well what he had to do. Fourthly, Samuel spoke the truth, no matter how directly home that truth struck. He told Eli "every whit, and hid nothing from him." We need more men of Samuel's type, men who can say, "Thus saith the Lord." Fifthly, Samuel had a zeal for Jehovah's cause. It grieved him to see God's cause held in disrepute, and Jehovah worship defiled. And sixthly, and finally, Samuel loved his fellow-men. He had a deep compassion for them, and he was willing to pay the price, any price, to see them redeemed. He who would be a really great man must embody in his life some of these elements which Samuel embodied in his life. So much for Samuel himself; now for the revival under his leadership.

The times called for a revival. Politically, the fortunes of the Israelites were bad enough. There was dissention from within, and invasion from without. The Philistines were especially agressive, and had over-run a large part of Central and Southern Canaan. They had even captured the ark and had put to rout a large army of Israelites. Religiously, the fortunes of the Israelites were even worse. Eli, the priest, was well-meaning, but he was inefficient and unspiritual. His two sons, Phinehas and Hophni, were not only both inefficient and unspiritual, they were positively vicious and depraved. One can hardly conceive of men committed to sacred tasks, betraying their trust in such a brazen way as did these two sons of Belial.

It was under such conditions that Samuel launched his revival around which the lesson centers today. It was a tremendous task, and it would appear that the revival was the climax of twenty years' planning and educating and praying. But it was a real revival and gave new moral tone to the life of both the individuals and the nation. Lack of space forbids entering into details, but the teacher may well study chapter seven for its great truths.

A Few Teaching Points From the Lesson.

1. The best heritage is a godly influence and home life.
2. Example is better than precept.
3. Consecration to God's service sometimes concerns parents as well as children.
4. God reveals Himself gradually, and according to the capacity of His children to receive Him.
5. Good intentions are not enough; there must be sound knowledge.
6. There is no "rabbit's foot" in religion. The ark did not save the Israelites, for they did not have the divine presence symbolized by the ark.
7. True repentance finds expression in changed conduct.
8. If you want God, show that you really want Him.
9. God's servant must sometimes speak unpleasant truths. But He can speak "the truth in love."
10. It takes time and effort to have a genuine revival.
11. "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The man of God can see God's hand in all things, working them together for good to those who love Him.
12. It is not enough simply to have godly parents; children must be godly themselves.
13. Intercessory prayer is a vital factor in genuine religion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

March 2, 1924.

Topic: "In His Steps. III. What Jesus Said About Happiness."—Matt. 5:1-12; John 15:11. (Consecration meeting.)

Jesus said a great deal about happiness. It was a favorite subject with Him. For instance, in the Beatitudes, which form the first part of the Sermon on the Mount—this sermon was delivered early in Jesus' ministry, and was, so to speak, "His platform"—we find Jesus saying a great deal about happiness. Happy—the word translated "blessed," really means "happy"—are those, says Jesus, who have certain qualities in their lives, and who act in certain ways. And again, in His last talk with the disciples, Jesus talks about happiness, or Joy. "My joy," He says, "I give unto you. And your joy no man taketh from you." In other words, happiness, or joy, was a central fact in the teaching of Jesus.

This means several things. In the first place, it means that happiness is a legitimate end of life. Jesus did not talk about trivial things, or about things that did not vitally concern life. The fact that He talked so much about happiness means, then, if it means anything, that happiness was an element in a well-rounded, wholesome life. In the second place, it means that Jesus Himself was a man of joy and a man who knew the real meaning and nature of happiness. He always spake as one having authority, because He spoke from personal experience. And when He talked about happiness He was talking about something that He Himself had. In spite of the efforts of artists and poets to present Christ as a "Man of sorrows," He must be a man of joy if we are true to the facts.

Jesus said some striking things about happiness. He said, for instance, that happiness does not consist in the abundance of things that a man has, but in the finer qualities of mind and heart that he has. Happy are those who are "poor in spirit"; that is, those who feel their need of help and spiritual life. It is to such that the kingdom of heaven belongs. Happy are those who mourn, those who have the capacity to share the sorrow and grief of others, for they shall be comforted. Happy are the meek—the gentle—for they, and not the proud, haughty, fierce, shall inherit the earth. Happy are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, those who feel the inadequacy of their own lives, those who have a divine discontent for better things, for they shall be filled. Happy are the merciful, those who temper justice always with mercy, for they shall obtain mercy. Happy, indeed thrice happy, are those who are pure in heart, those who keep their inner lives clean, for they shall see God. Happy are those who are peacemakers, those who so live and so work, that they hasten the reign of good will between men, for they are the children of God. Happy are they even who are persecuted for righteousness sake, and against whom men say all manner of things falsely, for Christ's sake, for not only is theirs the kingdom of heaven, but they enter into a fellowship with great men of other days. All of these rules for happiness indicate that happiness is not something external; it is something that comes from within.

He who would be happy must learn Jesus' way of life.

Happiness comes from obedience. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Happiness comes from a sense of duty done.

Happiness comes from giving.

Happiness comes from discovering God's truth.

Happiness comes from trust in God.

Happiness comes from fellowship with Christ.

"Do not run after happiness, but seek to do good, and you will find that happiness will run after you."

Happiness, while a legitimate quality of life, is not the end of life. Happiness is a by-product.

Happiness does not depend on circumstances or possessions.

"Real joy comes not from ease, not from riches, not from the applause of men, but from having done things that are worth while."—Grefell.

A king, who was very unhappy, was told by his wise men that if he would wear the shirt of a man who was happy, he would become happy. He found a peasant in the fields one day who seemed to be very happy. Conversation with the peasant convinced the king that the man really was happy. The king asked the peasant for one of his shirts; and lo! the peasant did not even own a shirt.

What keeps men from being happy?

What is the difference between pleasure and happiness?

Can a man who is not a Christian be happy? Does happiness have any practical value in life?

IS THE BUDGET SYSTEM BEST FOR THE LOCAL CHURCH?

By Rev. J. C. Barrett.

I have been intensely interested in Dr. Harper's challenge for criticism on the "Budget Plan" for the denomination published in both the Herald and The Sun a few weeks ago. So far, it seems that no one has dared to tackle his venture towards a co-ordinated financial plan for the whole Church except Dr. Kerr, in an editorial February 7th, and he is principally asking that we think and move discreetly on the subject.

My opinion as one of the "lower" parish is not the most constructive, as I am saying "Amen" to such a plan or something like it.

In a later reference to the suggestive plan, welcoming a free discussion, the author said that "the disposition of this problem is not with our denominational leaders. They can legislate, but the members of our local Churches will accept or reject their action, and so either make or mar our future." This being the case, I am slipping in at this point with a bit of my experience, hoping that it will show to some degree what can be done and be expected by and from the average Church and pastor. Surely, what we have done, any Church and pastor can do.

Seven years in the business world taught me one lesson, if no more: that if I wanted money, I had to plan for it and then go after it. A manager of a wholesale butter concern, of which I was a salesman for two years, said in the beginning of our relationship: "The salary is up to you"—and it was!

When I went into the active ministry I took this idea with me. It works here.

In the first field I served, the nearest approach to the budget system was some envelopes that were handed out promiscuously. At the close of the Church year we made up a budget and set out to meet it through the every-member canvass. This was our plan for the three and a half years there as pastor. We made some progress—the sexton's salary was increased 105 per cent, the preacher's, 30 per cent, and the attitude and giving towards benevolences very much strengthened.

The next pastorate was more difficult, in that there was a number of Churches (four). They had agreed to pay about $400 more a year than they had paid the pastor previously. Their promise was as good as gold, but it was suspected with the same old plan paying so much a year, and at any old time that they would do as sometimes of old, go down to Conference and be embarrassed because they were behind with their Conference dues and owing the preacher. All this "mess" was avoided by rallying together a half a dozen of representative men of each Church to a "banquet," at which time the budget system was discussed, acted upon and plans made to make the canvass. It was made by all the Churches the same day.

I had the pleasure of serving two Churches in another field the two years that I was at Defiance College. One of the two was lined up well on the budget and every-member canvass, some good work of Dr. W. P. Minton. The other one had never had anything of the kind and was very far removed from such an idea. This good Church was largely made up of old people, some of the best found anywhere. They were loyal to the Church in every way. They were accustomed to paying so much a year; they did it, and paid well, too. There was no doubt but that so long as they lived the Church would live, but their plan we thought was unsafe for those that were to follow them.

At the close of the first year with them, the budget machinery was installed, a thorough every-member canvass made, and with the best results that could be expected for the first year. It is needless to say that the income to the Church was increased.

Am I saying too much about my own? When I say that with the "budget" operating in all the Churches I have served, their financial obligations to me as pastor have been met promptly and up to date, except in one field, and the delay there was not serious or long.

I believe the plan can be put into any Church anywhere by using a little diplomacy, and that if worked it will bear the best fruit.

These experiences, in the broader sense, are only stabs at what the budget plan really is and will accomplish in the local Church. If I am permitted the space, I will write again as to the merits of its worth in my present pastorate, where it is functioning more nearly to the ideal and achieving greater things in the kingdom of God.

If the budget is best for the field (the local Church), in order that it may have "teeth" to work with, must we not have a similar plan running from the city (Dayton) to the local Church?

Conshohocken, Pa.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

I have a few more words on my revival work of last summer. I left Clayton, N. C., Friday night, August 24, 1923. I reached Greensboro early Saturday morning. I went from there to Smithwood to help Bro. Sorrell in a meeting, which was already under way. I preached Saturday night, Sunday morning, and Sunday afternoon, and after that morning and afternoon each day during the week, or till Friday afternoon. We had a good meeting at Smithwood, with seventeen professions, while several were reclaimed and the Church was very much revived.

They have some fine people at Smithwood. I enjoyed working with them. One great need I find as I go among the Churches is to have a good pastor to live near the Church, and so be able to give the Church more time. Bro. Sorrell did a good work there; all liked him, but he was so far away and had so much work he could not give it the time he desired. Bro. Sorrell is one of our promising young ministers. I have never heard him preach; they say he is a good preacher, and I know he is a good worker. I do not know who is pastor at Smithwood this year, but both pastor and Church have my sympathy, prayers and good wishes.

Bro. Sorrell has taken up our mountain work at Fancy Gap. Let us pray that God may use him in a special way in that work.

I filled my regular appointment at Johnson's Grove, February 3rd. Had good congregation. The work there is taking on new life. They have some fine people there. We are praying for great blessings on the work.

Elisha Bradshaw.

BETHLEHEM NOTES.

We are under many obligations to our good brother, Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., and his father for a large quantity of books which are being sent for the library. I feel that this is a very liberal act and will be a great help to our work.

I saw Rev. J. D. Dollar a few days ago and he told me that he would give Parker's "People Commentary," twenty-eight volumes; also Bro. J. W. Payne is showing a very great interest in the library and has collected a number of volumes. These brethren are coming as the Good Samaritan.

Beginning a school, in a way, is as one beginning to keep house. When the catalogue of items is searched and the purchase is made, as one may feel, with satisfaction that all is well, yet there may be found that other articles must be had to complete the list. There is no one who can know the needs as one on the ground.

Miss Kate Walker, of Burlington, N. C., sent a memorial of $50 for her nieces, Kathryn and Mary Walker. Above the door of one of the dormitory rooms will be placed a card of this record. This is, indeed, a gift that is gratefully received. A memorial not written or carved upon a tablet of stone, but for years to come is to be by this institution, from its infancy, to bless mankind. I know the Father will bless this noble act.

At this writing, our good and faithful brother, Rev. C. M. Dollar, is very ill at his home near Rock Springs Church, Malone, Ala. I am sure his many friends will be much interested in his recovery and extend sympathy and prayers for him and family. E. M. Carter.

Wadley, Ala.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., was in Elon one day last week. He is looking remarkably well, and yet he is doing more work than most men will do when they have outside help. He is hoping soon to announce the readiness of the new building for occupancy by his congregation. It will be the one outstanding house of worship in the Southern Christian Convention, and we doubt not the same may be said of the General Convention of the Christian Church. We understand that the new building will cost $285,000, and Dr. Smith is looking after the money to pay that bill, as well as preaching the Word. It seems to us that it would take two or three good men to do all that work in a becoming manner, and yet Dr. Smith is doing it largely himself, and growing fat, physically, on the job. Do you know what is the secret of his health on the human side? Well, it may be a secret, but we will hint at what it is, anyway. Only a few years ago, many of his friends were anxious as to his future, his health being so poor. Then he took up one habit, and keeps it up, and he says that keeps him in good working condition. As he retires at night he drinks a quart of good pure milk, and that does the work for him. He is a great friend to milk, and we do not blame him to be—do you? Notwithstanding the great burden he is carrying in the way of work, he and milk, under the blessings of God, are carrying it, and doing it nicely. His congregation, no doubt, rejoices in having such a milk-man for their pastor. It might do some of the rest of us preachers good to form a sort of a co-partnership with milk.

The Western Christian Advocate quaintly says: "Intellectual gout is the cause of many a man's doubt." That points the reader to a fact worth thinking about. Who knows but all of our strange fire-thinking is the result of disease working on the mind?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

A RESOLUTION AND A PRAYER FOR THE WEEK.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

A Morning Prayer and Resolve.

I will try this week to live a simple, sincere, serene life, repelling every thought of discontent, self-seeking, and anxiety; cultivating magnanimity, self-control, and the habit of silence; practicing economy, cheerfulness, and helpfulness. And as I cannot in my own strength do this, or even with a hope of success attempt it, I look to Thee, O Lord my Father, in Jesus Christ my Saviour, and ask for the gift of the Holy Spirit. —Bishop Vincent.

TUESDAY.

THE INDISPENSABLE CHRIST.

I am so weak, dear Lord, I cannot stand
One moment without Thee;
But, oh, the tenderness of Thy enfolding,
And, oh, the faithfulness of Thy upholding,
And, oh, the strength of Thy right hand—
That strength is enough for me.

I am so needy, Lord, and yet I know
All fullness dwells in Thee;
And, hour by hour, that never-failing treasure
Supplies and fills in overflowing measure
My last and greatest need, and so
Thy grace is enough for me.

It is so sweet to trust Thy word alone,
I do not ask to see
The unveiling of Thy purpose, or the shining
Of future light on mysteries untwining;
Thy promise-roll is all my own—
Thy Word is enough for me.

There were strange soul-depths, restless, vast, and broad,
Unfathomed as the sea—
And infinite craving for some infinite stilling;
But now Thy perfect love is perfect filling—
Lord Jesus Christ, my Lord, my God,
Thou, Thou art enough for me.

—Selected.

WEDNESDAY.

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM.

*"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation * * * The kingdom is within you."*—Luke 17:21.

The Scriptures describe the kingdom most abundantly, saying that it is like the building of a house on a rock, or like a creditor forgiving his debtor, and like a sower who went forth to sow; and like the mustard seed that grows unto a tree; or like the yeast in the dough which leavens the whole lump; and like the goodly pearl which the merchantmen hunt for; and like the good Samaritan; and like lending bread to the needy at midnight; and, as in the example of Lazarus and the rich man, it is like giving to the poor to help and comfort them; and like the good shepherd, the watchful servant and the faithful steward; like the importunate widow, and like working in a vineyard, and like working to multiply the talents. In all this, the one thing to be accomplished is righteousness, joy and peace. Then, we understand that the kingdom is the reign of God in the human heart, consummated in the ideal relation of father, son and brother. And it is to come not with bath-tubs, pure-food laws, fireless cookers, plenty of money, automobiles, airplanes and any of the modern conveniences. These things are all good for man and represent power, but it is power without spirit. When we can put the spirit of Christ in all our living, then we can say the kingdom is coming. What is the kingdom to you?

Prayer.—Dear Father, teach us what is the coming of the kingdom in our lives and in the world. As we learn of Thee, Thou art finding us. Drive away from us the mist that obscures Thy glory and in all moments of life rise in our souls, that we may know Thee as the bringer of health, revealer of truth and peace, the companion of our way, the light of our path, the giver of infinite mercy, the quieter of every soul-storm, inspirer of every hope, keeper from every sin, pilot of every life and the maker of heaven and earth, sea and sky. We would speak Thy matchless worth. O Thou Most High, lead Thou us on. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PURITY AND ITS HOPE.

"Blessed are they that have washed their robes that they may have a right to the tree of life."—Rev. 22:14.

The world began with a garden and a tree of life. It is to conclude with a city and a tree of life. Humanity is in between struggling in sin and darkness to reach the city and have a right to the tree of life. Salvation is God's way of lifting man from his darkness to the light, from ignorance to knowledge; and it is done by a cleansing process, each soul cleaning his own robes. Thus there is consummated in each one, at all times, a grand panorama of an ending and the beginning of a new world. It is the passing of the old and the beginning of the new life. Just where and when this takes place our eternal relations begin.

Thy work today is to make clean Thy soul. In this Thou shalt be blessed with the hope of the tree of life.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to find the truth, live it and spread it everywhere. If we have felt Thy cleansing power, make us merciful to those who need it. In every vision of higher and better living which we may have, make us grateful for the source of its influence. As the flowers blossom and the fruit matures in the sunshine, in the light of Thy countenance, make us to grow in grace and truth until we shall be pure and spotless under His influence. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."—1 Tim. 4:8.

Is that so? Then we are to be Christians to make the world fit to live in. Eternity cannot dawn suddenly. The great day cannot come until the light of the Son of God has traveled through the life of every one. Heaven cannot come until every one has learned and acquired it. Souls are not made perfect at the sound of a trumpet. Souls reach perfection like one gets an education, like one learns to be a physician, or like one learns any other profession, viz: by eliminating everything that hinders, as far as possible, and applying diligently to the principles that bring it. This we have to do for our souls by applying the principles of the kingdom of God to our every-day life. It certainly is a hard row to some. Take the prodigal son, for instance. The world will be made fit to live in and fit for heaven just to that extent we ourselves make it so. It is up to us. The whole thing is a growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—Our Father, fill us with a thirst for righteousness, justice and honor, and make us examples to others, especially the weaker ones. Make us servants of Thine to help keep the world from the chains of evil living; and when we are tempted ourselves, or evil would smite us, lay Thy spirit upon us and strengthen our wills to bear the flag of our Master and stand fast for Him. Thus shall we share the great saving power of Him. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THINKING LESS OF SELF AND MORE OF OTHERS.

(Read Gal. 6:1-10.)

Do not think so much of your own weaknesses.

Give your drawbacks a certain consideration, but only enough to set them right.

If you are so absorbed in your own imperfections and short-comings you are wasting time which might be given to change and improvement.

It is qpite right to see faults in yourself—only egotistical man considers himself perfect.

So you are not alone in a class with deficiencies.

Because you fail where you should not fail, is not to be considered lightly by you, because, if you do, your deficiencies will increase.

But the fact that you are not up to a desired point and that you realize it, should not persuade you that you cannot improve.

It takes a lot of will-power to get your mental concept right and keep it there when you have gained control of your own feelings and your mind you will on the road to success that is sure in the end.

It takes training and confidence in one's self and the future to keep on in the face of personal defects or imperfections, and it is doubly hard when the person affected recognizes too keenly these personal weaknesses. School yourself to think less of self and more of progress.—Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.

Prayer.—Once more, our Father, we come to the close of another week. We thank Thee for its duties and pleasures, its ills and its joys, and for every good thing. Whatever evil we have faced, cause Thou it to be a strength to our characters in Thee. May we be friends to everybody. Save us from blighting the fresh flower of any one by a flare of anger or the sparks of ugly words, or the shame of profanity. But, being born again, O give us the power to freshen the drooping and the disconsolate by our own cheer, Godliness and helpfulness. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark :27.

Using the Sabbath for the good of man in making him fit to live and to be lived with—a proper representative of the Lord in the world—became a fixture from the beginning of things; but later (Isa. 52), Isaiah had a vision which unfolded to him in a special manner the glorious hope of man. Then at the close of his prophecy, recorded in the last of the Book, he stands on tiptoe to see the remotest event or catch the faintest Messianic whisper, and here is what he heard: "And from one Sabbath to another shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord."

In our Sabbath text, we find the Saviour taking up the same teaching that was from the beginning, reaffirming that the Sabbath was made for man. From the beginning of his ministry to the end of it he was teaching this, and no more emphatically than when he was talking to the young lawyer when he said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, strength, soul and mind." The Sabbath has been given to us, that all this may take place in us. If we work all the time we will lose all this.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us the communion with Thee that is necessary, and how we may have it. Reveal Thyself to us through Jesus. Help us to lay aside daily cares, that we may possess the Sabbath spirit as Thou hast blessed it. May we grow up into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

WHERE ARE THE NINE?

In attending Saturday's services, one is made to wonder, as Jesus did, when the ten lepers were healed. You know there was only one who turned back and gave glory to God. After he had seen he was cleansed of the awful disease, Jesus asked him: "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?"

Not long since, we attended a service at a certain Church on Saturday, and the membership is near one hundred in number, but there was only one dozen people present and one who was not a member of any Church, and the writer, who is a member of the Christian Church, which made an average of 10 per cent of that Church; but where were the nine?

Some one may say: "Well, I would not be considered in the business of the Church if I were present. Brethren, if I belonged to a Church and could not have a share in its business transactions, and so did not know what was going on in my Church, I would withdraw and stay out. Some people seem to be in just such a situation. If I had money on my heart more than my Church I would be ashamed for any one to know that I had disgraced the Church so much as to have my name on its roll.

Church people, let us arouse ourselves to duty and see if we can't get in some way the so-called Church members stirred up to do their duty by the Church and themselves, and so help win the world to Christ. It is within our power. If some brother has a good suggestion, looking to getting the non-Church attenders to attend Church, let us hear from you.

Brethren, pray for the work in North Alabama. It is a new field for the Christian Church. May it prosper and do much good in turning this part of our country to Christ for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God in this world.

EDGAR T. JEAN.

Blountsville, Ala.

They have been talking that, in Philadelphia, they cannot stop the sale of whiskey. They have had a great ado about it, and failed. After other failures, they employed a man of real ability to take charge of it, and put a stop to it. It was a Mr. Butler. Already his work is proving a wonderfully satisfying agency. In one week he reduced the number of arrests 44 per cent. He made 400 raids in one week, and the liquor men are scared. He is driving ahead without fear in the discharge of his duty. The same can be done in any city in the United States, as we believe, if the right man can be in charge—but there is the rub! It is hard to get the right man in charge, and for the reason there are so few right men in this particular.

THE SUN'S subscription list must be increased, and you are asked to lend your services for the next two months.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I read a letter a few days ago from the manager of a corporation to one of the stockholders, in which he used this expression, "Nothing helps an organization like the co-operation and support of its stockholders." The co-operation belongs to the stockholders, and they invest their money to make money, and they know that the more loyal support they give the manager, the larger dividends they may expect. The manager needs the support of the stockholders.

In looking over my monthly record-book where I give each Sunday School credit for each monthly offering, I could not help but notice the contrast of the interest each Church takes in the support of the Christian Orphanage. We will notice some Churches with a credit in each monthly column; other Churches with not a single offering during the whole year. The Lord blesses the Churches that are alive and active workers in His vineyard. How can people expect the Lord's blessings to rest upon them when they do nothing for Him to bless. Why does God command you to bring forth the tithes of your increase so the stranger, the fatherless and the widow may be fed, that He may bless you in all the works of your hand which you do. No sacrifice, no work, no blessing. Show me the Churches that take an active part in the support of missions, the orphanage and all other enterprises of the Church, and I will show you a Church that is alive and active, and one on which the blessings of God rest, for they are doing something for Him to bless; then show me a Church that has not a single credit for missions last year and every month on the orphanage record-book blank, and I will show you a Church that has not made any progress and is barely existing. Why? Because they have done nothing for God to bless.

Co-operation of our people is what all the enterprises of the Church needs. We cannot make progress unless we have it. What if every Church and Sunday School would make a liberal offering each month for missions—Dr. Atkinson could do a larger work. What if every Church and Sunday School would make a liberal offering each month for the orphanage—we could build other buildings and the sixty children now knocking at our doors would not be turned away. Let us have your co-operation this year.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR FEBRUARY 21, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$1,400.00
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Christian Chapel	$ 1.75
Wentworth	6.20
New Lebanon	1.00
Baracca Class	1.00
Pleasant Union	7.00
Piney Plains	8.40
Seagrove	1.00
Reidsville	1.00
Apple's Chapel	.75
Bethel	1.36
Ramseur	4.50
Randleman	2.00
Durham	24.08
Shallow Ford	2.26
		62.30
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Rosemont	$ 10.70
Berea, Nansemond	10.00
Berea, Norfolk	3.00
First S. S., Norfolk	5.00
First S. S., Richmond	5.50
Holland	10.00
Wakefield	3.07
South Norfolk (Jan.)	3.23
South Norfolk (Feb.)	5.70
		56.20
Valley of Virginia Conference:
Linville	$ 2.26
Mayland	1.67
New Hope	3.00
Timber Ridge	2.06
		8.99
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
N. Highlands		1.82
Special Offerings.
Interest on note	$150.00
Interest on bonds	30.00
W. N. Everett, Sec. of State	1.00
Citizens' Bible Class, Elon College	3.00
Irene Reiber	15.00
		199.00
Grand total		$1,728.31

FROM A COLD CLIMATE.

(The following is a private letter, but Bro. Cotton will excuse us for taking the privilege of publishing it.—EDITOR.)

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

THE CHRISTIAN SUN comes weekly, and it always brings good tidings from home.

I have been asked by letters about not writing to THE SUN, so all my old friends could know that I am living; but I have been too busy to find the time, it seems. This morning is my busiest morning, but while thinking of you folks, I decided to send two clippings.

The thirteen members received into the Church last Sunday were reared in Churches—Lutheran, Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist—and only two from our Sunday School. Two 'teen-age folks, rest married. This is a hint at the kind of work I have had to do. All of the seventy-three received the past eleven months have come on "confession of faith" except three; only two from other Christian Churches; only about twenty-five from our Sunday School, and many of these were married or grown-up folks. I have received mainly people over twenty, and from that age to fifty.

The first twelve months here I asked for evangelistic efforts, but was told it would be useless, for only Church members attended in the past. After several efforts to get this, I began to do personal work, and these have all come by that method. However, a few have come after invitation at conclusion of evangelistic sermon. Most of my sermons are evangelistic.

We are all in good health. Margaret is past three years old, and a great talker; and the rest and recreation of my tired mind very often. My good wife is a big musical help to the Church, often singing solos, playing for special music, etc. She teaches a chorus of about thirty voices.

There is plenty of snow here, being almost as much as last winter, although last winter was a steady cold, and this winter interspersed with warm, melting weather several times. Lots of sleigh rides, but too cold for me to take one. It is generally colder at night; the sleigh rides are at night, so I stay in where it is comfortable. You can hardly get the young folks to any Church meeting in the week because of skating. This season of skating is only about two months, and everybody (almost) makes good use of this one of their greatest joys.

Must close and study. May the Lord richly bless you all. E. T. COTTEN.

Oshawa, Can.

WEATHERS.

George W. Weathers was born November 12, 1849, and died December 23, 1923, thus being 74 years 11 days of age. He lived at the Weathers homestead, in Franklin County, near Pope's Chapel, and made his home for the last thirty years with Bro. R. L. Conyers and family. In this home he was lovingly cared for, and in his last illness was nursed and given the attention of a father. He was never marrier. He leaves to mourn their loss one sister, Mrs. Polly McGhee, of Creedmore, N. C., and two brothers, William and James W., of Youngsville, N. C.

The deceased never united with, but was a regular attendant at, Pope's Chapel. He was deeply interested in all of its good work, and was a liberal contributor to its support. He was buried in the old Weathers family burying-ground near Pope's Chapel, and in the absence of the pastor, Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Rev. Mr. Davis, of the M. E. Church, Franklinton, N. C., conducted the funeral. Mr. Weathers was held in high esteem by a very large company of friends, and before passing away declared that he was ready and prepared to go.

J. O. A.

ALLRED.

On February 7, 1924, a little son of Brother and Sister S. M. Allred passed into the glory world. It suffered severely for three weeks, but its soul is basking in the sunlight of glory. May the Lord bless the father and mother and two bright little boys, as they have a family started in the goodly land. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at New Center Christian Church.

W. J. EDWARDS.

MR. H. T. LePAGE, June 14, 1919.
Toronto, Ont., Canada.
My Dear Mr. LePage:
I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from. Yours cordially,
REV. BERNARD P. SMITH,
Pastor Christian Church, Kinston, N. C., U.S.A.

15,000 Churches Using Them

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:
I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Name .....
Address .....
Shipping Point .....
(Please write distinctly.)

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

What Kind Of Blood Have You?

Thin, Pale and Watery—Keeping You Weak, Nervous and Rundown, or Rich, Red Healthy Blood With Plenty of Iron in it To Give You Strength, Energy, Power and Endurance?

IRON IS RED BLOOD FOOD
Says Physician

How NUXATED IRON Puts Roses into the Cheeks of Women and Helps Give Renewed Strength to Men.

Plenty of Iron	Lack of Iron
makes rich, red blood corpuscles like these.	makes weak, pale blood corpuscles like these.

IF you tire easily, if you look pale, haggard and worn, if you feel generally weak, nervous and run-down it would probably astonish you to look at a drop of your own blood under a powerful microscope and compare it with a drop of pure, healthy blood—rich in iron. Actual blood tests show that a tremendously large number of people who are weak and ill lack iron in their blood and that they are ill for no other reason than lack of iron.

For want of iron you may practically be an old woman at from 30 to 35, weak, down hearted and "all fagged out." You may be in such a highly nervous, irritable state that you "go all to pieces" on the slightest provocation, while at 50 or 60 with good health and plenty of iron in your blood, you may still be young in feeling and so attractive and full of life as to defy detection of your real age.

"Iron is red blood food," says Dr. L. Sauer, "and organic iron—Nuxated Iron—helps to build up the red blood corpuscles and give increased power and endurance."

Nuxated Iron represents organic iron in such a highly condensed form that one dose of it is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating half a quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples

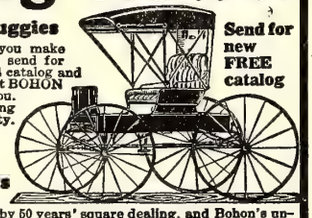
Over 4,000,000 people annually are using NUXATED IRON. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. It often increases the bodily and mental vigor, strength and endurance of weak, nervous, "run-down" folks in two weeks' time. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results. Beware of substitutes. Nuxated Iron comes in tablets only—never in liquid form. Always look for the word 'Nuxated" on every package and the letters N I on every tablet. Sold by all druggists

It's not always the youngest woman that is most sought after—there is an indescribably alluring fascination in the rosy cheek, the inviting lips and sparkling eyes of a woman whose blood is filled with iron. You may be afflicted with iron starvation of the blood and not know it, just as thousands of other women are.

NUXATED IRON ENRICHES THE BLOOD-GIVES YOU NEW STRENGTH AND ENERGY

Big News!

on buggies
Before you make a move, send for new 1924 catalog and see what BOHON offers you. Life long durability.
At Low Prices



Send for new FREE catalog

Backed by 50 years' square dealing, and Bohon's unlimited Guarantee. 60 days Road Test. You are satisfied or all your money is refunded. Get the new complete FREE catalog and see!
THE D. T. BOHON COMPANY - 60 Main St. - Harrodsburg, Ky.

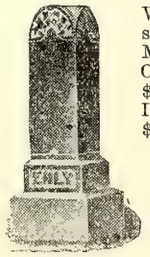
FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.
Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

$362.80 Commission on One Order



We offer a very attractive commission proposition to responsible men selling our line of guaranteed monuments, in Marble and Granite. On one deal our Mr. Fuller of North Carolina, made $362.80; Mr. Bryan of West Virginia, $206.25; Mr. Duncan, of Tennessee, $193.25; Mr. Willard, of Illinois, $131.25. We have many other agents making from $200.00 to $400.00 per month.

Our monuments are well finished. No trouble to sell. Write for full particulars and confidential contract.

National Marble & Granite Corporation
Dept. P., BALL GROUND, GA.

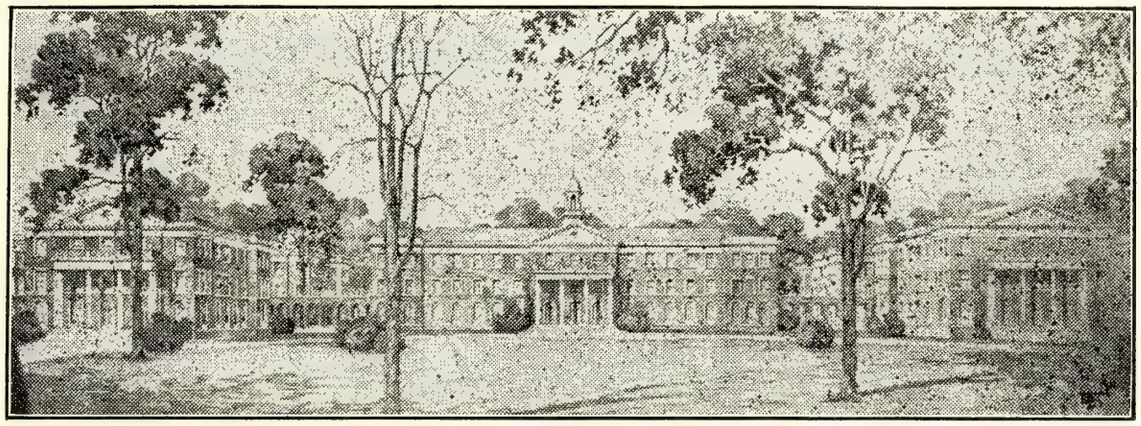
BRYAN.

On January 26, 1924, the death-angel visited the home of Bro. and Sister J. G. Bryan and took from their embrace their infant son, J. C., who only had the privilege of staying in this world three months ond seven days. The death of the child came as a shock to the beloved family. Angels were there, and took him to the home not made with hands, to a city which hath foundations which will stand the wreck of worlds, whose Builder and Maker is God. There will be no sorrow there, but joy and peace and singing and praise around the throne of God throughout the ages to come.

The funeral services were conducted by their pastor at Hopewell Baptist Church. The little one leaves to mourn father and mother and several sisters and other loved ones. It is pleasing to think that our loss is his gain. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

W. T. MEACHAM.

Elon is Building for the Future



Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities

Auditorium — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

DEEP-SEATED FRECKLES
Need attention NOW or may remain all winter. Use the old and time-tried guaranteed treatment that has given satisfaction to millions of women for over 15 years, and rid yourself of these homely spots. Ask for
Othine--Double Strength
At all Druggists and Department Stores
OTHINE LABORATORIES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

A Charm
Beautiful Hair
You can possess it by using Caro-Co Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Large bottle 50c at all dealers.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

TRAVEL INFORMATION
EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS
LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM
Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Grow Cotton in Virginia
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown
Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.
Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.
Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.
For full information, address:
K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

HARDEN.

Died at his home, Graham, N. C., February 2, 1924, Mr. Charles P. Harden, aged 58 years. He leaves two children, one sister, two brothers and a host of friends and relatives who mourn his going. His wife preceded him to the grave some two years ago.

During his illness, and just a few days before he died, he said to his sister, "I am not afraid to go; it is all right." When the end of his earthly pilgrimage came, he fell asleep almost as quietly as a child.

The funeral services were from the home, conducted by Rev. S. L. Beougher and the writer. The interment was in the Linwood Cemetery, Graham, N. C. Charles was a good citizen, a prominent business man, a devoted husband, fond parent and a true friend. His grave was covered with beautiful floral tributes. Gone from earth, but remembered still.

P. H. FLEMING.

Burlington, N. C.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick..... $6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5½ inches.... $5.00

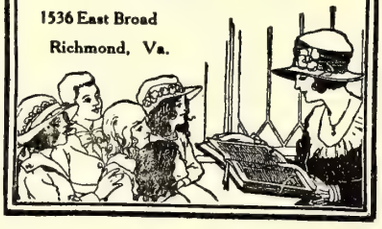
0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick.... $9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1924. | NUMBER 9.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

In Greater Darkness than Ever.—

The death of David Hume is thus described ("Memoirs of Robert and James Haldane," page 247): "I attended Mr. Hume on his death-bed, but I can assure you I hope never again to attend the death-bed of a philosopher. When his friends were with him, Mr. Hume was cheerful, even to finality; but when alone he was often overwhelmed with unutterable gloom, and had, in his hours of depression, declared that he had been in search of light all his life, but was now in greater darkness than ever."

The Coal We Burn.—

The dissipation of every ton of coal divided into component parts has been figured by the director of the United States Geological Survey as follows: At the outset, 600 pounds are lost in mining. Once the remaining 1,400 pounds comes to the surface, it takes 126 pounds to get the coal from the mine to the boiler room. There 446 pounds float up the smokestack in waste gases; 51 pounds escape in radiation, and another 51 in the ash pit. The amount lost converting heat energy into mechanical energy is 650 pounds, leaving the remaining 76 pounds really to accomplish something productive.—Western Recorder.

An Outrage on the Dead President.—

Much more deplorable is the bringing in of the name of our dead President. Up to the time of this writing, there seems to have been not the slightest justification whatever for associating him in any way with the wretched business now under investigation. All that he seems to have done was to join with trusted members of his cabinet in transferring the naval oil reserves from the Navy Department to the Department of the Interior. No censure too severe could be visited upon Mr. Vanderlip for giving public currency to outrageous suggestions of misconduct on the part of President Harding. He himself declared that he had not a fact to justify them. We talk of the cruelty and barbarism of ancient times, but if there is anything more cruel or unreasoning than modern politics we would not know where to look for it.—Religious Herald.

This is One Way to Read the Bible.—

Recently the Young Ladies' Sunday School Class of Phillips' Memorial Baptist Church, Brandenburg, Ky., challenged the rest of the school to a Bible-reading contest. This contest caused many to read the Bible who had not habitually read it for years. One layman of the Church, Mr. L. F. Webb, began reading and became so interested that for nine days he read continuously, taking time only to eat and sleep and do a few chores. He averaged reading eleven hours a day for the nine days, and on the ninth day completed the entire Bible. He stated to the Sunday School that he had not read hurriedly, but that he took ample time to read understandingly. He testified to the great pleasure and benefit of reading the Bible in such a way as to get a unified conception of God's great plan of human redemption.—Religious Herald.

Greatest Classical Scholar Dies.—

Prof. Lanneau Gildersleeve, aged ninety-two, died in Baltimore on January 9th. Although he was not as well known as many other college men, wide publicity has been given to his death and to his achievements. Time says: "He was America's greatest classical scholar and one of the world's greatest scholars in any field. He had been professor of Greek at Johns Hopkins since 1876, but had retired from active service in 1915 because of failing eyesight and hearing. His career was as picturesque as his personality, about which innumerable legends survive. He was always a prodigy. Born at Charleston, S. C., in 1831, he translated Anacreon at twelve and graduated from Princeton with high honors at eighteen. He studied in Germany at Berlin, Bonn, and Gottingen, and upon his return became professor of Greek at theU niversity of Virginia in 1856. He was called to organize a department of Greek at Johns Hopkins twenty years later, and it was during his forty-seven years of residence in Baltimore that he made his reputation as a man of prodigious learning and irrepressible wit."

Knights of Columbus Offer $25,000.—

We believe in giving all people what belongs to them, and on this account we publish the paragraph below. We hope it is true.

The Knights of Columbus have again declared the "fourth degree oath," which has long been circulated by anti-Catholics and is now being circulated with renewed zeal, to be a fraud. The Knights of Columbus have deposited $25,000 in a bank and offer it to the man who proves that the alleged oath is ever taken by members of the order. In connection with the offer, they publish what they assert to be the fourth-degree oath as really taken by the Knights of Columbus. It is as follows: "I swear to support the Constitution of the United States. I pledge myself as a Catholic citizen and Knight of Columbus to enlighten myself upon my duties as a citizen and conscientiously to perform them entirely and in the largest interest of my country, regardless of all personal consequences. I pledge myself to do all in my power to preserve the integrity and purity of the ballot and to promote respect for law and order. I promise to practice my religion consistently and faithfully and so to conduct myself in public affairs and the exercise of public virtue as to reflect nothing but credit upon our holy Church, and to that end that she may flourish and our country prosper to the greater glory and honor of God."—Christian Advocate.

Christian Literature for Spanish-America.—

It is impossible to establish and maintain a stable Christianity in mission fields without the circulation of Christian literature. For this reason, the Protestant Churches of the United States and Canada have made special efforts to provide the beginnings of a Christian literature in the Spanish language. Through their central organization in New York City, known as the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America, twenty-eight mission boards conducting work in Latin America have centralized their efforts in this direction. Under a budget to which all of these boards contribute, the literature department of this committee has for a number of years been engaged in promoting the translation and publication of choice English literature into Spanish and Portuguese. In working through such a central agency, this very difficult work, requiring the continued services of experts, is performed at a small expense to the individual mission boards. —Exchange.

A Most Unusual Performance.—

It is said that we cannot all see alike. That is so, no doubt. But in spite of all that, we find there is a growing disposition to magnify play above real work. As a people, we are teaching it, and we are practicing it. What shall the harvest be? Who can tell. An exchange brings us a most unusual message as to play, as follows:

Why is it that "For All of Us," a play by William Hodge, is making such a "hit" in New York? That is a question that the newspapers are trying to answer. The play ran for twenty-seven weeks in Chicago. It has been running for many weeks in New York, and there seems to be no lagging of interest. Mr. Hodge plays the leading part in his play. He has declared that he is on the stage to help people; that he would not act in a play that he did not consider to be wholesome and helpful. One critic says that "on the stage, Mr. Hodge is, above all, a human being rather than an actor, and he is plainly trying to help folks. . . . He does it by the surest and most effective means, religious inspiration. . . . People as a whole are turning, groping dumbly, blindly but unmistakably, toward some spiritual solution for the troubles and temptations of human existence. To religion and the awakening of people to that fact has, to some degree at least, its outlet in the enjoyment that is brought to them by plays of he type of Mr. Hodge's." —Selected.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West paid a visit to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office the past week and expressed good wishes for its success.

Many will weep because the late Rev. H. H. Butler is no more among men. It was a real sorrow of heart not only to know that he was gone, but that sorrow was intensified by the fact that we could not arrange so as to be at the funeral. He had many warm friends, especially in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, where he spent his life in the great work of preaching the gospel for about fifty years or more.

Some writer in The Southern Churchman has a most timely word against an increase in Church machinery. He says: "Before creating any new, let's be very careful to study what we have, to see if it cannot be adapted. I have little confidence in legislative devices. Competent leadership with a minimum of legislative 'do's' and 'don'ts' is an ideal situation. By all means, let's cut down on what we have as much as we can. Also let's work more in co-operation with other Church organizations."

For the first time in history, a woman has spoken in an English cathedral, according to a report from London. During the more than thirteen hundred years that the Established Church of England has existed, women have never been allowed to speak in the Churches. In permitting Lady Barrett, wife of Sir William Barrett, to speak in the Cathedral of Bristol, the dean of the cathedral said: "If it is, as I think, the first time a woman has spoken in an English cathedral, I am personally thankful to have had any part in bringing this about. It does not in any way violate the law of the Church, while the presence of the bishop proves that nothing is being done without his approval." And so the privileges of women advance step by step.—Ex.

Mr. Max N. Natanson, a man of wide influence in the business world, declares that prohibition has greatly enhanced values in many directions, especially in real estate. Why should it not be so? When the bread-winner stops drinking, he ought to have much more money with which to take care of his family, and when that is the case, why certainly values will go up, and for the reason that the people who formerly used their money in buying liquor to make themselves drunk on, now spend it in providing for their homes and families. He has a better house to live, he has better food for his family to eat, and better clothes for them to wear. Why, certainly, prohibition has increased the values of property, and there is a reason for it—the money which he drank up formerly, he now devotes to the support of his family. We suppose that is what makes the liquor men so furious against prohibition—they want the money which the men are now putting into the comfort of their families to fill the liquor man's pockets; but, believing the money is going where it belongs and where it ought to stay, we still stand, and mean to stand, for prohibition.

"The first missionary of the Christian Church that I ever met was Rev. D. F. Jones, by whom I was baptized. That was in the year of 1888. I remember the date—March 17, 1888. In October of the same year I became a student of the first class in a theological school, and after graduation, I have spent more than thirty years of rcontinuous evangelical work in the northern part of Japan. I was born in this province. Ishinomaki is my native place. Rev. D. F. Jones established the Church in which I am now pastor. I was baptized in this Church. I feel that I have reason to speak something of the evangelistic conditions in this part of Japan."—Rev. T. Matsukawa, Japan. Cast your bread upon the waters and it will be seen in a later day. No doubt, Rev. D. T. Jones, could he see what Bro. Matsukawa says of him, would feel that he cast his bread upon the waters and it is seen till this day, and will likely be seen for many days to come. God bless the lifework of Rev. D. F. Jones. So far as we know, Bro. Jones is still living in San Francisco, Cal. After he spent some years in Japan, he went to China as a missionary. After a while in China, he returned to the United States and went to work in San Francisco.

We do not need politics in religion, but most surely we need religion in politics, and then some—for we need real training in the study of the Bible. Every now and then some man gets a chance at students in the school, colleges, or even in some university, and forthwith he seeks to show how little they really know of the Bible and the characters and truths which it presents. An exchange brings us the following facts as to the knowledge of high school and normal students in Missouri: "Is it possible? What? That of 2,000 high school and normal students of Missouri who took the examination, 16 per cent of the students neither knew where Christ was born nor the name of His mother; 60 per cent knew not that Peter, James and John enjoyed the larger confidence of Jesus; 70 per cent did not know what to call the Sermon on the Mount; 60 per cent did not know what Christ said about loving one's neighbor; 12 per cent did not know the first clause of the Lord's Prayer; 65 per cent did not know the Golden Rule; and quite a few of them guessed that Paul and Pilate were books of the Bible, that Judas and Mark were kings, and Agrippa and Herod were apostles. Such is the report of Dr. George R. Crissmon, superintendent of teacher training in Central Missouri State Teachers' College, at Warrenburg, Mo. Those students who were regular attendants at Sunday School made an average grade of 83.7, and non-attendants at Sunday School were marked at 35. These are disquieting facts." We wonder if these facts (are they facts?) have not been worked up by some enemy of the Church? It does seem that any student of ordinary brain could do better than the most of these named in this clipping are reported as doing. Let us see that our young people are better trained in Bible lore.

What a man thinks of the Bible is, in some important way, a key to what his life is. Of course, we realize that a man could say fine things of the Bible, and yet not reveal therein his true character, but we are speaking of men who are living to some great purpose and seeking to use well his talents in glorifying God in his day and generation. Such a man was the late Woodrow Wilson, as we think, and while none of us perhaps could approve everything he did, yet he was a sincere man and plainly trying to do the right thing in the ordinary course of human life. Woodrow Wilson's views of the Bible may, therefore, be counted as pointing to his estimate of the Bible in human life. He gave his estimate of its power and character as it reflects the needs of man when he says: "The Bible is the Word of life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves—read not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it. You will find it full of real men and women not only, but also of the things you have wondered about, and been troubl-always been; and the more you read, the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy—loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth, ready to give everything for what they think their duty, and most of all the wish that they may have the approval of Christ, who gave everything for them—and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy—selfishness, cowardice, greed and everything that is low and mean. When you have read the Bible, you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness and your own duty."

Here is a bit of most interesting history, now current in a field which many look upon as altogether a different thing from what it is. What is true of the Methodist Church is, we presume, true in some marked degree of other Churches. We ask for a reading of the facts, and as you read, say if you do not think it is true that it takes a pretty brave man to accept the place of a preacher of the gospel and do his best in the days of his strength for the cause of Christ, with the facts given in the following note staring him in the face? We thank God that the Churches have men who are brave enough to preach the gospel even in the face of such facts. Heroes they are, and for them we believe there is laid up a crown of rejoicing, which shall be theirs in the day our work is done and our reward is given. God bless the men who are brave and faithful enough to the commission to preach the gospel in the face of the following facts, which we clip from the North Carolina Christian Advocate: "According to the latest figures, there are almost 1,000 superannuated ministers in the Southern Methodist Church. Of these, 400 are practically blind or deaf; 440 are invalids; 170 have an invalid member of the family to support; 570 own homes that are heavily mortgaged; 300 rent or board; 70 roam around, and 60 live in superannuate homes. The Church now pays these men who gave their best years to the ministry the miserable pittance of $200 a year, and to the widows of ministers $150. Such conduct on the part of a great, rich Church is shameful. No other organization would be guilty of such conduct. To kick out the aged, unprovided for, is characteristic of some pagan civilizations, but it ought not to be the policy of the Christian Church. With the proposed $10,000,000 endowment raised in full, each superannuate would get an average of $700 a year and the widows of preachers would receive $500. Will any preacher or layman fail to do his full part to secure these $10,000,000?"

PROHIBITIONISM PREADING IN EUROPE.

Despite large sums of money used in spreading falsehoods in regard to American prohibition, the prohibition idea is spreading rapidly in Europe, especially among the young people, according to E. L. G. Hohenthal, who has recently returned from that continent.

Mr. Hohenthal says that Central Europe is at present the most promising field for prohibition propaganda in the world. Young people who are greatly dissatisfied with the failure of elderly leaders to grapple successfully with economic and social problems are giving their support to the prohibition movement.

The President of Austria is himself chairman of the National Prohibition Committee. Not only in Austria, but elsewhere, differences of race, creed and politics, which ordinarily prevent co-operation, are disregarded in the anti-alcohol movement. Socialists and Nationalists, Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, employers and employees, are working side by side for relief of the people by suppression of drink. In Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, laws have already been enacted prohibiting the sale of liquors to those under eighteen years of age. In Germany the anniversary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church held at the South German Conference, at Heilbronn, was attended by 2,500 people, while 1,000 additional stood in the rain outside the building listening to another speaker and two Churches were used for overflow meetings. Under Bishop Nuelson, Bishop Blake and Bishop Bast, the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church has organized work in nearly all European countries and is making use of men of great talent as its representatives.

In Germany, several test votes have given overwhelming majorities for prohibition, none of these votes, in fact, yielding less than 75 per cent for the dry policy. In preparing these test votes, young people labored incessantly, distributing literature from house to house. In the Danzig Free State and city, the law has closed saloons half a day of Saturday (pay day) and all day Sunday. Much difficulty was experienced at first in various parts of Europe in holding public meetings as representatives of the trade interrupted them. This sort of disorder has almost stopped, however, as it reacted unfavorably to the anti-prohibition cause.

N. Y. JUSTICE SCORES UNCLEAN BOOKS.

Judge John Ford, a justice of the Supreme Court of New York, in an address in that city, declared that the Clean Book League, of which he is head, will offer to the next session of the New York Legislature a bill directed against unclean literature. Justice Ford asserted that the old statute covering obscene literature has been rendered ineffective by the interpretation of the courts. He called particular attention to the fact that in New York a magistrate's decision in favor of the defendant was not subject to reversal by higher courts.

"City magistrates, not content with deciding against the people," said Justice Ford, "have in several instances appended their personal opinion praising the filthy books which have come before them in language so laudatory that the publishers have utilized it in widespread advertisements to increase the sale of their printed smut."

Justice Ford declared that the bill offered by the Clean Books League to the last Legislature had been misrepresented as an attempt at censorship, which he states it was not. He attributed the defeat of the bill to the mistaken support by newspapers and magazines of a campaign of misrepresentation by "purveyors of obscenity." Then he said: "The small coterie of publishers who have prostituted a noble business to the dissemination of printed obscenity and the inoculation of the minds of American youth with the germs of moral depravity have arrogantly challenged the moral sentiment of the State. The great majority of publishers have nothing to fear from our bill. They teach morality instead of immorality. Why they should make common cause with the purveyors of debasing smut is beyond my comprehension."—Wesleyan Methodist.

FROM BRO. ELDER.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I have been very unwell for several months. I am improving now, and hope to be well and at my work soon. On the 13th day of December I quit work and went to the hospital at Plains, Ga., for treatment. I was afraid I would have to be operated on, but the doctors finally decided they would not. I did not do any preaching for two months. I visited my Churches a part of the time and kept things intact. I am now busy again, and feeling very well. I am enjoying THE SUN better than ever. During my sickness, my Churches and friends were very kind to me, for which I am thankful.

The Budget System.

In reference to the budget system, of which Dr. Harper has mapped out, I have considered to some extent, but not critically. I have felt for some years that we needed some uniform system of finance in our work. I am heartily in favor of the budget system. I found in my local work, in raising Conference assessments, that I had some people who would give to one part of the work, but would not to another. For example, one would give to home missions, but would not give to foreign missions. Now, when I get ready to raise my Conference assessments, I just tell my Churches we have, as a budget, so much money to raise. I find it much easier. I don't know that Dr. Harper's schedule is ideal, but I would like to see it tried out.

H. W. ELDER.

A VERY TENDER PARTING.

Many years ago the Methodist preacher had as his traveling companion a pair of saddlebags. They did great and real service for the Methodist preacher in those days. They were well filled with his change of apparel, his books and his sermon notes.

Rev. S. R. Reno writes for the Northwestern Christian Advocate an affectionate and very tender farewell to his old saddlebags, as follows:

My Dear Old Saddlebags.

Well, my dear old Saddlebags,
I have come to say, Good-by!
We have journeyed long together,
In all weathers, wet and dry.

And we've slumbered oft together
On the cold and virgin sod,
Caring nought for such hardships—
Only for the man of God.

Our bed was not as soft as down,
Our covering was not warm,
But God looked down upon our night,
And kept us from all harm.

The vigils of our nights were stars,
Their company was good,
The morning brought us rest and joy,
The consciousness of God.

Your wardrobe and your larder,
Your presence and your store,
Have been prized by me more highly
Than dukes and lords galore.

And I'd gladly take you with me,
But we're told that flesh and skin
In the place where I am going
Can never enter in.

As in the days of strength and prime,
We followed crowd and hearse.
Together at the grave we've wept,
With kindred, friends and nurse.

To each other we've been faithful
As the coming Judgment Day,
In toiling for our God and Christ,
Too oft with meager pay.

But we must part to meet no more!
Old Saddlebags! Good-by!
The story of your service here
Can be better told on high.

There, angel band will take their stand,
In that bright and happy clime,
And chant your praise through endless days
For your service to mankind.

A PRAYER FOR THE NEW YEAR.

BY HENRY EDWARD TRALLE.

Help me, Great Teacher, Guide, and Friend,
My careless teaching ways to mend.
Help me to teach with growing skill,
And fondest teaching hopes fulfill.
O make my teaching art the dew
On the rose of the heart that's warm and true!

Help me, Great Teacher, Skillful One,
Who taught the Twelve life's race to run,
That I may teach with winning force,
In question, story, life, discourse.
O make my teaching art the dew
On the rose of the heart that's warm and true!

Help me, Great Teacher, artfully
To teach with knowing sympathy,
To feed with faith the springs of thought,
And change the life of him that's taught.
O make my teaching art the dew
On the rose of the heart that's warm and true!

—S. S. Worker.

WHEN THE SUN IS SET.

(Mark 1:32.)

At evening when the sun is set,
Christ walks the village street;
His presence doth new faith beget,
And hope each heart doth greet.
Though beds of pain line all the way,
He passes through the throng,
Speaks health and strength to all who pray,
And sadness turns to song.

At evening when the sun is set,
'Mid tempest on the lake,
His friends cannot His power forget,
But cry: "O Master, wake!"
His hand of power is raised on high,
His voice proclaims, "Be still!"
And waters calm, with clearing sky,
And peace comes at His will.

At evening when the sun is set,
And stars shine overhead,
The Christ has come to Olivet—
By inspiration led.
"Thy will be done, and not my own"—
Thus prays the Son of God,
As in the garden all alone
His blood-drops stain the sod.

At evening when my sun shall set,
In the garden, sea, or street,
When life's last enemy is met,
'Twill be my joy to greet
The Christ, who in the shadows gray
Gave to the weak His might,
Commanded peace, took fear away,
And made the evening light.

—Western Christian Advocate.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

JAMES O'KELLY SAW IT 132 YEARS AHEAD.

James O'Kelly was the founder of the present organization of the Christian Church. He was censured and made to suffer because he saw the evils of the system under which the Methodists were working in their early history, and seeing it he entered his protest, but instead of heeding his suggestions, he was laughed out of court, and of course the system went right on with its work just as though nothing had been said. It is still true that truth crushed to the ground will rise again.

The late President Wilson, in the last paper he wrote for the public press, said that the principles for which he had stood and for which he was put to death (for that is indirectly what killed him), that these great ideals for which he had contended in vain would live and again rule among the people, or words to that effect. Now he is gone, but he simply thought and then went home a hundred years, more or less, ahead of his time, and the reaction is even now dawning.

It was much that way with James O'Kelly and the Methodist system. He saw more than one hundred years ahead of his time that in a democratic country the oligarchy of the episcopacy would not do. The people would not always stand for it. His fellows put him out, and he went out believing that the time would come when his thought would prevail. At any rate, it is now coming to pass that the Methodists themselves are getting very tired of the autocratic system under which they have worked for more than one hundred years. James O'Kelly was right, and the Methodists themselves are about to take the stand as witnesses for James O'Kelly.

As showing that James O'Kelly was right in the contention that he maintained in Baltimore more than one hundred years ago the Methodists of England, the original branch of that Church, never has had a bishop and they have none today. That tells the tale as to who was true to Methodists. Was it James O'Kelly, or was it Francis Asbury? It was James O'Kelly, for even the Methodists of this country are now very restless under the oligarchy of the episcopacy in the Methodist Church. A movement is already under way to uproot the episcopacy in that Church. In the next General Conference, which meets next May, if we mistake not, some effort will be made to destroy the episcopacy as they now have it, and the time will come when the Methodists will have to admit that James O'Kelly saw the truth more than a hundred years ahead of his brethren, and then we believe they ought to take some action to change the histories they have written in which James O'Kelly was denounced as against Methodism.

As proof that we are right, we publish below an article from the Western Christian Advocate, showing how the restlessness is growing in the Methodist Church, because of the undesirable episcopacy, as they now have it. Alas! for our Methodist brethren; but, James O'Kelly, we hail you a wise man, a prophet, who saw far ahead of your brethren, and now in the twentieth century of this Christian era, we are about to give Mr. O'Kelly his place as one of the most far-seeing of the men of his day. The article below is not ugly, but it is the expression of a growing spirit in the Methodist Church, a spirit which will and must be heard to the honor of the despised O'Kelly. Who knows but that at last James O'Kelly will outshine the men who could not see the evident trend of the age in which the Methodist got into the lead!

"Jeshurun" (we suppose that means that he is a kicker), as was O'Kelly more than one hundred years ago. The opposition to the episcopacy is now getting well under way in the Methodist Church. Let us wait and see it develop, for it is coming, and coming faster than some think. "Jeshurun" says:

"Autocracy is the rule or authority of an autocrat." "An autocrat is a supreme ruler whose power is unrestricted and irresponsible." Do these definitions apply to Methodism?

In a formal and literal sense, God is the only supreme Ruler, the only one not restricted by any other power, nor responsible to any other authority. Hence, the definitions must be modified somewhat or we will prove that there is no autocrat on earth today and that none has ever existed. Czar, emperor, kaiser, and sultan are all restricted in some sense of the word. If the former kaiser had not needed to conform to any power outside of himself, the World War would have occurred much earlier. The czar was influenced and hampered by a bureauracy and awed by fear of revolution. The sultan must keep a weather eye out for opposition from other nations and for possible uprisings of liberalism among his own citizens. The ancient emperors lived in constant fear of the rise of a new dynasty or an invasion from a foreign land, and well knew that these could often be forestalled by omitting some severities and the extreme exercise of power. Nevertheless, they were all autocrats. They were the dominating, overruling power in the making and enforcing of law in their respective countries. Had this not been true, the word "autocracy" would be an unmeaning sound. The fact that malcontents might be driven to desperation and by organization depose or assassinate the ruler, did not make them limited rulers or constitutional monarchs.

An autocrat, then, is one who cannot be prevented from passing or enforcing law, but can, by processes more or less legal, be punished for his despotic acts. A constitutional monarch has, associated with him, other powers, without which he can neither enforce nor enact any legislation. They are partners with him all the way through the entire process.

No one will contend that in matters of legislation, any man or any small group of men in Methodism can have autocratic power. But it is true that so far as the legislators in the General Conference are dependent for their living upon the men who preside from day to day, they become powerless to resist a most dangerous trend toward autocracy. The hardest club in the world is made of bread and butter; and the temptation to swing it is sometimes too strong for men of clay to resist. This condition is still more acute in the annual conference, where the overwhelming majority are reduced by this dependence to silent helplessness. The exceptions to the rule are the men who serve charges strong enough to shake their fists in the face of the appointing power and defy him to lay his hands on their man. But these are such a small minority that they accomplish nothing in the way of reform. The rank and file do a vast amount of grumbling and follow their leaders. Never, until 1923, have they asserted themselves in a legal way through their ballots. They have often resented bitterly in their hearts the injustice and unreason of appointments, but have seen nothing that could be done about it. They have said that incompetents, raw recruits, and down-and-outers were held above the waves by ecclesiastical ropes, and that men of transcendent ability and spotless character were given appointments that were an insult to the men, a misfit to the charge, a mystery to the community, and a joke to the entire Conference. But they have allowed these bungles and injustices to stand, for they failed to see any possibility of correction. A hen sees her chicken carried away by a 300-pound thief, and raises a fearful clatter that says as plainly as words could do: "You have no right to my chicken; and if you don't drop it, you'll take it on to your sty and gobble it up!" So the brethren bestow some real and kindly sympathy on their oppressed brother, and with heart partially comforted but unconvinced, he takes up his task and they shoulder theirs and the matter is ended.

An annual conference is usually an unsuccessful pretense of activity on the part of hundreds of members while they wait until one man has finished the entire job. Then he informs them that they may safely move to adjourn. They very politely do so, and the last chapter is read. Not one appointment can be appealed to any power on earth. A cabinet may with one voice advise against it, and the appointment be made just the same. This is not a fancy sketch. It has happened within the territory of the Western—not once, but many times. If this is not autocracy, please invent a more fitting cognomen.

The reading of the list is usually prefaced by an appeal for sympathy and a statement of good intentions. But these are foreign to the case. A pupil in solving a problem may be as honest as the sunlight, but if he says four times seven are thirty-three, his integrity of character does not guarantee the correctness of the solution. This appeal to good-heartedness is the age-long fallacy of autocracy. "The king can do no wrong" was the honest belief of a crude and simple age. But it was this fallacy and not the wicked intentions of princes that staved off the rule of the whole people for centuries. No man is good enough nor wise enough to wield despotic power. "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." If autocracy is unsafe in state affairs, it can be no better in Church government. A few drops of holy water cannot transform a fat steak into a carp or pickerel on any day, secular or sacred. The "checks and balances" are visibly present in our American government and are working as well as any human government ever does; but these or similar devices, equally necessary in Methodist government, are conspicuous by their absence. The present widespread demand for a larger co-operation is not a matter of disrespect to men, but an honest recognition of a defect in the system. And when this defect is once seen, it will be remedied.

WHICH IS FIRST WITH YOU—SAFETY OR DUTY?

Nowadays we have a tendency to do things under the influence of a "slogan," rather than under the impulse of the Holy Spirit. One of these slogans is "Safety First." Now, so far as this slogan applies to the dangers of railroads and other industrial places of service, we commend it as eminently worthy of the most careful attention, but when it is applied to spheres of moral and spiritual dangers, we say let every man who believes he is worthy of his name, brave the danger, never stopping to consider the danger which may be lurking in his way. It is frequently charged that certain ministers are afraid to do their duty under certain circumstances. We should be dreadfully humiliated if we were compelled by facts to have to admit the truth of the charge. We are not here specifically charging such a thing, but we are giving all ministers who may read this article a chance to examine himself as to whether the charge applies to him or not. If there should be one, or many, who are guilty of this charge, we urge such an one to go quickly to his knees and seek a closer walk with God, till he might get sufficient courage to do and to dare to do anything which duty may lay upon his heart and mind, or anything which the real good of the people demands at his hands. Let us keep in mind the fact that it does not take a bad man to yield to some temptations in this line. Some very fine men are sorely tempted as he stands before the people to declare the unsearchable truths of Christ. We once knew a man, and he was in many respects not only a fine preacher, but he was a fine fellow. Some one criticised him for some stand he had taken on the temperance question; and speaking of the fact, he declared that the temperance question might go, so far as he was concerned, that he was not going to imperil his "bread and butter" for the sake of temperance. Not only bread and butter, but his life could find no more worthy cause in human society for which to give itself than the cause of temperance. We want men to preach who have been endued with the Holy Spirit, and then they will face any human danger for the sake of standing true to the truth before men.

We have accounts of a few men who have not hesitated to hazzard their lives for the truth. The North Carolina Christian Advocate says:

" 'Safety First' is an admirable slogan for men who handle railroad trains, drive automobiles, or in any way have control of those instrumentalities of our modern civilization which, when carelessly handled, jeopardize the lives of people. But that slogan has no place when wrongs are to be righted, or men are called to lead great movements in behalf of truth and justice. 'I count not my life dear unto myself,' cried St. Paul when he dared the dungeon, defied the mob, preached the resurrection on Mars Hill and gloried in the cross in pleasure-loving Corrinth. John the Baptist beheaded, Christ crucified, John Bunyan in jail, Woodrow Wilson a broken machine, that is the story of sacrifices which mark the on-going of humanity. Sacrifice and service first, was the cry of those master spirits to whom the world owes its largest debt."

FAME OF WILSON WIDE AS THE WORLD.

Many things are said of great men which most likely they themselves would not recognize as having any reference to themselves. These things are the outgushing of both sympathy and appreciation, and is likely to be truer than anything said by one's enemies. We once knew of a man who incidentally picked up a scrap of paper and began to read of what some great man had was doing on a certain occasion. The remarks were so eulogistic that the man who was doing the reading concluded he would read far enough to find out of whom the writer was writing; and when he did find out, you may judge of his surprise to find that the great man of whom he was reading was none other than himself. Alas! he thought, a man so great and yet he had never found it out for himself. So it is possible, if Mr. Wilson could read all the great things now said of him, we doubt not that some of the things said of his greatness would be so new to him that he would stop to ask of whom speaketh this man, not recognizing himself at all, and yet we believe Mr. Wilson was the greatest man who ever filled the place of President of this great nation. This we say, not as a partisan in politics, for Mr. Wilson was of one political faith and this writer is of another; but all the same, we regard him as the greatest man who ever served the United States as President.

We find in an exchange the following paragraph in regard to Mr. Wilson, written from Swarthmore, Pa., giving a fine estimate of his world prominence:

Woodrow Wilson probably attained a wider fame than any other mortal ever enjoyed, Dr. William T. Ellis, traveler and writer, said, pointing out that Mr. Wilson's name was known in lands far outside the currents of civilized life.

"The names of Shakespeare, Caesar and Alexander are unknown to two-thirds of the human race, Mr. Ellis asserted, while contemporary military figures like Foch and the kaiser had only a relatively limited circle of fame.

" 'But because of his magic appeal to the deepest sensibilities of all human life, which were given the wings of morning by the unprecedented propaganda facilities of the allies,' he added, 'the Wilson principles quickly spread to the uttermost parts of the earth.'

" 'As a result,' he said, 'far-faring travelers can tell of the ignorant Bedouin of the deserts insisting upon judging governments by the Wilson standards. New Turkey came into being on the platform of the Wilson principles. These same ideals have made Egypt a nation again. Villagers in the Balkans settle their petty disputes by the formula "President Wilson would not have it so." '

"In his travels in Russia, Japan and China, Dr. Ellis also saw repeated evidence of the influence of Wilson ideas, he said, while in the Holy Land the natives still are invoking the Wilson principles against the European powers."

A RICH TREASURE-HOUSE.

The New York Bible House distributed last year nearly 800,000 copies of the Scriptures, and in sixty-six languages, showing two important facts in connection with the work, viz: that the New York Bible Society is an industrious institution; and, secondly, that the Bible is a great Book. This is shown by the demand for it. What other book had a circulation of 800,000 copies in a single year? That fact of itself speaks in no uncertain language as to the character and worth of the Book. These facts, as noted above, become all the more interesting when it is known that this work was done by one society, and that while there are many other societies doing the same work with the same Book, not only so, but the National Bible Society is located in the same section and circulating the same Book. Then there are other Bible societies circulating the same great Book.

It is marvelous, and though the Bible has had many enemies in the past, and it has them yet, still it is going on in a marvelous way, spreading the light of the Word. The Bible is bitterly assailed and hindered in all possible ways by its enemies, but, wotwithstanding this opposition, the great Book rides right on to the ends of the world, carrying its precious message and its wonderful light to the children of men—the light of God, in fact.

But what is the character of the Book which has such a wonderful history and life? Of course, it is the Book of God; but what is the Book of God? Some one has tried to give us an analysis of its contents, and while they have succeeded only in part, what they have given us in the way of analysis is so rich and full that we submit the following for your study:

It is a Book of laws.
It is a Book of wisdom.
It is a Book of truth.
It is a Book of life.
It is authentic and entertaining history.
It contains the most remote antiquities, the most remarkable events and wonderful occurrences.
It is a perfect body of divinity.
It is an unequaled narrative.
It is a Book of biography.
It is a Book of travels.
It is a Book of voyages.
It is the best covenant ever made; the best deed ever written.
It is the best will ever executed; the best testament ever signed.
It is a learned man's masterpiece.
It is the young man's best companion.
It is the schoolboy's best instructor.
It is the ignorant man's dictionary, and every man's directory.
It promises an eternal reward to the faithful and believing.
But that which crowns all is the Author—
He is without partiality, and without hypocrisy; "With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

CAN WE BREAK THE COMMANDMENTS?

What say you, can you do it? Can you smash God's commandments? Some people believe they can do it; believe they have done, but that is all a mistake! No man can break God's commandments. Well, what then?

We can, and we do often, break our obedience to these commandments, but we cannot break God's commandments; and he who is daring enough to try to break God's commandments will some day wake up to realize that what you regarded as a breaking of His commandments was all a mistake, for the commandments are still standing, and in no sense shattered; but your obedience to them—well, that has been broken into many pieces, destroying the blessing which otherwise might have been yours. It is true in a sense we break the commandments, or rather we disobey them, and in that we lose the blessings of obedience just as truly as if we had been able to break the commandments in fact.

Obedience is a jewel set in the life of the believer. To it is promised the highest reward that God offers to His children. Obedience is better than sacrifice; indeed, it is the highest act of the Christian life, and you may be sure its reward will be wonderful. Let us see that our life-aim is not to lose this reward, and for the reason that it covers practically every other reward that is coming to the Christian. Obedience covers almost the whole range of Christian life and service, and fits us to receive the great reward of the life which has been dedicated to God and His service.

No one can go into the presence of God with anything more commendatory than the one who goes with obedience, emblazoned upon his face. There is one thing which God can never discount in the life of a believer, and that is a wholehearted obedience, rendered as unto God rather than in the fear of man. Obedience is not the product of fear, but of love, of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, and when we are obedient, we have nothing to fear, for that is a fact upon which our God will never go back. The obedient soul has no need to fear meeting God in judgment, for God cannot deny the virtue of obedience, nor can He fail to reward obedience in His children. At all costs, obey the Lord our God and get the reward He gives for it.

The proportion of students supporting themselves in the various American colleges is estimated as follows: Yale, one-third; Princeton, one-quarter; University of Chicago, one-half; University of California and College of the City of New York, 60 per cent. The self-supporting student is 85 per cent of Tifts and 68 per cent of the University of Washington.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church celebrated its twelfth anniversary on the 11th of February, 1924.

"Entire Consecration" was given by C. C. Rawles, under a program as follows: "Life," Mrs. J. V. Bland; "Hands," Mrs. E. C. Beale; "Face," Mrs. J. W. Holland; "Voice," Mrs. R. P. Wright; "Lips," Mrs. R. L. Smith; "Silver and Gold," Mrs. C. B. Duke; "Moments and Days," Mrs. J. C. Philhower; "Intellect," Mrs. L. W. Caulk; "Will," Mrs. C. E. Smith; "Heart," Mrs. L. S. Hollowell; "Love," Mrs. George Daughtrey; "Myself," Mrs. A. A. Turner; song, "Take My Life and Let it Be."

A short sketch of all our foreign missionaries now on the field, by Mrs. W. H. Yates; duet, "Ivory Palaces," Mrs. J. M. Darden and Mrs. A. D. Brinkley; playlet, "Miss Heraldina, Standardless Visits." Mrs. S. C. Nelms acted the doctor and Miss Susie Powell the patient. The lesson was prescriptions for true missionary service.

"The Old Rugged Cross" was rendered as a solo by Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson. Refreshments were served, a social hour was enjoyed, and the collection for the evening was $117.55.

This society was organized February 19, 1912, with 100 charter members, and the present membership is 190.

The following have been made "life members" on the S. C. C. Woman's Board at a cost of $10 each: Six presidents of the society—Mrs. W. H. Dick, Mrs. W. J. Kendrick, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Mrs. W. R. Mitchell, Mrs. John King, Mrs. W. H. Andrews; two pastors' wives—Mrs. W. W. Staley, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle.

Deceased members have been given memorial membership as follows: Mrs. Virginia Portlock, Mrs. Jennie Croak, Mrs. W. H. Barnes, Mrs. A. B. Covington, Mrs. A. T. Norfleet, Mrs. Maria Rogers Truitt, Miss Monemea Eley, Mrs. D. L. Harrell.

There have been six presidents within the twelve years, and eight deaths during that time. The work of the society has been earnest and progressive, the spiritual atmosphere has been sweet, the real activity has been faithful and the members have enjoyed the meetings and the work. The study of missionary books has added to their knowledge and interest in missions, and they now feel a thankful pride in what they have done.

The following table shows the financial results of the society by years:

Feb., 1912, to Oct., 1912.....	$ 111.06
Oct., 1912, to Oct., 1913.....	199.87
Oct., 1913, to Oct., 1914.....	174.85
Oct., 1914, to Oct., 1915.....	176.10
Oct., 1915, to Oct., 1916.....	167.10
Oct., 1916, to Oct., 1917.....	290.78
Oct., 1917, to Oct., 1918.....	405.73
Oct., 1918, to Oct., 1919.....	957.41
Oct., 1919, to Oct., 1920.....	664.38
Oct., 1920, to Oct., 1921.....	864.09
Oct., 1921, to Oct., 1922.....	1,010.34
Oct., 1922, to Oct., 1923.....	985.62
Total	$6,007.33

By the above table, it appears that the society has made average offerings in the sum of $500 a year during the twelve years of its history, which shows what can be done by persistent and faithful work in the kingdom.

W. W. STALEY.

WHAT IS THE SEED?

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.—1 John 3:9.

The seed is the Word, but not the mere Word of God, for the mere Word of God may lie hidden away in a library, or it may fall on an indifferent ear. It is the Word of God quickened by the Spirit of God, proceeding from God Himself at the time, having vital power, developing faith and fruit, and continually abiding and working in the heart. See John 5:38, which reads:

"And ye have not His Word abiding in you: for whom He hath sent, Him ye believe not."

Some of the passages which seem to teach this are found in Matt. 13:19-23.

"Of His own Word, He brought us forth by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of His creatures."—Jas. 1:18.

"Having been begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."—1 peter 1:23.

"In Christ Jesus I begat you through the Gospel."—1 Cor. 4:15.

"Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."—Psa. 119:11.

"The Word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the evil one."—1 Jno. 2:14.

Can he again sin, so long as he serves God, and keep saved? Sinning and serving God are contradictory terms, of course.

This fact has led the translators and others to impose on 1 Jno. 3:9 the harshest meaning of the original word; for godly men seem to realize that we must not teach men that they may go on sinning, and sinning, and go into heaven sinning. But we must not make John unreasonable, both contradicting himself and making God a cruel tyrant, refusing to forgive and restore His own weak and repentant child. Indeed, John teaches better things of God, saying: "If we confess our sins, He is just and faithful to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." —1 John 1:9. And this, as you fully know, has reference to Christian people, being in immediate connection with the Word: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1:8.

Many Church people use the above passage as a license for sinning. James says in the third chapter, second verse: "For in many things we all stumble." In the text, John was addressing his letters to the followers of Christ. If you will get your Greek lexicon, and if you will put that into English, the whole passage will read as follows:

"Every one begotten of God does not sin, because his seed abide in him, and he tends not to sin, because he is begotten of God. John the apostle, who heard Peter deny his Lord, did not mean to teach (in John 3:9) that Peter did not sin and that he could not. John truly recorded the sin of Peter and after that Peter became a much-improved man, and although he became an improved man after the sin at the house of Caiaphas, he long afterward conducted himself in such a way that Paul publicly rebuked him for his evil (Gal. 2:11-14). And yet Peter was a great Christian man. The doctrine of Jno. 3:9 is the secret of David's clinging to God after he had sinned, and of Peter's weeping bitterly after cursing and swearing. Sin may attack the Christian, but cannot dominate him? His normal direction is away from sin. He who is begotten of God has the true life within him, and bears the right fruit. Even though there may be a knot on the tree, or a broken limb, or a wormy apple, or a thorny branch, he is all the while tending to bear the fruits of righteousness, because he is begotten of God. As a branch, he has been grafted into the true vine, Jesus Christ."

S. L. BAUGHER.

Lacey Springs, Va.

EXPRESSIONS OF APPRECIATION.

On the evening of January 20, 1924, though the night was dark and stormy, a vast concourse of the citizens of Franklin assembled in the main auditorium of the Christian Church, the capacity of which was taxed to the utmost by men and women from all walks of life, for the purpose of honoring one of the best-beloved men that ever lived and moved among the inhabitants of our little city, Rev. Charles H. Rowland, D. D., for twenty-three years pastor of the Christian Church of Franklin, Va.

The very atmosphere of the assembly seemed fraught with tremendous interest; loving friends had come and paused for a while to say farewell to one who, with those higher graces made beautiful and powerful by the love of Christ, had won the undying affection of his fellow-man, irrespective of denomination or creed, for "the world is his parish," and in it he scatters the sunshine of love and mercy, with his heart ever uncompromisingly fixed on the eternal principles of righteousness and justice.

Dr. Rowland came from his native State of North Carolina, fresh from the collegiate shades of his alma mater, to the pastorate of the Christian Church of this place. In what now seems those far-off days, he found a little Church with a struggling membership. As he today returns to his native heath to enter upon an even larger field of labor, he leaves behind a magnificent edifice, splendidly equipped, and a membership grown strong in numbers, whose liberality, from a financial standpoint, challenges the admiration of all who know them; but greatest of all, the under-shepherd of the flock has imparted to them a spiritual leadership, exemplifying the principles of the Great Teacher. Such has been the leadership of this man of God, that the "young preacher" and his "little Church" of 1,900 have grown to be, both Church and preacher, among the foremost of their denomination.

In all civic movements for the uplift of the human race and to make the world a better place in which to live, Chas. H. Rowland was ever found first on the firing line.

The poor, the needy, the sick, the afflicted of our community, in all the years of his sojourn, never had a truer or grander friend.

It is not necessary that we commend him to the people of his new field of labor, for when they shall know him they will love and admire him; only, we would ask that they appreciate him.

On that evening when we bade him godspeed, glowing tributes, clothed in beautiful language, were paid the preacher, citizen and man, but there was a feeling that the spoken words would be forgotten, and as a yet deeper mark of our appreciation for the splendid service, Dr. Rowland had rendered us as a people, by unanimous vote, the undersigned committee was appointed for the purpose of at least, in some measure, reducing to writing our profound appreciation of him.

Therefore, in obedience to the command of our fellow-citizens, we present the foregoing, knowing that neither time nor space would permit an adequate expression of a true appreciation of our friend and brother.

The committee was instructed to have published this written expression of appreciation in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., and the Tidewater News, Franklin, Va.

E. FRANK STORY,
W. T. PACE,
J. A. PRETLOW,
J. B. GAY,
R. E. L. WATKINS,
Committee.

THE AFTERMATH IN JAPAN.

BY DR. WILLIAM AXLING.

(Here is a very interesting account of stricken Japan. It is from the Christian Herald. We publish it by request.)

Through the combined work of earthquake and fire, 67 per cent of Tokyo's map was blotted out, 638,525 houses destroyed, and 1,356,740 people made homeless. Throughout the whole devasted area 1,569,743 houses were destroyed, leaving a host of people, still unnumbered, without shelter. The tragic list of casualties is still incomplete. The known dead for Tokyo and suburbs alone is 119,208, the wounded 33,984, and the missing 17,366.

In one of Tokyo's most congested wards, 32,000 people perished together in an open compound where they had taken refuge from the pursuing flames.

Yokohama, with a population of 350,000, was utterly wrecked by the earthquake and then wiped out by the fire. Although several weeks have passed since that dark September day, the roll of casualties here is still in the making.

Nothing but fire-swept debris marks many of Tokyo's once-busy, bustling industrial and commercial centers. Out of 28,274 factories in greater Tokyo, 13,063 were destroyed. The loss of the city's commercial and industrial firms totals $1,119,325,000. This paralysis of industry and trade has thrown four hundred thousand people out of work and added unemployment to their loss of home and personal property. Japan's total losses in the earthquake zone leaps across the $5,000,000,000 figure.

Notwithstanding the fact that some 600,000 refugees have fled to other cities and the country districts, there still remain 800,000 people in Tokyo and its suburbs who are dependent upon relief measures for housing, clothing, bedding and food. The situation for Yokohaha's refugee population is even more desperate.

The cataclysm swept away some seventy Church buildings, and scattered their constituency. A large number of Christian social service centers, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Salvation Army, the American Bible Society and other Christian agencies lost their working plants. A dozen Christian educational institutions were wholly or partially destroyed. Materially it will take millions of money to put Christian institutions back on the map of Tokyo and Yokohama. While Christian leaders and Christians suffered the loss of homes and property in large numbers, there were remarkably few deaths among them. The Christian man-power remains practically intact as an incalculable asset for the work of building up a greater and more efficient Christian movement in the ruined regions.

The Japanese authorities have taken hold of the situation with a strong hand. Food is rationed out to the refugees regularly and fairly. The building of barracks is being rushed. Bedding is being collected. As far as possible, work is being provided for the able-bodied. Great areas of need, however, are still untouched.

In the government-built barracks, thousands of refugees are huddled together in tiny rough-board rooms. The loss of loved ones hangs like a pall over their hearts. Their homes are destroyed. Their property is gone. They have not even a mattress to sleep on or blankets to cover themselves with, although a strenuous effort is being made to provide these. Multitudes of them are without employment. The present is cruelly barren, and the future holds for them no hope. Their congested quarters are dynamic with moral dangers and disease.

There is a loud and urgent call for the establishment of Christian comfort centers at some forty or more of these barracks. At these comfort centers, Christians will be constantly on hand looking after the children, the aged, the sick and those in need. Daily necessities will be supplied and advice given. Gospel meetings will be held and tracts distributed. In every way possible dismayed and discouraged human hearts will be brought face to face with the great Helper and Healer. The budget for this calls for $60,000.

Sixty-seven per cent of Tokyo and all of Yokohama is one wilderness of fire-swept debris. To these dismal surroundings, thousands of people are returning daily and building shanties with the purpose of making a new start. The seventy burned-out Churches ought to be enabled to go back with them, build at once temporary huts on their old sites and do for these people what should be done for the multitudes crowded together in the barracks.

If these disabled Churches could have such huts as centers from which to work and radiate light and hope they would make a tremendous contribution toward the material and spiritual reconstruction of the devastated regions.

As it is, they are homeless, without a center or a workshop. Pastors and members alike are burned out, empty-handed and helpless to meet this emergency need. Permanent reconstruction of these Churches must come later, but this cry from the innumerable shanties springing up over the burned districts must not go unheeded. Fifty thousand dollars will provide these huts.

The poor of Tokyo have in the past formed the nucleus of the slums. The authorities are anxious to head off the reformation of these slums by putting Christian social settlements at the heart of districts to which the poor and the working-folk will gravitate. They are hoping the Christian Herald's readers will assist in the establishment of such settlements in three or four of Tokyo's destroyed down-town wards. These settlements will function now as relief centers, and later as agencies for uplifting and renewing the whole life of the people. One hundred thousand dollars will build, man and run these for two years. After that time, their support will be assumed here.

The children's cry! Can you not hear it? Every garment they had was burned. Winter is upon us, and the Tokyo winter is raw and cold —bitterly cold. They must be provided with warm clothing.

We want to supply 5,000 children with winter clothing—$37,500 will do it; $7.50 for each child.

The Christian Herald relief committee in Japan is asking the Herald to raise $250,000. It is a large sum. But this is no ordinary catastrophe. Millions of people are involved. America's quick and whole-souled response has profoundly touched the heart of the Japanese people. It will be strange indeed if this will not inaugurate a new and happier day in American-Japanese relations.

The response of Christian America to the task now facing the stricken Christian forces in Japan must be no less speedy and hearty. We are challenged to turn this blow into a blessing, and seize this opportunity to make a great forward drive for Christ, for kingdom-building in this land, and for better international relations.

MODERNISTS AND THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

BY REV. C. H. BRIGGS, D. D.

In a sermon preached in the First Presbyterian Church of New York City, on May 21, 1921, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick said: "To believe in virgin birth as an explanation of a great personality is one of the familiar ways in which the ancient world was accustomed to account for unusual superiority." This is an amazing misstatement by which he seeks to belittle the Christian doctrine of the virgin birth of our Lord. The many instances in mythology and Oriental legends of men who were reputed to be sons of the gods afford no parallel to the Christian doctrine.

In no one of these cases was the mother who bore a son to a divinity a virgin. In these legends the gods assumed the form and passions of men, and the birth that followed came in the natural way. And yet nothing is more common than for modernists to try to explain away the Christian doctrine by saying that legends of virgin birth were common in Oriental religions. A college president made such a remark. When I challenged it, he was dumb. He could not cite an instance of virgin birth in the world's literature except the birth of Jesus.

The statement in our Creed, "Born of the Virgin Mary," is an integral part of the gospel story. The logic that excises it leaves nothing authoritative in the New Testament.

Matthew's brief statement is the careful work of a trained business man who had ascertained the facts. There was no place for it in the gospel of Mark, which begins with the ministry of John. Luke, the finest historian of his day, gives the fuller account which he undoubtedly had from Mary's own lips. To say John and Paul knew nothing of it is the merest trifling. There was no occasion for John to repeat what had been clearly set forth by Matthew and Luke, but John went back to the beginning, where "the Word was with God and the Word was God." He tells us that Jesus knew "that he was come from God and went to God." "Before Abraham was I am." No wonder the Jews tried to stone Him. From their standpoint, such a claim was blasphemy. When Paul reminds the Corinthians of what they had already learned from Him, that "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" appeared in this "that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor," he can only assert his faith in Christ's pre-existence. Through all His earthly life, Jesus was poor. There is no need for the modernists to excise certain portions of the gospel story to harmonize the record with their theories. More than a hundred years ago, Thomas Jefferson did that work for them. Eliminating the supernatural, he arranged the New Testament in chronological order in four parallel columns—English, French, Greek, and Latin. It has been many years since I saw this "Jefferson's Bible," as it is called, but my recollection is that it closes with the forty-sixth verse of the fifteenth chapter of Mark: "And he brought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulcher which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulcher."—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

Springfield, Mo.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

ONE MONTH GONE.

When this issue of THE SUN reaches its subscribers, the first month of the final quarter of the fourth year of our Men and Millions Movement will have expired. We have only March and April left of the quarter now, in which to make payments on pledges for the fourth year. I find that many subscribers have paid first and second years. They have neglected third and fourth years. If they are given a chance and are made acquainted with the situation, they will make some payment during this quarter. I find, furthermore, that some have never made any payment, and in many instances their attention has never been called to the fact that they made a pledge since the day it was first made. Strange as it may seem, of our pastors, who know full well that every enterprise of the Church is dependent to a degree for progress and development upon our Men and Millions Movement, never mention the matter to their people. Numbers of pastors go from month to month, either oblivious of the movement or indifferent to its claims. One wonders what effect on the morals of the members who have made these pledges will be in cases where the pledges could have been paid but were not bcause of indifference.

I certainly do not wish to annoy any subscriber or worshiper with "duns" and "begging letters" or persistent pleas. I do wish, however, as a member of the Christian Church, to give every subscriber to Men and Millions an opportunity of performing his duty and his moral obligation in this end in all other vital matters.

Many captains never mention the matter to their people. Strange as it may seem, many who have the treasurer's book will neither mention the claims publicly or personally, nor take any steps to get their people notified of amounts due. I believe that the great difficulty now is that very, very many subscribers have forgotten their pledges, because they have never heard a word about them since the day they gave them; and that very, very many others are not paying regularly because neither pastor nor captain nor secretary nor any one else has mentioned the matter to them, or has brought the idea of meeting the obligations to their attention. Strange as it may seem, there are thousands of subscribers, despite what has been printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and said in our Conventions and local Churches, thousands, I say, who have never had one word uttered in their presence about their pledges, and do not today know where they stand in the matter. I think it but fair and square and honest for us to give all who have pledged a chance to pay up, and give an opportunity of meeting their obligations.

This we can do by letting them know just when they pledged, how much they pledged, how much they have paid and how much they are yet due. All of this can be easily done if those who have the information will give it to those who are concerned or who should be concerned.

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN, told us what we should do as ministers and as laymen, and what would be the result to our Church and the kingdom if we neglected this so-great matter. Brethren and beloved, during March and April let us do everything in our power to keep Men and Millions in the minds of the people, that they may have an opportunity of meeting their obligations and squaring their accounts, if they so desire.

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Collections to February 1st, $111,739.25. We need to collect $101,826 during February, March and April to make 40 per cent by May, 1924. Suffolk's quota was $49,450, and subscription $50,604, of which she has paid $24,356.62. She only lacks $460 of paying one-half of her quota. She subscribed $18,950 to special mission fund, and $56,600 to standardization fund. Many of her members feel that she has permitted local expansion and work to suffer on account of loyalty to and sacrifice for denominational interest and program. Unless many other Churches are willing to make sacrifices for denominational interests, I am of the opinion that Suffolk's denominational ardor will be chilled to a large extent.

Waverly's quota was $7,550, and subscription $7,718, of which she has paid $4,466, being over 59 per cent of her quota.

Wakefield transfered to the 40 per cent class of quota. Franklin, with $600 collections for January, and Holy Neck with $742 are both headed for the 40 per cent class of quota by May, 1924.

Mt. Auburn's quota was $5,400, and subscription $5,715, of which she has paid $2,578 and lacks only $122 of paying 50 per cent of her quota. Other Churches are increasing collections, but I have not the data in Richmond.

The way is open for every Church to enter the 40 per cent class of quota by May 1, 1924. Several have gone 100 per cent, and several will reach 50 per cent or more by that time. Where will your Church stand when the report is made up? You and the pastor will have to answer.

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

We organized our first Christian Endeavor Society Sunday night, February 17th. The work was entirely new to the people here at Elk Spur, yet it was a very good meeting. Miss Mary Lee Meredith, one of our members and a very prospective person for leadership in the Christian work here in the future, called this first meeting. She opened the meeting with a song, followed by Scripture reading. Then Miss Morey prayed a wonderful prayer, asking God's blessing upon the work in the future. Then Miss Mary Lee Meredith read a splendid article from the Moody Monthly, bearing very definitely on the topic. After this, different ones that had been handed topics on the subject gave very interesting talks.

Before the close of the meeting, it was fully organized, with the following officers: Miss Mary Lee Meredith, president; Mrs. Sorrell, vice-president; Oscar Edwards, a very fine young man, secretary, with Guy Guynn, also a very fine young man, to assist him in any way he might. Miss Rose Meredith and Mr. C. Strickland were appointed permanently to lead the music for this term. They are both well qualified for their place, and we are all very glad to have them assume this responsibility.

The goodly number of about thirty, regardless of the rainy evening, said the meeting was one well worth while, and an organization that they felt like would be worth much to the young people in the future had been formed.

If there are any people that have any literature that they have no particular use for on C. E. work, we will assure you that our young people will be very glad to receive it, as the work is entirely new to them. You may send it to either the president, vice-president or secretary.

Our work is going real well. Should nothing prevent, I will tell you something of our Sunday School work real soon.

Fancy Gap, Va. M. T. SORRELL.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION FINANCES.

Since a plan was lodged in the Convention during the extra session, May, 1923, by Dr. W. W. Staley, I think it was, looking to the taking care of the financial needs of Church enterprises fostered by the Convention, and since that proposed plan will likely be brought before the approaching regular session of the Convention for decisive action, I am of opinion that the discussion of the budget system, which the editor is urging pre-Convention discussion of, will tend to cloud the issue. It appears to me that the budget system for financing either secular or sacred enterprises has much to commend it, but more to commend it for the former than for the latter, because in secular or civic enterprises the system is backed by the force of law. Collections are made by the power of law, operating through the sheriff and police. In sacred enterprises, Church interests, the force of appeal is the principal dependence for collecting revenue. The principle of appeal is of higher power, possibly, at its best, but it is seldom that human instrumentality is equal to the opportunity here in the field of collecting revenue. In both cases the efficiency of the method comes from contributions of every citizen—every member.

Furthermore, it appears that the Convention has already a very good budget system in operation, manipulated with a minimum of either friction or expense. Personal observation, and also echoes from the opinions of Church financial experts as given at the North American Missionary Conference held recently at Atlantic City, N. J., force me to the conclusion that the value of the budget system in Church financing may easily be overestimated. It is easy to overload its carrying power. Hence, it is likely to plunge the Church into debt, and possibly into hopeless debt. Any banker of experience will tell you how undesirable an asset the average Church debt is.

However, it is evident that financial provision must be made to take care of the Convention enterprises as soon as the period of Men and Millions subscriptions shall have elapsed. Let the Dr. Staley idea in the matter be thoroughly thought through first of all.

Elon College, N. C. W. P. LAWRENCE.

SANFORD CHURCH DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Sunday, February 11th, about 12:30 o'clock, the fire alarm sounded, and our people were shocked and sorrow-stricken when the news rapidly spread that the Christian Church was on fire. In a few minutes, hundreds of people came on the scene and saw go up in flames that which meant so much to our people and this portion of our town.

The origin of the fire is not known, but indications are that it started in the furnace room.

The loss wos not complete, as all the Sunday School rooms except one were in the basement, which was not greatly injured by fire, but the damage caused by water and the rain, which continued until Tuesday evening, was considerable. Insurance was carried in the amount of $3,000, but it is certain that this does not nearly cover the loss.

Just last year the Church had been enlarged, twelve Sunday School rooms being added. Twelve feet were also added in front, which, with the addition of a balcony, increased the seating capacity about 100.

On Wednesday evening after the fire, the membership assembled on call of the pastor to discuss plans for rebuilding. The response was encouraging, almost every resident family of our membership being represented. The sentiment for rebuilding was unanimous. Pledges were given to the amount of $1,500. This was most gratifying, considering the fact that our people are not wealthy and had so recently given, many of them, to the point of real sacrifice.

While no general solicitation outside our membership will be made, many of our friends here have expressed their sympathy, and several donations have been received.

We realize that every Church has its burdens, but if any member of THE SUN family feels it in his or her heart to make a contribution to us in this our time of need, it will be gratefully received. We at least crave an interest in your prayers, that our Master may give us unwavering faith, stout hearts and strong hands, that we may go forward and rebuild to His glory and to the advancement of His kingdom.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

QUARTERLY REPORT.

The following is the quarterly report of the treasurer of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, ending January 31, 1924:

Women's Societies.

Burlington	$228.58
Danville	6.25
Durham	38.55
Elon College	42.50
Graham	10.00
Greensboro	13.00
Henderson	5.00
Hines Chapel	30.00
Liberty, Vance	10.00
Mt. Auburn	12.40
Monticello	4.20
Pleasant Hill	6.49
Raleigh	26.30
Ramseur	8.40
Reidsville	12.55
Sanford	15.00
Wade Chapel	7.80
		$ 477.02

Young People's Societies.

Burlington	$ 26.58
Shallow Well	3.00
		29.58

Willing Workers.

Burlington	$ 2.00
Mt. Auburn	6.00
		8.00

Cradle Roll.

Durham	$ 9.33
Mt. Auburn	1.10
		10.43
Total		$ 525.03

MRS. W. R. SELLARS,
Burlington, N. C. Treasurer.

RICHMOND NOTES.

Mrs. Howard Hoge, president of the Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union, gave a splendid address last Sunday night.

The Ladies Aid Society held an interesting meeting at the home of Miss Della Hamilton, February 14th. Plans were adopted for the raising of funds for the society.

The Young People's Missionary Society had an interesting and enjoyable meeting at the home of Mrs. Wm. Wilson, 21 South Morris Street, Monday evening, February 11th.

Congratulations are due the Intermediate Sunday School Class, taught by Miss Virgie Beale, which had a 100 per cent attendance last quarter.

The Young Ladies' Bible Class, taught by Mrs. W. F. Holmes, had a very successful and enjoyable box party at the parsonage on February 8th. A neat sum for class use was realized.

The Christian Annual, published at Dayton, Ohio, and also the Herald of Gospel Liberty of February 7th, carry cuts and write-ups of our Church.

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, spent a few hours in the city January 28th.

Our Sunday School report for the past quarter shows an average attendance of 56 per cent. Let us increase that this quarter.

We have had recent visitors from Roanoke, Franklin, Hopewell, Raleigh, Rocky Mount, and Ohio, Kentucky and New Jersey. We had visitors last Sunday from Henderson, N. C., and Nathalie, Va.

Sunday—A day of rest, a day of worship, a day of relaxation from business, a day of soul-renewing, a day to be kept holy.

Every Church member owns a partnership in his Church. The Church succeeds or fails in proportion to his activity as a partner.

What do you think of organizing a Christian Endeavor Society?

Five ways to help the Church—(1) Talk for it, (2) work for it, (3) pray for it, (4) support it, (5) attend it.

May the Lord bring to you a rich blessing in this service. May you be drawn closer to Him and may there come new strength to your life, new joy to your soul, and new aspirations for high and holy living.

The Wellons Brotherhood Bible Class had an interesting business meeting February 1st, followed by a social hour and luncheon which was participated in by the ladies. There was a good attendance, and it was a most enjoyable occasion.

We are grateful for the growth and development of our Church, but if we will pray more, work more, and come oftener, it will grow faster.

The Sunday School attendance last Sunday was the largest in our history.

Note the change of date for the Young People's Missionary Society meeting. A full attendance is desired. This society has been doing commendable work. Miss Susie Collins is president; Miss Velma Newman, vice-president; Miss Della Hamilton, secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. W. T. Walters, superintendent.

We hope you can attend the prayer meeting and teacher training class Wednesday night.

The pastor and his wife had a most enjoyable outing as guests of the State Senate February 2nd. The trip included Lee Hall, Camp Eustis, Yorktown, Navy Mine Base, Carter's Grove and Williamsburg, with speech-making at most every point, an oyster roast at Carter's Grove, and a dinner at William and Mary College.

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE AND RESPECT.

We, the Ministerial Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in session today, are deeply grieved to record the death of our brother, Rev. H. H. Butler, of Suffolk, Va., which took place at his home Saturday, February 16, 1924.

To a few of us he has been a life-long friend and brother, and to those who have known him more casually, he has been an inspiration. How mute we stand in the presence of his death as we look upon the silence it has wrought! We can only bare and bow our heads in humble submission to the divine will, and creep with our broken, stammering utterances under the shelter of some great word which God has spoken through which we see the outstretching and overshadowing eternal arms.

We believe that his rich sermons, his loving ministries and his devout life in the Churches of his charge and the homes of his parishes have been a stream of influence to all—the young and the old—with whom he came in touch, and an inspiration to salvation and Christian service. Thus, it gives us pleasure to record his inspiring brotherliness and fatherly counsel in our associations and to say that his memory is saintly to us. He will be greatly missed and deeply mourned. He is gone from us, but his going is a vestibule of glory, for his spirit, in the sweet memory of him will abide while his soul goes on to God in heaven. His departure is a shade with a golden haze of heaven's light meeting the earth and mingling with its sorrows.

We extend our deepest sympathies to the bereaved ones in their loss, and we rejoice with them in his gain. It seems that God has touched him and he slept. He died as he had lived, modestly, peacefully, with Christ's deep triumph in his heart. We thank God with them for the legacy of such a beautiful life.

Behold, dear friends, this is the joy of His way, and out of the dust shall others spring (Job 8:19). Though He cause grief, yet will he have compassion (Lam. 3:32). Therefore, give not your heart to sorrow (Eccl. 38:20), for who knoweth not, in all these, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this (Job 12:9); if so, weep more sweetly for him, because he has found rest (Eccl. 22:11); and be comforted for him, as his spirit is departed from him (Eccl. 38:23), because he has gone to his everlasting home, where the eternal God is his dwelling-place and underneath are the everlasting arms. There his eyes shall see the King in his beauty and behold the land that reaches afar (Isa. 33:17); and there he shall obtain gladness and joy (Isa. 51:11), for He will lead him by the springs of waters (49:10) and his soul shall be as a fruitful garden (Jer. 31:12).

"Life's race well run,
Life's work well done,
Life's crown well won,
Now comes rest."

H. E. ROUNTREE,
For the Association.

Here is a Piece of News.

Thirty-five hundred students in leading white colleges of South Carolina were recently given a new conception of the possibilities of the colored race through a tour of the State by Prof. George Carver, the famous Tuskegee scientist, under the auspices of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, taking along a most interesting exhibit of his peanut, sweet potato, pecan, and clay products. Professor Carvey addressed the students of six big schools, and everywhere was cordially received. He made a profound impression. In every city visited he appeared also at the colored high school with a message of inspiration for the pupils. While the tour had no small measure of scientific value, its most important result was the deeper appreciation of the possibilities of his race which Professor Carver inspired in all his hearers. This result was most apparent, and was repeatedly commented on by observers.—Ex.

The Southern Churchman announces the death of Rev. Edward L. Goodwin, D. D., the consulting editor of that paper. Dr. Goodwin was a man of much ability and a staunch defender of the truth as he saw it, and his brethren are not slow to accord to him words of praise for his loyalty and faithfulness.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 9, 1924.

Topic: "The Reign of Saul."

Lesson: 1 Sam. 8:15.

Golden Text: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."—1 Sam. 15:22.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 139:1-12.

Saul was the young man who went to seek his father's asses and found a kingdom. According to one account, he was chosen king by the Lord and anointed to that high office by Samuel, with the approval of high heaven. According to another account, the desire of the people for a king was an act of rebellion against God. In either case, the fact remains that Saul was the first king of Israel.

This young man presents an interesting character study. He was a strange combination of good and bad qualities. As far as physical qualities were concerned, Saul was a real man. He stood "from his shoulders and upward, higher than any of his people." And he was "a choice young man, and a goodly; there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he." He was kingly so far as appearance and bearing were concerned. Nor did he lack some of the finer moral qualities of manhood. He was thoughtful—he suggested that his father might be concerned about him after too long an absence; he was obedient to human authority as a young man; he was modest—he felt his unworthiness to be king, and even hid himself in the baggage; he was courageous against the enemies of Israel; he was even large-hearted—he refused to punish "the sons of Belial" who "despised him as king." Then, too, we must keep in mind the fact that it was a very difficult task to which Saul was called. To rally men who had become demoralized by strong foreign enemies, to unite men of independent tribes into a central government, to establish a kingdom—these things demanded more than ordinary ability. Unfortunately, Saul did not have this ability. He was untactful, and lacked executive ability, and he would have failed in any case without these qualities.

But his failure was hastened and made inevitable by certain blemishes and defects of character. He was self-willed, he became proud when he rose to a position of power, he was extremely envious and jealous, and worst of all, he was lacking in inner, and hence vital, piety. Saul thought that it mattered little, so long as one kept up the outward form of religion. Like many other men and women of all time, he lacked the foundation stone of character—inner, vital religion. And because of this fact, Saul goes down into history as one of the most tragic and pathetic figures of all time.

The lesson as printed (I want to remind my readers again and again that they must, must, must read the entire lessons as given if they are to make an intelligent presentation of the lesson that is printed) concerns Saul's rejection as king. The main points of the events that lead up to the lesson are more or less familiar. How the Israelites were commanded to attack the Amalekites and destroy them utterly; how they spared the king and the best of the flocks, "and all that was good"; how Samuel came to see Saul and how Saul met him in such a gracious way; how Saul declared that he had performed the commandment of the Lord; how the sheep blabbed out the truth while the lie was on his lips; and how Samuel, by a striking act, declared that the kingdom would be rent from him. From this time on, although Saul was the king to all external appearances, he lacked that inner sanction which really made him king, and the days of his kingdom were numbered. "And Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death; and the Lord repented that He had made Saul king over Israel."

Thoughts From the Lesson.

1. Size does not make a man.
2. Kings—and all in authority—derive their power from God.
3. God often calls men from the most common-place tasks of life.
4. Some of life's greatest experiences come when alone or when "two's a company."—1 Sam. 9:27.
5. A test of a man's character is to be found in his spirit after he has risen in the world.
6. One with God is a majority.
7. Better to break a foolish vow than to keep it.
8. "Be sure your sins will find you out."
9. Men are willing to take credit and praise to themselves; they lay the blame on others.
10. The choice of a leader involves far too much to be undertaken without divine guidance.
11. "The man who is good at excuses, is usually good at nothing else."—Franklin.
12. If a man fears God, he need not fear other men.
13. No amount of sacrifice or other service, however worthy, can take the place of obedience to duty.
14. God exalts men to places of distinction; but He is no respecter of persons, and if "they cannot deliver the goods" they are deposed.
15. Obedience to the voice of God is man's supreme business.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

March 9, 1924.

Topic: "Dangers of Trifling with Life, God, and the Soul."

Lesson: Acts 26:28-32; Luke 12:15-21.

To trifle means "to act or talk without seriousness," or "to waste to no good purpose." It seems strange to use a word that means either the one or the other in connection with such sacred things as life, God and the soul. It hardly seems possible that any one should "act or talk without seriousness" in regard to God, or would "waste to no good purpose" his life or his soul. And yet, alas! it is all too true. The first lesson (Acts 26:28-32) tells of a man—a king by name, but not in character—who was facing the supreme question of life—that of his attitude toward God as revealed in Christ—and who lightly turned it aside with a flippant remark. The second lesson (Luke 12:15-21) tells of a man who trifled with his life, his God, and his soul. It seems that it is no mistake, after all, to use the word "trifle" with the great words life, God, and the soul.

The fact of the matter is, that there are many, many people who, like Agrippa and the rich man, trifle with some of the greatest facts in life. They "act and talk without seriousness" in regard to life, God and the soul, and they "waste to no good purpose" their lives and their souls. There are a number of these people in your own community. And the tragedy of it all is that the things that have crowded the really worth-while things out of their lives are but trifles themselves. Very few, if indeed any, men ever deliberately set out to go to hell. They do not willfully slight the real values of life. They are simply indifferent to them, and trifle with them. But the result is the same as if they had deliberately rejected them.

Take, for instance, life. Jesus Christ first fully realized its infinite possibilities, and thus revealed to us its glory. Ever since He came, life has taken on new significance. We have seen that it has infinite possibilities; that it is good; that it has a meaning which can be interpreted only in the light of a divine plan; that it is a measure to be filled and not a cup to be drained; that it consisteth not in the things which a man possesseth, but in the finer qualities of mind and heart; that its glory is in service; and that its end is perfection. And from time to time there have been given to the world men and women who have embodied to more or less degree the real values of life. And yet think of the people you know—many of them Christian Endeavorers—who are trifling with life. They have no ambition; they are not trying to develop their capacities; they feel no obligations to service; they spend their lives in a useless quest of pleasure; and they waste their time and talents on things that do not count. There are young men who spend enough time on the street corners or in questionable places to secure a liberal education. There are young men and women who have educational advantages, and yet who shamelessly fritter them away. There are Christian Endeavorers who are not making any serious effort to secure training through Christian Endeavor for active Christian service. There are a hundred and one ways in which I could show how people are trifling with life, one of God's really great gifts.

And they trifle with God Himself. Some folks never call upon Him except in an oath. And even those who are more cultured and reverent trifle with Him. They have been taught that God loves them, and they proceed to do as they please, justifying themselves on the grounds that God, who loves them, will forgive them. They believe that God has a will for the world, but they do not consider the fact that He has a will for their lives. They feel sure that God will take care of them in the hour of death, but they do not consider that He has a claim to them during life. They believe He is patient, but they forget that He is holy and that He cannot be avoided at last. And thus they trifle with Him.

It is the same way with the soul. Its nature is spiritual. Like all living things, it is subject to the laws of life and growth. It cannot live by bread alone. And yet people who would not think of missing a single meal will go for days without any spiritual food. They provide no spiritual food for the soul in the form of devotional reading, prayer, meditation, worship, service, and the soul becomes dwarfed, starved, almost dead. They trifle with its warnings; they stifle its longings; they deaden its sensitiveness; they neglect it so long that eventually they fix their eternal destiny.

Hear, then, my parable. Trifle not with the things of eternal value. Take heed unto yourselves. Think on these things. For in so doing, thou shalt save both thyself and others.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES FOR MARCH.

A series of Sunday School Institutes will be held in the three North Carolina Conferences during the month of March, beginning the 8th and continuing throughout the month. Dr. W. P. Fletcher, of Toronto, Ont., field secretary of the adult division of the Board of Christian Education and a specialist in rural Church problems, will be present. The board feels that our North Carolina people are especially fortunate in having Dr. Fletcher, as he knows the work, is practical, and is an inspiration to all who hear him; and we have arranged the institutes in order that as many of our people as possible can hear him.

There are several Churches who haven't written definitely about holding the institute in their Churches, but the following have been arranged: Mt. Bethel, Wednesday, March 12th; Apple's Chapel, Thursday, 13th; Graham, Sunday, 16th; Wake Chapel, Thursday, 20th; Pope's Chapel, Friday, 21st; Mt. Auburn, Sunday, 23rd; Shallow Well, Tuesday, 25th; Parks Cross Roads, Thursday, 27th; Pleasant Grove, or Ingram, Sunday, 30th.

Your part for these institutes: Attend the institute held in the Church nearest you, bring your own light lunch, and bring a note-book and pencil and all the questions which you want Dr. Fletcher to answer.

The program will consist of songs, devotional, addresses on the various phases of Christian education, information about Chautauqua, a children's hour, and open discussion.

The institutes will be conducted by Dr. Fletcher, local help, and the field secretary of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Convention.

Letters about the institutes will be sent to the Sunday School superintendents when the arrangements have been definitely made.

PATTIE COGHILL.

CONFERENCE DIRECTORS OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION APPOINTED.

The Department of Christian Education of the Christian Church provides for the appointment of regional directors of Christian education for each Convention. Rev. James H. Lightbourne, pastor of the Holland, Va., Church, was appointed regional director of the Southern Christian Convention. Mr. Lightbourne is especially good in this capacity, and is doing a great work. He is one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the Chautauqua and School of Methods held annually at Elon.

The Department of Christian Education also provides for Conference directors of Christian education, and after careful consideration the following have been appointed for the Southern Conferences:

Eastern Virginia—Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va.

Valley of Virginia—Mr. R. A. Larrick, Winchester, Va.

Eastern North Carolina—Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C.

Western North Carolina—Mr. C. A. Walker, Burlington, N. C.

Carolina-Virginia—Rev. S. M. Lynam, Elon College, N. C.

Alabama and the Alabama and Georgia—Mr. J. W. Payne, Wedowee, Ala.

The duties of these Conference directors are: Arrange with Churches for the visit of field secretaries, secure the appointment of a director of Christian education in each local Church, visit Churches and present the program and plans of Christian education, have charge of the literature table during Conference session, promote attendance at the Chautauqua, write for the Church periodicals, collect statistics, work for local institutes of Christian education.

You know which one of these is your Conference director. Call on him for suggestions and help. He is at your service, and is willing and glad to help you.

PATTIE COGHILL.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Hendersonville Endeavorers carried out a very successful "pasting party" recently. For a week, the members were busy collecting magazines, old post-cards, and pictures of all kinds. These were carried to the Church house, and soon the two long tables were surrounded by busy workers cutting out pictures and making scrap-books. Candy and refreshments were made as a part of the party. Five boxes of fine scrap-books resulted from the party, and these were sent to the foreign field.

A new society was organized at Rugby, N. C., by the pastor of Hendersonville and a number of the Endeavorers there. The new society was begun with eighteen members, and is doing much to interest the young people of that community.

The Greensboro Christian Endeavor Societies have received a letter of appreciation from the inmates of the Guilford County work camp for the splendid work done there recently. The prisoners are hearty in their thanks to the Greensboro Endeavorers for their efforts to make the road camp a place of reform instead of a criminal school. Greensboro is to be commended on the fine work they have done along this line during the past months.

The Charlotte Endeavorers report a great meeting for their county work in the Westminster Presbyterian Church on February 15th, Dr. A. E. Cory and Charles F. Evans addressing the Endeavorers. The Steel Creek Society won first firize for largest attendance, and the Second Presbyterian Church Society first prize for largest percentage of members present—300 attended the meeting in all.

At this writing, North Carolina is placed third in the C. E. world and Dixie Endeavor race. North Carolina and Virginia are racing for second place, with only a few more subscriptions for each to secure to reach their goal.

The junior superintendent reports three new junior sections for the past month, one in a colored Church.

Report of the financial secretary, Stanley B. Vandersall, gives North Carolina a credit of $41 on their $300 quota in the nation-wide financial campaign.

C. M. CANNON.

Get a subscriber for THE SUN, and do it as quickly as you can.

IMPERFECT INSTRUMENTS.

"As I look back over my life," said a prominent religious teacher and evangelist, who has been instrumental in bringing thousands to a knowledge of the better way as it is in Christ, "the thing that impresses me more and more every day is that even God Himself should have been able to do so much with so little."

"I had very little school," he continued; "I never was inside a college except as a visitor. I had no opportunity even for home study. I was extremely diffident and self-conscious when before an audience, and the first time I ever tried to pray in public I broke down completely. Speaking with all reverence, when I think of the miracle of my own life, I never find it hard to believe in any miracle recorded in the Bible."

Testimony of this kind is not to be undervalued. All through history, as man comes with reverent and thoughtful mind to know God, he finds himself impressed again and again by the striking disproportion between the instruments God uses and the nature of the results He accomplishes through them. There is a giant to be struck down—a pebble will do it. There is an army to be surprised—a lamp and a pitcher will be enough. There is an imperiled people to be saved—God will accomplish it through the heroism of a frail young woman and the apparently accidental selection of a passage from the chronicles of the kingdom, read by chance in the presence of the king.

It is not strange that men of the world, looking at Christian agencies, have sometimes laughed at them. They seemed so utterly inadequate in comparison to the task to be accomplished. Perhaps there are Christians today who can remember a time when they themselves laughed at the spectacle of some acquaintance walking along the street with a Bible under his arm. Perhaps they can even remember a time when they scoffed at the intimation that there might be power in prayer. But they know better now. They have found it God's delight to choose foolish things with which to pull down things that are strong. Search the divine history through, and you will find that God has ever worked thus—"base things of the world, and the things that are despised did God choose . . . that He might bring to naught the things that are."

In the presence of such knowledge, what room is there left for any of us to minimize or undervalue the equipment we have, however commonplace it may seem in comparison with others? Shall we question the orders of our Commander, or find fault with the weapons He has seen fit to put into our hands? When He says, "Whosoever shall seek to gain his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it," shall we not take the Master at His word? When Jesus says that His followers "ought always to pray, and not to faint," shall we not believe His advice to be of the best? However disproportionate or ridiculous God's ways may seem in the eyes of man, every real child of God who has honestly tested them for himself has come through his experience with quickened faith and zeal and with a testimony that no amount of ridicule or contempt upon the part of the world can shake.—Presbyterian Standard.

Fifteen small words comprise more than 25 per cent of all the words in an average book or novel, according to Professor Carl C. Brigham, of the psychology department of Princeton University.

More than $3,000,000,000 worth of milk is produced in a single year in the United States.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

OUR MOTTO FOR THE WEEK.

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. Let all that ye do be done in love."—1 Cor. 16:13-14.

"Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."—Matt. 26:41.

Job said that life is much like a weaver's shuttle. The weaver sits at his machine, with its shuttle flying back and forth with amazing velocity, threading under and over and between; thus the pattern develops and the whole is complete material for a beautiful garment. Sometimes the work is spoiled when a stitch is dropped, and in time it all comes to pieces.

Life is filled with swift, passing days, and there is much of it which seems empty and meaningless; nevertheless, everything in it contributes to our character. Every little thing, however meaningless, is being woven in and, like the pattern, our character is being made; our desires are being woven into the permanent design. This too is fraught with the same dangers of the "drop stitch." Thus Jesus said: "Watch," lest ye do something wrong. Memorize the following words:

"One stitch dropped as the weaver drove
His nimble shuttle to and fro,
In and out, beneath, above,
Till the pattern seemed to bud and glow
As if the fairies had been helping then.

"And the one stitch dropped pulled the next stitch out,
And a weak place grew in the fabric stout,
And the perfect pattern was marred for aye,
By the one small stitch that was dropped that day."

Prayer.—Dear Father, as we begin the new week, strengthen our spirits to do Thy will and to be so watchful that no mistake may spoil our character. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PARENTS' EXAMPLE TO CHILDREN.

What instruction is given to parents in regards to training their children? "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

Home disputes make disagreeable children.

Perhaps as a parent, you are worrying much about your children?

They cause many disputes between you and the other parent.

Hearing these disagreements, the children imbibe the spirit of the home.

One says it is right and the other says that it is wrong to do a certain thing, while the child comes to the conclusion that neither is right, and in consequence does just as he or she pleases.

Are there frequent quarrels in your home?

Then you must expect that your children will carry the spirit of contention into their school and social life, alienating their playmates.

To an extent, they may learn to curb it in public, through policy, but later in life it will crop out, and they will revert to it.

Conditions were not ideal in their own home life as children, and so they have no ideals to guide them in after life.

If everything had been sweet and pleasant and helpful in their home life, there would be no temptation to quarrel and use harsh words later.

If you have several children, do you see how many homes you may be able to influence by using tact and self-control now?—Virginian-Pilot.

It is true that children imitate their parents. In this, God has not left us without a promise, that, if we set the Christian example, they will rise up to call us blessed.—Prov. 31:28.

Prayer.—Our Father, as parents, we pray for the fullness of Thy spirit, that in everything we do and say we may set an example seasoned with salt, and there shall be nothing less than the blessed in our children. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHEN WILL THE KINGDOM COME.

"The kingdom of God is within you."—Luke 17:21.

When will righteousness, joy and peace come? When it is established in your heart. It is up to you. When will God control the lives of men? When He controls you. It is up to you. When will all men be brothers? When will you be a brother to humanity? It is up to you. When will war cease? When it ceases in the heart of you. It is up to you. When you, and we, and all of us, humanity in fact does this, then the kingdom will come.

Thus we are face to face with the fact that we are responsible for the coming or the delaying of the kingdom. The world is to be made good by the goodness of men, and when God's goodness comes in them, then is the kingdom come. The world is to be made moral by morality, and when man lets Christ in his morals, the kingdom is come. The world is to be made spiritual by spirituality, and it is to be made Christian by Christianity. Christ would say, "Don't wait for some great day to come when all this will suddenly take place. It will not come that way. It is to come like the leaven in the meal. To the young lawyer, who would be good, he said: "Sell all that thou hast and follow me." And this is the appeal to humanity. How about all this in your life?

Prayer.—Our Father, grant, we beseech Thee, that we may place our trust implicitly in the shadow of Thy wings. Bestow upon us Thy spirit and Thy power to overcome evil and carry a life of good along for the sake of the kingdom. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE GOD OF HOPE.

"The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing."—Rom. 15:13.

Hope is the chiefest of blessings. It is the parent of endeavor. It is the thrill of the huntsman and fisherman, the lure of the prospector, the motif of the business man, the happiness of the farmer. Were it not for hope, the most of us would fail. It is basic for success. Who gives this to us? Our Father is the God of hope.

This truth is never made more real than when we are visiting the sick, the afflicted and those in prison. There, each and every one, whatever his malady may be and however serious it is, possesses a hope that gives buoyancy and fortitude, and often the only basis for recovery. It is our Father who is the God of this hope. Were it not for Him, the hardships, miseries, sickness and misfortunes of this world would be unendurable. But its promises are better than fortunes. It keeps the mind awake, bestows peace, good humor, makes pain easy and labor pleasant. No matter how desperate, it sees the light beyond, cheers the soul, prompts the heart and mind, effuses strength and courage and overcomes difficulties. How blessed is the God of Hope!

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to be worthy of Thy goodness, which has ever been with us. Keep us today, and each day, in such strong faith that goodness will prevail, and Thy life and heaven's hope may overcome the world. We dedicate thus our lives to Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

IMMORTALITY.

"This mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15:53.

We often hear and use the word "immortal." It sounds good and slips easily when we use it. What does it mean? It means that which is incorruptible, or that which is beyond the possibility of decay, perishing or dying (1 Tim. 1:17); and it is used for the consummate glory and eternal blessedness of the saints in heaven (Rom. 2:17). This is the hope of God's children.

Mortal and immortal life bear relations to one another, as the life that now is to that which is to come; mortal referring to the flesh in this life, and immortal referring to the state of existence hereafter. Therefore, we may say that "mortal" is incompleteness, and "immortal" is eternal completeness. From the temporary incomplete life which we are now living evolves the eternal character complete—perfection. This is the hope of our life.

If life were just a circle, it would be awful. But it isn't. We are looking ahead for something better. A young lady looking for flowers believes there are some better ones further on ahead. The young man enters into business life believing that just ahead of him is his fortune; he reaches middle age still hoping that in the evening-time his ideals will be reached; and he comes to old age leaning on his staff looking from time into eternity expecting that there he will reach perfection. And, in Christ he will. This is all being said to emphasize the fact that this life is the beginning of immortality, and beyond is perfection. Following Christ wins it.

Prayer.—(Lord's Prayer in unison.)

SATURDAY.

HEART IN RELIGION.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. 4:23.

Saturday is usually a busy day, but it is the day that approaches the day of the Lord, which we are to keep holy. Let's get ready for it.

Cain and Abel were of the same family, had the same teachings and training; but they were opposite characters. When they went to God, one was accepted and the other was not. Why? It was the difference between heart and no heart. Abel's coming to God was a prayerful, devout religious act. Cain's was mere formal duty. Abel offered himself. Cain offered a second-rate gift. It has been the instinct of the ages, in coming to God, to bring gifts to secure divine favor. We do it still. But our Lord changed the old Jewish idea by putting heart in the gift. He made it plain that to obey is better than sacrifice, and that the supreme call of God to man was for the heart. To the woman at the well, He made it plain that they who would worship Him must do so in spirit and in truth. He did not cease to preach to all that "the Lord looketh on the heart." Let us in all our devotions remember that religion is not sentiment, but it is the content of sentiment; it is not an act, but it expresses itself in acts. It is devotion of a man's self to God to keep himself unspotted from the world. Think about this and take time today to prepare for heart devotion in the Sabbath observance tomorrow.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee to send the Holy Spirit into our hearts and build us up in faith and trust and love. May we grow in grace and devotion, and love for Thy work; and grant unto us our portion among the saints. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

What is the origin of our present Sabbath? During the apostolic age, near the close of the gospels, the earliest record of our present Sabbath, the first day of the week, took place. Saturday is the Jewish Sabbath, and was until the time of our Lord. But when the Lord's resurrection took place, it was on the first day of the week, which was the day after the usual observance. In order to commemorate that event, the apostles began using this day, and it was during this age that it became a recognized festival and was called "The Lord's Day." In this way, it has grown more and more into reverent affection of the Church until it has become a day of religious gatherings and, since the days of Constantine, all courts and secular business are prohibited. Thus it is our weekly Easter.

In all this it does not lose its original demand on our hearts. It is a provision for our benefit that we may be lifted to a true conception of a God-like life, that we may be reminded of and cultivate our spiritual endowment, mission and dependence; that we may be in communion with Him, with the life above and reach our highest spiritual natures.

Prayer.—God help us to spend today in Thy sight and in Thy light, achieving to all He would have us be. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FULLER'S CHAPEL.

On the 11th day of last November, I filled my first appointment at Fuller's Chapel. It was the first time I had the pleasure of visiting this particular community, and I was pleased to find a very nice little country Church and a most attentive congregation. Thus far, the services have been well attended, but we believe that by the united efforts of the members we will be able in the future to greatly increase our numbers.

This Church is richly blessed with a fine band of young people and children who have already in these few months expressed themselves along greater lines of activity. The young people have voted to organize a Christian Endeavor Society, which we believe will be actively at work in a very short time. Three months ago the children formed themselves into a junior congregation of nearly thirty members, who completely filled one corner of the Church and listened attentively each Sunday to their special story. But the young people and children are not the only ones who are wide awake. The "grown-ups" are looking into the future, and many of them are interested in having two services a month in place of the one. We feel that this would bring greater things to pass, and trust thatt his interest may soon be developed into working plans.

The spirit of unity that prevails between Fuller's Chapel and Henderson is most gratifying to their pastor. We frequently find some of the Henderson people worshiping with the Fuller's Chapel congregation, and in turn, members of Fuller's attending service at Henderson.

The regular quarterly Communion service was held last Sunday, and we are pleased to state that the oldest deacon of the Church, Bro. J. F. Coghill, Sr., although very feeble, was able to be present and take part in the service.

We have not as yet been able to do much pastoral work among these good people, but we have been most heartily welcomed in the homes where we have visited. May our labors together be most pleasant and profitable in kingdom service.

A. H. HOOK.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We were happy this week when we made out our report, which will appear in THE SUN, and found that we had reached and passed our second mile-post for this year. Two reached and passed and twenty-five more to reach yet. That is grand. The best we have ever been able to do the first two months in the year. Our Burlington Sunday School came up with a monthly offering for February of $73.07—the best yet! Our Burlington folks cannot be beat. We fully expect this Sunday School to reach a monthly offering of $100 some of these days. This Sunday School started some years ago by giving $5 per month; they have increased it from time to time to the amount above mentioned. I truly hope many of our Sunday Schools will catch the Burlington Sunday School spirit.

Our Orphanage would then be able to do great things in a few more years.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

NEWSPAPER POEMS FOR 1922.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

Dr. Franklyn Pierre Davis, well-known as a critic and lover of poetry, has published four volumes of "The Anthology of Newspaper Verse." The first issue was for 1919, and contained 143 poems, selected from 69 American newspapers, representing 78 authors. The edition for 1920 had 175 poems, from 71 newspapers, by 130 authors. In 1921 there were 149 poems, from 76 newspapers, and 127 authors. The last volume for 1922 contains 148 poems, from 65 newspapers and 99 authors.

Among the newspapers represented in the list of selections we find the Boston Post, the Boston Transcript, the Boston Herald, the Chicago Post, the Chicago tribune, Cincinnati Times-Star, Detroit Free Press, Courier-Journal, Kansas City Star, Memphis Commercial Appeal, Montgomery Advertiser, New York Herald, New York Evening Post, New York Times, New York Sun, Philadelphia Public Ledger, San Francisco Call, Springfield Union, and many others covering the entire country from coast to coast.

The wide range of writers includes Harry Noyes Pratt, Grantland Rice, Julia Glasgow, Clarissa Brooks, Mary Sinton Leitch, Virginian Strait, Marie Tello Phillips, John Kearns, John Cournos, Edith M. Thomas, Orville Leonard and dozens of others.

The "Anthology" for this year contains 125 pages, and sells for $2.50, as usual. To make the compilation, the editor states that he has read over two thousand poems during the year.

Three of the poems appearing in the "Anthology" are from North Carolina writers, and it may be of interest to our readers to reprint these, as they find place in this "Anthology for 1922."

October Roses.

'Neath Southern skies, the summer lingers long;
The gentle after-glow seems loth to die;
The happy birds still thrill the air with song,
And softer radiance tints the autumn sky.

The cooler air, new hope and joy imparts;
With strength renewed, we tread with firmer feet
Each rugged path, and in our thankful hearts
Revives the thought that life is good and sweet.

October roses burst in richer bloom,
And sturdier, more enduring, than in spring;
Upon the bracing air their rich perfume,
With rarer sweetness, lavishly they fling.

Our roses, dear, sweet springtime hopes, are fled;
Too soon they bloomed, perchance, for us to keep;
Their petals, all too frail, are brown and dead,
And buried in our heart's recesses deep.

And parched and desert-like the summer seemed,
No hope, no help, no joy within our sight;
No cool, refreshing spring beyond us gleamed,
No flower to cheer us with its beauty bright.

But the autumn days have brought us clearer skies;
Dead thoughts, dead hopes, dead joys to which we cling
We cast aside, and lifting up our eyes
See sweeter roses bloom than in the spring!

—Minnie Custis Waite.

In "News and Observer," Raleigh, N. C.

The House of Life.

Spacious of hall and many-chambered, wide;
A house of calm, a house of revelry;
Of organ rooms of keenest ecstacy;
Of mirrors cold on walls of selfish pride;

Of luring vistas that were best descried
From eastern clinging, lofty balcony
That gazed on cliffs, and signaled to the sea
Beyond the waters where the vessels ride.

A mocking banquet room with mirthless song,
Wailing a chord of impotent irony
For some fine rage fore'er unsatisfied;
Year after year, through evenings, through the long
Still vigil—till the tapers flickeringly
Whisper: Smiling, at dawn's first gleam he died.

—Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

In Charlotte "Daily Observer."

What Is God?

I watched a little child one day,
A little maid of four,
While sitting with her dolls at play
Upon the nursery floor;
Unconscious all of things untrue,
She told them what she'd heard
Of wicked goblins, fairies too,
Believing every word.
Oh, days that are as fine-wrought gold,
Oh, halcyon days of youth,
In answer to the question old,
I found that God is truth.

I watched the roses bud and bloom
And shed their fragrance sweet,
To banish doubt, dispel the gloom,
And weary travelers greet.
I watched the drooping violet by
The daisy in her pride,
The wondrous trees, the azure sky—
In ecstacy I cried:
"Oh, sky sublime! oh, tree! oh, flower!
Oh, teach me, too, my duty,
And let me feel from hour to hour
That God, indeed, is beauty."

I watched a mother, old and gray,
Bowed down with grief and care
For sons and daughters far away.
She breathed a constant prayer
That they might all some day be brought Back to her arms again—
Those happy boys and girls she sought
To shield from every pain.
Oh, mother-heart, this gift of thine
Was sent from Heaven above.
I know He gave such love divine—
I know that God is love!

—Ellen M. Brooks.

In "News and Observer."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to call from time to eternity, Mrs. Minnie Hobby Atkinson; and

Whereas, we recognize in the death of our beloved friend and sister the loss of a kind, loyal and loving Christian woman, and desiring to express our esteem and high regard for her memory; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the great Creator's will, remembering that our loss on earth has been our sister's gain in heaven.

Second, That the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Elon College Christian Church extend their heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence to the bereaved family and friends.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread upon our society minutes, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. W. C. WICKER,
MRS. W. P. LAWRENCE,
MRS. N. F. BRANNOCK,
Committee.

RIDDLE.

Bro. William H. Riddle was born on June 17, 1852, and died December 13, 1874. He married Miss Ann Wadsworth. To this union were born eleven children, nine of whom are living. He had long been a loyal member of Shallow Well Church. Quiet and modest of manner, kind and helpful, he won many true friends, and these, with the widow, children and relatives, mourn his departure. But they have the blessed hope of meeting him again. The funeral services were conducted from Shallow Well Church, in the presence of many friends. Rev. B. E. Stanfield assisted the writer. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

COFIELD.

Mrs. Ethel Cofield, wife of S. M. Cofield and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Peek, was born March 1, 1901, and departed this life February 4, 1924.

She was married to S. M. Cofield on November 7, 1920, and to this union were born two children. Very early in life, Sister Cofield imbibed the Christian religion, and at the early age of twelve united with the Christian Church at Dingles Chapel, where she remained a member for several years, until her father moved to New Harmony community, and then she, with the rest of her father's family, placed their membership with New Harmony Christian Church, where it remained until her death. She and her husband had moved to DeKalb County and were living there at the time of her death.

She leaves a husband, two small children, mother (her father died about one year ago), four brothers, two sisters and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

We can only say a noble, consecrated Christian mother has gone home. Earth has been made poorer and heaven richer by her going.

By her friend and former pastor,
J. H. HUGHES.

Lineville, Ala.

WHY YOU NEED IRON—

To make you strong and "brainy" and put the power into your blood to overcome disease germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—It is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact almost any disease or disease germs is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance and the greater energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increased the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, rundown folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

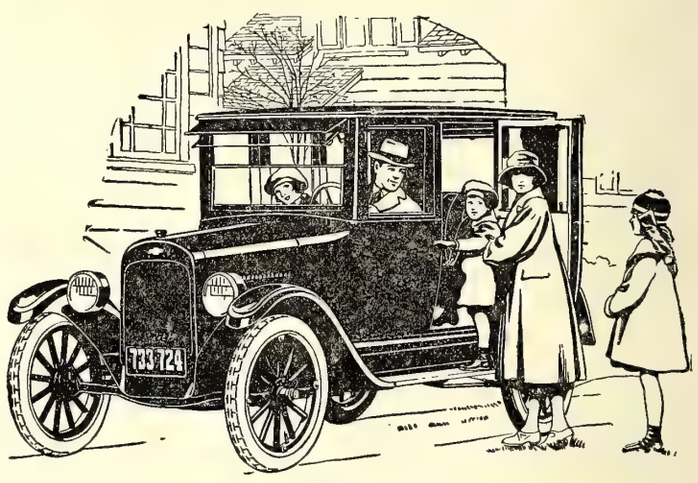
Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

NUXATED IRON
for Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA



5-Passenger Sedan $795 f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

The All-Year Car for Every Family

Chevrolet is leading in the great shift of public demand to closed cars because this company has the world's largest facilities for manufacturing high-grade closed bodies and is therefore able to offer sedans, coupés and sedanettes at prices within easy reach of the average American family.

Six large body plants adjoining Chevrolet assembly plants enable us to make prompt deliveries of the much wanted closed cars.

As soon as you realize that your transportation requirements demand the year 'round, all weather closed car, see Chevrolet first and learn how fully we can meet your requirements at the lowest cost obtainable in a modern, high-grade closed automobile.

for Economical Transportation
CHEVROLET

Prices f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Superior Roadster	$490
Superior Touring	$495
Superior Coupe	$640
Superior Sedan	$795
Superior Commercial Chassis	$395
Superior Delivery	$495
Utility Express Chassis	$550

Chevrolet Motor Company
Division of General Motors Corporation
Detroit, Michigan

FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.
Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

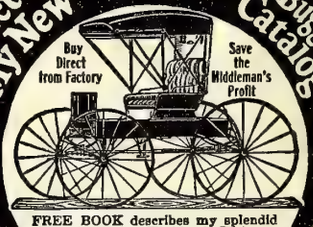
SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

THROAT IRRITATIONS

Throat irritations quickly disappear when you take Brown's Bronchial Troches. A dependable remedy—not a candy. Used for more than 70 years by singers and public speakers. Promptly relieves hoarseness, loss of voice, coughin, At all druggists. JOHN I. BROWN, & SON, Boston, Mass.
General Sales Agents:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York..London..Toronto

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHE
COUGH and VOICE LOZENGES
IN 5 SIZE PACKAGES

Get My New Buggy Catalog



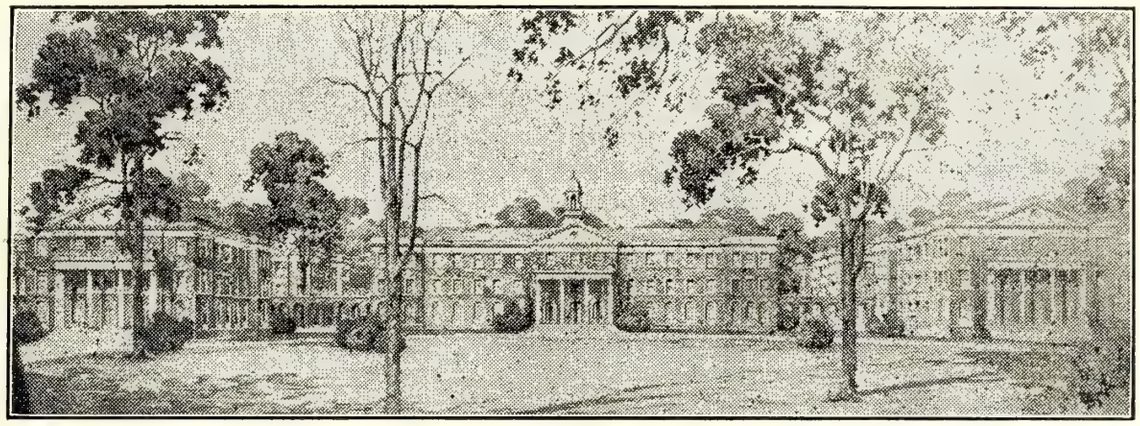
FREE BOOK describes my splendid Full Wrought Highland Hickory Buggies. Sold on 60 days Road Test. Money-back Guarantee. Write!
The D. T. Bohon Co.
60 Main Street
Harrodsburg, Ky.

LOW PRICES

CLEMENTS.

Another well-known and greatly beloved minister of the gospel has fallen—Rev. William G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., who passed to his reward at 11:15 on Saturday, February 24, 1924, having spent perhaps a half a century in the gospel ministry and had wrought a great and good work for the cause of Christ. He was a man of unusual strength bodily, but a few years ago he got a fall and broke his hip. At the time of this accident he was in fine condition, physically, but from the day of that fall he began to lose his vitality, and was never himself in health again. Only a few weeks ago, Mrs. Clements passed on, and now in such a short time he follows her into the spirit world. Funeral services were conducted on Tuesday, February 26, 1924. Peace to his ashes. A fuller sketch of his life and work will be prepared by some one who is qualified to do it.

Elon is Building for the Future



Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

DEEP-SEATED FRECKLES
Need attention NOW or may remain all winter. Use the old and time-tried guaranteed treatment that has given satisfaction to millions of women for over 15 years, and rid yourself of these homely spots. Ask for
Othine--Double Strength
At all Druggists and Department Stores
OTHINE LABORATORIES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

A Charm
Beautiful Hair
You can possess it by using Caro-Co Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Large bottle 50c at all dealers.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

TRAVEL INFORMATION
EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS
LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM
Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

GROW COTTON IN VIRGINIA
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown
Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.
Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.
Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.
For full information, address:
K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

WILLETT.

Miss Phoebe Willett was born May 6, 1845; died January 30, 1924. She had been a sufferer nearly all her life, and death came as a sweet relief. She bore the afflictions of the years with patience born of Christian trust, hope and assurance. She had been a consistent member of Grace's Chapel almost since its organization. She leaves a brother, "Uncle Jack" Willett, who is about eighty years old. May the Lord give him grace and Christian assurance to comfort him while he waits on the shores of time. The funeral was held at Grace's Chapel in the presence of a large number of friends. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

HOSAFLOOK.

Dorothy Pauline Hosaflook, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Hosaflook, of Linville, Va., died February 15, 1924. Her age was two months and sixteen days. The funeral services were conducted by the writer of these lines, in the Linville Christian Church, on Saturday, February 16th. May the Lord comfort the bereaved parents.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high. Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

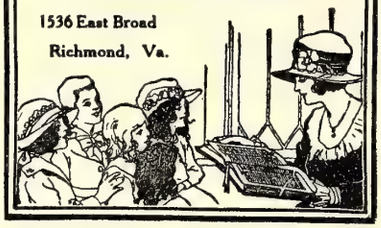
05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1924. | NUMBER 10.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Making of Money.—

Leaving vast sums of money to children, making work unnecessary, is the most harmful thing that could happen to them. But it is still more harmful to the general public to discourage the country's ablest men. Their ambition, just now, is to pile up money, which they don't need and which will spoil their children. But let the proper teaching attend the getting of money.

President Burton's Proclamation.—

President Burton, of Chicago University, has issued this proclamation:

"The administrative officers of the University of Chicago regard the use of intoxicating liquor by students as physically, intellectually and morally dangerous and as contrary to the spirit of the law of the land. They, therefore, believe that it tends to defeat the purpose of education.

"The university will not tolerate the use of intoxicants by its students in territory subject to its government, and will exert its influence to discourage such use of them everywhere. In accordance with this policy, the university has dismissed one student and suspended two others."

Outlook Optimistic and Reassuring.—

Deaths from alcoholism in Philadelphia decreased more than 85 per cent in the first six weeks of 1924, in comparison with a similar period last year, according to a statement by Frank Paul, chief investigator of the coroner's office. Mr. Paul attributed the reduction to Director of Public Safety Smedley D. Butler's campaign against lawlessness. Reports showed 150 deaths due to alcohol during the first six weeks of 1923. For the same period this year there have been but 27 deaths from alcohol, and 11 of these were due to accidents resulting from intoxication. Mr. Paul is quoted as saying: "The police battle against law-breakers is putting out of business the places and persons dealing in liquor, and it is frightening the public through fear of arrest. The fact that the majority of liquor deaths this year occurred early, while the frequency is steadily becoming less, shows the effects of General Butler's drive."

Hearing on Education Bill.—

The committee on education of the House of Representatives, of which Frederick W. Dallinger, of Massachusetts, is the chairman, began to hold hearings on the Sterling Reed education bill, beginning February 20th.

The other members of the committee are Daniel Alden Reed, New York; John M. Robison, Kentucky; William P. Holaday, Illinois; Frederick W. Fleetwood, Vermont; George A. Welsh, Pennsylvania; Robert L. Bacon, New York; E. Hart Fenn, Connecticut; B. G. Lowrey, Mississippi; Henry St. George Tucker, Virginia; Robert L. Doughton, North Carolina; William W. Hastings, Oklahoma; R. Lee Moore, Georgia; R. E. L. Allen, West Virginia; Loring M. Black, Jr., New York.

Representatives of the National Education Association and various other organizations supporting the bill are appearing before the committee to urge that the bill be favorably reported to the House.

France Takes a Hand.—

France, thought to be the land of loose laws and loose practices, is indirectly taking a hand in the American divorce question. The nation has become scandalized and humiliated by the flight of rich Americans going to Paris and other French cities for the purpose of filing suits for divorce. The French ministry of justice has issued a decree to all French divorce courts, limiting their action in granting divorces to Americans. Under the new order, a citizen of the United States wishing a divorce must deliver to the court a duly attested certificate from a member of the American bar to the effect that the applicant is entitled to a divorce under the laws of the State in which he or she may live. This French action is something, but it is very little. What right has a French court to dissolve a marriage made under the laws of the United States? This country should refuse to accept any such French decree on the ground that it has no jurisdiction over our laws.

Educational and Moral Value of Movies.—

Opposite points of view regarding the motion-picture industry are expressed by the National Motion Picture Conference, called in Washington by five Churches in their national meetings, and the motion-picture industry, of which Will H. Hayes, former Postmaster-General, is the head.

The sense of the Washington conference was summed up by its statement that:

"The political, social and moral welfare of the world is seriously threatened by the motion-picture industry, which is using its vast publicity and educational power to place itself above and in defiance of all legal control under the deceptive claim, twice denied by the Supreme Court of the United States, that it is entitled to freedom of the press and that it should be regulated only by laws applicable to the press and not those laws applicable to indecent amusements."

At a luncheon given in his honor by the industry in New York, Thomas A. Edison, noted inventor, and often called the "father of the motion picture," said:

"I believe, as I have always believed, that you control the most powerful instrument in the world for good. Whatever part I may have played in its development was mainly along mechanical lines. The far-more important development of the motion picture as a medium for artistic efforts and as an educational factor is in your hands.

"Remember that you are servants of the public, and never let a desire for money or power prevent you from giving the public the best work of which you are capable. It is not the quantity of riches that counts; it is the quality which produces happiness, where that is possible."

King James' Bible Not Sectarian.—

The Supreme Court of California has decided the King James version of the Holy Bible is neither sectarian nor denominational. The decision affirms the judgment of the Superior Court in Fresno County and reverses the judgment of the California District Court of Appeals.

Those who desired the Bible disbarred from school libraries contended that the State constitutional provision which states that "no publication of a sectarian, partisan or denominational character must be used or distributed in any school, or school library, nor must any sectarian or denominational doctrine be taught therein," was authority for such disbarment.

The Supreme Court, in rendering its decision, stated that:

"The fact that the King James version of the Bible was not approved by all sects of a particular religion, nor by the followers of all religions, would not class it as sectarian for library purposes. There is no religion that has found universal acceptance, and therefore no book of religion that has.

"The contention that the Bible in the King James translation is a book of a sectarian character rests on the fact that there are differences between it and, among others, the Douay version; that it is of Protestant authorship, that it is used in Protestant Churches, and that it is not approved by the Roman Catholic Church.

"According to such a test, the Bible, in any known version or text, is sectarian. In fact, until all sects can agree upon the manuscript texts that should be used, no English version of the Bibie, not 'sectarian' in this view, can be produced.

"The mere act of purchasing a book to be added to the school library does not carry with it any implication of the adoption of the theory or dogma contained therein, or any approval of the Book itself, except as a work of literature fit to be included in a reference library. For aught that appears in the instant case, the library in question may already contain copies of the Douay version of the Bible as well of the Talmud, Koran and the teachings of Confucius."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Norfolk Christian Temple, while in Richmond last Saturday, made a visit to the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He said the opening of the new Church would take place on March 16th. See the announcement in this issue.

The managing editor is in dead earnest about asking the pastors to help increase the circulation of THE SUN. They have the authority to act, and their congregations expect them to exercise their rights. The pastor of the managing editor, once upon a time, said to him that his congregation did not seem to respond. Our reply was that he was mistaken; that the congregation would do if he made it plain as to their duty. To be brief, success has crowned this pastor's efforts.

Considering the very inclement weather of February 26th, the day that Rev. W. G. Clements remains were laid away to await the morning of the resurrection, there were many ministers present to show their love and respect for one who had been among us for more than fifty years as a preacher of the gospel. He had many friends, and they were indeed loath to part with him. All of his children were present but one, who was detained at her home in Burlington by illness; and well they might, for he had done a faithful part by them all, having educated them all and so prepared them on the human side for the battles of life as far as education could do that.

Rev. J. W. Patton, of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, wishes his brethren to know that he is not idle. As for some years passed, he is traveling and lecturing for the Masons, and frequently on Sundays is invited to preach in various Churches. He feels in this way he is preaching the gospel truly. In a news letter to one of our State papers, his preaching is spoken of as follows: "A large audience crowded the auditorium of the First Baptist Church here on Sunday morning at 11 A. M., in a union service of all the congregations of town, when Rev. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, assistant grand lecturer of the Grand Lodge of Masons of North Carolina, delivered one of the ablest discourses on "Free Masonry" ever heard from a local pulpit. In defining the purpose and symbols of masonry, he explained that while it is founded on the Bible, it is not a religion, but tremendously religious."

In a note from Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., from Florence, S. C., on his way back to North Carolina, we learn that his son, Joseph, is living in that city and the father was stopping to visit him. While there, he was invited to preach in First Methodist Episcopal Church, and he accepted the invitation and preached. Young Joseph is in the insurance business with Mr. J. B. Aiken. He had a big treat in his son's home, for he found there two fine grandchildren—Joseph, age six years, and Daniel Albright Long, about two and one-half years of age. All grandparents will know why he had such a delightful visit, in part at least—two grandchildren to entertain him and make him happy. Since Dr. Long has reached North Carolina and was at the funeral of the late Rev. W. G. Clements, on February 26th. He will begin at once to fill his appointments as usual.

The many friends of the Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., will be pained to learn that he has been again prostrated at his home in Chapel Hill. We are hoping to get later news from him in time to report yet further in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. His brother, Dr. D. A., thinks the attack was more severe this time than it was last winter. Let the prayers of God's people be offered for his speedy restoration, if in keeping with the Lord's will.

LATER—A note came this morning (March 3rd) from Dr. W. S. Long, saying he is better. It was not so much an attack of the trouble of a year ago as it was the result of overexertion; but he is again improving, and we hope soon to know that he is quite himself again. His many friends who were informed of his condition are very anxious to have the latest news from him. Because of this anxiety, we are sending the very latest.

It may be interesting to some of our pastors to compare notes in their own work with facts in the work of Rev. H. E. Rountree, chaplain in the navy. In a recent bi-monthly report to the Secretary of the Navy, he gives some very interesting information. For instance, he shows that during the two months he spoke to 269 Protestants and to 157 Catholics, and had 19 converts. In doing this work for the two months he held 30 services. In that time, he held several special services, such as Thanksgiving, Armistice Day, and a Christmas Day service, etc. He also looked after the distribution of Christmas presents for 500 children of enlisted men. To each was given a pair of Red Cross wool socks, in one of which had been placed candy and fruits, the same being donated by the American Red Cross and the Woman's Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Norfolk and Portsmouth. In all, about 850 present were distributed. It can be seen that Chaplain Rountree is a busy man, perhaps a bit more busy than some pastors have been under such circumstances.

Health work among the negroes of North Carolina has been one of the outstanding features of the State's health program. Particularly has the work of preventing tuberculosis among negroes, which work is done as far as possible through leaders of the colored race, attracted more than State-wide attention.

West Virginia, for instance, has not only called on the State for her program of health work among negroes, but has borrowed one of the State's best negro workers. This is Florence C. Williams, who for a number of years has worked under the direction of the extension department of the sanatorium and the State Tuberculosis Association as field health worker among the people of her race.

A feature of Florence Williams' work in West Virginia that has been favorably commented on is the holding of big community meetings, with a health educational program. These are held at the centers of the negro population. The Governor of the State, the superintendent of public instruction, the president of the State Tuberculosis Association and other prominent citizens are featured on the program. Dr. G. E. Davis, of Raleigh, director of the Rosenwald School fund of the Department of Education, was the principal speaker on one occasion.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

After an enforced absence of three months, I returned to Fancy Gap on December 28th. I had anticipated a great deal of pleasure from helping to plan our house at Elk Spur, but was denied that privilege.

While in Pittsburgh, I read a little book entitled "The Little House." I thought, upon my return, I should write the story of "Our Little House" for the readers of THE SUN, but the weeks have been very full of work and my letter to THE SUN has been crowded out.

We resumed our school work on January 7th. The attendance has been fair, though we have had a variety of bad weather, including rain, sleet, high winds and severe cold. I teach the first three grades until 2:15 P. M. They are interesting, and I love them. When all are present I have seven who are reading "Baby Ray" and other stories. They are delighted with their recitation and become very enthusiastic. They are an inspiration to the teacher.

I am wondering if some of our Sunday Schools might have a picture roll that has been cast aside. If so, we should be very glad to have it. A Presbyterian friend sent me one last winter illustrating the story of David. I told the stories connected with the pictures to the small children and found that they were soon able to repeat them. Recently I have used the same during our devotional exercises and find them equally interesting to the older pupils.

Our Sunday School at Elk Spur has kept up fairly well during the winter, considering the weather conditions. There is no decrease in interest at Rocky Ford. At present the school is closed there on account of measles in the home of Bro. Rigney. Miss Lettye Rigney is the teacher. I understand that the patrons are well pleased with her work.

I am sitting by the open wood-fire, which is mine by special request. I have a small oil heater which I use in the mornings, but always put a few sticks of wood in the fireplace and have a little blaze just for the sake of the cheer which it adds to my room.

A few weeks ago I went into a home where there were a few large baskets for sale. I said, "I should like to have one if I had any place to put it." A little girl in the home replied: "You could put it under the bed." I bought the basket.

We thoroughly appreciate our home in the mountains, and shall be very happy to have the friends of the work come up and make us a visit. Miss Marquart and Miss Leavell, of our Springfield Church, Dr. Kendall, pastor, spent two weeks here last summer. They have not lost interest in the work. On February 14th, I received from them twenty pretty valentines for the children. I do not believe it will be possible for you to forget us if you will come up and get acquainted.

We need your most earnest prayers.

Fancy Gap, Va. MARGARET H. MOREY.

CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

March 16th has been set for the opening of our new Church. It will be known as "Opening Day," and a special program has been arranged.

There will be three services during the day—10:45 A. M., 3 and 7:45 P. M. The speakers for these services will be announced through the Church papers.

We cannot tell you the joy that this day will bring to us, but one thing we know, and that is that your presence and the presence of your congregation will greatly increase our joy. We most cordially invite you to these services.

Lunch will be served at the Church to out-of-town guests. It will, therefore, be a great deal of help to us if you could give us some idea as to how many will come from your pastorate for the morning service.

Hoping to see you and craving your prayers, I am, Yours in Christ,

L. E. SMITH, Pastor.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—I am impressed to ask you please to tell me what you think about letting children gather together on Sabbath days and play ball? I contend that it is wrong. Am I right, or am I wrong? As I see it, the Sabbath never was intended for sport of any kind. The Word teaches us to train up a child in the way he should go. If we allow sports to our children on the Sabbath day when they are young, they will practice the same when they grow up.

People tell me from time to time that I am too strict with my children; that I do not allow them the pleasures that are due them; that so many good people allow their children to play ball on Sunday, and they are Church members in good standing, too, I cannot deny, but as long as I see it, as I now do I will not give my consent.

I notice people who are so bent on Sunday ball playing, card-playing and dancing, hardly ever are true to the Church. I mean that they go to preaching only once in a while. I am a widow woman, with some small children. I want to train them up in the right way. I am not out to please people. I want to please the Lord by doing His will, regardless of what people may say or think. Of course, I wish to live in peace with all mankind as best I can.

Now, the question I have asked and the remarks I have made I do not mean for print. I just wished to explain my reasons for asking the question. I feel my weakness and will appreciate advice—I mean, of course, Christian advice.—Mrs. ———.

Answer.—We fully appreciate the situation by which our sister is surrounded. Her task is a difficult one, chiefly because there are so many of her neighbors who take the opposite views of the question she has asked, but that only makes it more important that she should stand firm and continue to lead her children aright. Those children are God's gift to you, and He expects to see you train those children for Him and His Church. To do less than your best to this end will show you at fault, and seriously so. God places a high estimate on the training of children He has sent into the world, and He sent them to you that you might do your best, by God's help, to train them aright in His sight.

If you wish your children to observe the Sabbath, then you must train them to love and respect the Sabbath; otherwise they can be easily led to do just what you do not wish them to do. Besides, the Lord has made you the responsible one for training them in the ways of righteousness and truth. You tell the people who charge you with not giving them the privileges and pleasures they wish to have that the Lord did not make you their mother for the sake of allowing them to have their own way when they have never been taught what His will is. He wishes you to teach them and to train them in the right ways, and as a mother you will be responsible for your children's conduct as far as you may be able to do so. Say to these people who insist that your children are denied the pleasures which others have that New England, in the days of her Puritanism, gave to our country the ablest men and women our country has ever produced. Be assured that you must be accountable for the training of your children; not only will you be, but you must be. Let this thought often drive you (if need be) to your knees, that you may seek and get help from God to enable you to stand and do your duty by the dear children whom God has given you for the highest and holiest ends. Some one may charge you with being narrow. Never mind that, for to be narrow in the true Christian sense puts you in mighty good company, even with the Son of God and the angels. Stand your ground, keep sweet and humble and faithful before the Lord. You may be tempted to lose your patience with those who criticise you. Do not yield; be patient and forbearing, and even long-suffering, if need be; but always be true to your Heavenly aFther and to yourself and to your children. By so doing, God will be glorified, and I believe you and your children may, by the grace of God, be saved eternally.

Question.—Do you think that men and women are growing greater in this day of light than ever before? In other words, do you think a man or a woman who had fine moral and educational advantages in his young days are better and wiser than were the people who preceded them, say a hundred years, or three hundred years ago?

Answer.—Only in one way may a man of this generation be abler and better than were the people of the long ago who had the same advantages. They may be greater in that they have some studies now which were not had in their days in school or college, but otherwise we think there is no great difference between the men and women of one generation and another. There were as able men and women a hundred years ago and more than we have now in some instances. Human life and human abilities are about as good in one generation as in another, except the generations of modern days have studies that the men and women of one hundred years ago did not have.

Question.—What is the offense of slavery? Is it any more a wrong to sell a man than any other property?

Answer.—In the first place, man is not property, and therefore man has no right to sell a man. The offense is very repulsive in the sight of God. I know it is because the Lord made death the penalty of selling a man (see Deut. 24:7). We do not need slavery anywhere or for any purpose, unless it be the slavery of a man who is punished by imprisonment for a crime he has committed.

Question.—Is there any part of a crop over which the maker and owner of the crop has no control?

Answer.—Yes, there is such a portion of a crop over which the owner of the crop has no control. It is that part which is called gleanings (see Deut. 24:20). The gleanings must be left for the poor and needy. They must be fed, and the farmer is the man who must do the feeding in this case, and in the way mentioned in the passage just quoted.

Question.—I have heard of men who would shoot a man if caught just taking some of the fruit of the farm, or of the tree, to eat then and there. Do you think it is right thus to punish people who are simply taking enough to satisfy their hunger at the time, not trying to take any away?—James.

Answer.—Men have been so close as to punish people who would take enough of the fruit of the trees or of the vines to satisfy hunger, but that is of the world. The Lord made a law quite the opposite, as I see it. Turn to Deut. 23:24, and you will see what the Lord allowed a poor, hungry soul to do rather than starve. You may satisfy your hunger, but you must not put any in the basket to take away.

Question.—Is Church union making any progress in this day of light? In other words, are any of the people of God getting together in union any more than they did in the long ago before so much was said about it?

Answer.—We shall have to say Yes and No to your questions. We say yes, if we mean that the people of God are feeling much more kindly toward one another; but if you mean organic union, then we say no. It seems that there is mutual fear one of another on the part of the leaders of the organized Churches. There is not yet enough confidence among organized peoples.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Conditions in Newport News—"The Harbor of a Thousand Ships—have not been so prosperous during the cold winter months as they once were in our city. Many men have been laid off at the shipyards, and without work it has been a hard pull with some families. Still, through the Associated Charities and Church activities of our city, there has been practically no intense suffering.

Our Church work in the city has apparently been of a harmonious nature. Three of our Churches have been without pastor for a part of the time, and that has necessitated heavier work on the few pastors who did remain in the city. Newport News seems to be inhabited by quite a transient population—this is true of preachers as well as people.

For the third year in succession, our city is planning a pre-Easter simultaneous revival campaign. Many of us are praying that God may abundantly visit our city with reviving power, and add to the cause of righteousness many who are now lost through the power of sin.

Our local congregation at the Christian Church has been indeed faithful since we last wrote to THE SUN. We have met all our payments promptly. There are no bills against the Church. The Sunday School is holding its own nicely under the leadership of Mr. Caleb D. West as its efficient superintendent; three splendid Christian Endeavor Societies have done excellent work, and the outlook generally of the work here is encouraging. The month of February has been used largely to think, and pray and preach about foreign missions. In keeping with the call of the mission secretary of the General Convention, March 9th will be used as foreign mission day in our Church. As earnestly as we know how, we are trying to labor for the kingdom of God, the good of humanity, and the salvation of the world. Ours may be only a small part in God's world program, but by His help we will do our best. Trusting in the prayers of our brethren, we shall do our best to exalt Christ Jesus, the Light of the world. B. J. EARP.

CHRIST AMONG THE LOWLY.

When Jesus was here upon earth, He was interested in all kinds of people, but particularly poor people. After nineteen centuries, however, most of the poor people of the world do not know of Him. The total population of the world is estimated at 1,600,000,000 individuals. Of these, 1,116,000,000 still live in non-Christian lands, and many of those in so-called Christian countries have the most inadequate conception of Jesus and His mission. When will Christians join with the Son of God in saying, "It is not your Father's will that one of these little one's should perish?"

Get a subscriber for THE SUN, and do it as quickly as you can.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

CAN WE SETTLE IT, OR CAN WE NOT?

Some one has said that a thing is never settled till it is settled right. We guess that is true; and if so, all the more careful ought we all to be to make sure that we settle things right. Here is an admirable article, and we ask our friends to read it, and as they read they may try, as we hope they will, to settle now and here the great question as to the right of controversy, provided it be kept in a good spirit. Of course, when a bad spirit prevails, we know that cannot be desirable, but men who are after truth in all sincerity ought always to be ready for controversy, if it be in the Christ-spirit. Some people think that a man is clear off the track when controversy begins. That is due, in part at least, to the fact that so many controversies in the past have been mere sectarian squabbles, and in many instances people who ought to find pleasure in real controversy are set against it, till they wish none of it under any circumstances. We heard not long ago of a man of whom it was said he had never indulged in a controversy. That may be true, and yet if it be true, it is proof that he has not grasped the great purpose of controversy, and certainly he must have had few fights for the sake of truth.

Why, controversy is the principal method of finding truth. If there be no controversy, then we shall find little truth outside of the old, beaten track, where others have gone along and found for themselves the shining gems of truth. Of course, if controversy be of a sectarian character, then we shall not expect to reap any special good out of its thought; but if it be two men are bent, in all sincerity, on finding the truth, then we shall expect controversy to make a contribution to the advancement of truth, such as we shall get from no other place. Let us not be afraid of controversy of the right kind, for it is the main method of discovering truth. In Micah 6:2, God said He had a controversy with His people. Controversy that is only trying to win for the sake of winning, well, we better let that alone before we begin; but controversy for the sake of finding real truth is a fine thing.

The editor of the Presbyterian Standard, in a recent issue of that paper, gives a fine editorial on "Religious Controversy." As we see it, the editorial is fine, and in the right spirit. We ask our readers to give it a thoughtful consideration. It follows:

"The only objection to religious controversy is that quite too frequently it is not religious. Odium theologicum means theological hate, and it is a thing that emerges so frequently in debates as to become proverbial. It has been so from the beginning, is now, and perhaps always shall be. The first great councils of the Church—the general assemblies, as we call them—were the battlegrounds of the fiercest strife of tongues. The leaders on opposite sides hurled back and forth the most violent epithets, calling each other 'Judases,' 'apostates,' 'murderers,' and such like. Sometimes, epithets were followed by physical assaults. One distinguished bishop died from the rough handling which he received in one of these councils.

"There is something to be said by way of extenuation. Religious controversy, even in its most violent form, has a goodly parentage. It is born of sincere love for the truth. Men, or at any rate Christian men, do not fight for that which they do not love. If they are in error, they are paying homage to it under the conviction that it is truth. Unseemly violence in religious controversy is an excess of indignation against what is believed to be false; unchristian bitterness is but an excess of zeal in behalf of what is believed to be true. To have no well-grounded convictions of religious truth is either to be ignorant of the Bible, or to lack faith in it. To have such convictions, and to feel no heat when they are assaulted is to be sadly wanting in appreciation of the issues involved. The man who sees another knocking the foundation from under his house is not to be censured very severely for putting a little warmth into his protest. Deliver us from the religious pacifist who is for peace at any price! 'First pure, then peaceable,' is the Divine order.

"Barring the evil that results from excess of heat, we think religious controversy is all to the good. 'Truth is like a torch—the more you shake it, the more it shines.' Our Saviour was frequently in controversy with His religious adversaries. Much of His teaching, and some of His most valuable teaching, was provoked from Him by His enemies, as for example, the fifth chapter of John. How many of Paul's letters are intensely controversial? From the time the apostles fell asleep to this good hour, progress in the interpretation of the Scriptures and in the clarifying of truth has been through controversy. Our creeds and our theologies had their beginnings and their developments in the thick of theological strife. It took the Church more than half a century to rid itself of Arianism, and write into its creed the deity of Christ. It required three-quarters of a century of the ceaseless clamor of tongues to give us the definition of Christ's person which we teach our children in the Shorter Catechism. Until the days of Augustine, the Church had no clear-cut views as to man's sinful nature, the effect of Adam's sin on his posterity, and the associated doctrines of grace involved in his salvation. Then Augustine was provoked to turn his great mind to the profound study and elucidation of these important truths by the plausible, but fatally erroneous views presented by Pelagius.

"So it has ever been. The Church has needed the spur of controversy to make her 'give more earnest heed to the things which she has heard.' The Church is disposed to settle on her lees, lazily to assent to accepted formulas of truth. But truth received in such manner has little vital force. Like seed lying in a dry cellar, it remains barren and unfruitful. Controversy supplies the warmth that makes the truth germinant and productive.

"We are persuaded that the average preacher is not sufficiently militant. He prefers to preach what all his hearers already believe. If he feels called on to cross any one's views, he apologizes for it, lest he should hurt some one's feelings. But people are fond of a fight, and if only the preacher plays fair they will enjoy his preaching the more if he comes to grips with his antagonist. Probably the most pugnacious preacher in the history of American Christianity was Alexander Campbell, and he imparted his spirit to his followers. It is said that the first thing a Campbellite says, as he emerges from the water of baptism, 'Now I am ready to dispute.' In many places they have proved a thorn in the side of other denominations. But they have demonstrated one thing, and that is the way to attain your goal is to go on the war path and neither ask nor give quarter. The growth of that Church has been phenomenal, and it has flourished on controversy.

"Let us not disquiet our souls over the controversies that are now raging in large parts of the Church. Some evil will come out of them because of excess of passion; but the final outcome will be good. The Church will get a firmer grip on all truth that enters into God's plan of redeeming love, and will preach that truth with renewed zeal and increased effectiveness."

EDUCATION NOT BASIS OF CHARACTER.

It is certainly a difficult task to get the correct view on many questions in human society. The human mind sees most questions from so many standpoints. In many instances the men who are seeking to solve certain problems, themselves mystify as to the solution, and then their progress is not only slow, but very uncertain. A man who is mystified in his thought is quite as likely to go backward as forward, and if backward, he is leading away from its solution rather than to it.

It is only a few weeks ago that we met, in a railway coach, a gentleman from Atlanta. He is a business man, a graduate of Elon College, and seemed to be familiar with the United States prison in that city. He knew the superintendent of that prison. He told us that the superintendent assured him that in case the University of Georgia should lose its faculty, he could supply every chair with a man fully competent to fill, and fill well, the position, only he was a criminal. He assured us that some of the most highly educated men in this country were behind prison bars. He also told us that the superintendent of the prison at Sing Sing, N. Y., told him that if every man in Columbia University of New York City, should resign and leave, that he could from the inmates of Sing Sing, fill every chair with competent men, and the university could go right on in its work, so far as educational matters are concerned, only they would be criminals; that he had a plenty of men in that prison who are fully competent to be professors in Columbia University. We cite these two instances just to show that education is not the basis of character. If it were, then our prisons would not be so filled with criminals.

Faith in God is the real basis of granite-like character. If it be absent, then education cannot take its place. We must have the solid foundation of faith in God and His Word if we are to stand in hard places. The Western Christian Advocate has some very sensible words on "The Educated Man Goes Wrong." We republish the article here because, while we wish education to have its right place in human society, we also wish that our people get their eyes open to the fact that education is not the basis of real character. The Advocate article reads:

It is commonly accepted that education has strengthened the moral constitution of men. It is widely accepted that if you educate a man you lift him above the level where men go wrong.

Recently, a professor of Johns Hopkins University made a survey in which he found that 7,000 persons who have enjoyed the benefits of a college education are to be found behind the bars of the prisons in America.

He further comments that the vast majority of these persons who fell into crime did so after the age of forty, and are serving their first terms. The college-bred man as a convict is seldom restored. About 98 per cent of the educated prisoners are or have been Church members. Most of the few women included in the survey were guilty of manslaughter or murder. A considerable number of ministers were found, and more physicians, but the lawyers held the professional lead. Some secondary school instructors are in cells, but not a single college professor or trained scientist.

The male collegian convicts were almost never guilty of crimes of violence. They are committers of forgery, swindling, chicanery, deception.

We are assured that the chief value of this professor's investigation is in the blow it gives to the theory that by education you can make men and women more virtuous and lift them to a more secure, higher moral level.

May it not also be said that education, high or low, means nothing as affecting the lower forms of virtue? It produces a keenness that succeeds in avoiding being caught as a law-breaker.

Just where, then, is the weakness of our modern system of education? This is the question that not only the average layman will raise, but the student of society as well. Ought not character-building to be considered the essential thing in education?

It has long been the contention of Protestant and Catholic thinkers that schools without religion cannot build character, and that character cannot be built without a substratum of Christian faith. Most of the defenders of our schools and colleges, and many of the severest critics of the institutions, from the kindergarten up, refuse to accept these conclusions, because they identify religion with dogma, declaring that ethics and morals may be taught without being associated with any form of religious dogma.

The fact remains, however, that in restraining and regulating human conduct, religion takes precedent. Therefore, the contention of those who are seeking to emphasize the essential and elemental value of religious education should be given the most serious consideration. The only absolute guarantee for the security of the highly trained man in modern society is the support of religious faith and the restraints it furnishes for all his moods and the capacity it produces in him for resistance against the destructive forces of life.

CHRISTIANS DO NOT DIE.

Ordinarily, Christians lose much of the comfort and hope which belongs to them by right of divine promise. The Bible abounds in promises of the highest character, but in so many instances the Christian does not appropriate these promises, and of course he goes along through life not half as cheerful and hopeful as he has a right to be, and all because he does not believe the promises of God; or if he believes them, his faith is not active and his loss is large.

William Joseph Jones, M. D., has a word of stimulating effect for the faith of the Christians of today. The article by Dr. Jones appeared in the (Richmond) Christian Advocate, and we republish it in the hope that some other heart may be comforted and blessed by reading it. Dr. Jones writes:

There is a complex unity,
A body, mind and soul;
He passes thro' the space of time,
Eternity his goal.
A tripartite he at the first,
A perfect being stood.
God looking on His finished work,
Pronounced it "Very good."

My purpose is to consider the human body from the standpoint of the Christian only. St. Paul's statements in 1st Cor. 15th chap., is brilliant with intellectual merit, convincing with unexcelled logic and elevated above ordinary authorship by profound religious truth. We listen to his sublime crowds in his analogy between nature and the human body, when the grain of wheat is planted in the soil, which will surely produce at the harvest the identical grain that is sown by the husbandman. We fail to realize the comfort for the Christian that the apostle puts in the harvest that comes with waving heads of golden grain, and we also fail to appropriate the assurance that our bodies will be raised as incorruptible as our souls.

The life principle is the grain of wheat does not die, but through the processes of the decaying physical nature the identity of life is preserved and reproduced in that which is to be. So also the human body does not lose its identity, but will arise in likeness exactly the counterpart of the one that was buried (sown), except it will be robbed of its defects and healed of its infirmities and made like the glorious body of Jesus, as Peter and James and John saw Him on the Mount of Transfiguration.

We stand about an open grave. In a beautiful casket, decked with flowers, lies the body of a dear one. Our hearts swell with grief human language cannot utter, and our vision is clouded by flowing tears. The hope of the Christian is brighter than the noontide sun. That body is sown in weakness. It will arise in glory by the power of our risen Lord. The life in Him never dies. We shall meet again somewhere, and we shall know one another somehow beyond and above the "sunset's radiant glow."

All nature teaches the reproduction of identity,
Blossoms and leaves and fruits mature and die,
Death comes as goes the waning year,
But when the warmth of spring is here,
The resurrection draweth near
And the beauties of new life appear.

Last night the beautiful bride of a year passed, with her first-born, over the threshold of the tomb. The bereaved one will surely meet them, with spiritualized but human bodies, and know and love them, not as wife and baby, but as the angels of God know and love one another and worship Him whose being is love.

One who was near to the writer by family and other ties had endured for many months the gradual robbery of chronic disease which slowly consumed his life. When the hours of his departure, at noon of a beautiful clear day, drew near, he looked at an invisible person in the room, with satisfied recognition, then fell asleep without a sign of pain, as a tired child sleeps on its mother's lap. God allowed him to see some one who made him happy, then put him to sleep until He shall awake him to meet Him in the air descending to the place of final judgment.

It is not a wrong, nor a vain sentiment, to decorate the casket with beautiful and fragrant flowers and plant and cultivate evergreens and sweet-smelling roses within the cemetery lot. God cares more than that, and will purify, beautify and glorify that body and make that humanity a member of His family forever and forever.

WHEN IS A MAN A CHRISTIAN?

The Western Christian Advocate asks this question: "When is a man a Christian?" He asks the question, as he says, because the world is asking, and will not be satisfied—it is insistent; it is determined. A definite answer is desired. The editor of that paper says: "The name Christian may be applied to a man from the point of extreme formalism to one of close devotion." We are not aspiring to tell our Methodist brethren when a man is a Christian, and yet without speculation, we believe we can tell them just when a man ought to be known as a Christian. Do you wish me to do so? Well, we cannot flatter the listener, nor go around the stump in order to tell the inquirer the plain truth.

When is a man a Christian in fact? When he has experienced regeneration under the power of the Holy Spirit, and then proves that he had this work of the Spirit wrought in his life by conforming to the teaching of the great Teacher. On the other hand, we do not believe that any one becomes a Christian without the new birth, and if he has the new birth, we believe he will prove it by letting his light shine in being and doing just what the Holy Spirit made him when he was regenerated. There is no Christianity, as we understand it, without the new birth. We dare not question the fact that formalism may have its place in a man's heart without Christianity, but a man cannot be a Christian without the work of the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit.

How we wish that the American pulpit could get together on this question! If the pulpit could be a unit on that point, they could soon get the people to believe it, and believing it, we should come much closer to living it. May God help us to be clear in our teaching the real truth as to when a man is a Christian! To miss the mark here is to lose the best thing in the world. Let us study it devoutly until we can tell the good news to any earnest inquirer, according to the Scriptures.

DR. LONG IN THE SOUTH.

The Tampa, Fla., Tribune of February 17th gives a portrait of Dr. D. A. Long, of North Carolina, and a sketch of his life and work. He is now past eighty years of age and yet looks remarkably youthful for one bearing so many years of time. Dr. Long is expecting to return to his pastoral work early in March. We have known him for many years, but we did not know that he is a poet till this sketch of his life was given the Tribune. That paper closes the sketch of Dr. Long by giving one of his poems, as follows:

Gladness in an Old Man.

I'm so glad! I'm so glad for all that is bright—
The sun by day, and the "Songs in the night,"
The companions of youth, the friends of old age,
As I read God's dealings on each living page.

Yes, let us thank God today and tomorrow;
In mercy He sends the blessings and sorrow.
It is never unkindness, and never in vain
His mercy permitted a sorrow or pain.

O Father, we can trust Thee for days yet to be;
We know they will bring us still closer to Thee.
When all tears have vanished through Thy boundless love,
We will spend our eternity in the mansions above.

Just a few words to the board of trustees of Elon College: We are soon to meet again in our annual session, and before that board will come many important questions, among them the establishment of the biblical chair. While we have one good teacher now, we will likely need another. To secure the right man for the place is a delicate task, but it is nonetheless important, very important, for in this day of loose ideas in doctrinal teaching, we need a man of learning and loyalty to the Word of God. We need to secure for this work a man big enough spiritually and intellectually to take our young people, and especially our young ministers, safely through the doctrinal labyrinths of truth and error. Let us be much in prayer for divine guidance in selecting the man. We have already done much in this work with our present force. We understand that Union Theological Seminary and the seminary in connection with Vanderbilt University have agreed to take our graduates and give them a full divinity touch, and so save the students so taught here one year in the courses of study which they will have to take if they should go to these institutions for their whole course. We are glad to know that our Elon work is so appreciated as to give our students such an advantage in completing a course of study in theology. Let us give this matter careful and close attention in the coming session of the board of trustees.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

REV. H. H. BUTLER.

Rev. Harrison Holland Butler was born in Isle of Wight County, Va., July 20, 1852, and passed away suddenly at his home, in Suffolk, on February 16, 1924, at the age of 71 years 6 months and 26 days.

He was educated at the old Suffolk Collegiate Institute, with Revs. W. B. Wellons and E. W. Beele as his helping friends. A phrenologist came to Suffolk during that period, and Dr. Wellons had him to examine the heads of the ministerial students. Blindfolded, as he was, when he felt Butler's head he said: "This young man is a natural-born preacher." He was right. Few men had the real gifts of a preacher as he had them.

He was licensed to preach by the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in November, 1878, and ordained as an elder in November, 1879. He was in the active ministry nearly forty-five years. During that time he served as pastor at least twenty-one Churches, and among them Cypress Chapel for twenty-three years, and Antioch, where he was to have preached the day after he died, twenty-nine years. He was pastor in Berkley for several years, but most of his ministry was among country Churches.

He was one of the most useful and best-beloved ministers in the Eastern Virginia Conference for nearly half a century. His friends could be numbered by the thousand, and his works do follow him. The outstanding marks of his ministry as a preacher were the following: His messages were biblical and spiritual. He was familiar with the English Bible, and he stuck to its plain teachings. The philosophies and cults of modern scholarship gave him no concern, and did not shake his simple faith in the Word of God. He sought out the spiritual meaning of Scripture and tested it in his own life.

He was revivalistic in his methods. He had a passion for souls. This talent gave him easy access to the heart of sinner, and he won thousands of them to Christ. He was never so happy as when he saw them yielding and professing faith in Jesus Christ.

His sermon was personal. The touch of his hand and the tone of his voice made men feel his sympathetic personality. It was that personal contact that made him lifetime friends. Men felt at home in his presence, and the warmth of personal friendship in his Christian handgrasp.

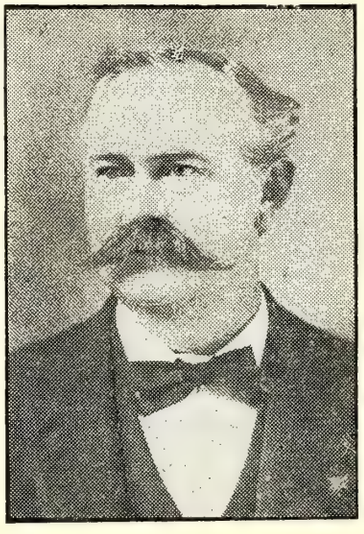
These marks made him a social power. He touched not only the congregation, but the community in which he served. Saints and sinners both loved him, and he loved them. He possessed the mind and spirit of Jesus as few ministers do. It was in this sphere that he became a comforter to the afflicted and the bereaved. In the days when funeral sermons were common, he brought messages of comfort to weeping congregations. His tender sympathy, his appealing personality, his close touch with human feelings made him a power in the pulpit and in the home. He was a social unit that extended a spiritual influence of larger value than words can express. His life and personality were such that, in all circles, his name was a familiar household possession, and always in the most pleasant relations.

He was married to Mrs. Amos E. Carr, of Norfolk, December 1, 1880. He is survived by his companion, two stepchildren, Mrs. C. B. Duke, of Suffolk, and Amos J. Carr, of Boston, Mass; also by two daughters, Mrs. Burwell Riddick, Jr., and Mrs. Ray Saunders, both living in Suffolk close to mother; six grandchildren and five stepgrandchildren. He is survived also by two brothers, Dempsey and Benjamin Butler.

A large congregation attended his funeral, in spite of an all-day rain. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Fifteen ministers were present. The choir sang "Day is Dying in the West." The quartet sang "Kissed by the Angel of Peace," and the choir sang "Rock of Ages." The remains were carried and the throng followed from the Suffolk Christian Church.

Ministers present: A. L. Kenyon, F. B. McSparren, F. O. Crimminger, F. B. Oglesby, I. W. Johnson, H. S. Hardcastle, H. E. Rountree, W. D. Harward, J. H. Lightbourne, T. E. White, J. G. Truitt, S. K. Ennrian, J. L. Foster, Elisha Bradshaw, W. W. Staley.

W. W. STALEY.



Rev. H. H. Butler.

TRIBUTE TO REV. H. H. BUTLER.

Yesterday afternoon, February 18th, as I took up the Ledger-Dispatch, one of Norfolk's dailies, my eyes fell on the picture of him whose name heads this tribute, and the announcement of his sudden passing away. Immediately a chill, a sadness, a gloom seemed to encircle my very soul when the thought coursed through my mind that I should see him no more on earth. Just here, a retrospective view of life, of my early days in the Church, came before me. Well do I remember the year 1879. During that year I surrendeed myself to the service of the Lord. That year, Bro. Butler preached for us at intervals, at least during the summer. He was then called to the pastorate of our Church. He accepted and served us very acceptably and pleasantly for eight years. He was then a licentiate, and our Church, through Bro. M. W. Hall and myself as delegates to the Eastern Virginia Conference, which met that year at Windsor, Va., recommended him for ordination at that time to the work of the ministry. He was ordained at that time—forty-four years ago last October. As I think of those early days of my first experience in the Christian life and of the sweet fellowship and pleasant associations of my dear young pastor, who was always so ready to cheer, to comfort and to inspire. My success in life—such as it has been—in the service of the King, is due largely to the gentle, kind and loving and inspiring spirit always so plainly visible in our relationships as pastor and parishioner.

As I pen these thoughts this morning, my soul quivers within me as I recall the happy times which he would spend at my father's home. On one occasion, while he was stopping overnight with us, I had the pleasure of rooming with him. After we retired, he turned toward me, and placing his right arm over me, drew me closer to him and said: "Bro. Mark, it is so sweet to be in the embrace of Jesus. It makes us love everybody; it creates such a sweet fellowship and such brotherly love. Oh, how glorious! bless His holy name!" As I think of those words today, I feel a moisture in my eyes and a thrill in my soul that I cannot restrain, for hundreds of times during these forty-four years these words have been a great help to me as I have come along life's journey. Bro. Butler was a man of a pleasing, and even fascinating, personality. He had a loving disposition that greatly endeared him to those coming under his leadership.

He is no more with us in the flesh, but his work, his influence, will live and be felt in extending the kingdom of God. His life's labors, like the leaven in a lump, will continue to be felt and live on, and on, to the end of time. Blessed be his memory!

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

ELON LETTER.

Business has been called sordid and selfish till most people look upon a business man who succeeds as a sort of Shylock, and upon one who fails as too good to succeed. Yet we must make our living through business, and only those who succeed in their business can provide out of their surplus the funds necessary to promote philanthropic and other Christian enterprises.

Is it not possible that the idea which we have heard from childhood that business and religion are antagonistic is a mistaken one? The very fact that successful business men are the Church's hope of progress should certainly cause us to pause and carefully consider.

We sometimes hear it said that certain organized groups of radicals criticise the Church as a conscience club of the rich and well-to-do, with scant place or sympathy for the poor. A great Christian layman, Roger W. Babson, has completely answered this charge. He declares the Church ought to make business men prosperous, since it teaches the only sure principles of business success. Babson's idea is the true one—that men are successful in business because they are in the Church and not in the Church because the Church favors successful business men.

Babson goes on to say that business is fundamentally and essentially religious. With this view, I am in hearty agreement, both on the ground of theory and on the surer ground of personal knowledge of business men with whom I am intimately acquainted. There is nothing sordid about these men nor about their principles of business ethics.

The creed of business, as I have discovered it from contact with some of the ablest business men of our day, is essentially a religious creed; and what is more with them, creed is incarnated in action. They are not satisfied to pronounce certain talismanic principles according to set formulas and rest in happy contemplation after such pronouncement. They are not much given to pronouncements of any kind, but they are insistent on living in conduct the ideals they have espoused.

The religion of business as I have been able to interpret it is a platform of five cardinal planks. The first and basic element is faith, or what the business man calls credit. The motive that prompts to action is service. The method of achieving that motive is co-operation, a business term for what the Church calls brotherhood. The law of business is the Golden Rule, what Babson calls the law of action and reaction, according to which men do mete out to you as you have measured to them. And the goal of business is character, character of product produced as well as character in the operative who aids in the production of the product and in the consumer who uses it. Faith, Service, Co-operation, the Golden Rule, and Character (I write them advisedly with capitals)—such are the cardinal principles of the creed of the business man, a mighty good religion I take it, and especially when you recall that basic in the business man's faith is his recognition of God. "I would not live in a universe without God," one of them recently declared to me.

I write this not to defend business, but to encourage and comfort the business man. I want every man who labors with his hand or with his brain to feel that in his daily work he is co-operating with God and that there is nothing sordid or unclean about his occupation. God needs business men, religious business men who regard themselves as exemplifying in their daily life the spirit of "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." The notion that one form of endeavor is higher or lower than another is pagan, not Christian. Business men can honor God in selling goods, in farming, in building houses, in digging ditches, in publishing newspapers or books just as surely as those who give all-time Christian service as a life-work. With God, there is no respect of occupations. It is the spirit with which we labor that counts with Him.

W. A. HARPER.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE FINANCES.

SUN readers, generally, especially within the bounds of the North Carolina Conference, know that the Conference, which is to be resolved into three conferences as soon as all financial obligations of the Conference at the time of the decision to divide—no further debts were to be contracted—should be met, all such readers know that that indebtedness consisted of two obligations. One of these obligations was a debt of twelve hundred and fifty $1,250) dollars, taken over from the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and the other was a balance of a pledge of twenty-two hundred and fifty $2,250) dollars to aid in building a Church at Clayton, N. C.

I write this to say that it is possible to finish paying these two obligations this Conference year. This can be done by every Church's doing its best to bring up in full as much home mission money to the annual Conference as its apportionment for that purpose was in 1922. This is the present status of the two items of indebtedness cited above: the first item ($1,250) has all been paid except five hundred and twenty-five ($525) dollars and interest thereon since December, 1923, and the second ($2,250) has all been paid except one note of five hundred and fifty ($550) dollars and interest thereon since July 10, 1922. The amount of these two outstanding obligations—principal and interest—will be, December 12, 1924, at which time it is hoped all Conference funds for 1924 will be in the treasurer's hands, eleven hundred and eighty-nine ($1,189) dollars.

The president of the North Carolina Conference believes that with these facts before us and with every Church of the North Carolina Conference doing its best to help meet these obligations by the end of this Conference year, the balance ($1,189) can be paid this year. I am of his opinion, and I am hoping to see each of the three Conferences able to be free from all home mission debt by the beginning of the year 1925.

Brethren, let's pay it off.

Elon College, N. C. W. P. LAWRENCE,
Treasurer Home Mission Board.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

I have read Dr. Harper's articles on the budget or financial system with a great deal of pleasure. His endeavors to have the budget system adopted in the Christian Church find in me a hearty response, and it is my desire to be among those to give heart to these efforts, if you will permit me. My conception of the ideal Church is one in which every member is making some contribution at stated intervals, however small that contribution may be. By giving, one achieves a two-fold purpose. First, he acquires the habit of giving, thereby developing a knowledge of and an interest in the various objectives of the Church. Only by this method can we be reasonably assured that the Church of the future will be devoid of financial slackers and rise to the point of highest spiritual efficiency. Second, only by this method can the Church be assured of a steady income. A steady income practically guarantees every department against financial embarrassment. It insures that each dollar will accomplish the utmost that is possible. Knowing the approximate income available, each department can outline a complete definite yearly program.

A budget system of some kind has been devised and adopted by practically every large business house in the country, and almost every county and State, and even our national government has found this system good, wise and economical. It appears to me that the business administration of our Church should be based upon this plan of efficiency, and I hope to see some kind of budget system adopted at our next Convention.

W. LUTHER CATES.

Burlington, N. C.

BUDGET PLAN FOR CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

I have read with much interest the articles on the proposed budget system." Any business, to succeed, must have an up-to-date system, and the Church, in its great business of trying to save souls, should have the very best system that is to be had. As a general proposition, I think the plan a good one if it can be worked out, though I fear that unless it can be simplified somewhat it will be rather difficult to do so. There is also a possibility of the cost of operating being considerable. I do not object to expense if you can get results, for there is more or less expense attached to any undertaking which succeeds, and if you get the desired results, the expense will be justified.

We have the budget system in our local Church. It works fine, and is the only way to get satisfactory results.

If the plan can be simplified somewhat and the cost of administration can be held down, I think it is along the right lines.

Burlington, N. C. J. M. FIX.

THE BUDGET.

I have not written on the proposed budget because I believe the next Southern Christian Convention should project nothing new along financial lines. That Convention should give one entire day to the Men and Millions Movement, and a good part of that day to prayer. The time for payment of pledges will probably be extended to May 1, 1926, or longer, and the overshadowing question is how to collect these pledges. One mistake we have made is not to give the plan a fair trial before projecting another plan. Let us stick to our plan. It is reported that the plan is unpopular in certain sections. If so, why? Why is it unpopular to support all enterprises of the Church? Why is it unpopular to keep one's obligations? What kind of an inheritance will we leave our children? Will it be broken obligations to each other and to God?

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

BURLINGTON.

The Burlington Church was organized on February 16, 1884, or forty years ago the 16th of this February. Several weeks prior to this date, it was decided that the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the Church should be fittingly observed. To this end, plans were made for the observance of the day on the 17th instant, the Sunday nearest the exact anniversary date.

The thought of this occasion took hold of the minds and hearts of our people, who co-operated splendidly with the pastor in making the day one of real joy, uplift and inspiration to this Church. And three or four weeks of earnest, intensive work preparatory to this event brought results that made our hearts leap with joy. The Church has been greatly strengthened by the work done, the inspiration received, and the splendid increase in membership.

The weekly Church bulletin for Sunday, February 24th, one week after the anniversary, had the following to say of the day:

Last Sunday was a day of joy and inspiration to the members of this congregation. The occasion was the observance of the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the Church, and a goal of forty new members—one new member for each year of the Church's history—had been set for the day. Much earnest work had been done preparatory for the day, and a spirit of high expectation was in evidence. With the work done and the spirit of expectation that prevailed, a fine atmosphere for a good day was provided. With Drs. Smith and Staley as speakers for the day, with other prominent ministers and laymen to take part in the program, all were assured of something out of the ordinary. They were not disappointed in the results of the anniversary service. Sixty members were received at the morning service, making the present membership of the Church 487.

In commenting upon the day, one member said: "The greatest day in the history of our Church"; another remarked, "All other days fade into insignificance in comparison"; another exclaimed, "Let's have another like it." One new member was heard to say: "The day was an inspiration to my life."

All in all, the day was so full of good things that it cannot be soon forgotten. We should thank God, take courage, and go forward.

G. O. LANKFORD.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES FOR MARCH.

Mt. Bethel—Wednesday, March 12th.
Apple's Chapel—Thursday, March 13th.
Graham—Sunday, March 16th.
Martha's Chapel—Tuesday, March 18th.
Wake Chapel—Thursday, March 20th.
Pope's Chapel—Friday, March 21st.
Mt. Auburn—Sunday, March 23rd.
Shallow Well—Tuesday, March 25th.
Park's Cross Roads—Thursday, March 27th.
Ingram, Va.—Sunday, March 30th.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

IS YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL IN THIS LIST?

Our Southern Christian Convention and all of our Conference Sunday School Conventions have repeatedly voted that every Sunday School in the Convention give one Sunday's offering a month to the Orphanage and one Sunday's offering a month to missions, the offerings on the other two Sundays per month to be retained by the school for local and current expenses. The following schools the past year, 1923, proved themselves loyal to this decision of their Church:

Timber Ridge, Va.; Berea (Norfolk); New Lebanon, Wentworth, N. C.; Linville, Va.; Johnson's Grove, Sedley, Va.; Rock Stand, Roanoke, Ala.; First Church, Portsmouth, Va.; Graham, N. C.; Wadley, Ala.; Holy Neck, Holland, Va.; Pleasant Grove, News Ferry, Va.; Burton's Grove, Wakefield, Va.; Shallow Ford, Burlington, N. C.; Winchester, Va.; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga.; Richland, Ga.; Henderson, N. C.; First Church, Raleigh, N. C.; Bethlehem, Suffolk, Va.; Leaksville, Va.; Durham, N. C.; New Providence, Burlington, N. C.; Berea (Nansemond), Va.; Reidsville, N. C.; Liberty (Vance), N. C.; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.; New Elam, New Hill, N. C.; Wakefield, Va.; Holland, Va.; Rosemont, Berkley, Va.; High Point, N. C.; Bethlehem, Timberville, Va.; South Norfolk, Va.; Beulah, Girard, Ala.; Dry Run, Seven Fountains, Va.; New Lebanon, Elberon, Va.; Christiana, Dadeville, Ala.; Suffolk, Va.; Piney Plains, Cary, N. C.; Chapel Hill, N. C.; Ramseur, N. C.; Union, Virgilina, Va.; Haw River, N. C.; Sanford, N. C.; Wentworth, N. C.; Lebanon, Semora, N. C.; Zion, Moncure, N. C.; Ambrose, Ga.; Pleasant Hill (Alamance), N. C.; Cragford, Ala.; Union, Dendron, Va.; Antioch, Harrisonburg, Va.; East End, Newport News, Va.; Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C.; Hanks Chapel, Pittsboro, N. C.; Pleasant Union, Lillington, N. C.; Monticello, Brown Summit, N. C.; People's, Dover, Del.; Morrisville, N. C.; Palmyra, Edinburg, Va.; Franklin, Va.; Hines Chapel, McLeansville, N. C.; Citizen's Class, Elon College, N. C.; Turner's Chapel, Sanford, N. C.; Roanoke, Ala.; Burlington, N. C.; Norfolk, Va.

These schools sent to us as missionary offerings one-half for home and one-half for foreign, a total of $5,348.50 during the year 1923. I am sure Bro. Johnston has received a far larger sum than this from these schools for the Orphanage. If one of these schools is poorer in purse or in membership or in progress because of these offerings, I would certainly love to know it. I am sure they are the richer and better for it. Moreover, every member of these schools has the joy of knowing that he or she has had a part in building up and carrying forward our mountain work, to which every penny of the home mission money went the past year, and also of helping to build our kindergarten and night school in Japan, to which every penny of the foreign mission money from the schools went the past year.

What great things we could accomplish during the good year 1924 if every Christian Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention would decide, as a new year resolution, to begin the year right, prove itself loyal to its Convention, and give one Sunday's offering to the Orphanage and one to missions. Again and again the testimony has come that Sunday Schools undertaking this program find ample income from the offering of the other two Sundays to pay their local and current expenses. Just why our Sunday Schools cannot see their way clear to adopt such a program is difficult to understand. I have no doubt but that the schools not on this list are doing a great and a good work; but what have they accomplished definitely for their Church and its enterprises beyond their own doors? In union and co-operation there is strength and there is conquest, and what our Convention is trying to do is to secure united effort on the part of all our schools for some worthy and definite undertakings.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

ADDED TWO GOOD SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the long and growing list of our good Sunsay Schools giving one offering a month to missions, please add that of Apple's Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., Rev. C. E. Gerringer, pastor. The first check came under date of February 23rd, with this note: "Our Apple's Chapel Sunday School has voted to give an offering one Sunday a month to missions, and one Sunday a month to the Orphanage." Quite a few of our schools since January 1st have, by vote, added themselves to the list, and here is devoutly hoping that the good work will continue till every Sunday School in all our Southern Convention will be in this list of honor and benevolence. We are grateful to the good folks of Apple's Chapel Sunday School and to all the others who have made and are making this good decision.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

P. S.—Since writing the above, the following arrives: "Our Sunday School at Shallow Well has decided to give the fourth Sunday's offering to missions. Am enclosing $7.25 for February." Thank you, Bro. Frank (Watson); your school will never regret doing this good deed. Now, on each fourth Sunday May some one of your splendid young men or young women give your school a five-minute talk or paper on "Missions."

J. O. A.

NORFOLK, VA.

How swiftly the months go by! Five of them have been and gone since first I began to serve in Norfolk. Five months full of fear and trembling, they have been. But, with the fear and trembling, there has been an ever-increasing confidence in God and His people in the First Christian Church of Norfolk. The Church here has done many very kind things for me in their efforts to make me comfortable and happy. But far better than this, they have listened with patience and seeming approval to the plans for a larger spiritual development at home and an increasing activity abroad. I have found here a people ready to follow a leader not simply in the things that are easy to do, but into things calling for sacrifice.

At the close of last year we were facing a deficit of more than $200.00 as our Conference apportionment was not in hand nor had we paid anything toward our subscription to the Norfolk Council of Churches during the year. Of course, this Church went to Conference with its apportionments in full, as it always does; and since then it has paid its nearly two years of arrears to the Norfolk Council of Churches. In the meantime, the Church has been curtailing a small debt which had been hanging over it for several years. A recent report from its treasurer showed that, since October, this debt had been curtailed by $157; that a proportionate part of the next Conference apportionment is being set aside each week; that all its current bills were paid, with nearly $200 in the treasury. Since that report, Bro. L. C. Ives has presented the Church with $500, which in itself pays all the Church's indebtedness and leaves a neat little sum in the treasury. Since October, about $2,000 has been subscribed toward a still better equipment here. This subscription has been voluntary among the men's Bible classes without any Church-wide campaign.

Other forward-looking steps remain unspoken of, about which you may hear in another article. In the brief year in which Bro. Flory was here, he sowed seed which are ripening already unto harvest, not to mention the arduous labors of the many other faithful predecessors, one of whom laid down his life for these people as willingly and gloriously as ever a soldier died for his country. I am glad and honored to follow in the footsteps of each of my predecessors, and I am honored and glad to be the servant of so good a people.

John G. Truitt.

THE TOMB OF TUT-ANKH-AMEN.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

On November 4, 1922, the eyes of the whole world turned towards the Valley of the Kings, in ancient Egypt, for the greatest discovery in archaeology of modern times was made that day The tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen was found, and within it a great collection of wonderful objects preserved since the day of Egypt's imperial age. Here one could look again upon the royal treasures of the most highly civilized land of its time; a land that was in the full tide of its glory when Moses lived in Egypt; when Joseph was prime minister of Pharaoh. It was opening the pages of history of a period fifteen hundred years before the day of Christ Himself. Here was a tomb that had been undisturbed for thirty-five hundred years, and that brought down to us with startling and almost painful distinctness the customs and crafts of a people almost forgotten in the rush of modern times.

The first full account of this happening is contained in a book just issued by George H. Doran Company, of New York, and called "The Tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen," written by Howard Carter, the discoverer of the tomb, assisted by A. C. Mace, of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. It is a large book of over three hundred pages and over one hundred illustrations of the objects taken from the tomb, and has a frontispiece of the late Lord Carnarvon, whose tragic death after the discovery called forth so much discussion.

The book goes into the history of King Tut and his queen, the story of the Valley of the Kings as a royal burial place, the events that led up to the great discovery, a vivid description of the opening of the tomb, and full accounts of the treasures that were found, together with an account of how these were removed and finally transported to Cairo.

The book sells for five dollars, and it is safe to say that it would be difficult to find more thrills than this book contains for any like investment. Beginning with the descend of sixteen stone steps, passing on into the forty-foot passage under the rocks until one finally comes out into the four underground chambers, with a total size of say 40x50 feet, with the four rooms known as the antechamber, the sepulchral hall, the annex, and the store-chamber, all connected, the story and record is one almost unbelievable for its wonder but for the actual facts before us.

Tut-Ankh-Amen's reign was about 1375 to 1350 B. C., to be as exact as we may with our present knowledge. His tomb is the only one, so far as now known, that escaped serious damage from the bandits and robbers that, through the centuries, sought the buried treasures of the pharaohs. In the rock tombs of Deir el Bahari, hidden from these robbers, were found, in 1875, forty or more mummies of the dead pharaohs, but stripped of their royal burial treasures. In 1881, these mummies were removed to the Museum at Cairo, Egypt, where they still rest. The tomb of King Tut alone seems to have escaped the ravages of time, and the robbery of unscrupulous thieves.

To give some idea of the vast treasures of this tomb, let us name a few of the objects found therein: painted casket, alabaster vases, king's sceptres, king's throne and footstool, couches, rich corslets, necklaces, golden shrines, cups, inlaid caskets, solid ivory jewel box, scarabs, pendants, walking-tsicks covered with gold, bows, stools, needlework, etc. Hundreds of splendid objects of almost fabulous value, and priceless, as throwing light upon the civilization of the days of ancient Egyptian glory long before the day of Christ's coming to earth. It is easily possible that the portion of the tomb that has not yet been examined will reveal treasures of even greater value than those already found. It staggers the imagination to try to grasp the value of all this treasure from either the standpoint of its intrinsic value, or as throwing light upon the days of Egypt's ancient glory and the customs of that far-off time.

Weeks were spent in clearing even one room, and the work that still remains to be done will take quite a long time. Scholars will labor for years upon the mass of objects before their full story can be completely told, and all the restorations made. The setting up again of the king's chariots will be a task of perhaps months. To get the full scientific story it is necessary to make measurements and drawings, take notes, make photographs, restore decayed parts, and proceed with all the work with minute care, that nothing be lost.

The book is a timely one, for public interest demands all the information that has been secured to date. This volume will serve to awaken still greater interest in this most wonderful discovery, and will prepare the way for a great fund of information that will be drawn therefrom concerning the days of the pharaohs when the Nile washed the shores of their wonderful empire.

THE POTENT INFLUENCE OF THE LIFE OF JESUS.

We have absolutely no authentic history of the early kings of ancient Rome. So far as the story is handed down in writing, it is hopelessly legendary and mythical—destitute of all trustworthy information. We learn what we know of that far-off period not from historical tradition, but by means of inference from the institutions known to have existed soon after. The structure of society, the laws of the State, the religious customs, the family relation, art, architecture—all these, which we find fully formed and in action when first trustworthy annals come to be, do testify of a civilization and development governing and unfolding before the true record appears. The same is true of the transformations of our planet; no account is handed down, and yet the geologist reads the true story in every tilted layer of rock, in every petrifaction of tree or animal; because every unknown past leaves behind works which live and act in a known present, and reveal the quality of that past.

Is there any reason why we should not apply this historic principle with a wide and permanent application to the life of Him who said: "Believe me for the very works' sake?" I am sure if we could get to the real heart of the faith and reverence of Christendom today, we should find that these qualities do not rest simply upon the fact that our short biographies of Jesus were written centuries ago. Such reverence and faith rest rather on the ineffacable consciousness of mankind that Jesus has written His life and power in fair and noble characters upon more than nineteen hundred years of human experience; and that He is doing the same thing today, and here, and everywhere. Manuscripts may be altered, or the history and formation of them may be concealed by the mists of antiquity; but moral and spiritual force and truth, put into the life of the race, abide and testify of their source and giver.

We live in a period of questioning—when there are th osewho would put after every statement of Christian history an interrogation point. Certainly, I cannot agree with this manner of questioning, which demands of Christian annals what it would demand of nothing else; for when the last historic inquiry shall have been made, and the last words of criticism spoken, we shall be compelled to believe as much as this: that the gospels were written by persons who had an intimate connection with the planting of Christianity; that what they write they wroe from honest conviction; and finally, and most important, that what they wrote unconsciously reveals a character infinitely larger, loftier, and more spiritual than their own. For the sake of argument, suppose we entertain all the questions, consider all the doubts, put the interrogation point wherever an objector desires, and as often as he desires it. Have we lost Jesus? Has that influence, so strong and tender, so attractive and inspiring, taken its final departure? It certainly has not, for real works last, and genuine spiritual principles and influences cannot pass away. It is this reality of the Christ that has given him the most permanent and prominent place in human interest, and makes him the mightiest force in the moral universe. Great changes of opinion come with the years, but no change can affect the sway of such a genuine life as His, so full of spiritual help and inspiration.

The ideal life which Jesus gave to the world as a perpetual witness that He once lived and that He was worthy of the greatest love and reverence, has become so deeply embedded in human consciousness that men cannot do away with it. No matter now about the biographies; no matter about the traditions; no matter what you believe or do not believe of these—as much as all this is indeed certain, in the earliest Christian years of which there is a sure record, a new and higher conception of holy living meets you everywhere. This ideal life did not simply express the spiritual standards of the Jew, Roman, Stoic or Greek of its own time; neither could it have come from the earlier Christians themselves, for neither they nor we have been able to reach up to that great pattern of divinest life. It bears witness that the Son of God taught and lived this imperishable moral ideal—there is no other adequate explanation.

How immortal are his teachings—how applicable to the errors, needs, and duties of men in every age and clime! Here in the New Testament are those wonderful parables, which have delighted and instructed sixty generations of the old and young. The Sermon on the Mount, which is a whole volume on ethics and religion, is compressed into a dozen pages. How seriously it unfolds the whole philosophy and duty of prayer; the grace of charity; the supremacy of the heavenly treasure over the earthly; to the inwardness and depth of the better life in man, each beatitude bears its own separate witness. Where shall we find profounder glimpses of man's divinest life than in the Gospel of John, called "the heart of Christ?" We are sorry if it should be true, that we are not sure of the authorship of the four gospels, and of the time they were written and whether their original garb was Hebrew or Greek, for naturally we would like to be sure about the unimportant details; but should we not be able to supply any of this long-desired evidence, yet the Great Teacher is there. He who spake as God gave him wisdom has written his mark on every page. Had but one of the great Philippics of Demosthenes come down to us, and with no certain history attached, should we not know that in Greece's extremity there spake an orator at whose feet the lovers of eloquence might wisely sit. I read my Bible, and I know that Jesus walked with God; that the volume of truth and duty was to him an open book; that his words were light and life; that he must have spoken with authority, and not as the scribes. For nineteen centuries this Word, this life, has been a force in the personal experience, and a force in the great common life of humanity—a stream of energy forever flowing, forever unexhausted. Men's ways of thinking, their rules of action, their best hopes for this world or the next, their dreams of progress yet to be, their very laws—all that makes the basis and the texture of civilization, felt and feels its potent influence.

The world before Jesus' day had been unconsciously preparing for a great fresh influx of spiritual life. The Roman conquest had melted into one countless and warring principality, so the whole world was open to the great-hearted missionary of the truth. The old faiths, the old rituals, were losing their power; minds and hearts were growing more hospitable to the fresh message which had in it rationality plus life. The world waited for a mighty personality, a soul in whom God's spirit dwelt; in whom was a knowledge of the truth, a love of man, and a bright vision of a nobler future. And it found all in the prophet of Galilee; and His works, seen in a better civilization, and seen in a truer form of religion, and seen in purer lives, bear witness of Him. Men believe in Him and cherish His influence, not simply because of what is written, but because of His own wonderful personality, which has poured itself without stint into the world's life. The final law in all well-ordered life is the principle of truth which expresses the love and wisdom of Him who created us. But never does a principle of truth come home with such power as when it is incarnated in living excellence. Take the person who has risked all, and lost all, to save another; here virtue takes on reality. The fountains of the great deeps of sympathy are broken up—you admire, you reverence, you imitate. Christianity proposes to bring men into contact with a personality which has in all the Christian era provided to be full of spiritual powers. One can hardly estimate the loss to the race, and to the individual, if in all the Christian centuries we could have excluded enthusiasm for Jesus' personality, and replaced it by a cool and sensible acceptance of truth, in which there was not one heart-throw. That wondrous life has filled the Christian ages with its work, and has flooded the Christian consciousness with its ideal of holy living. What most of us need is not more knowledge, but more warmth, more zeal, a clearer conviction of the reality and worth of a better life—more true heart-throbs.

Graham, N. C. S. L. Beougher.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 16, 1924.

Topic: "The Reign of David."

Lesson: 1 Sam. 16; 2 Sam. 24.

Golden Text: "I delight to do Thy will, O my God."—Psa. 40:8.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 24:3-10.

Our lesson committee should be arrested for speeding. And then they should be convicted and heavily sentenced. For they are trying to go so fast that they have assigned forty chapters for today's lesson. Think of it—forty chapters for a forty-minute (or less) lesson period! And those forty chapters about David! There is enough material in these chapters for forty days, and then there would be some to spare. I protest against such a policy, even if they are trying to give a connected account of Old Testament history. Pupils—nor teachers—will never get any connected account of Old Testament history when they take forty chapters at one time. I repeat it, I protest against such a policy.

And now that I have aired my grievances, I am going to do the only practical thing to be done under the circumstances—give a brief resume of the reign of David and a brief discussion of the lesson as printed.

The story of David is one of absorbing interest and religious value. It begins with the homely scene at Bethlehem, where Samuel, the ageing prophet, annoints David as Saul's successor, not on outward appearances, but on God's approval. Then follows the experiences at Saul's court as a musician. The inimitable story of the mere lad's victory over the giant still grips the interest of the young and challenges the courage of the older. A tender element is added to the story in the account of the friendship between David and Jonathan. Then follows the events at Saul's court, the growing jealousy of Saul, David's flight, the forming of a band of followers, David's magnanimity in twice sparing the witch, and culminated in his suicide on Mt. Gilboa, and David's lament over Saul and Jonathan. This ends the first period of David's life.

The events connected with David's life as king are just as interesting as those connected with his early life. He is made king of Judah at Hebron and reigned for seven and a half years. Later he was made king of Israel, and in his person the two kingdoms became one, at least in name. David took Jebus or Zion, fortified it, and made it his capital. He promoted peace within his own borders, developed the country, and made successful foreign conquests. Perhaps most important of all, he brought the ark to Jerusalem. Soon thereafter he committed his grievous sin which involved him in such far-reaching consequences. His son Absalom rebelled against him and established for a while a kingdom. David was forced to flee for his life, but in a battle between the two forces, David's army was victorious and Absalom was slain. David returned as king, spends the last years of his life in strengthening his internal affairs, and in wars against his foes. So much for a brief history of this great man's life.

The lesson as printed is suggestive. David had had it in his heart to build a house for God. Unlike so many people, he saw the disparity between his own fine home and the temporary house of God. And at first Nathan had told him that he was to do what was in his heart. But the Lord had something to say—prophets then, as today, sometimes spoke without the Lord—and He said that, not David, but his son should build the house. He did assure David, however, that his kingdom should be established forever.

David's reaction is exemplary. In spite of the fact that he had had it in his heart to build the temple, and had even gathered some material, he bowed graciously to the Lord's will. Furthermore, he blessed the Lord for all that He had done for His humble servant, a man whom He had taken from the sheep-cote and lifted to the throne. We who are like sulky children when our wills are crossed will do well to read the seventh chapter of 2 Samuel again and again.

A Few Thoughts from the Printed Lesson.

(2 Sam. 7:18-26; 8:14-15.)

1. It is a good thing to "sit before Jehovah."
2. Every really great man is humble.
3. Jehovah keeps His word.
4. God rewards His servants, not according to justice, but according to mercy.
5. God has a purpose for men and nations.
6. One man plans; another does the work.
7. Leaders should execute "justice and righteousness unto all their people."

(Space forbids me to list the lessons that might be drawn from the forty chapters assigned for today. Nor have I made any attempt to delineate the character of David. I have simply given a brief historical survey of his reign.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

March 16, 1924.

Topic: "The Bible in all the world—How it is sent forth, and what it does."

Lesson: Psa. 43:1-5.

As Sir Walter Scott lay dying, he said to his son, "Bring me the Book." His son replied, "Father, what book?" Scott replied, "Son, there is only one Book for a time like this. Bring me the Bible." This great man voiced the sentiments of humanity when he said "the Book." For in spite of the fact that there are books and books—of the making of books there is no end—the Bible is the Book.

There is much discussion now in regard to this Book. There are some who think that it is antiquated and has no message for our age. There are others who hold such a view of it that makes it difficult for them to face a few facts that must be faced. There are those who think of the Book in ordinary terms. There are others who make of it a fetish and a book of magic. Let us consider this Book as to its nature, its distribution, and its mission or function.

1. What the Bible Is.

It is a Book of books; a library of sixty-six books. It has many different authors, with different interests, and it was written over a period of hundreds of years. And yet there is a unity about it that is very remarkable.

It has a wide range of literary subject-matter. There are stories, history, travel, poetry, prose, codes of ethics, law, philosophy, biography, and even humor in it. So far as style is concerned, there is nothing in all literature that surpasses the King James Version.

It is, however, pre-eminently a Book of religion. It makes no claim anywhere to being an authority on every subject. Much of the confusion today is due to the fact that men have tried to make the Bible an authority on any and all matters. The interest of the Bible is in religion. And here it is an absolute authority. It finds men in their inner-lives, and meets their deepest needs. It is the Word of God in a very real sense.

2. How the Bible is Distributed.

The Bible has by far the largest distribution of any book published. Over thirty million copies per year are sold. It is printed in seven hundred and twenty-five languages and dialects. In the last ten years, an average of one book of the Bible has appeared in a new language every six weeks. It can be bought for a few cents—single books of it come as low as one cent apiece—or it may cost many dollars. It is bound in all styles. It is read by all classes of men. It finds its way to all parts of the world. The American Bible Society alone spends $1,500,000 a year to send it to other lands. In some cases the Bible is printed in raised letters, so that blind people can read it. Hundreds of people read it every day, and many people carry it with them all the time. He who reads the Bible is keeping company with a host that no man can number.

3. What the Bible Does.

It teaches us about God, about man, about Christ, about sin, about salvation. It is the best book on religion.

It condemns. All forms of wrong and wrongdoing are condemned in this Book.

It enlightens. The writer said, "The entrance of Thy word giveth light." Thy word or law is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my pathway.

It inspires. Faith in God, in a man himself, and in a man's fellow-men; hope in this life and in the life to come; love for God and for man.

It strengthens. Against temptation, against doubt, for service.

It comforts. The sick, the discouraged, the bereaved.

It transforms. The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.

If these things be true—and they are true—we ought to read the Bible more. As Christian Endeavorers, we are pledged to read it every day. I shall never forget the advice a Christian gave me once. He said we ought to read the Bible through, pray it in, and work it out.

Some Pointed Questions.

1. When did you read your Bible last?

2. How often do you read it?
3. How much time do you spend with it when you do read it?
4. How do you read it?
5. Why do you believe it is the Word of God?
6. Does the Bible seem real to you?

A NEW CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

One of the happiest experiences I have had since doing field work among our Churches was a visit to my own Church—Fuller's Chapel—Sunday, February 17th. This Church is about twenty-five years old, and J. F. Coghill has been the faithful superintendent of the Sunday School almost every years since its organization. His health is so bad that he is unable to attend much of the time now, but the work goes on under the leadership of the assistant superintendent, Mr. I. J. Oakley. Mr. C. C. Woodlief, for a number of years, has had charge of the music there, and has led the children as well as the older people.

Sunday morning the Sunday School voted to give one offering per month to the Orphanage and one to missions. There was not a single opposing vote in this action, and they expect to get a great deal of pleasure out of this decision and to make the school grow.

After the class period, a senior Christian Endeavor Society was organized, with twenty-five members. The officers elected were: president, Miss Irene Woodlief; vice-president, Mr. Dolton Coghill; secretary-treasurer, Miss Verna Moss; chairman of social committee, Mrs. S. F. Coghill; chairman of prayer meeting committee, Mr. I. J. Oakley; chairman of lookout committee, J. F. Coghill, Jr.; chairman of junior committee, Mrs. Rob. Moss. There is a large group of young people in the community, and it was felt by the members of the new society that Christian Endeavor is the best way to train these young people. The junior committee is arranging to have a children's story hour, and to have them in charge of a special Christian Endeavor program once every two months.

A daily vacation Bible school for June was discussed, and plans will be made toward this end. The members of the Church are very much pleased and delighted with their new pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. A. H. Hook. Altogether, things look bright and hopeful for Fullers, and I am proud of the work that is being done there.

PATTIE COGHILL.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NOTES.

Two mission study classes have been started in the Greensboro First Christian Church. These are taught on Wednesday evenings by Dr. and Mrs. Rowland. A teacher-training class has also been started there.

The one-day schools of missions which are usually held in the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina Conferences in April are being arranged now. The program and the dates and places of meeting will be announced soon. Mrs. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, president of the General Woman's Mission Board of the Christian Church, has accepted an invitation to be present and help out with the program.

If you are interested in a daily vacation school for the children of your Sunday School, write your field secretary of religious education. It will be a glorious opportunity for the children. One-half hour or one hour per week is not enough time for the religious training of your children.

It is not too early to begin thinking of attending the Chautauqua and School of Method at Elon July 28th to August 3rd. The greatest program ever is being prepared.

REASONS WHY WE CANNOT ACCEPT THE MODERNISTS' VIEWS.

Every Christian, it is said, ought to be able to give a reason for the faith that is in him. It is equally true that if a man refuses to believe a thing, he should be able to give his reasons for not accepting such a thing, or thought, as he may refuse to accept. As a great many of our readers are not modernists, it has seemed wise to offer them a little help to know just why they cannot accept the modernists' views of the Bible and the Christianity which it teaches. Every one ought to have a reason for not believing a doctrine, and having it, he ought to be able to tell it.

The following has been compiled by Rev. R. B. Jones for the Wesleyan Methodist of Syracuse, N. Y.:

Thirty-Two Reasons Why the Destructive Criticise of the Old Testament Must be Rejected.

1. Because its founder was a sceptic.
2. Because, if the critics' theories be true, the Jews of the Old Testament times would have been aware of the case, and would have repudiated the suspected portions.
3. Because the literary method of the critics, when applied to literature belonging to their own times and language, has signally failed.
4. Because the critics' theories are simply the rehash of the theories of notorious infidels, such as Tom Payne, Voltaire, Bradlaugh, Ingersoll, etc.
5. Because its theories are in conflict with the explicit utterances of our Lord Jesus Christ regarding the Old Testament.
6. Because, in order to retain their theories, the critics have to assail the infallibility of Christ as teacher.
7. Because it has no single historical fact for its basis, but is built upon purely subjective assumptions.
8. Because every single fact of archaeological discovery is dead against their theories.
9. Because many of the first basal assumptions of the critics—such as the non-prevalence of writing in the time of Moses—have been proved to be false.
10. Because it cannot be that Germans and British, in the twentieth century A. D. know better than the ancient Jewish historians themselves.
11. Because it makes God the user of fraudulent forgery as a means of ancient revelation.
12. Because men of equal, and even superior, scholarship to the critics have shown their theories to be untenable.
13. Because it robs men of a chief desideratum, namely: an authoritative, complete, perfect, and final revelation from God.
14. Because while it pretends to remove intellectual hindrances to the acceptance of the Bible, it leaves no Bible worth accepting.
15. Because it creates more intellectual hindrances than it professes to be able to solve.
16. Because it leads none to Christ, but destroys the faith of many.
17. Because it is barren of evangelistic and spiritual effects and results.
18. Because it is the natural offspring of that unproven, unprovable, un-Scriptural, and God-dishonoring theory—Darwinism.
19. Because it inevitably leads to the relinquishing of fundamental Christian truths, such as the deity of Christ and His substitutionary, propitiatory atonement on the cross.
20. Because, in destroying the authority of the Bible, it takes away the foundation of Christian civilization, and leads to social and political anarchy.
21. Because the critics themselves cannot agree as to what they call the "assured results" of their investigations.
22. Because it proceeds on a rationalistic basis, which shuts out the supernatural and miraculous intervention of God in history.
23. Because recent scholarship is increasingly subverting the whole critical positon.
24. Because the critics dare not take cognizance of the many books published that riddle their whole structure.
25. Because not one of the critics, nor all put together, have sufficient knowledge to show that the Old Testament is not what it professes to be.
26. Because the critics willfully shut their eyes to all the evidence with which they cannot harmonize their theories.
27. Because it makes impossible the exercise of faith, faith which presupposes and demands an infallible word of God to rest on.
28. Because its methods and results are repugnant to the common sense of every unprejudiced mind.
29. Because having silenced the voice of God, it leaves the human race to the uncertain light of its own little intellect and philosophy, which can never lead it to God.
30. Because it is the modern expression of the serpent's insinuation to Eve: "Hath God said?" (Gen. 3:1.)
31. Because it is nothing but the latest presentation of age-long scepticism and infidelity in a Christian garb.
32. Because, so far from the human race having been at the outset a race of superstitions, polytheistic savages, as the critics teach—"the idea of God is clearer, simpler, and freer from mythological conceptions, as we penetrate more remotely into the past history of nations."—Mgr. Leroy, "The Religion of the Primitives."

A FINE BIBLE LESSON.

Study it well, and ask God to give you light from above. You wish to know the truth, that the truth may make you free—free to be and to do the right, and also free to shun the wrong; but if you would shun the wrong in fact as well as in name, you must see things as they are. Here is the lesson:

1. God commands it—"Ye shall be holy, for I am holy." (Lev. 11:4.)
2. Without it no man shall see God—"Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12:14.)
3. We must live it in this life—"We should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." (Titus 2:12.)
4. He that sins serves the devil—"He that committeth sin is of the devil." (1 John 3:8.)
5. The Christian is not a sinner—"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." (1 John 3:9.)
6. God wills our sanctification—"This is the will of God, even your sanctification." (1 Thess. 4:3.)
7. Jesus died for our sanctification—"Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate." (Heb. 13:12.)
8. It is for believers—"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" (Acts 19:2.)
9. We do not grow into it—"While Peter spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word." (Acts 10:44.) "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them." (Acts 11:15.)
10. It is a second definite work of grace—"Then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost." (Acts 8:17.)
11. It comes by faith—"Purifying their hearts by faith." (Acts 15:9.)
12. Beware of despising holiness—"For God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He, therefore, that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God." (1 Thess. 4:7-8.)

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

"Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His."—Rom. 8:9.

These are the words of the first interpreter of the Christian religion. It is a straightforward, emphatic, simple, dogmatic, solid, final statement. It is so plain that a child can read it and understand, and it is so much a fact that it does not admit of debate. There are no two sides to it.

What does it mean? Just this: One may know the Word of God from lid to lid; may join the Church, be baptized, be regular and precise at worship, partake of the Lord's Supper, have faith to remove a mountain, speak with the tongues of angels, know all mysteries, give all his wealth to charity, and even give his body to be burned at the stake—but if he has not the spirit of Christ he is none of His: he is not a Christian. Therefore, the beginning of the Christian life is not joining the Church, nor is it conformity to Church rites; it is the possession of the spirit of Christ. Everything of the kingdom of God depends upon this. The future of the Church and the glory of Christianity, yea civilization itself, hangs upon it; and if we fail to see it this way, our future course in life is bound up in misery.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for Thy manifold blessings that have come to us without any act or merit of our own. Reveal to us the greatness of the things that are in Christ and how we may possess them at no cost to ourselves except the exercise of love. In every thought and purpose of our lives enable us to hold before us the picture of our Saviour who was too good to stoop to wrong and never too good to help the poor and needy. Help us to follow His example. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRIST'S LAW OF RETALIATION.

"Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."—Matt. 5:39.

These words are a part of the first utterances of Jesus Christ, and they constitute a part of the standard which is set for the new race—the Christian—those living then and those yet to be born. He says the law of "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" is bestial, barborous and unlike the kingdom of God; that His purpose is to change men from this kind of life to saints, and that the only law by which it can be done is that of love. Therefore, we are told plainly, if we should receive an offense, in return we are to show love and act then and there in a way that will reveal that love and contribute most to the offending party.

There are just three ways of answering an offense, viz: revenge, flight, and "turning the other cheek." Revenge is barborous and has no element of Christianity in it and has no sanction from the Lord under any circumstances. It sometimes gives a sort of relief, but instead of lessening evil, it multiplies it. It is sinful to take revenge. Flight is cowardly and encourages the enemy to redouble his energies and pursuits. No good can be achieved in this. To "turn the other cheek"—Christ's way, in spite of its seeming absurdity—is the only way. This does not mean to merely stand up and take the second blow; but it does mean the doing of that which is necessary and possible to stop further wrong. "Cut the chain at its first link"; put out the fire at its beginning; kill the snake by stamping the egg—and be willing to be hit again if necessary in that effort.

Prayer.—Our Father, with the rising of the sun until the going down of the same, fill us with the Redeemer's spirit when we are amidst our enemies as well as when we are with friends. Help us to reveal the Christ's spirit at all times. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STICKING TO THE THING YOU HAVE PLANNED.

"Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin."—Eccl. 5:6.

Have you ever planned the every-day things which you must do every day in the order of their importance to your future life?

You have signed up for a certain number of lessons because you need the instruction; then nothing should interfere with that.

You have invested in the "daily dozen" because you know that you need a good physique; why skip the exercise for a single day?

You have agreed to teach a class in Sunday School; why get up too late to go? Better get the habit of 100 per cent attendance yourself if you want your pupils to be perfect.

You know a number of things which you would like to do, but which would not make or mar your life if they were omitted.

But this one says "come," and another say "go," and you are blown hither and yon and float with the tide which is stronger than you.

What is the result?

Six months or a year, wasted in getting the instruction you need to help you make a place for yourself in the world.

You do not practice and get full results for the money you have expended.

In other words, you waste money and time and get nothing valuable.

(Copyright, 1924, I. F. S., Inc.)

Prayer.—Dear Father, we pray that our weakness to put off what we have purposed to do, be strengthened to a constant and loyal endeavor to achieve what we have undertaken; that our fruit may abound, and that we may be made perfect in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MODERN CHRISTIAN "MIRACLES."

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do."—John 14:12-15.

We know the works that Christ did. He Himself enumerated them: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up." How could it be possible for "greater works" than thse to be wrought by His disciples? For His immediate followers He meant it literally. And they did perform miracles of healing, in rare cases even restoring the dead to life. Augustine takes the ground that physical and visual miracles were necessary for the faith of founding the Christian Church, but thereafter were discontinued, and he explains the "greater works" as consisting of healing the souls of men rather than their bodies.

But even now life is not without its miracles, for the marvelous is continually before us. One has said: "The gates of dawn swing open wide without a creak of the hinges." In every vestige of God's universe, glories beyond the comprehension of man manifest themselves. The continuous heart-beat that keeps the body alive is miraculous. Indeed, miracles are explained as simply the result of superior knowledge of the laws of life, of which it is said that science even now is gaining great insight.

And "Greater works than these shall he do (ye do)." How can this be? It can be this way: It is the work of changing man from the material to the spiritual. Christ stilled the storm; it is a greater work to bring peace to the storms of life, and that is our part. Christ made the lame to walk; it is a greater work to help the morally lame to walk morally right, and that is our work. He opened the ears of the deaf; it is a greater work to cause men and women to hear the word of God unto their salvation. He opened the eyes of the blind; it is a greater work to cause folks to see the way of life. He raised the dead to life; it is a greater work to raise the dead in sin to life in Christ. This is the greater work which is your and my task. Let no day pass without doing our best.

Prayer.—Father of all, teach us, Thy children, how to promote the work of our Saviour in the salvation of men. If our outlook is selfish, change it and make it brotherly, and make us to yearn for the well-being of our fellow-men, and give us souls for our hire. In Jesus name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

HIGHWAYS OF THE HEART.

"In whose heart are the highways (to Zion)."—Psa. 84:4.

All roads lead to the heart, and all roads come out of the heart. In other words, every one of us receives ideas from somebody's heart, and there is continually going out from our hearts roads of influences, and every one of us is choosing the way of the inner desire.

The psalmist is telling us of a man who had in his heart the highway to Zion. Now, the way to Zion is by the way of humility, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, obedience to law, sympathies, blessings, hate for sin, joy in righteousness. It i the way of one not thinking of his own advantages while he professes to please God. It is the way of one who is not pious by spasms, but who is constant and "always abounding in the work of the Lord." It is the way of one who looks for no applause while he does the Master's will. It is the way of loving God more than the treasures of this world. It is the way of resignation to His will, though it be through the "slough of despond." Let thy heart be filled with these highways where others may travel and reach heaven.

Prayer.—O Lord, our Lord, whose ways are right, help us this day to keep our hearts with all diligence. Help us to lead a life of perfection, watchful and suspicious of our errors and faults, and may we grow better and better every day according to the solemn admonition of our Saviour. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WITNESSING FOR JESUS.

"Exhort one another."—Heb. 3:12-15.

The Lord is not pleased with a Christian who keeps his mouth shut regarding his experience and is silent when he should let others know where he stands. What child will not talk up the family, or defend it, or, at least, acknowledge the family of which it is a member?

All we are brethren in the Lord, sojourners in Christian service together, and we are to edify one another each day by exhorting one another and helping one another on toward the city of God. Every one of us has some bit of personal experience that will help some one else—yes, perhaps inspire them; and it is so important that we accustom ourselves to doing so, that the apostle places it as necessary to keep us from falling away from the belief and being hardened by the deception of sin.

They who fear the Lord, most truly do exhort one another, and when they go to the Church to worship, they pray for and cultivate the infallible signs of consecrated heart-life. Witnessing to one another for the Lord gives a firm assurance of God's love and the softening humility of His blessed presence. This elevates all; but a failure to do it borders on cowardice, dishonors the Master and enfeebles one's own soul.

Prayer.—Our Father, we beseech Thee to keep alive and burning within us the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ. Strengthen our hearts and sanctify our lips to speak forth Thy praise, Thy helpfulness and Thy salvation to any at any time and anywhere. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."
Mark 2:27.

There can be no doubt that the ancient Mosaic Sabbath law after the coming of Christ was kept among all the Jewish Christians, for we are told that Christ and the apostles were constantly in the synagogue teaching and joining in the services of the seventh day. It is evident, however, that the Gentiles were not bound to this law (Col. 2: 16-17; Rom. 14:5-6). These kept the feast of the resurrection of our Lord, which was the first day of the week. The Jewish Christians kept both. This continued for many years, just as the Jewish Christians held on to the old rite of circumcision while at the same time they kept the ordinance of baptism in Christ. However, by slow degrees, this faded away, and the first day of the week remained alone as the weekly season for worship.

Today it stands not only as the commemoration of the day in which God in creation changed darkness to light, but the day in which Christ our Saviour arose and gave to the world the hope it had longed for centuries before. Thus, our Lord's day—the Christian's Sabbath—is far more illustrous than the seventh, the Jewish Sabbath. Like a shadow, the latter vanished when the temple veil was rent, and from this time on "the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath." That is our motive for observing it today. It denotes completed redemption. It is the one fundamental truth in which our Christianity rests. It is the one big stroke which gave to us the kingdom of grace. It is God's warrant for our eternity. On this day, the enthroned Lamb says: "Behold, I make all things new"; and if "any man be in Christ he is a new creation."

Prayer.—Our Father, draw us near to Thee today through Christ. Whatever there may be drawing us away from the proper observance, take it away, and we pray Thee to strengthen our faith against it, that we may not yield, but may pay our vows and devotions to Thee. Amen.

A SYSTEMATIC GIVER'S SURPRISES.

The Christian who begins to tithe or to practice stewardship in regard to his income will have at least seven surprises:

1. At the amount of money he has for the Lord's work.
2. At the deepening of his spiritual life.
3. At the ease with which he meets his own obligations.
4. At the pleasure he finds in larger giving.
5. At his satisfaction in the practice of stewardship in his time, his talents and all his possessions.
6. At himelf for not adopting the plan sooner.
7. At his new appreciation of the goodness of God.—Missionary Review of the World.

Try for yourself and see. Or, as the ancient writer put it, "Prove me, saith the Lord God, and see if . . ."

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Mr. L. Cass Ives, of Berkley, Norfolk, knows how to make us happy when we are carrying heavy burdens. He heard of the scourge of sickness we have had, and knowing that much sickness incurs much expense, he felt sorry for us, and shows this sympathy by mailing us his check for $500 to help make our burdens lighter and bring a ray of sunshine in our pathway. We are very grateful indeed to this dear brother, and only wish we had a hundred more of his kind.

The children are enjoying the beautiful snow today (February 27th). It is the first snow we have had. They enjoy playing in it so much that it looks cruel to keep them in and deny them the great sport and pleasure. We remember how we enjoyed it when we were little, and we have reached the conclusion that all children are very much alike, both in things they do and things they like. We have had so much bitter cold weather that we hope when the snow melts away that we will have some pretty days, so we can trim our fruit trees and begin to get something done toward our spring work.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Ladies' Aid Society, Sidney, Ind., 1 quilt; Harrisville Missionary Society, Union City, Ind., 1 quilt, clothing; Woman's Bible Class, Burlington Christian Church, 1 year's subscription to Youth's Companion, Christian Herald, Modern Priscilla; Ladies' Aid Society, Mansfield, Ill., Mrs. Cora Zeider, president, 3 nice comforts; Ladies' Aid Society, Ramseur Christian Church, 7 cakes for children in baby home; Class 3, Mrs. A. O. Harmon, teacher, Raleigh, N. C., curtains for matron's room in baby home.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR MARCH 6, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$2,179.54
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Liberty	$ .63
Wake Chapel	5.32
Bethlehem	2.60
Pleasant Hill	4.50
Pleasant Grove	3.00
Hopedale	3.45
New Providence	3.36
Liberty, Vance	3.25
Palm Street, Greensboro	6.61
Shallow Well	1.63
		34.35
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Suffolk	$ 25.00
Franklin	10.00
		35.00
Valley of Virginia Conference:
Winchester		5.32
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Rose Hill		2.71
Special Offerings.
Lula Little	$ 10.00
R. W. Thompson	25.00
Nettie Ray, board	18.00
Mrs. E. R. Davies	1.00
A Friend	5.00
Margaret F. Clark, sec.	28.00
Bertha Isley	5.00
L. Cass Ives, Norfolk	500.00
		592.00
Grand total		$2,848.92

ELON NOTES.

The annual missionary lecture course given here by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, began with a sermon at the preaching hour yesterday and will continue throughout the week at the chapel service on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

The topic for the Sunday lecture was "The Church Equipped for World Service." For the remainder of the week he will use the following subjects: Tuesday, "The Church Challenging to World Service"; Thursday, "The Church Contributing to World Service," and Saturday, "The Church Conquering in World Service." Dr. Atkinson is an eloquent speaker and his discourses are always highly instructive. He was at one time pastor of the college, and will be heard with great interest by the students, faculty members, and citizens of the town.

The annual celebration of the Clio Literary Society of Elon College was held yesterday on the anniversary of the birth of Washington. The students enjoyed a holiday from their college classes, social privileges were granted for the bigger part of the day, and the day was given over entirely to the Clio Literary Society, their public entertainment coming in the evening, following a special dinner in the college dining-halls.

For many years it has been the custom of the literary societies here to hold a public entertainment each year, and these occasions have grown to be red-letter days in the college calendar. The Clios this year presented as their entertainment "The Hut," a three-act comedy by Fannie Barnett Linsky, which was enacted especially well to be an amateur production, and which upheld the high standard of quality set by these occasions in past years.

Between the acts a series of interludes were carried on in the form of sketches, vocal solos, and instrumental music by Messrs. F. H. Prescott, W. M. Sexton, Clyde Rainey, J. H. Jones, Darden Jones, H. Richardson, and C. A. Pearce. The college orchestra furnished music for the occasion.

Promptly at 8 o'clock, J. T. Banks, president of the occasion, welcomed the audience in a brief speech, told them something of the work of the society and the aim of the annual entertainments, and made them feel that their presence was appreciated by the members of the society. Professor Greenwood, of the voice department, coached the production; W. C. Elder served as stage manager, and S. H. Abell as stage director.

Those taking part in the play were Chapman White, H. C. Hainer D. L. Beougher, W. S. Weathers, C. W. Dunn, A. L. Combs, W. A. Seawell, L. V. Watson, Garland Crews, Percy Hudson, and F. A. Rawles.

Marshals for the occasion were J. B. Guy, chief; D. L. Harrell and Fernando Bello.

The play opened by portraying a mountain cabin which had been turned into a sort of resort for the tired business man, a nerve restorer. A robbery, a tragedy, and a love story soon developed. Those three stories were all carried forward at one and the same time, and the humor that ran through them kept the audience at one minute on the verge of tears, and the next in uproarish laughter.

An especially enjoyable feature of the day was the special Clio dinner in the college dining-halls. The students were treated to a sumptuous spread. The dining-halls were decorated in red and white, the Clio colors. Pennants of the other literary societies adorned the walls, and a large picture of George Washington and Woodrow Wilson was placed at each end of the college dining-hall.

C. M. CANNON.

CRENSHAW.

Oliver Judson Crenshaw was born in Lancaster County, S. C., August 10, 1895, and died February 20, 1924; age 28 years 6 months and 10 days. Bro. Crenshaw was converted and joined the Baptist Church at the age of 14 years. Soon after moving to reidsville, he, with his wife, joined the Christian Church, and to say that he lived a Christian life is putting it mildly, for his life was more than the ordinary. He was a genial, companionable man. His friendship was perfect. He lived without enemies, yet he was firm in his convictions concerning the right. He lived in that ever-readiness for the call of his God. Never absent from Church or Sunday School. The Church and Sunday School were feeders to his soul, and each day he lived these before the world. He realized that if one was to live greatly that he must pay its price. As I think of his passing, heart-rending as it was, it was fitting indeed that he should be called away so suddenly. In an instant, without warning, an electric current took his life away.

Bro. Crenshaw made the world seem good. Love has grown larger to us all by knowing him. Faith, too, is more perfect. Bro. Crenshaw leaves to mourn his passing his dear wife and two small children, father, mother, five brothers and one sister. His body was taken to Rock Hill, S. C., for burial, where the funeral was held Friday, February 22nd. Funeral conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, assisted by Rev. Dr. Martin, of the Presbyterian Church. It is with sad hearts we say to thee: "Farewell, brother."

Who knows what nobler errands of His grace,
In ways untried, your eager hands fulfill;
Or if his feet, with swift, unwearied pace,
Tread the familiar paths before us still?

J. A. LEDBETTER.

Reidsville, N. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of Allen A. Lassiter, who departed this life two years ago today (March 4, 1922).

Precious one, we so much miss you
Since to Heaven you have gone to stay.
God relieved you of your suffering
Just two years ago today.

We often sit and think of you
When we are all alone,
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.

Today recalls our memories:
Our dear one laid to rest;
And those who still remember
Are the ones who loved you best.

WIFE AND CHILDREN.

Big News!

on buggies

Before you make a move, send for new 1924 catalog and see what BOHON offers you. Life long durability.

At Low Prices

Send for new FREE catalog

Backed by 50 years' square dealing, and Bohon's unlimited Guarantee. 60 days Road Test. You are satisfied or all your money is refunded. Get the new complete FREE catalog and see!

THE D. T. BOHON COMPANY - 60 Main St. - Harrodsburg, Ky.

FRECKLES

Quickly and Easily Removed During Winter Months With Othine--Double Strength

Why not rid yourself of those unsightly deep-seated freckles while the sun is not so active? Get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your drug or department store and apply like ordinary face cream. Thousands for over 15 years have gained a beautiful clear complexion by this simple, easy method.

At the same time Othine imparts that natural glow and color so much desired. Many use it every night in the year in place of cold cream and secure greater satisfaction.

Always ask for the double strength Othine—willingly sold on the money back guarantee.

THROAT IRRITATIONS

Throat irritations quickly disappear when you take Brown's Bronchial Troches. A dependable remedy—not a candy. Used for more than 70 years by singers and public speakers. Promptly relieves hoarseness, loss of voice, coughing. At all druggists.

JOHN I. BROWN, & SON, Boston, Mass.
General Sales Agents:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York..London..Toronto

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH and VOICE LOZENGES
IN 5 SIZE PACKAGES

FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.

Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

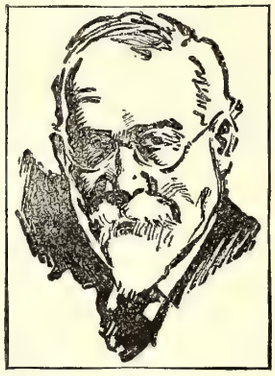
We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA



Doctor Tells How
NUXATED IRON
PUTS BACK INTO YOUR BLOOD VITAL ELEMENTS OF STRENGTH
Which are Wasted Every Day and Without Which You Become Weak, Nervous, and Run-down.

EVERY action of your daily life uses up a certain amount of strength, energy and nerve force, saps the iron from your blood and gradually steals away your youthful vigor and active usefulness. Unless you replace the iron which is constantly leaving the body, your blood stream loses the power to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain; it becomes thin, pale and watery and cannot provide proper resistance against disease.

If you feel weak, nervous and run-down it is simply because your food does not supply enough iron to make up for the daily waste of this vitally important health-building element. But physicians have found a way to quickly correct such conditions by prescribing a concentrated form of organic iron—Nuxated Iron — which contains iron like the natural iron in your blood.

Iron is the master principle, one of the vital elements of the blood and blood is life. By enriching the blood and creating new red blood cells, Nuxated Iron strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and power into the whole system.

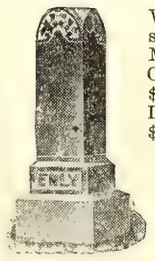
When you get up feeling tired in the morning; when you find yourself nervous, irritable and easily upset; when you can no longer do your day's work without being all fagged out at night; pains across the back and your face looks pale and drawn, do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration or until in your weakened condition you contract some serious disease. Simply try taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks and note the amazing change in your health, vigor, energy and endurance You should be astonished at the results in even a few days time. Success guaranteed or money refunded. At all druggists.

Salt Your Stock the Blackman Way

DO YOU TAKE SALT
with meals, or just fill up on salt once or
TWICE A WEEK?
A few licks of BLACKMAN'S Tonic Salt should be a part of the daily diet of your live stock. It is medicated and will improve digestion, make the feed go further, and keep them in healthy condition. So simple, so easy. Just drop brick in feed-box—it will do the rest.

The Blackman Stock Remedy Co.,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

$362.80 Commission on One Order



We offer a very attractive commission proposition to responsible men selling our line of guaranteed monuments, in Marble and Granite. On one deal our Mr. Fuller of North Carolina, made $362.80; Mr. Bryan of West Virginia, $206.25; Mr. Duncan, of Tennessee, $193.25; Mr. Willard, of Illinois, $131.25. We have many other agents making from $200.00 to $400.00 per month.

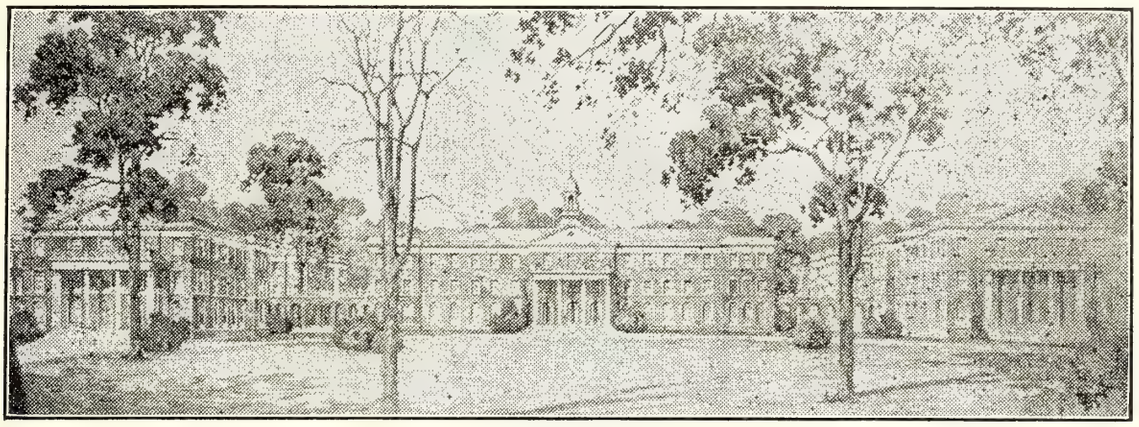
Our monuments are well finished. No trouble to sell. Write for full particulars and confidential contract.

National Marble & Granite Corporation
Dept. P., BALL GROUND, GA.

"As You Please," Responded Peter Blood, Captain of the Arabella—He Gave an Order—A Plank was Run Out Over the Vessel's Side, and—

Washington, D. C. (Special).—The adventures of this gallant soldier-of-fortune constitute one of the finest romances ever written—equal to Stevenson's "Treasure Island." It is by Sabatini, a writer whose fame is world-wide, and the name of it is "Captain Blood." It is one of the current best-selling books, which retails at $2, but those who read this notice can get it for 15 cents. The publishers of the Pathfinder, in order to acquaint new readers with their fast-growing national news weekly, which already has over half a million subscribers, will send their magazine 13 weeks, including this splendid serial, for only 15 cents. Besides giving the best of fiction, the Pathfinder keeps its readers informed on domestic and world affairs. It is a veritable mine of information on all subjects. There is no other magazine like it. Send your 15 cents without delay. This exciting story will begin in the January 5th issue. Address The Pathfinder, 143 Langdon Station, Washington, D. C.

Elon is Building for the Future



Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

Miller's Antiseptic Oil, Known as
Snake Oil
Will Positively Relieve Pain in a Few Minutes.
Try it right now for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lumbago, sore, stiff and swollen joints, pain in the head, back and limbs, corns, bunions, etc. After one application pain usually disappears as if by magic.
A new remedy used externally for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Influenza, Sore Throat, Diphtheria and Tonsilitis.
This oil is conceded to be the most penetrating remedy known. Its prompt and immediate effect in relieving pain is due to the fact that it penetrates to the affected parts at once. As an illustration, pour ten drops on the thickest piece of sole leather and it will penetrate this substance through and through in three minutes.
Accept no substitute. Manufactured by HERB JUICE MEDICINE COMPANY, Jackson, Tenn.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

GROW COTTON IN VIRGINIA
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown
Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.
Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.
Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.
For full information, address:
K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

TRAVEL INFORMATION
EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS
LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM
Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

RONEY.

Departed this life at her home, Haw River, N. C., Mrs. Nancy Elizabeth Roney, wife of C. H. Roney, February 21, 1924, in her seventy-third year. Her husband and one daughter survive her. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, devoted and true. The funeral services were from the home, conducted by the writer, and her remains were taken to the old burying-ground, Haw River, N. C., and there interred. A mother in Israel has fallen asleep. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

P. H. FLEMING.

Burlington, N. C.

CLAPP.

Mrs. Bettie E. Clapp, wife of John Clapp, died at her home in Graham, N. C., February 21, 1924, aged 67 years 5 months and 13 days. Her husband and six children survive her.

In early life, she united with Long's Chapel Christian Church, where she held her membership till called home. The funeral services were from the residence, conducted by the writer, and her remains were taken to Long's Chapel, her old home Church, for burial. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Burlington, N. C. P. H. FLEMING.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

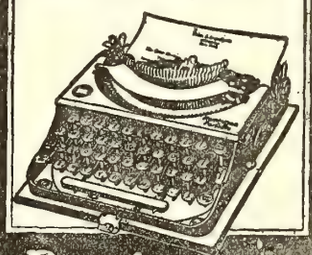
Something You Have Been Waiting For



Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high. Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

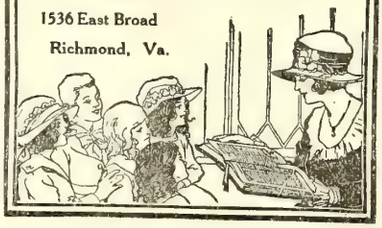
05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5⅛ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1924. | NUMBER 11.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Property Seized by Dry Agents.—

Property valued at $1,296,022 was seized in Georgia during the last two years, Director Dismuke advised Federal Commissioner Haynes. The property included 1,748 distilleries, 3,525 stills, 1,292 still worms, 40,445 fermenters, 340 automobiles, 6 wagons, 10 buggies, 24 mules and 5 horses. Taxes recommended for assessment in connection with the 3,434 prosecutions totaled $2,067,722.

First Conviction for Conspiracy.—

Report of the conclusion of the first trial which resulted in conviction for conspiracy to violate the prohibition law in Florida, was received by Prohibition Commissioner Haynes on February 5th. The case, involving a banker of Miami who died about two months ago, and three other citizens, was heard before Judge Mack. The jury, after deliberating but fifteen minutes, returned a verdict of guilty on all counts. Each of the three defendants was given a year in the penitentiary and a fine of $500.

French Chamber Passes Tax Bill.—

France, too, has been having a bitter fight over a tax-revision bill, but that country, less fortunate than the United States, is making its revision upward. The ministry's bill, just passed by the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 136, provides for an increase of 20 per cent in all taxes and for many fiscal reforms, so that it is calculated the national revenues will be increased by 4,500,000,000 francs and the national expenditures reduced by 3,000,000,000 francs, making a total improvement in the State's finances of 7,500,000,000 francs.

Rumblings of War.—

Europe awaits another Sarajevo incident, another excuse to spring to arms. One country has eight poison-gas factories, another eleven. An accident in a Dresden military laboratory cost the lives of seven workers who were experimenting with a new poison gas developed during the last few months for the German army. This gas is odorless, colorless and tasteless, all of which will add to its deadly effectiveness in war.

Marconi, the famous Italian inventor, has succeeded in harnessing the waves set in motion by radio energy, concentrating and directing electrical waves much as light is controlled and directed in a searchlight. The fearful possibilities of this new weapon will be known when excessively high power is put behind a radio beam directed at a powder magazine many miles distant.

In the next war, there will be no non-combatants. It is said that today 25 airplanes flying across New York City could, within three hours, suffocate every inhabitant.

Unless European countries learn to live side by side in peace and understanding, as have Canada and the United States, the future is indeed dark.—Dearborn Independent.

Belgium Starts for Dry Nation.—

Emil Vandervelde has announced in the Chamber of Deputies, Brussels, that he will move for the enactment of a dry law in Belgium after the pattern of the Volstead act. The announcement came in the course of a debate on the Theunis measure for increasing the duty on alcohol for consumption by 60 centimes a liter.

Mr. Theunis declared that the proposed increase would bring into the treasury about 9,000,000 francs. The measure was passed by a large majority. During the discussion, Mr. Vandervelde declared he would soon ask for the suppression of the provision for allowing private individuals to buy not less than two liters of alcohol in shops, when sales were forbidden in restaurants and hotels.

Ontario Referendum.—

The statement of Premier Ferguson made February 6th to the effect that a liquor referendum will be taken in Ontario "when the time is right," recalls the result of the last plebiscite taken on April 21, 1921, says the Detroit Free Press. Official figures at that time showed a majority of 166,835 for prohibition. The total vote was 549,773 to 373,438. In view of the action of the western provinces which have drifted back to license, it is predicted by the wets that a referendum in Ontario will mean an end to bone-dry prohibition with substitution of a system of government-controlled saloons. Col. John Currie, member for southwest Toronto, gave notice in the Legislature on February 7th that he will move for such legislation as may be necessary to provide for a referendum.

Stupid Economics.—

The United States Bureau of Education has just made public the results of a survey of the rural schools of this country. Some of the figures are illustrations of the stupid economy of our citizens.

There are 97,758 one-teacher schools in this country, and the annual average salary of the teachers is $729.

There are only six of the forty-eight States that pay the rural teacher $900 a year. Out of the entire number of rural school teachers, 4,580 receive less than $400 a year, and 20,000 receive less than $1,000 a year.

In Ohio and Indiana the minimum salary for rural teachers is $800, and in New York State it is $800 for a term of forty weeks.

It goes without saying that any teacher who is hired for $800 a year or less is looked upon as one incapable of earning more, or else the argument is used by school boards that it is all they can afford. As a matter of fact, that is the actual argument used.

It is a sorry comment on our civilization that in a matter so vital as education, the people are, after all these centuries of experience, trying to economize on a vtial necessity.

To the above, we would add that salaries should be fixed and teachers required to attain a standard of efficiency to draw the salary.

Facts About Indians.—

If the readers of this editorial were on the witness stand, and testifying as to their accurate knowledge of the American Indian, how many of them could answer the following questions about him? The answers are given with the questions, on the theory that the majority of readers could not give them. The editor could not, until he received the answers from the superintendent of the Haskell School for Indians.

1. How many Indians are there in the United States? 340,000.
2. How many Indians are citizens? 225,000.
3. How many Indians are farmers? 50,000.
4. How many families live in houses? 50,000.
5. How many Indian men and women were in the World War? 15,000.
6. What per cent of Indians in government schools were promoted last year? 87.
7. Are the American Indians dying out? No.

Haskell Institute enrolls nearly 1,000 students and has representatives of 76 tribes from 23 States. The government appropriation for the entire maintenance of this great school is only $200 a student. That amount is supposed to pay all the expenses of his housing, board, and education. By splendid management and by the tilling of productive ground for food and by the growing of cattle and fowl, the appropriation is made to care for nearly 1,000 students annually.

Out of this Indian school have gone Indian boys and girls well trained to be farmers, carpenters, printers, automotive mechanics, steam engineers, masons, electricians, physical directors, housekeepers, dressmakers, cooks, milliners, nurses, musicians, stenographers, and business men and women. Graduates of this school are receiving from $1,000 to $6,500 a year for expert work in a great variety of skilled service and employment. The American Indian is not a problem. He is an asset to the republic.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Some one has said: The lark cannot soar as high as does the eagle, but it sings while it soars. Better emulate the lark than the eagle.

Less than two months to the meeting of the Southern Christian Convention in Norfolk, Va. The program should be well on the way.

The managing editor has to thank Palm Street Church, of Greensboro, N. C., and its pastor, for a list of ten new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Fifteen new names added to our mailing list during the past week. Are you the party to be thanked for a part of those? It is easy! People are waiting to be asked by their pastor.

In Chicago there were hundreds of soft-drink stands licensed by the city. It was found that they were handling liquor on the sly, and Mayor Dever revoked the license of 2,000 of these soft-drink men. That looks like the Mayor means business, and we think he does.

Another triumph for prohibition! President Burton, of Chicago University, has announced that drinking students will not be tolerated—they will be driven from college. That is a straw only it may be, but it shows that the wind is blowing in the right direction. Let the good cause go on and on till there will be no drinking students in our country.

Mr. Warren S. Stone, the head of the Locomotive Engineers' Brotherhood, declares that liquor has gone to stay. He says America will never go back to the old condition. May it be so, and may the Lord help us to stand true always. We have no use for liquor in this country; its chief business is to pull down the good that others have done. We do not need such a business any where.

We have more than 230 Churches, in at least half of which a club of ten new subscribers might be formed; in some, two clubs of ten each; and a club of five new subscribers in each of the other half. Think of this yielding approximately 2,000 new subscribers and practically doubling our number of readers. This would mean so much to our Church at so small an outlay of labor and funds!

We had a very pleasant day with Rev. S. L. Beougher and his Church at New Providence, N. C. Mrs. Barrett and the editor had the pleasure of a fine dinner with the pastor and his wife and daughter. Bro. Beougher gave us a fine sermon and presented some strong meat for his people. It was certainly a pleasant day. We wish for our brother and his family long and useful service in his present field.

Friends, life for every one of us is lived over the cliff of temptation, and there are thousands who need a helping hand. A word may save them; a look may save them; the companionship of an hour may save them. Or it may take years of effort. But when your life comes to its close, if there are some to say to you, "I think I should have fallen if you had not reached out your hand just when you did," oh! it will repay you a thousandfold!

In this week's issue of THE SUN will be found the program of the opening of the Christian Temple, the new Church building in the city of Norfolk, Va. There will be three services the first day—Sunday, March 16th—and the program continues through the week.

The papers are telling it now that the bill before the British House of Commons, giving Wales prohibition, was defeated by England. That looks like a mother tieing her child down to be run over by a train. Wales desires prohibition, but England will not give it to her. Alas! for the common things some powers can do.

Good for the insurance companies! Do you say, why? Why, in insuring automobiles, they stipulate that in case the automobiles are used to carry liquor the policy is not good. That is fine! Let the insurance companies be sustained in this purpose. Let every influence be brought to bear against the liquor business. Certainly, we have no quarters for the business in a dry country. Keep the log rolling till there is no place for it, not even in a bootleg. Keep the liquor business rolling till it gets to the bottom of the sea.

Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., pastor of the Elon College Church, has tendered his resignation as pastor of that Church to take effect on September 1st, or sooner if it can be done in a way satisfactory to the Church. The Church has not yet accepted the resignation, but finally it will have to do so, as Dr. Newman has evidently made up his mind to retire from this field. The relations between him and the Church have been very cordial and pleasant, but for some reason he feels called to go elsewhere, but where we do not know. We all wish him well and large usefulness wherever his lot may be cast.

Mr A. J. Davis, of Boston, Mass., has been chosen as head of the Anti-Saloon League in New York State to succeed William H. Anderson, who was recently convicted of crime in the court of New York and on that account resigned. Mr. Anderson had been a valiant defender of prohibition, and it is to be greatly regretted that he has fallen from a most honorable place in the work to that of a criminal. He has taken an appeal to a higher court, and we should rejoice to see him acquitted if he deserves it. We wish Mr. Davis may have a better experience in handling the work of the Anti-Saloon League in New York.

It is hard for some people to learn even a plain lesson. It is stated that Governor Al Smith, of New York, is still hoping to be the Democratic candidate for President. He is the wet Smith who signed the bill to do away with the law enforcement against prohibition in New York State. It certainly seems hard for this man to learn that the people of the United States do not wish a wet President, and they do not mean to have one either. However, Mr. Smith called a dry convention February 20th, but nothing of any importance came of it nor is anything good likely to come of that man's efforts. Who would trust a wet man to make the country dry! Mr. Smith ought to have more sense than to even hope to become President of this great dry nation.

If you wish to see a busy place, come to Elon and try to get a chance to have an interview with Dr. Harper, the busy president. We have an office on the same floor and not far from him, but it has been several days since we have had a chance to see him for even a few minutes. After three or four days' trying, I have just made another attempt to get to talk with him; but as usual he is busy as a man can well be, meeting people and considering their wants; and so again the editor went back to his work, and we do not know when we can see him for an important interview, but company must be served first. We keep hoping to get to see him, but every time we have tried to see him for several days he was engaged with people. It is all right, and we are satisfied. We mention it here in no sense as a complaint, but to show our people just how hard this man is working for them.

The story is told that Lloyd George, in his lawyer days, when driving home in his dogcart one day, came up to a little Welsh girl trudging along so wearily that he offered her a lift. She accepted silently. All the way along Mr. Lloyd George tried hard to engage her in conversation, but could not get her to say anything. Some days afterward the little girl's mother happened to meet him. "Do you remember that my little girl rode home with you the other day? Well, when she got home she said: 'Mamma, I drove from school with Mr. Lloyd George, the lawyer, and he kept talking to me and I didn't know what to do, for you said Mr. Lloyd George charges you whenever you talk to him, and I hadn't any money.'" —The Continent.

And so they say that Oscar Underwood, of Alabama, is trying to run for the presidency! Let him run. But he is pretty sharp. He knows he is wet. He is trying to throw a sop to the drys of the country by choosing a dry man to run with him as Vice-President. But, alas! what could a dry Vice-President do in administration which is presided over by a wet President? No, sir, Mr. Underwood; we want a dry man for President, for we know what a wet man in the presidency will not do—he will not enforce a dry law, and that is what we want. Give us no wet man for President, or for anything else in the administration of the laws of our land. Give us a square man.

Here is good news for the laboring people—be sure to get it. There are at present fifteen labor banks in successful operation in the United States, according to Richard Boeckel, labor economist, who has just published a book, "Labor's Money." The book is full of interesting data on the relationship between prohibition and labor. Mr. Boeckel estimates the saving to American workingmen as result of prohibition at one billion dollars a year. While a goodly part of this money has gone to provide improved living conditions for the families of American workers, millions of dollars have been invested by the workers in industrial securities and deposited as savings in labor banks. Mr. Boeckel predicts that the fifteen labor banks now operating will be increased to fifty in number before the end of the year, with resources exceeding $100,000,000.

THE EDITOR IN THE HOSPITAL.

On Monday, March 10th, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN entered the Presbyterian Hospital at Charlotte, N. C., for a surgical operation. He is hoping to return to his work within a month, but this is uncertain. President W. A. Harper will edit THE CHRISTIAN SUN during his absence. Let all matter for the paper be sent to Elon College, N. C., just as usual. It will be turned over to Dr. Harper and it will reach THE SUN office promptly.—THE EDITOR.

And will the brotherhood join in prayer that God may spare Dr. Barrett and restore him completely and speedily to his loved ones and to his place of large service in the Church and kingdom?—W. A. HARPER.

"BUTTONS" FINDS A FRIEND.

By Howard B. Goose.

"Buttons," on a tour of the world, was a guest of the Merchant Marine Y. M. C. A. in New York City recently. "Buttons" is the pet name for the small cabin boy aboard many transatlantic liners, who answers the call of the passengers'bells, carries their messages and renders a hundred little services.

The steamship Semaria arrived in New York the other day to take a large party of Americans around the world. The ship had eight of these small boys aboard, ranging from thirteen to sixteen years old. The oldest had already made a voyage circling the globe. The others were seeing America for the first time. Their eyes and ears were wide open.

Nearly every week the New York Merchant Marine "Y" receives a dozen of these small visitors along with the hundreds of seafaring men constantly under its roof. Most of the American boys who go to sea are older than those aboard the foreign ships.

Four of the Samaria's boys were taken to the annual meeting of the association wearing their blue uniforms with the multitude of buttons from which they acquired their nickname. It was announced at the meeting that a friend who saw some of the needs of "Buttons" in a strange port, with its dangers, had promised to raise a fund that would provide a special room for the boys themselves in a nearby building where they can find recreation and instruction and friendly service.

A Romance of "Y" History.

One of the great romances of Y. M. C. A. history has reached a climax in the formal transfer of the Y. M. C. A. in Poland from American to Polish administration.

This means that the Y. M. C. A. is now an established movement in Poland, with a national organization, under Polish leadership. It means that only five years after its introduction into Poland as a welfare service for the Polish army, Y. M. C. A. work has grown into the permanent form and along the lines so familiar to the people of America and many other lands.

The formal transfer, which took place recently in the Warsaw Y. M. C. A. building, was the occasion for a memorable ceremony, attended by the President of Poland and many other of its notable citizens. Paul Super, national secretary for Poland, writing of past and present Y. M. C. A. history there, says:

"After the great war, the American Y. M. C. A. conducted work for the Polish army at nearly a hundred points, employing in this work fifty-two American secretaries and expending $1,700,000. All this war work has, of course, been discontinued and the enterprise now is on a civilian basis, officered and directed by Poles.

"The name of the association in Poland is, in common parlance, 'Polska Y. M. C. A.,' and more formally 'Zwiazek Mlodziezy Chrzescijanskiej.'

"It begins its new status with some 7,500 members in seventeen cities and many thousands of friends in government, university, civil and military circles. Seven American Y. M. C. A. secretaries remain in Poland as technical advisers and instructors in the work of the association, loaned as an expression of the co-operation of the American Y. M. C. A. with the Polish movement."

Twenty-Five New "Y" Buildings.

During the past year, twenty-five Y. M. C. A. buildings were opened in the United States. Conspicuous among these is the great new central building of the Y. M. C. A. in Columbus, Ohio, whose recent dedication is of interest to members and friends of the association everywhere.

Copied after the beautiful Gothic structures of the old world, the new building is not only one of the largest and most beautiful of its kind in America, but ranks second to none in completeness. A newspaper account of it says:

"The environment of a home, the spiritual influence of a Church, the educational service of a university, and the physical benefits of an athletic club, all have been combined in this institution for the development of American citizenship and Christian character."

"The association," said John W. Pontius, general secretary at Columbus, in a statement at the time of the dedication, "is seeking to serve society by educating boys and young men in the Christian ideas and practice of steadily improving themselves socially, physically, intellectually and spiritually. To accomplish this, it aims not to do for the individual merely, but to inspire and supplement him in doing for himself and in doing for his fellow-men."

The dedication ceremonies occupied a week. The Columbus newspapers printed special twenty-four-page editions devoted to news stories, historical articles and illustrations connected with the event.

A well-known citizen of a manufacturing city in New England recently wrote as follows to the secretary of the association there:

"The Y. M. C. A. is as much a part of our city as Central Square, or the post-office, or the railroad station, or the Shore Drive. It is virtually impossible to think of this city without its big, friendly Y. M. C. A. Such a state of the public mind would be impossible if the association were being administered as a sectarian or private club."

THE SPIRITUAL BASIS OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY.

"Moral and spiritual regeneration is the world's greatest basis for economic recovery, and until man comes to a closer realization of his responsibility, as his brother's keeper, and of his moral obligation to society, world problems will not be solved."

This was the central statement of an address by Francis H. Sisson, vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company, of New York, in an address at the annual dinner, January 29th, of the New York City Young Men's Christian Associations. Mr. Sisson is widely known in America and Europe both as a banker and speaker. His topic was "What the business community expects of the Y. M. C. A. as to character-building forces." He said, in part:

"If anything has been convincingly demonstrated during the extraordinary events of the las decade of the world's history, it is that a moral basis is absolutely essential to the development and preservation of a stable and wholesome financial and economic structure in any state. The appalling disasters which have marked the record of the war period and the years which have followed have been the more to the weakness of moral character in political and military leaders and their adherents than to any other single cause.

"Thus, the German debacle can fairly be charged mainly to the cynical disregard of the rights of others. A similar weakness of character has been shown in Germany's efforts to evade the consequences of her own acts. The plight of Russia affords a similar example of the results of policies that are in defiance of principles of honesty and fairness. The credit of Russia has been destroyed by these policies, and can be regained only by the re-establishment of reputation for the strict observance of moral principles in her domestic and international relations.

"The parallel between nations and individuals is absolute as to the essential part which character plays in fortifying their position in financial, commercial and social life. Credit is the very breath of modern business, as it is of nations, and credit in the last analysis rests on character rather than on resources.

"Great wars have always apparently created a weakening of moral standards for a period. The way in which governments have resorted to the inherently dishonest method of inflating currencies is a case in point, as inflation implies theft from the thrifty and the advantage of the debtor over the creditor. Such mistakes have been paid for very dearly in the destruction of credit, in the discouragement of thrift and the stimulation of extravagant spending among peoples.

"The history of recent years has emphasized the importance of moral character, both national and individual, in many striking ways. It has been made only too plain that disaster surely follows unless strict honesty is interwoven in all the threads of the economic and financial fabric of nations, as well as of private business.

"The need of the times is thus more than ever the need for men of character in government, in finance, and in trade if the troubled conditions which the world now suffers are to be permanently bettered. Plainly, those nations are prospering today where such men dominate affairs, while the greatest distress exists where a feeble moral purpose characterizes those who lead the people."

At this, the seventy-second annual meeting of the New York City Y. M. C. A., William M. Kingsley, president, reported the organization to be operating at 54 points, with 15 regularly organized branches, and a total attendance for the year 1923 of 8,139,135.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT HITS GRAHAM CHURCH.

For many years prior to 1921 our little Church could hardly keep going. We were very weak in numbers, and therefore were not strong financially. For years we would get students from Elon College to preach for us, among them being L. E. Smith, S. C. Morgan and F. C. Lester, all of whom we are very proud to have had in the past, and wish for all of them continued success. Brother Lester had to leave us, and we ran up against obstacles before we were able to secure a new preacher. In the meantime, Rev. C. B. Riddle came to our aid and helped us greatly.

The work was too hard on him, though, and he recommended our present pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher, who has done wonders for our Church since being with us. He has put the Church on a business basis, and everything moves along so much better that you can tell we are going forward from one Sunday to the next.

We have under consideration now the greatest movement yet for our Church, is my opinion. It is our aim to unite New Providence Christian Church with the Graham Christian Church, thereby giving us one large body, which, in my opinion, can do considerably more towards His cause than two weaker institutions can. But in case this great movement fails, we can feel that we are not standing still in the least.

Our Sunday School attendance is growing under the supervision of J. B. Farrell, and to Mrs. M. R. Rives we are greatly indebted for putting in the Graded System in our Sunday School, which seems to have made it take on new life. Our Church services are better attended now than ever before, and we feel that this should be attributed to the everlasting work of our preacher.

Here is wishing that 1924 will see the Christian Churches here and elsewhere go forward in rapid strides. Robt. H. Farrell.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

"SEEING THE INVISIBLE."

That seems to be a paradox. If a thing is invisible, how can any one see it? The Sunday Schaol Times makes that plain enough. The invisible can be seen by some eyes, but not by others. Do you say: "I cannot see how that is possible." Very well, just read the following from the Times and you will see how it is, at least in many instances:

People differ so in what they are able to see. Take the woods for an example. You are crossing the wild part of Nova Scotia with two guides. One of them sees a broken twig on a nearby sapling. It means that a certain kind of deer has been that way. You would not have noticed it unless it had been pointed out to you. Hunters have different eyes from other men's. A mark on a fallen log, a track in the snow, the thickness of the bark on one side of a tree, the direction of the topmost branch of a fir, speak whole volumes to them. That is what makes it so interesting to be with them. They live in a world invisible to other people.

A man with a keen eye for horse flesh stood on a porch beside his daughter speeding the parting guest. "That is a fine horse," he said to the man who was about to drive the doctor away. "He would match up well with a horse I used to have." As a matter of fact, it was the identical horse. He had sold it ten years back; it had changed hands, and had been bought by this man. A novice might note that a horse was large or small, white or black, spirited or lazy; but a lover of horses lives in a world of his own and sees things invisible to other men.

Walk out with a painter. How he twists and bends his head to see things. And what blues he will detect in a landscape, what reddish browns, what purple hues, what greens against the far-off hillside! To his companion, the finished picture resembles the landscape; but the painter can take the landscape all apart and put it together again, bit by bit, in the picture. He sees it first, then he paints it. Some one said to the famous English painter, Turner: "Mr. Turner, I never saw cloud-effects like that." "Madam," the painter replied simply, "don't you wish you could!"

So the sculptor sees the statue before he ever gets it out of the marble. If he did not, how could he get it out?

Take a walk with a geologist and watch him. He sees a stone revealed here, an outcropping stratum of rock there, a glint of something eloquent in another place, till whole areas swim before his eyes before what to another is just plain dirt. So Professor Barrett, at Yerkes Observatory, spends whole nights looking at the heavens, applying the use of photography to the great telescope, and brings into view things which the unaided eye never saw and never will see—comets, twin-stars, one of them black and dead and the other burning. The black one is known only by aberrations observed in the orbit of the other as they revolve around each other. He sees the invisible.

The deepest things in life are invisible. A boy ran home from school, saying: "The teacher says that tears are just salt and water. I'll not be sorry any more when I make my mother cry." No; tears are more than that. What made you when a child go to your room and cry as though your heart would break? You knew that you had wounded your mother, and grieved her gentle heart. Tears were more than "salt and water" then! So home is not the walls, the floors, the ceilings, the rugs and pictures, if there are such. Home is a whole invisible set of relationships, reaching back into childhood, living on through all the days and years and ages to come.

An old letter turns up in a dusty trunk, a pressed flower, or a bit of a faded dress. What makes one wipe one's eyes and try hard to suppress the lump that rises in one's throat? An invisible world.

The deepest passions of humanity are linked with the invisible. One sees on a distant ship in the English Channel, or waving over the consulate in Paris or Berlin, the American flag. What is it that stirs one? Just that bit of colored cloth, striped with red and white, with its blue background and the stars? What is "patriotism"? Did one ever see patriotism? Yet millions of men will range themselves behind that flag, ready to sacrifice all and lay life itself down because of the sway of the invisible.

Are not the invisible things the real things after all? Do they not make our lives what they are? Is it not they that impel us to organize our time, turn everything to the main end, watch our diet, sleep, health, hide in our hearts the Word of God, live a life of prayer, order into one the immense complexity of a life lived in the presence of a chaotic world?

And the invisible is pre-eminently the principle and fountain of the Christian life. Paul bade believers "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Our "citizenship is in heaven." And while here on the earth "we walk by faith and not by sight."

The realities that determine the Christian are all invisible. "No man hath seen God at any time"—though we see His manifestations. Jesus Christ appeared to Saul on the way to Damascus, but He has seldom so appeared in the history of the Church to others. Forgiveness is invisible, and so is the efficacy of the sacrificial blood on which it depends. Many men passed by the cross of our Lord on that tragic but victorious day and saw blood dropping from His wounds and staining the ground; yet none saw what it meant. The blood is "the life," the precious carrier of the life, the blessed inclusive vehicle of the divine obedience, faith, heartbreak, atonement, loyalty, sympathy, and utter final oneness with those who believe. So eternal life is an unseen reality, bestowed already, manifesting itself in the Christian through all life's vicissitudes, but revealed and consummated hereafter.

Invisible things may not seem real. There are reasons for this. No one can see through a sin. No one can see through an unconsecrated nature. No one can see through an alliance with the spirit of this world. There are many absolutely opaque objects which obstruct the vision of invisible things as effectively as though these things did not exist. That is why there comes with conversion a vision of things invisible. A man converted in a revival meeting said: "I have come to see things as I never saw them before." Spiritual sight is the sight given to us by the Holy Spirit when we pass from death to life.

And the sight of the invisible brings the power of endurance. Moses "endured as seeing him who is invisible." That is how he held out against the awful spiritual loneliness and deadening contacts of the wilderness. That is how he held out against the obstinacy, fleshliness, ingratitude, and unbelief of those disheartening people. That is how he bore the long labor of forty years and, having endured every test, laid his life down this side of the thing he had been promised. He endured as seeing him who is invisible. He saw him who held him, and held him ever more tightly with every added difficulty and every added desertion of friends, strength, and all things visible and human. And if we see Him who is invisible, we too shall hold on. We shall endure to the end.

THE INFLUENCE OF FAITH ON LIFE AND CHARACTER.

The influence of faith on morals and spirituality is not generally recognized. A person of little or no faith is a weakling in some direction, and most likely in many ways. The absence of faith will almost always betray weak tendencies, especially in spirituality and morals. You have not seen a person of great faith in God who was at the same time a weakling, either spiritually or morally, but the opposite you have seen, viz: men of little or no faith and they are always weaklings in moral and spiritual life.

This brings us to the fact that a man of great faith, or a woman of great faith, necessarily is strong in the spheres where faith is active and fruitful. For instance, a person of great faith is active in the spheres of morals and Christianity. Great faith is not found in the lives of men and women who go away from morality and Christianity. This fact may rest on the idea that "like begets like." Just as faith produces a strong morality, or a robust spiritual life, so the lack of faith will give us men and women who are weak and almost fruitless in good works. It is necessarily so, and for the reason that one cannot produce what he has not. If his life is devoid of faith, he cannot bring forth in his life character which is strong and fruitful.

It may be asked, then, if a man who is not strong in faith and, as a consequence, has not in his life the fruits of faith, if he become a person of strong faith will that drive out his weakness and introduce in his life the fruits of faith? It will, unquestionably! That is the legitimate office of faith, and of necessity, when faith is established, it immediately goes to work, and the outcome is its own fruits in the life in which it has been established. Just as selfishness is driven out of the life by the introduction of generosity, so is doubt driven out of the life by the introduction of faith.

Now, it is self-evident that the natural man is full of doubts. If he can be awakened and brought into a living union with Christ, faith is established and at once it begins to operate, and again the fruits of faith appear. In other words, faith revolutionizes the life in which it lives, and the man who was in doubt now triumphs in the possession of faith and the life is changed to be in likeness to Him with who mhe is in union. Thus faith not only changes the life in which it operates, but it reaches out into other lives and does great things for the man's fellows.

The faith of Christ injected into the life of a fellow-man begets in that man a likeness to Christ, and as soon as the Christ-life shows itself in another, the next thing is faith at work, and out of the faith thus given him comes the evidence of its genuineness. Apples are the evidence of the character of the tree—it is an apple tree beyond all question.

Faith is very generous. It must impart to others its own great elements of life and growth and fruit. This shows us why it is that so many people are so inactive in the Christian life. They have made a profession of faith and united with the Church, but the profession of faith was a misnomer—there was nothing in it but a form, and as faith was absent, necessarily it could not function, and failing to function, the man's life was not changed, and so he had the same character and life that he had before, and of course nothing could come out of his life, and because he had put nothing of superior power into his life, and one thing was inevitable—he was the same man he was before.

Now, every one can see, as it seems to us, that the man who has made a mistake in making a profession of faith in Christ, when he did not have it, has only handicapped his life and made himself powerless as a Christian.

There can be no question as to the mighty influence of faith in the life of a believer; but if it be not there, then it has no influence to bring to bear upon the man, and the result is the man is the same as he was before he made the profession of faith in Christ. Such a man is not only not helped, but he is injured, and it may be for life. Faith is a visible expression of the power of God in the life of a believer. That is to say, when a man receives the power of faith, it must show itself, and it will in some degree; but if faith be absent, then the divine life is not in him, and the outcome of it all is failure, just because faith was not given a chance. Steam cannot act without an engine. Electricity cannot act without a wire, nor can faith act without a life in which to house itself for actual service. Give faith a chance, and it will prove its power in human life.

THESIS ON A UNIVERSAL UNION FOR THE REVIVAL OF CHRISTIANITY.

By Prof. Leo Michailovitch Lopatin,

Moscow University.

(This article, written in 1918, by one of Russia's most prominent philosophers, now deceased, is published as an illustration of the thought and spirit of forward-looking men in the Orthodox Eastern Church. It indicates a strong conviction that the present time is one in which to bring about closer fellowship between the Eastern Church and the Western communions.)

1. The unprecedented, bloody ordeals of the great war and the cruel and senseless suffering caused by our revolution, involuntarily force us to the conclusion that the time is ripe for all Christians to rally in a universal union for the revival of Christianity, to battle against religious unbelief and the crass worship of material culture, as well as against their practical effects upon our political, social, economic, and individual life; and, furthermore, to change our contemporary view of life and our conception as to its meaning so that it may conform with genuine principles of Christianity.

2. It is strongly to be desired that such a union should embrace all creeds, Churches, religious communities and parties, as well as all those individuals who sincerely believe in the fundamental truths of Christianity, regardless of sectarian differences in the accepted dogmatic formulas, theological teachings, Church rituals and organization.

3. At the basis of a union of all Christians for the struggle against the forces which are inimical to Christianity should lie the conviction that the denominational differences among the various Churches and religious communities do not bar the road to salvation for Christians who belong to them, leading pious and worthy lives, that God is a loving Father to all, and that they are all members oft he undivided, invisible Church of Christ.

4. Every Christian, in order to be considered not only in name but in actual reality a faithful Christian, must be bound by the following fundamental Christian creeds:

(a) Faith in the living God who by His creative will has made the world and governs its course, in His infinite wisdom, mercy, and truth.

(b) Faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the true Teacher, Redeemer, and Saviour of mankind.

(c) Faith in the Holy Ghost as a power of grace and a life-giving source of all that is good and vital in men and all creatures.

(d) Faith in the saving and beatific power of prayer.

(e) Faith in the immortality and resurrection of man after death; making for an infinitely greater substantiality, fullness, and richness of our future life, as compared with our present life on earth.

(f) Faith in the consistency of a person's fate after death with his real spiritual worth and spiritual level.

(g) Faith that the carrying out of Christ's testament about loving God and one's neighbor, and about refraining from blasphemy against the Holy Ghost in one's thoughts, feelings, sentiments, actions, and general conduct make up the ultimate purpose, fundamental meaning, and intrinsic value of human existence. There must be a conviction that only a serious and unbending effort to realize these supreme duties will enable a man to find salvation through the grace-giving power of this or that Church. Also, there must be faith in the truth of Revelation, and the commandment to love all men, and justice must be to us an unfailing and ever-present standard for all our individual dealings with our neighbors, as well as in our public life, no matter how far and how wide it may extend.

5. Christians who accept Articles 3 and 4 no longer treat Christians of other denominations with intolerance and hostility; they will pray for them and admit them to their prayer meetings and worship, and they will not even refuse them the sacrament if they should seriously need, and insistently ask for, it. They may regret the errors and deficiencies in the understanding of the real truth on the part of the dissenters, but they will not condemn and turn them away. If all believers will become imbued with such views, a union of all the Christians on earth, while fully preserving the differences in the outward forms of their religious life, will be not only possible, but indispensable.

6. In such a union, no Church, religious community, or sect will be forced to give up any of its particular beliefs, dogmas, traditions, or details of religious ritual, as long as these do not conflict with the fundamental truths of Christianity. They will merely have to draw a line of distinction, in their beliefs, between the things that make it possible at all to have a Christian viewpoint and Christian sentiments and the things which do not constitute an indispensable condition therefor, even though these be regarded by them as quite true and absolutely correct and fitting for normal Christian living.

7. The consequence of such a revision of the elements of their own doctrine and religious practice on the part of the several denominations would inevitably be a more charitable and more tolerant attitude towards their own followers. In their case also, these denominations would then distinguish more carefully between the things which are absolutely binding and the things which, although right and saving in themselves, would not prevent those who deviate from them from being, nevertheless, good Christians loving and venerating their Church.

8. There can be no doubt, furthermore, that the concentration of the Christian religion upon a few fundamental truths is bound to prove very helpful and facilitating in bringing back into its fold those who have strayed from it, and in enabling non-Christians to accept it. All those who are disillusioned with materialism and the religion of worldly culture, all who have felt the actual need for recognizing the reality of a living God beyond the visible world, and of a higher and eternal spiritual meaning of life, irrespective of ourselves, will inevitably accept and appreciate the fact that these fundamental Christian truths are in full accord with their own profoundest spiritual needs.

9. From what has been said here, it follows that present-day Christianity is in need of a profound and radical reform. But such a reform must not follow the path that was taken by the Reformation of the sixteenth century in the West; it must not build merely a new kind of dogma, overthrowing the old ones, and create only a new ritual which will demolish old altars hallowed by centuries of ardent faith. Such a reformation would at best only bring forth one of many new Churches, intolerant and hostile towards the others; or more likely still, it would merely give rise to some new sect. Genuine reform should consist in a calm and careful revision of the positive treasures of Christianity and in a thoughtful appraisal of their comparative merits for a Christian life—a revision and an appraisal undertaken in a spirit of love and brotherhood. Then the united and universal Church will of itself serve as an irresistible example of Christian brotherhood and loving mutual tolerance, and mankind will follow its lead, imbued with its eternally potent ideals. And the path of man's history will again be illuminated by the shining light of imperishable truths about God, eternal life, and the all-conquering power of love and liberty in the name of Christ.

[Note by the Editor: When we received this article, we were afraid of it. "Thesis on a Universal Union for the Revival of Christianity" seemed too much to expect anything to come out of it except serious error in some form; but a careful reading convinces us that Prof. Lopatin is as nearly in harmony with the principles of the Christian Church as anything we have seen. If he were one of us, we doubt that he could set forth the ideas of the Christian Church more definitely and plainly than he has done as a Russian. It seems to us that any real Bible Christian can gladly wish all of the Lord's people on a similar platform.]

DISCONTENT IN THE CHURCH.

Is there such a thing? Most certainly there is, and it may be that much of it, or at least some of it, may be just. There are many people who seem to feel that every one must be permitted to stand aside while one man tells how the whole thing shall be done, and then, of course, there is dissatisfaction and discontent, and there is a cause for some of it. A little more recognition of the rights of others will enable us to avoid much of the discontent on the part of others. In the Church all members in good standing have the same rights and privileges. No man has a right to call these in question, or to make some effort to deprive others of their rights simply that the man so doing may have things to go his way. That method is both un-Christian and unwise. In the Church of Christ, all rights should be respected. When this is done, it will greatly help to keep the membership satisfied and united—a thing to be greatly desired.

The late Geo. C. Lorrimer, D. D., tells of another kind of discontent. It is also disastrous to the cause of Christ, and it should not be tolerated under any circumstances. He says:

"There are two kinds of discontent in this world—the discontent that works and the discontent that wrings its hands. The first gets what it wants, and the second loses what it has. There is no cure for the first but success, and there is no cure at all for the second."

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

REV. W. G. CLEMENTS.

Rev. William Gaston Clements was born in Wake County, N. C., December 1, 1840, and died at his home in Morrisville, N. C., February 24, 1924, age 83 years 2 months and 23 days.

He volunteered for service in the Confederate army, and was a member of Company I, Sixth North Carolina Regiment. He was wounded in the hand, returned home, got well and re-entered the army. He was wounded a second time in the side, recovered and joined his company again. He finally lost his left arm, which disabled him for further military service; but he started home on foot the second day after he lost his arm. His war record was clean and brave.

His early educational opportunities were very limited, being hired out for farm work most of the time before he entered the army; but after the war, he educated himself with some literary help from Hon. John M. Moring, Maj. R. W. York, and Prof. Brantley York.

In March, 1868, he was married to Miss Annie E. Moring, daughter of James Moring. The fruit of that union was seven children—Ed. W., Joseph L., S. Irene, Nannie J., James B., A. Stella, Ethel W.; all married and all living. There are twenty-nine living grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Seven grandchildren had passed on before him, and his companion passed away a few months before. The total descendants were 44, and 37 are still living. His married life was rich in struggles, in devotion, and in religious fidelity. Their afflictions were many and severe, but their endurance never failed them.

Bro. Clements was licensed to preach the gospel at Salem Chapel Church in November, 1868, the same year in which he was married in March. The Conference held at Wake Chapel November, 1869, in Wake County, N. C., ordered his ordination, and he was ordained at New Providence Church, in Alamance County, on the second Sunday in January, 1870, by Revs. Alfred Iseley, E. W. Beale, and W. S. Long as the ordaining presbytery.

He was an active ordained minister for half a century. He lived in Morrisville, N. C., during his married life. He organized and built the Morrisville Christian Church, and was its pastor for years. He organized and taught in the Morrisville school. He was the fourth or fifth person to settle in that place. He organized the Raleigh Christian Church and raised the money for its erection. He did the same for Chapel Hill, Mebane, Amelia, Six Forks, and Franklinton; and do doubt for others. He was pastor of twenty-five or more Churches during his long ministry.

He was superintendent of the public schools of Wake County, his native county, and the county that contains the State capital, for thirteen years. It is remarkable that one of such poor advantages in boyhood, so maimed by war, could hold such a position in a period of such progress in the public school system.

He was president of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and active on important committees. He was editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He has been a trustee of Elon College most of the thirty-four years of its history. His life-work has been an educational and spiritual contribution to the State and the Christian Church. He was true in his friendships, faithful in his Church, devoted to his family, and consecrated to God. The testimony of ministers and laymen at his funeral in the Morrisville Church on Tuesday, February 26th, in the afternoon, was a tribute as beautiful as the array of flowers placed upon his grave. Revs. J. P. Barrett, D. A. Long, P. H. Fleming, P. T. Klapp, N. G. Newman, J. O. Atkinson, J. Lee Johnson, and Layman W. W. Bagwell all expressed words that showed how his life had influenced them to accept Christ or to yield to the divine call to the ministry. He had especially influenced Atkinson and Johnson to heed God's call to enter the ministry. His works do follow him. He had chosen Bro. Lee Johnson and me to conduct his funeral service. They sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Rock of Ages," and "Think of the Home Over There." We laid him to rest beside Mrs. Clements and covered their graves with flowers, and they rest together in the "home of the soul."

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The more I have thought on the subject, the more pronounced has grown the conviction that theological seminaries ought to be interdenominational. This is certainly true of the smaller denominations. These denominations do not have enough ministerial students to warrant the maintenance of a seminary, but aside from numbers there is no need for doctrinal teaching of the sectarian type for seminary men.

Those who attend seminaries are destined to be the clerical leaders of the next generation. They of all men need to be broad and fraternal, rather than narrowly sectarian in their views. Christian union will get scant attention in a sectarian seminary. That is what sectaries know, and that is why they have persistently pursued the policy of denominational exclusiveness in theological seminaries.

If denominationalism is to give way to the broad and sympathetic understanding which is to be the forerunner of unity, the preachers must be divested of sectarian bias and leanings. This cannot be hoped for in the case of sectarian theological seminaries. The preachers now prevent Christian union.

Another conviction that grows on me as the years unfold is that the denominational colleges need to offer in a school of Christian education courses in Bible and religious education that will provide ministers who cannot pursue seminary training the irreducible minimum of equipment for effective work. They should be encouraged to pursue at least five three-hour year courses in these subjects in candidacy for a bachelor's degree. Then arrangement should be made with the seminaries to admit such graduates to second-year standing in case later they can attend seminary. This would tend to shorten the seminary course for all to two years, which would mean that more would attend.

All denominational colleges furthermore should encourage laymen and laywomen to elect courses in Bible and religious education, at least one course in each. The practical benefits of such courses would be seen in the general advancement and efficiency of the Church and educational work of the local Churches. Elon requires all candidates for a degree to take at least one such course in Bible. Ministerial students are required to take two such courses, one of them being a course especially designed for them, treating the topics that ministers ought especially to know and which they must learn sometimes by bitter experience unless instructed by some one who has trod the path before.

Of course, what is known in the natural sciences as the laboratory method must eventually be employed in the work of Christian education in a modern college. That means that buildings, especially designed for the purpose, must house the social and religious activities of a Christian college. Within the next decade, many such buildings will be erected on the campuses of denominational colleges. The Mooney Christian education building supplies that need at Elon.

W. A. HARPER.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

Should the Church have a budget system? Certainly! The denomination should know approximately how much it is going to spend, for what purposes and how much to each. It should know the sources from which its income is derived and when the payments are to be made. In the humble judgment of the writer, the plans submitted by Dr. W. W. Staley and Dr. W. A. Harper can be combined, with some changes; and also made to provide for the proposition submitted by Dr. A. M. Kerr.

We should have the educational literature suggested by Dr. Harper, and his suggestion of quarterly remittances is good and should be adopted. Our Churches and people should be urged to send all money through the regular channel—the budget. But where gifts are made to certain objects, we must adhere to the principle laid down by Dr. Kerr. A Church has no more right to misappropriate money than an individual, and all funds must be kept sacred and intact for the purposes to which they were given. Dr. Harper's plan for the general budget board is good, with the exception of absolute authority (that should be left to combined boards), but to carry out the whole plan of his organization would, in our opinion, be adding useless machinery. Our experience in Men and Millions has demonstrated that we cannot use them in collections. We should follow Dr. Staley's plan and collect through our regular Church channels and have our Church treasurers to remit quarterly.

We could use to good advantage a field secetary on stewardship in each regional Convention, but solely for educational purposes, and not to take subscriptions or to raise funds.

The wonderful development of the Woman's Mission work in the Southern Christian Convention has not been through a constant and insistant call for funds, but through the study classes and other means of education. We must let the laity feel that our general Church officers want to do something else besides raise funds.

Our Churches in the Southern Convention raised $17,638.41 on Conference apportionments last year. It seems that the $50,000 recommended by Dr. Staley is high enough for the first few years. We have approximately one-fourth of the membership of the Christian Church, and, other things being equal, we should raise $125,000 under Dr. Harper's figures.

My experience with a Conference that has increased its Conference contributions 500 per cent in twenty years has been that if you put an apportionment within a reasonable reach of a Church, in its effort to reach it, more funds will be raised than when the apportionment is felt to be excessive.

We all want the same results and our only differences are differences of opinion as to how best to accomplish the desired end.

Richmond, Va. W. T. WALTERS.

OUR IMPERATIVE NEED.

It seems to me that the one imperative need of our Church work in the Southern Christian Convention is to teach our people that their contributions which are sent to Conference is service to God through the avenues of missions, education, orphanage, etc. Under our present system, for the majority of our membership, contributions for objects outside of the local Church may be summed up in one object—"Conference apportionments." We are not thinking of duty to God and man; we are thinking of "Conference apportionments." We are not thinking of the blessed privilege of serving our God and our needy brother-man by our gifts to missions, religious education, orphanages, etc. We are thinking of "Conference apportionments."

This may seem a bit overdrawn; but before you decide it is a false representation, talk with a number of the leading members of your own Church, be honest with your own heart, and see if in your own thinking, even if you are a preacher, if far too many times it has only been "Conference apportionments." The fault is not with our people. We have people as liberal as any, and many of them as spiritually minded as any. The fault is with our system. Our Conferences have been calling upon the Churches to send up so much money each year. And most of them have been making a honest effort to do so. The fact that surprises me is that we have been succeeding as well as we have! If we have been accomplishing that much by emphasizing duty and loyalty to Conference, what can we do if we will emphasize duty and loyalty to God and humanity?

What we need to do is to teach our people the Scriptural doctrine of stewardship, teach them the grace of giving, give them a glimpse of the urgent needs, and let them taste of the joy that comes from having a part in such a blessed work. Beyond a shadow of a doubt, our best-supported institution is the Orphanage. Why? Because Bro. Johnson has taken the Orphanage and its needs and blessings to the people. Every one seems to have a glow of spiritual pride and pleasure over having had a part in such a splendid work. The same thing needs to be done for the other enterprises of our Church. It may not be as easily done, but with the proper effort and initiative, I believe it can be as effectively accomplished.

If I have understood the plan proposed by Dr. Harper, it is directed to this end. The details of the plan may require some modification. I am convinced, however, that it is by far the best proposal that has been made thus far. It combines the benefits of the educational features with the definite and practical figures of the budget system. The plan to fix a per capita apportionment for benevolence in each Church is impracticable. And were it practical, it is undesirable. For no two Churches and few individuals are alike in their ability to give. It might be argued that such a plan is desirable as a goal. But goals are about the most useless things in the world without due preparation and planning to achieve them. We need to do more for our people than to call upon them to give. We must lead them to experience the truth of Acts 20:35.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

Durham, N. C.

PROPOSED BUDGET SYSTEM.

I think the budget plan that has moved the mind of Dr. W. A. Harper to action is a good one. It will work if given a square deal. In our local Church (the Newport News Christian), the finance committee, which is efficiently directed by Mr. Caleb D. West, figured out a budget so as to include all items of expense for our Church for the Conference year. This committee made its report to the Church and the Church approved the budget. Our people knew what they were expected to raise. We have put our shoulder to the wheel and worked for these goals. So far, it has worked fine. We like it. Our finance committee meets monthly and does its best to see that the monthly budget is kept paid. Of course, once in a while there is a member that hates to be reminded that he is behind, but nothing great has ever been accomplished without opposition.

Some Churches May Not be Ready.

I believe that my Church, at Newport News, is ready for the budget system, but I have served a number of Churches as pastor that I fear are not ready for this plan; however, I hope they will surprise me. Many Churches were not ready for the Men and Millions Forward Movement—one of the best things our denomination has ever undertaken—and the surprising thing about it is they never tried to get ready. They were afraid of it. Their faith was small, and "millions" sounded like too big a word for them. But, then, there are other Churches greatly helped by the movement. In fact, every Church has been helped by the Men and Millions Movement that carried out the plan and kept their vows to God and His Church.

Value of the System.

I do not question for a moment but that the plan is the best one that has been offered. If a better plan and a better system is offered, I am ready for the best. I want the best. Our Church needs the best. But until a plan is offered better, I stand in favor of the budget system.

Newport News, Va. B. J. EARP.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM IN ALABAMA.

I have received a copy of the budget system as proposed by Dr. W. A. Harper, and, after reading and studying it very carefully, I have concluded to endorse it as a good plan for our future work. We must have some plan to take the place of the Forward Movement or the Church will go backward; and that would be an unpardonable calamity.

The idea of reaching every member is a very attractive feature. While one of the difficulties will be in getting the work done at the first, and then to follow it up from time to time, the educational feature, when adopted, will aid very largely in the work. It depends upon the first impressions made upon the masses as to its final success. We have used similar plans with amazing reults. This will be the means of a better system for finance and greater results in every way.

One of the dreams I have is in the organization. The amount of machinery it will take to carry it on. With a general head over all, and then for each department to take the lead—say, education, evangelization, etc., respectively, at the time of the offering—would do the work and save the overlapping in authority and expense. While that may be in the mind of Dr. Harper to do, I never have favored too many heads in any one thing. An advantage of this over the Forward Movement is, it is not binding but one year. Then the thrill of success will lead many, even to larger things for the next year.

The idea of the entire Church working together is a great thing with me. I have wondered for a long time why a united Church, and yet distinct almost in its operation. The session at Raleigh a few years ago did not help me a little bit. It does seem to me that if we are one, our efforts should be one. E. M. CARTER.

ORDER OF SERVICE AT THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE SUNDAY, MARCH 16, 1924.

Morning Service, 10:45 o'Clock.

Organ Prelude.
Doxology.
Responsive Reading—Selection 12.
Gloria.
Hymn—No. 447, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord."
Scripture Lesson.
Anthem—"Open the Gates of the Temple" (Klapp).
Prayer.
Anthem—"O Clap Your Hands Together" (Turner).
Reception of Members.
Baritone Solo—(Selected) Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.
Hymn—No. 442, "The Church's One Foundation."
Postlude.

Afternoon, 3 o'Clock.

Organ Prelude.
Doxology.
Hymn—No. 373, "Lead On, O King Eternal."
Prayer.
Anthem—"Praise My Soul the King of Heaven" (Avery), followed by "Gloria" from Twelfth Mass (Mozart).
Greetings from Other Denominations of the City.
Anthem—"Festival te Deum" (Buck).
Hymn—No. 440, "Faith of Our Fathers."
Offertory.
Quartette—"My Faith Looks Up to Thee," Mrs. Eva C. Ogletree, Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, Mr. J. Alton Rea, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio.
Hymn—No. 155, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."
Postlude.

Evening Service, 7:45 o'Clock.

Organ Recital.
Gloria.
Reading of Psalm of Praise.
Anthem—"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel" (Spross).
Hymn—No. 32, "Day is Dying in the West."
Scripture Lesson.
Prayer.
Quartette—"The Lord is My Shepherd" (Neidlinger), Mrs. Edith S. Smith, Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, Mr. J. Alton Rea, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Hymn—No. 43, "Sun of My Soul, Thou Saviour Dear."
Offertory.
Duet—"Calm as the Night," Mrs. Edith S. Smith, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., People's Christian Church, Dover, Del.
Hymn—No. 44, "Now, the Day is Over."
Organ Postlude.

PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK.

Tuesday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and the School," by Dr. W. A. Harper, President Elon College, Elon College, N. C.

Wednesday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and the Government," by Governor E. Lee Trinkle, Richmond, Va.

Thursday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and Industry," by Mr. Homer Ferguson, President Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Corp., Newport News, Va.

Friday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and Norfolk, Va., the Home," by Mrs. Walter C. Fain, Delegate House of Representatives of Virginia.

Next week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will give a history of the Norfolk Church—the Christian Temple—and its pastor, Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, with special mention of the officers of the Church.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FEBRUARY PAYMENTS ON MEN AND MILLIONS.

February was the first month of the quarter, and of course many captains who make collections, do not send them until the end of the quarter. On this account, it is impossible to tell what the captains collected till they send in their report at the close of the quarter, which ends with April 30th. However, the individual collections sent in to Bro. Johnson during February of $2,418.53 is encouraging, provided of course the captains made proportionate collections. From the scores of letters received, we have every reason to believe that this quarter, composed of February, March and April, will see good collections. It should do so, at any rate. This is the last quarter of the fourth year. Unless we make some payment on our pledges before the final year, it is going to be exceedingly difficult for us to pay all of our pledge in one year. On this account, it is greatly to be desired that the captains and pastors keep the matter prominently in the minds of the people. It will no doubt be grateful to our chairman, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, to observe that North Carolina in the month of February paid considerably more than all the other Conferences combined.

However, North Carolina is yet far behind as well as the other Conferences, and there is much to be done. If all who are interested will do their part faithfully and honestly, we shall yet have a day of rejoicing over the great achievement of our Men and Millions Movement. There certainly never was a better or a holier movement carried on amongst any people, and the more we do to make this a success, the more capable will we be to carry to success other interests of the kingdom which may be committed to us.

Men and Millions Movement represents the Christian Church supporting all that the Church is trying to do, and standing for all that the Church stands for and undertakes. Every dollar paid on these pledges goes to the help of all that the Christian Church holds dear.

J. O. Atkinson.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY OFFERINGS FOR FEBRUARY.

Beulah, Phoenix City, Ala., $3.16; Dendron, Va., $4.49; Haw River, N. C., $4.44; Linville, Va., $2.34; Bethlehem, Timberville, Va., $3.86; Richland, Ga., $1.35; Ramseur, N. C., $2.48; Zion, Moncure, N. C., $3.90; Rosemont, So. Norfolk, Va., $6.08; Citizens' Bible Class, Elon College, N. C., $3.90; Holland, Va., $8; St. Paul's, Wyoming, Del., $2.06; Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C., $6.61; Portsmouth, Va., $6.00; Monticello, Brown Summit, N. C., $2.20; Reidsville, N. C., $5.73; Beulah, Wadley, Ala., $2.38; South Norfolk, Va., $3.24; South Norfolk, Va., $5.70; Leaksville, Luray, Va., $3.72; Richland, Ga., $1; Raleigh, N. C., $5; Ingram, Va., $3; High Point, N. C., $1.05; Berea (Nansemond), Driver, Va., $6; Pleasant Hill (A), Liberty, N. C., $1.25; Union (Southampton), Franklin, Va., $2.10; Liberty, Vance, N. C., $3.37; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $4.23; Rosemont, Berkley, Va., $12.24; Apple's Chapel, Brown Summit, N. C., $1.08; Wakefield, Va., $3.70; Winchester, Va., $6.65; Win-One Bible Class, Winchester, Va., $55; Linville, Va., $2.56; New Providence, Burlington, N. C., $2.39; Pleasant Grove, News Ferry, Va., $3; Turner's Chapel, Colon, N. C., $1.10; Shallow Ford, Elon College, N. C., $1.50; Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C., $7; Shallow Well, Sanford, N. C., $1.25; Dry Run, Seven Fountains, Va., $2.36; Durham, N. C., $17.98; Wadley, Ala., $2.12; Ramseur, N. C., $2.06; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., $3.80; N. Highlands, Columbus, Ga., $1.76; Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., $436.73; Catawba Springs, N. C., $50; Burlington, N. C., $82.92. Also for furnishing mountain home, Monticello C. E., Brown Summit, N. C., $12.01; Woman's Missionary Society, Windsor, Va., $9.75. Total for month of February, 1924, $827.60.

We are grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy to add several new schools to the list, these having voted since January 1st to give one offering a month to missions, as most of our active, wide-awake schools are now doing, and as our Convention has asked all schools to do.

Gratefully,
J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary.

NOT NECESSARY—IF NOT, WHAT THEN!

Every now and then some man bobs up and declares that faith in the virgin birth of Christ is not essential to the Christian life. Well, if it is not, what then? If faith in the virgin birth of Christ is not necessary, then faith in the Scriptures is not necessary, and for the reason that the Bible plainly declares that Jesus was to be born of a virgin. Now, if it is not necessary to believe that, we may be excused for not believing in the prophet Isaiah (7:14), and we need not believe the New Testament because Matthew and Luke both declare for the virgin birth. (See Matt. 1:20-25; Luke 1:30-35.)

Now, if we may disregard the plain words of the Bible, we suppose we may also disregard the doctrines of the Bible, but we do not believe that we are, as Christians, at liberty to disregard the Bible language or the doctrines set forth therein. Men are getting to claim entirely too much authority over the Word of God, and that leads them to claim the same authority over the doctrines of the Bible.

There is but one thing to do and be safe as to this matter, and that is to stick to both the language and teachings of the Book. That is the safe way, and as we believe, the only safe way of the Christian.

When men dispute the Word of God, they are witnessing against themselves, for the irreverence and spirit of the man who shoves the Bible aside and acts upon his own authority is so foreign to the spirit of Christ that we can but reach one conclusion, and that is that the man is in no sense competent to settle such questions, and he, therefore, classes himself as an unbeliever.

The Presbyterian of the South has a good word along this line, as follows:

"Belief in the virgin birth of Jesus is sometimes said not to be one of the essential doctrines of the Christian religion. The Scriptures leave no doubt on that subject. Hundreds of years before His coming, the prophet foretold that the Messiah should be born of a virgin. The angel told Mary that this prophecy should be fulfilled in her. The angel also told Joseph that the child to be born of Mary was the Son of God and not of man. One of two things is necessary. We must either accept the virgin birth of Jesus or else deny the inspiration of the Scriptures."

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying something by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

THE MISSION BOARD,
Elon College, N. C.

Lieut.-Gov. J. E. West, Chairman.

J. O. Atkinson, Secretary.

SECOND COMING OF JESUS.

DOES THE BIBLE TEACH US THAT JESUS IS COMING A SECOND TIME IN PERSON?

By Rev. P. T. Klapp.

The Bible is the only Book upon which we can absolutely depend for this information. So let us see what it says. "And unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time" (Heb. 9:28). "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come" (Cor. 11:26). "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven" (Acts 1:11).

Now, reader, just turn to your Bible and see for yourself, for this is certainly there. Some skeptics or critics seem to think that Christ's second coming will be only in the person of His Spirit, but the above text says he will come back just as He went away. When Jesus was on trial before Caiaphas, He, in the midst of all the false testimony, was silent, and the high priest demanded of Jesus if He was the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him: "Thou has said: nevertheless, I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matt. 26:64). Now, Jesus gave this testimony of His second coming right in the presence of His enemies, when He knew He would be accused of blasphemy; and in this testimony He declared His second coming.

Just after Jesus was betrayed, He was brought before the high priest, and He asked Jesus, "Art Thou the Son of the Blessed?" And Jesus said, "I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven" (Mark 14:62). Here the high priest said for this testimony He ought to be put to death. Now, if Jesus hadn't wanted to have established His second coming, do you suppose He would have, in the presence of the priest, given such testimony?

There Shall be Signs of His Second Coming.

There are certain signs that His coming is near at hand. When we see the fig tree putting forth her leaves, we say that summer is nigh; when we see the prophecies fulfilled referring to the second coming of Christ, he said, we might know that the time is near. "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on earth; for the powers of Heaven shall be shaken, and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke 21:25, 26, 27). The Apostle Peter tells us that the day of the Lord's coming will be as a thief in the night.

The great Apostle Paul, in writing to the Church at Thesalonica, says this: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which asleep. For the Lord Himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the angel and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thes. 4:15, 16, 17). This will be a wonderful meeting. There have been many wonderful meetings. D. L. Moody, Sam Jones, Dr. Tyree and Billy Sunday have led many wonderful meetings. It was a wonderful meeting when Solomon dedicated the temple; it was a wonderful meeting when Moses met God on the mountain and heard Him out of the burning brush: but the most wonderful meeting ever held by men was the Pentecostal revival. When three thousand souls were added to the Church. The greatest meeting of all will be the one when the saints who are living then go to meet the Lord in the air. But the great question for us to consider is will we be ready for that meeting? See the answer to that question. The wise virgins will be ready; the pure in heart will be ready; the holy ones will be ready; God's glorious Church that's without spot, or wrinkle, or blemish, will be ready for that meeting (Eph. 5:27), and last of all, but not least, they who are Christ-like will be ready. Praise the Lord for that anticipated meeting. Won't it be a glorious meeting, when all the saints shall meet the Lord in the air! Let us make haste and be ready for that meeting. The Lord is coming, but we know not when. Say, are you ready—are you ready for that meeting? His coming is sure, but the time is uncertain, hence Jesus said to His disciple: "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour when ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

Now, we can see from the Lord's own statement two things: First, He is coming; second, the time uncertain. Let us so live that death nor the Lord shall come and catch us out of place. When He calls for me, I want Him to find me right where I ought to be, with all things ready, lamp trimmed, brightly burning, with my vessel full of oil. I don't know His time, but I am satisfied with His plan. Glory to His name. He said He didn't know, nor the angels didn't know, but we might know by the signs given that the time is near. It seems to us that the people are as little concerned about the second coming of Christ as they were when Noah warned the people of the flood. The Apostle Peter tells us, "There shall come in those days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, saying, where is the promise of His coming?" (1 Peter 3:3). This reminds us of two young preachers of whom we heard not long since. After they had heard a man of talent, little and experienced, preach a sermon on the second coming of Christ, they went away making light of it. We don't think the pulpit, nor the people, need a preacher who don't believe in the second coming of Christ. We have this further to say, that the preacher who says he don't believe in the second coming of Christ, that of itself shows he hasn't searched the New Testament very closely, and I don't know that he is justified in administering the Lord's Supper. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come" (1 Cor. 11:26). It is said that the second coming of Jesus is mentioned or referred to more than three hundred times; hence, we don't see how any one who studies the Bible can fail to see it. I fear it is too true that a great majority of our Churches never hear a sermon from their pulpits on this subject. I don't know how we can excuse ourselves for not declaring the whole counsel of God. Paul said he hadn't failed. I wonder how many of us could say as much! God help us to be obedient. The reason why our people know so little about the second coming of Christ is because they hear so little about it. Paul found a little band of believers, a little Church in upper coast of Ephesus, that hadn't even heard that there was a Holy Ghost. So it is with us. Jesus again and again told His disciples of His second coming, and to watch the signs and be ready. He said: "Therefore, be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh" (Matt. 24:42).

Christ said, "Ye may know the time is nigh when you see the prophecies fulfilled." Let us look at a few of them. Nahum tells us of the chariots dashing through the streets like torches, jostling against each other in the broad way. Daniel tells us that knowledge shall be on the increase and that the people shall be going to and fro, and that they shall think to change the time. Something over four hundred years ago, a good many members of the English Parliament had to hire some one to read and write for them; but not so now. Jesus tells us that there shall be wars and rumors of wars. History doesn't give us any account of any period when there has been as much wars and rumors of war as there has been for the past few years. He says nations shall rise up against each other. That's been on for the past few years. He says there will be earthquakes in divers places. I noticed in some paper some time ago there had been, since the first of September, 1923, till about the first of February, 1924, one thousand three hundred earthquakes. And Jesus said there would be pestilences, strange diseases. That's on right now, namely: grippe, influenza, palegra, infantile paralysis, people sleeping themselves to death, etc. Paul tells us, in writing to Timothy, of the perils that would come in the last days—and they are on right now, namely: for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truth-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having the form of godliness, but denying the power (2 Tim. 3:1-5).

And another evidence of His coming is drawing nigh, in that the Jews are returning to Jerusalem rapidly. And another evidence that His return is drawing nigh is that the gospel has been preached in all nations. The prophecies have been and are being repeatedly fulfilled. Then you ask why don't He come? My opinion is that He is now waiting for the full number to constitute the bride and for her to get her robes on. The millennium cannot come till Jesus comes with His body and sets up His kingdom. Then the devil will be shut up in the bottomless pit for a thousand years.

Just think what a glorious time that will be, when the saints come back to this earth and reign with Christ a thousand years! We may then think of the battles we have fought here against sin and Satan. To be here in perfect health, without a pain or a head or a heartache, nor sorrow, nor death. But blessed be the name of Him who will have absolute reign for a thousand years, and His saints with Him who have been washed in His blood. Glory, praise and honor to His great name!

Elon College, N. C.

The Egyptian government reopened Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb amid wild demonstrations of patriotic enthusiasm. That's difficult for a westerner to understand. Egypt has done nothing much since the days when Ptolemy, one of Alexander's generals, probably Alexander's half brother, and the ancestor of Cleopatra, stimulated the national life.

What comfort today's dismal remains of old Egyptian power one can find by looking into the tomb of an old pharaoh who at least had the energy to go out and hunt lions, is hard to understand.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.
MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods, Wadley, Ala., August 11 to 18.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 23, 1924.

Topic: "The Reign of Solomon."

Lesson: 1 Kings 3:11; 2 Chron. 1, Printed 2 Chron. 1:7-12; 1 Kings 11:6-11.

Golden Text: "The fear of Jehovah is the beginning of knowledge."—Prov. 1:7.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 45:1-7.

I am not an admirer of Solomon. He is, to me, one of the most disappointing characters in the Bible. I shall use him, then, as an example of what not to be and what not to do. But lest I seem to be too harsh, I will try to give him the benefit of the doubt wherever it is a matter of opinion and not of historical fact.

Solomon left no room for doubt as to his purpose to be king. His first official act was to execute his brother, Adonijah, who was a rival claimant to the throne. He also removed Abiathar from the priesthood, and had Joab, the faithful captain of other days, slain, and slain while at the altar. And finally he ordered the execution of Shimei upon the merest pretext. Solomon did not, like others, wade through blood to reach his throne, but he did shed blood freely after he reached the throne.

Solomon's next act was to marry an Egyptian princess. This was but the beginning of a number of foreign alliances that brought serious evils in their train. These foreign women had their own gods, and Solomon was obliged to provide services of worship for them. Accordingly, the worship of Jehovah became corrupted in many ways. These alliances were strictly forbidden, and there was no justification for them.

Solomon was peace-loving. He did not make wars of aggression, and he was content to hold the kingdom as it had been handed down to him by his father. He also developed the commercial interests of his country, and although this policy had some disadvantages, he is to be commended for it. He was very ambitious to make a great show, and he instituted great building operations. In order to do this, he was obliged to impress the people into labor and to lay heavy tributes upon them. Thus, while his kingdom was one of outward show, it was one of inward disintegration. He was not a beneficent monarch and did not help the masses.

Solomon was known as a great wise man. He is credited with many proverbs and many songs, and there are stories both within and without the Bible which testify to his shrewdness and practical wisdom.

His great achievement was the building of the temple. This was a magnificent structure and gave prestige both to Solomon and to Jerusalem. It was the means of centralizing worship at Jerusalem and of entrenching the priestly class, as well as of establishing the Davidic line. Solomon's prayer at the dedication is a noble utterance. Would that his life had been more in accord with the spirit of his prayer.

The lesson as printed is concerned with Solomon's choice and of his subsequent rejection by Jehovah. It appears that the young king had gone to Gibeon where there was an ancient sanctuary, to sacrifice. While he was there, Jehovah appeared to him in a dream and told him that he might make a choice as to what he would have. The young man chose, not riches, wealth, honor, or the life of them that hated him—he had already taken that—but wisdom and knowledge. Jehovah then told him that he should have wisdom and knowledge, and the other things would be added. He also promised to make him greater than any king before him or after him.

The second part of the lesson tells how Solomon went not fully after Jehovah as did his father David. For he built high places to other gods and forsook Jehovah. Jehovah, therefore, rejected him, and announced the rending of the kingdom from him. But not until after his death.

A great deal of emphasis has always been laid on Solomon's wise choice. And he is to be commended on asking for wisdom and knowledge rather than for riches and honor and other like things. But the fact remains that Solomon asked for the ability to conduct public and military affairs. It was for mere practical judgment and shrewdness that he asked. Dr. Van Dyke has a great sermon on Solomon's mistake.

One thing more. There were extenuating circumstances in Solomon's case. He was reared in a harem, where there was dissension and immorality. He was the son of a woman who had become David's wife in an illegitimate way. And he was almost forced to do what he did by the unfortunate marriages which he had made. The fact remains that Solomon was a failure as a man and as a king.

Lesson Points.

1. Life is made up of choices.
2. Men usually get their dominant desires.
3. He who chooses wisely usually gets more than he chooses.
4. Mere head-knowledge is not enough.
5. God can speak to men in dreams. He does not always do so.
6. Material splendor often blinds people to the real values of life.
7. There is no substitute for genuine goodness.
8. A real test of character is a man's attitude towards God after he has risen in the world.
9. No prosperity is real and lasting that is achieved at the cost of manhood.
10. God must, of necessity, reject those who are not fit vessels for His work.
11. A great deal depends upon the choice of a wife.
12. Out of the heart are the issues of life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

March 23, 1924.

Topic: "The Personal Touch in Winning Others to Christ."

Lesson: John 1:40-51; Jas. 5:20.

Daily Readings: Jesus wins souls (Matt. 4:18-20); Jesus wins Zaccheus (Luke 19:1-10); Philip wins the Ethiopian (Acts 8:26-40); Jesus and Nicodemus (John 3:1-16); Paul and the cripple (Acts 14:8-18); Jesus at the well (John 4:1-26).

Christians—real Christians—are people who have been saved by Jesus Christ. They know something of the joy and peace and power and love which Jesus gives. They know how Christ can meet, and has met, their deepest needs.

It goes without saying that Christians should be supremely concerned about making the good things of Christ known to others who do not know Him. For as they needed Christ, so do others need Christ. And as Christ has met their needs, so will He meet the needs of others. They should, therefore, be trying always to win others to Christ.

And yet there are very few Christians who ever think seriously about this most important work. Many of them never think of it at all, and many of those who do think of it, think of it in terms of the preacher or an evangelist. They believe that others should be won to Christ, but that it is not their business to do it. "Let George do it," is their philosophy.

But winning others to Christ is the task and the privilege of all Christians. It is only as Christians assume this responsibility as individuals that any large numbers of men and women will be won to Christ. Personal work is the greatest work in the world. Let us see in this lesson a few principles that should help us to do it.

1. Christians who would win others to Christ, must first of all be in touch with Christ. Andrew and the other disciple "abode with Jesus that day." They had been in contact with Jesus. They had found in Him what they needed. They had been fired by His enthusiasm. They knew that they had found the Christ. It must be so with us. Unless we are in touch with Christ, unless we are abiding in Him, we will not have three things that we must have for personal work—a life of victory over sin, i. e., a godly life; a concern for our fellow-men (we will never do any personal work until we have compassion for our fellow-men, and we will never have that compassion until we get it from Christ); and spiritual power. The first thing for us to do if we are going to attempt personal work is to get in touch with Christ ourselves.

2. We should begin where we are. "Andrew first findeth his own brother, Simon Peter." Andrew and Peter found Philip, who was of their own city. These men began where they were. Before they began to evangelize the heathen, they won the man next to them. We must do the same. It may be that there are members of our own family who are not Christians. Perhaps our closest friends are not Christians. Perhaps the members of our Sunday School classes are not Christians. Perhaps the men in our lodge, our society, our office and our school—and this applies, of course, to young people—are not Christians. There is an opportunity for us. Let us set about by prayer and personal work to win those who are next to us. And let us take some one our own size.

3. We should let Christ make His own appeal. These early disciples said, "Come and see." They were willing to let Christ speak for Himself. They knew that when men saw Christ and had an opportunity to know Him in an intimate way, they would be drawn to Him. It must be thus with us. We must first of all have Christ in our daily life. We must have so much of His spirit in our lives that folks will really know that we have been with Him, and that they will want to be like Him. And then we must present His claim upon their lives, and "lift Him up," so that He might draw all men unto Himself.

4. We must start now, at once, immediately. The reason, at least one reason, why we have never won anybody to Christ is because we have never tried. As the old guide said to the young hunter who had "buck fever when he saw his first deer, and could not shoot, "If ye ain't never going to shoot, ye ain't never goin' to hit." Let us determine that by the grace of God we will win at least one soul to Christ this year.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS.

"Personal work should be private."

"Thunder may have a place from the pulpit, but it has no place in personal work."

"The average person does not know that he is unsaved. He must first be awakened."

"The first requisite on the part of a personal worker is an abiding conviction in the message."

SOME POINTED QUESTIONS.

1. Have you ever won a soul to Christ?
2. Are you living in such a way that God can use you to win others?
3. Do you know how to meet the excuses and arguments which men use against becoming Christians?
4. Are you praying in particular for any of your friends?
5. Do you wait until revival services to do your personal work?

HAW RIVER CHURCH.

I am glad to be a member in such a Church. I love that Church and its Sunday School. Indeed, I love every one God has made. I am with those who are trying to live like He wants us to live. I do not leave out one of them in my prayers, for I long to see the Lord, the King of all the earth. This earth would be heaven to me if all would let God lead the way. I feel so happy since I let Jesus come into my life and have His way with me. Jesus makes my burdens so light. I am yoked up with Him, and he carries the heavy end of the yoke. He is our friend in all kinds of trouble, if we but trust Him. He is so merciful and forgiving to as many as lean on His promises.

It is so much better to do right than to do wrong. While we are not to be saved by our good works, but God does reward His people for faithful and true service. When we do evil, our evil works sink us deeper into the miry clay. It is true I find it hard to keep myself spotless in the Christian life, but He can keep as many of us as commit themselves to Him. To live a pure life, means that I will not have to take back what I say—because it is the truth. I love my Sunday School teacher as well as one ought to do, although it is not the same one every time. It is true I cannot be the pupil I ought to be, because I am not qualified; still, I mean to do my best. I often keep very quiet, only listening, because I know so little. I am so grateful that I do understand enough to let God lead the way and try to keep my cup full. In this way I keep Satan out of my heart. This makes me feel so free and when trouble arises in our holy place (the Church), I know I did not start it.

If all of the Church-goers would be a little more careful and more forgiving, we would not have much trouble any way. When I hear something that is not what it ought to be, I keep silent except to the Lord. When we hear what some one has said of us, which is not what it ought to be, we need to let it alone. If we could all do this, I think we would keep our lights burning. If trouble comes to me after I have done my best, I still try to talk with Jesus and to Him I go, for He is my friend. He uses His unseen hand in my defense, and of course I cannot forget Him, or knowingly grieve His Spirit. I am trying to walk in His blessed footsteps and to do to others as I would have them do to me. I try to keep all stumbling-blocks out of the way of myself and others. I want the prayers of all Christians who read this. I also wish all who read it, who are not Christians, to ask Jesus to help them to be.

I not only wish to walk in the narrow way, but I wish to keep just as near Him as I can. I have seen so much of Satan's work to win Christians from the truth to error that I will not please Satan not one time if I can help it. Let those who are not Christians remember what I said. Be sure to become a Christian. The Lord has given me a husband and five little girls. He took my little boy from me, but I will not complain, because He did it—He knows when to take our lambs from us.

I want to appeal to my own Church to go to the Lord and appeal to Him in earnest prayer to help us to get rid of all confusion in the Church and then let us come with one accord, and not believe all we hear, for at best a part of it is false and some of what we hear is misunderstood. Let us shut our ears and turn our backs upon the wicked one. Before the Lord and all men, I am trying to be a Christian. I try to carry the same face all the time. After I do all I can, it is only by His help that I can keep myself unspotted from the world. I wish the prayers of all for me and mine. Let us seek to keep our names not only on the Church book, but in the Lamb's book of life.

ROSA MANESS PHILLIPS.

Haw River, N. C.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

I reached Walters from Smithwood Saturday morning, September 1, 1923. I went to Beaver Dam Sunday. The following week I went to Mt. Carmel to hear Bro. White, and to Beaver Dam to hear Bro. Jones. In this way I got both rest and help for the work to follow. Saturday I left for Fuller's Chapel, preached at Fuller's Chapel in the afternoon and at Henderson at night. I left Henderson about 3 o'clock Monday morning, and reached Franklin about 7 A. M.; came by home, and got to Windsor about 10 o'clock, where Bro. White was waiting to take me to Bethlehem to begin a meeting Monday afternoon. At Bethlehem they have just remodeled the Church and they have a very nice one, with nice Sunday School rooms, heating system, and everything well arranged for both Church and Sunday School work.

At Bethlehem they had more good things to eat, it seemed to me, than I had seen any place—so much I feared we would ruin the body and starve the soul. So feeling as I did, as much as I liked to eat, I told the people we must get to praying; in fact, I came to believe the people had even been praying before I reached the place.

We had the first service Monday afternoon and closed Friday afternoon, having service afternoon and night of each day. The meeting grew in interest from the beginning, the congregations grew, the interest grew, the Holy Spirit came in answer to prayer. He did His office work, and before the meeting was over I believe we had a revival. Hundreds of people came forward to reconsecrate their lives, many backsliders returned, while twenty-five professed faith in Christ for the first time and twenty-eight joined the Church.

This Church, as I see it, has a very bright prospect for the future. They are a fine people. I learned to love them while there, and my prayer is that God may lead them on to higher and better things in His service. Bro. White is their pastor. He is a fine man. I like him and enjoyed working with him very much. May God's richest blessings rest and abide with pastor and people. With more to follow, I remain yours in the Master's service,

Walters, Va. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

AS ANOTHER SEES IT.

As financial secretary of the Elon Christian Church, I have been working with, and have become interested in, the budget plan of financing the local Church. I have, therefore, read Dr. Harper's plan of financing our denominational benevolences with considerable interest.

The general plan, as outlined, appeals to me strongly. The educational method and the budget plan, it seems to me, are so co-ordinated that neither loses and both gain by the combination—the outstanding qualities of both are retained, yet nothing of vital importance in either is discarded.

The point that appeals to me most, however, and the point that makes the plan practical and really workable, is the fact that while the amount to be raised for benevolences will be determined by the General Convention, no arbitrary obligation is imposed from without upon any of the subdivisions of the Church. The regional Conventions, the Conferences, and the local Churches have the right to accept, reject, or modify their allotment as they believe to be fair and just. Hence, while the raising of funds will be put on a systematic basis, which is absolutely necessary to any intelligent and comprehensive action on the part of the General Convention, no hardship nor unwelcome responsibility is dealt out to any Convention, Conference, or Church.

Just as a well-planned budget will put the finances of an individual Church on a systematic basis, thereby eliminating much guess-work and uncertainty, just so I believe will a similarly logical plan on a larger scale greatly benefit the work of the General Convention.

L. M. CANNON.

Here is a good line of thought. Get your Bible and work out each passage and see what it contains for you and yours. Behind it is nothing less than the promises of God. Can you trust them? If not, why not? Do you doubt His ability? His goodness? His willingness?

"God—the greatest lover
So loved—greatest degree
The world—greatest company
That He gave—greatest act
His only begotten Son—greatest gift
That whosoever—greatest opportunity
Believeth—greatest simplicity
In Him—greatest attraction
Should not perish—greatest promise
But—greatest difference
Have everlasting life"—greatest possession.—John 3:16.

Mr. McAdoo, a candidate for the presidency of the United States, pledges himself to stand by prohibition, enforcing the law. That much is the kind of a man we need in the office of the President, but there are so many candidates now who are offering the same, we can hardly see how that can count for much as between candidates like Mr. Coolidge, Mr. McAdoo, and Mr. Daniels. Mr. Daniels was for prohibition when it was unpopular to be a prohibitionist. So he does not need to announce that he is a prohibitionist.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

WHY OUR DAILY PRAYERS?

"Pray without ceasing."

Answer: To possess the secret source of life's highest strength; to be a strong soul; to have the power of spiritual endurance as seeing Him "who is invisible"; to have Christ in our lives, forgiving and being forgiven as strong souls do; to pray as He was able to pray; to be patient as He was patient (so much needed); to be loyal and steadfast to the noblest and truest ideals, supplying life with motive; to draw to ourselves the consciousness of divine purpose; to acquire the assurance of the highest companionship, the power of God in our lives; to establish harmony with His will; to regulate our lives in material things; to possess the availing power of prayer, which, rung by a sense of right and need, reveals to us the best way.

"Prayer is the lever of spiritual life; the lung by which it breathes; the atmosphere in which it exists"; the language by which it communes with His great Spirit.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us to pray and never fail. Teach us how to flee to Thy knowledge, to Thy lovingkindness, to Thy tender mercies, to Thy soul for the breath of heaven; that we may have Thee for shelter in the time of storm. Whatever this life may bring to us, grant that it may never take us from the consciousness that Thou art our Father, who art able to give unto us exceedingly abundantly of heaven's blessings. For Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

UNRULED LIVES.

"We are become as they over whom thou never barest rule."—Isa. 63:15-19, v. 9.

There is a vast difference between ruled and unruled people. Every act of our lives reveals whether we are ruled or being ruled, and whether our ruler is an evil or a good one. To follow the Lord Jesus Christ as our ruler, requires cheerful submission to His will. Anything less than this is in the class of the unruled, undiciplined and uncontrolled. The difference between a Christian and others is that the former is a voluntary God-disciplined man. To be so, does not make him a molly-coddle, but it makes him a patient and enduring soul. He learns to think of others without ideas of personal advantage. He learns how to govern his feelings, and is not easily provoked. This gradually separates him from others and marks him as a ruled man. If he fails in this, he falls in the class of the unruled.

The Christian seeks to be ruled by the will of God. This was the Saviour's chief distinction, who was always saying: "Not my will, but Thine, be done." Let us make our daily devotions a search for the will of God and a whole consecration to do that will.

Prayer.—Father of all, forbid that we who hear Thy name shall be as the unruled, and as they who were never called of Thee. May Thy word be sweet to us and that which lingers the longest in our hearts. For Christ's sake, we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PLEASURE-MADNESS.

"Pipe and wine are in their feasts."—Isa. 5:11-15.

God wants us to be glad, and have seasons of relaxation, but He would have all our enjoyment properly tempered by an "eye single to the glory of God." Many, many times, I have had young people come to me with the same old question about amusements. "Is it wrong to dance? Is it wrong to play a social game of cards? And if wrong, why?"

It seems to me that in the passage we are considering, the prophet has dealt very sanely with the matter. It is not so much the harp, the tabret, and the pipe in their feasts, but the fundamentally greater matter, their lack of consideration for God. If men could do all these things that are being done today according to the advice of the apostle, and give God the place He should have in every phase and department of our life, these questions would never arise.

It is said that our day is a day of pleasure-madness, and there is much truth in that saying. When we live for pleasure alone, making it the end and aim of life, we are mad, for after all the only true pleasure is that which makes us more fit to carry on for God.

To any person who may read these words, and feel inclined to ask the questions mentioned above, one thing will settle the whole matter—Is God in it? "First, be sure you are right."—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—Father of all, teach us the brotherhood of mankind. Enlarge its loveliness in our ideas every day. Purge us of small and mean things. Cleanse our hearts so that when we seek for and engage in our pleasures, we may do so with as much idea of honoring God as when we go to Church to worship. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

"Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His."—Rom. 8:9.

One of the main things which represent the spirit of Christ is brotherliness, which is the most glowing, intelligent and appealing of all Scriptures. Many other passages are dark and mysterious, but this one is clear. Christ Himself was not always understood. Many of His sayings were incomprehensible, but there was never any mistake about His spirit. It was as clear cut as a star. There was never any doubt in the minds of any as to what sort of man he was in attitude, disposition and spirit. In all things He gave Himself and His heart so big and friendly that no one could make a mistake about it. It was the first charge that was ever brought against Him—"He ate with sinners."

Brotherliness is Jesus' interpretation of Christianity. He says when you go to Church and there rememberest that Thou hast aught against thy brother, "go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then worship." The man who carries on as a Christian and is indifferent to fellowship and service, to ill feelings with others, does not know the first principle of Christianity. If we would embrace Christ, we must love one another, throw away our hates and help others to be what they ought to be. It is the first badge of discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples."

Prayer.—Dear Father, in looking into the spirit of our Saviour, may we see ourselves and pray most earnestly that we may have an eager passion to do Thy will, a spirit that forgives and forgets quicker than it remembers, a love greater than our selfishness, and an undiminishing faith in the power that overcomes evil and gives us an entrance into the kingdom of God. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE TEST OF DISCIPLESHIP.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13:34-35.

Christians should understand the relation of faith to love. Our Lord made faith the primary quality. It was the test of discipleship. Hence the first title of Christians was believers, and faith in the divinity of Christ was made the baptismal test. Paul follows in this line. For he is ever insisting that we are "justified by faith." But our Lord, in the text quoted, makes love the last criterion of discipleship, and Paul says: "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love." The solution is found in the interdependence of graces in our complex personality. Love is the source, faith the outcome. Love is the invisible root, faith's confession the visible tree.

Evangelical, saving faith must then prove itself by love. Christ demands faith, but then insists: "By this shall all know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." A professor may have a perfectly evangelical Scriptural faith, but without love, he may be intolerant, harsh and utterly disagreeable.

Alas! how often Christians, and especially representative leaders, in their contests about faith, forget the primary Christian grace, love. No true Christian undervalues the "faith once delivered to the saints," but when he sees contention, and questioning of motives, and bitterness and intolerance in disputations for or against it, he sees the lack of love and of the spirit of Christ, and his heart sinks in sadness. It is only when our words and actions are softened and spiritualized by the winsome temper of love, that we are disciples of Christ indeed, and that an invincible power issues from us to win doubters and opponents to the faith.—Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SATURDAY.

THE UNCERTAINTY OF LIFE.

"Ye know not what shall be on the morrow."—James 4:14-15.

Rummaging through a box of papers brought to light an old letter from a young woman at whose marriage we officiated in a former pastorate. Tear-blotched it was, and well it might be. Broken sentences told her pathetic plight. An orphan, she had never known parental love. Then came the only love she had known. Two happy, golden, glowing years of married life, and then the husband was suddenly snatched away. Such untimely deaths are not easy of explanation. Yet if no one ever died save the octogenarian, then many would ignore God until after the prime of life. If death never called for the mother of a young family, then how many women would neglect God until the last child had passed his nonage. If there were ages or conditions into which death never made his sally, then should we all seek the compass of that shelter, and there would be no way to remind the careless. What Jesus said of His glorious coming is true also of death—"of that day and hour knoweth no man."—Rev. J. H. Allen.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SUNDAY.

SUNDAY IS DIFFERENT.

"Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile."—Mark 6:30-34.

This is one of Christ's most notable invitations to worship, and the Sabbath is the most notable day of the week, set apart for the "rest awhile" and the worship of the Most High. The word "come" has a very loving appeal in it. It is found over three thousand times in the Bible, and in every single instance it lends encouragement and hope. It was Christ's first invitation. It is heaven's last appeal recorded in the last chapter of the Book of Revelation, "The spirit and the bride say come."

The most of folks spend life so strenuously that they have no change nor rest. Business and pleasure combined will not let them stop on the Sabbath. Ought it to be so? Each Sabbath is like the Master's voice calling us, "Come ye apart and rest awhile." Let thy soul feed on Him and be happy today.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord, our Father, in Thy mercy keep us from drifting away from Thee, and help us to worship Thee every Sabbath in a way pleasing to Thee and which means most to us, and in the week may we worship Thee daily in our righteous deeds. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FROM PALM STREET CHURCH.

The quarterly conference of the Palm Street Christian Church was held at the Church, in McAdoo Heights, Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Reports for the past three months were submitted by the pastor, the Rev. H. B. Hall; the superintendent, Ned Shelton, and treasurer, E. L. Hobbs, at this meeting. All the reports showed that the Church had made rapid strides during the pastorate of Mr. Hall.

The report of the pastor, in part, follows:

"The spiritual state of the Church is good, and seems to be improving, as is shown by the increased interest and attendance. We sincerely hope that it is just a beginning that will develop for a solid work for the Master's kingdom. As we have begun, let us press onward, going steadily, remembering that God hath called us to this splendid field of opportunity and service."

Then followed a brief review of the pastor's activities which showed the following facts: During the past three months, he had preached 26 sermons, 9 children's sermons, made 8 outside addresses, officiated at 1 wedding, held 2 funerals, made 130 visits, conducted 14 prayer meetings and 4 Bible classes.

Superintendent Shelton's report showed that the Sunday School had increased in attendance from the average of 75, November 1st, to a total of 160 the first Sunday in February, and that collections had increased proportionately.

The Sunday School, in its monthly program, has designated the second Sunday as Orphanage day, and the fourth as mission Sunday, when the offerings will be sent to these respective enterprises.

The Junior Christian Endeavor of 41 members is doing splendidly under the consecrated leadership of Miss Lettie Scott. She and her co-workers have evidently caught the vision of service, as expressed by their attendance and contagious enthusiasm.

Thanking God for His gracious and ready help in the past months, we will raise our "Ebenezer," look up, and go forward, knowing that all needed grace He will send. H. B. Hall.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. Holland,
L. E. Smith,
I. W. Johnson,
Executive Board

January 31, 1924.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carried us beyond our third mile-post this year. Just twenty-four more to reach this year. That is fine. Our people are a great people, and do things when they become interested. Every member of the Christian Church should be interested in its Orphanage. What should appeal to us more than a little helpless orphan child? If one should appeal to you in person at your home, would you turn it away? I hardly think so. You would not have a heart so cold. If it needed a coat, you would give it a coat; if it was barefooted, in the cold, you would see that its little feet were made warm with stockings and shoes. If it asked for bread, you would give it the best cake and pies in the pantry; if it had no home in which to sleep and the evening shades were lightning out and the sun was sinking low in the West, you would take it in and tuck it away in a warm bed, where it could have happy dreams of the great love of the one who loves little children and touches the hearts of his servants and causes them to provide for his little orphans. I know you would do this, for your heart is too big and full of God's love to not give the little fellow your best. It would deserve it because it is God's little one.

A little orphan child may not happen to pass your way in person and you may not have an opportunity to have the very great pleasure of entertaining one in your home, but have you thought how easy you can give all these blessings to one hundred and five little children at the Christian Orphanage by mailing your check direct to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., or placing it in the collection plate when the special collection is taken in your Church and Sunday School? Ask yourself this question: "What have I done to help support the Christian Orphanage?" If you are not satisfied with what you have done, then ease your conscience by doing more.

Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent.

REPORT FOR MARCH 13, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$2,848.92
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Henderson	$ 6.11
Pleasant Hill (A)	3.43
Zion	1.30
Plymouth	4.25
Apples Chapel	1.04
Bethel	4.70
Morrisville	2.00
Greensboro, 1st S. S.	27.29
		50.12
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Mt. Carmel	$ 9.44
Portsmouth, 1st S. S.	9.19
Elm Avenue	4.57
Franklin	15.00
Isle of Wight	2.50
Mt. Zion	3.94
		44.64
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Roanoke	$ 2.65
Beulah	2.16
N. Highlands	1.93
Rock Stand	1.90
Kite	2.73
Wadley	1.57
		12.94
Valley of Virginia Conference:
High Point	$ 2.00
Dry Run	3.28
Winchester	4.39
		10.67
Special.
W. H. Thomas	$ 25.00
W. W. Brown	15.00
A Friend	15.00
Interest	60.00
S. W. Caddell	1.00
David Wrenn, Greensboro	10.00
		126.00
Grand total		$3,092.29

RECEIVED FOR MEN AND MILLIONS IN FEBRUARY.

The following amounts were paid to C. D. Johnston, executive secretary, Elon College, N. C., on Men and Millions pledges in February, 1924:

North Carolina Conference.
New Providence	$ 26.00
Mt. Auburn	55.00
Liberty, Vance	15.00
Mebane	32.40
Hines Chapel	16.00
Mt. Zion	12.00
Happy Home	55.00
Liberty, Vance	40.00
Sanford	358.00
Damascus	16.00
Hines Chapel	12.00
Henderson	64.55
Franklinton	13.00
Graham	69.00
Pleasant Hill	5.40
Smithwood	20.00
Mt. Auburn	10.00
Pleasant Grove	20.00
Hebron	20.00
Wake Chapel	225.00
Ebenezer	20.00
Six Forks	65.00
Youngsville	15.00
Damascus	80.00
Burlington	117.20
		$1,381.55
Eastern Virginia Conference.
Liberty Springs	$246.40
Union, Surry	10.00
Berea, Nansemond	170.00
Berea, Norfolk	9.00
Ivor	155.00
Windsor	173.75
Barrett's	10.00
Burton's Grove	10.60
Johnson's Grove	2.00
St. Paul's	3.00
Holy Neck	5.00
Oak Grove	.40
		795.15
Valley of Virginia Conference.
Antioch	$ 45.75
Dry Run	23.38
Wood's Chapel	5.00
Mayland	1.20
Linville	48.00
Palmyra	.50
Joppa	1.50
		125.33
Georgia and Alabama Conference.
Corinth	$ 25.00
New Hope	31.50
Mt. Zion	10.00
Wadley	17.00
Rose Hill	25.00
Beulah	8.00
		116.50
Total for month		$2,418.53

This is the first month of the fourth quarter. Less than two months remain now of the last quarter of the fourth year.

J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary.

REYNARD.

Fannie Bell Reynard was born in September, 1887, and died March 2, 1924, aged 36 years and 6 months. Surviving are her husband and three small children, three brothers, and two sisters. Deceased was a member of the Methodist Church in Powell's Port. Funeral by the writer at Joppa Christian Church, March 4, 1924. A. W. ANDES.

SCOTT.

Mrs. Nancy Jane Scott, widow of John T. Scott, who preceded her in death several years, died February 24, 1924, at the age of 71 years 5 months and 17 days.

She had been a member of the Pleasant Ridge Church for about thirty years, ever proving herself faithful and loyal to her Church. Prior to this she had been a member at Shiloh and also at Pleasant Grove. At the time of her death she resided with her son, B. H. Scott, of Ramseur, N. C. Besides the son, five daughters survive—Mrs. A. A. York, Mrs. Everett Cox and Mrs. W. W. Davis, of Ramseur, N. C.; Mrs. G. P. Craven, of Franklinville, N. C., and Mrs. W. E. Bean, of Ore Hill, N. C. Two of her children preceded her in death. There are thirty-five living grandchildren.

"Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who hath bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

Burial by writer, assisted by Revs. J. M. Allred and Scott.

T. J. GREEN.

CLIBURN.

The community of Virgilina was shocked and deeply grieved when on Tuesday, February 12th, Master Joseph Cliburn was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in his own hands. Joe was sixteen years of age, and the youngest in a family of ten children. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Cliburn, and the brothers and sisters of the deceased have the deep sympathy of the entire community. Joe, for several years, had been a pupil in our public school, and was liked by all.

In the presence of a crowd of sorrowing relatives and sympathetic friends, the funeral was conducted from the home the day following his death, and his body was laid to rest near the spot where Joe first saw the light of day and had always lived.

We cannot understand now, but we have faith that in some way God will answer all for the good of the bereaved and His glory.

C. E. NEWMAN.

Sell TIRES
DIRECT FROM FACTORY
We want an auto owner in each locality to advertise Armour Cords. You can make big money and get your own sample Tires Free, by sending us orders from friends and neighbors. No capital or experience needed. We deliver & collect direct. Pay you daily.
Most Liberal Tire Guarantee Ever Written
Armour Cords guaranteed by Indemnity Bond against Blow Out, Wear and Tear Stone Bruise, Tread Separation, Blistering and Rim Cut for 12,500 miles. We are actual manufacturers. Write today for great Special Offer to Agents, and low Factory Prices.
ARMOUR TIRE & RUBBER CO., Dept. 393 Dayton, O.

A Charm
Beautiful Hair
You can possess it by using Caro-Co Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. Large bottle 50c at all dealers.

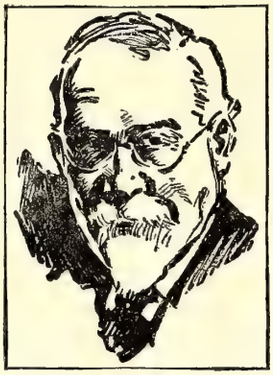
Get My New Buggy Catalog
Buy Direct from Factory
Save the Middleman's Profit
FREE BOOK describes my splendid Full Wrought Highland Hickory Buggies. Sold on 60 days Road Test. Money-back Guarantee. Write!
The D. T. Bohon Co.
60 Main Street
Harrodsburg, Ky.
LOW PRICES

DEEP-SEATED
FRECKLES
Need attention NOW or may remain all winter. Use the old and time-tried guaranteed treatment that has given satisfaction to millions of women for over 15 years, and rid yourself of these homely spots. Ask for
Othine--Double Strength
At all Druggists and Department Stores
OTHINE LABORATORIES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA



Doctor Tells How
NUXATED IRON
PUTS BACK INTO YOUR BLOOD VITAL ELEMENTS OF STRENGTH
Which are Wasted Every Day and Without Which You Become Weak, Nervous, and Run-down.

EVERY action of your daily life uses up a certain amount of strength, energy and nerve force, saps the iron from your blood and gradually steals away your youthful vigor and active usefulness. Unless you replace the iron which is constantly leaving the body, your blood stream loses the power to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain; it becomes thin, pale and watery and cannot provide proper resistance against disease.

If you feel weak, nervous and rundown it is simply because your food does not supply enough iron to make up for the daily waste of this vitally important health-building element. But physicians have found a way to quickly correct such conditions by prescribing a concentrated form of organic iron—Nuxated Iron — which contains iron like the natural iron in your blood.

Iron is the master principle, one of the vital elements of the blood and blood is life. By enriching the blood and creating new red blood cells, Nuxated Iron strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and power into the whole system.

When you get up feeling tired in the morning, when you find yourself nervous, irritable and easily upset; when you can no longer do your day's work without being all fagged out at night; pains across the back and your face looks pale and drawn, do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration or until in your weakened condition you contract some serious disease. Simply try taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks and note the amazing change in your health, vigor, energy and endurance You should be astonished at the results in even a few days time. Success guaranteed or money refunded. At all druggists.

Salt Your Stock the Blackman Way
DO YOU TAKE SALT
with meals, or just fill up on salt once or
TWICE A WEEK?
A few licks of BLACKMAN'S Tonic Salt should be a part of the daily diet of your live stock. It is medicated and will improve digestion, make the feed go further, and keep them in healthy condition. So simple, so easy. Just drop brick in feed-box—it will do the rest.
The Blackman Stock Remedy Co.,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

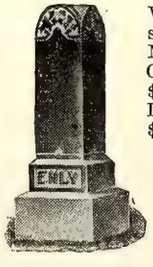
FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.
Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

$362.80 Commission on One Order



We offer a very attractive commission proposition to responsible men selling our line of guaranteed monuments, in Marble and Granite. On one deal our Mr. Fuller of North Carolina, made $362.80; Mr. Bryan of West Virginia, $206.25; Mr. Duncan, of Tennessee, $193.25; Mr. Willard, of Illinois, $131.25. We have many other agents making from $200.00 to $400.00 per month.

Our monuments are well finished. No trouble to sell. Write for full particulars and confidential contract.

National Marble & Granite Corporation
Dept. P., BALL GROUND, GA.

ARNOLD.

Miss Ida Jane Arnold was born May 26, 1856, and died February 7, 1924, aged 67 years 8 months and 11 days. Sister Arnold was greatly afflicted for several years prior to her death. For many years she was housekeeper for Bro. C. N. Garvin, at Timber Ridge, who died recently, but the last two years of her life were spent with her sister in Keyser, W. Va. Sister Arnold was a faithful member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church. She is survived by a brother and two sisters. Funeral services at Timber Ridge, February 9, 1924.

A. W. ANDES.

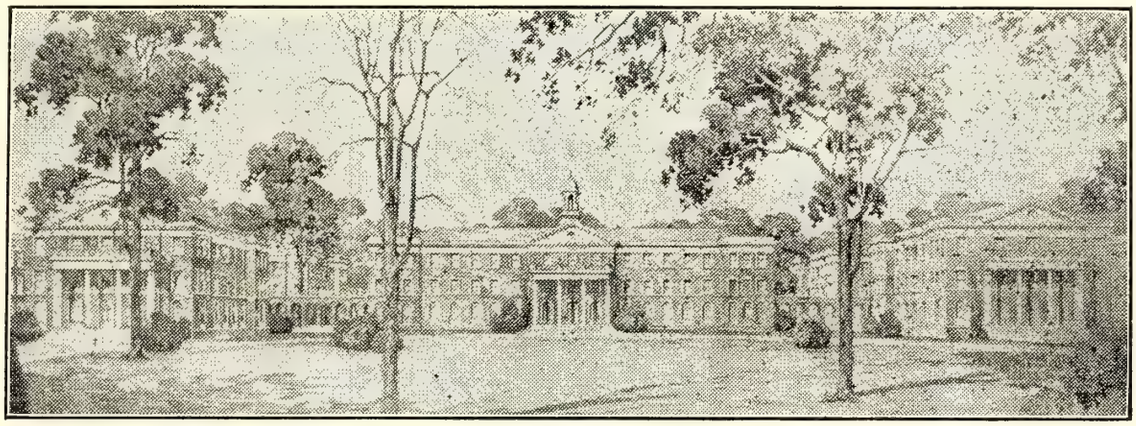
STOUT.

Sophia Stout, daughter of Matthew and Mary Orsborne, was born the 13th of February, 1842, and died the 20th of February, 1924, aged 82 years and 7 days.

In the year 1865 she was married to Aaron Stout, who died near eight years ago. To them were born three sons and six daughters—Jesse M. Stout, of Greensboro, N. C.; Clarkson J. Stout, of Sheridan, Ind.; Cora C. Moffitt, Ashboro, N. C.; Lula A. Curtis, Soler City, N. C.; Luther M. Stout, who died at his home in Siler City fifteen years ago; Ida M. Hodgin, of Smoaks, S. C.; Eva L. Cox and Elsie S. Stewart, of Ramseur, N. C., and Maud A. Copeland, of Sheridan, Ind. There are thirty-eight grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren living. She has one brother living, Jeremiah T. Orsborn, of Oregon.

She was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and was a kind neighbor, a faithful wife, and a loving mother. Burial by writer. T. J. GREEN.

Elon is Building for the Future



Library Building — Auditorium — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE : :: TENNESSEE

GROW COTTON IN VIRGINIA
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS

LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM

Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

BURNS.

Gladys May Burns was born August 8, 1916. After several weeks of suffering, she passed into the life beyond on January 31st. Funeral services were conducted at Grace Chapel February 1st. She leaves father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Burns, and several brothers and sisters. As she slipped from loved ones' fond embrace into the Saviour's loving arms, the sorrow was not of those without hope. Her young life has left a sweet influence that will not be forgotten. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

Something to Crow Over!

IDEAL POULTRY TABLETS

Contain—Permanganate of Potash, Epsom Salts, Boric Acid and Sulphate of Iron. No mystery. No magic. A Sensible and Effective Remedy for Roup and other acute diseases. Helps chicks over their difficult period. Ask us for testimony of users. Consult any druggist as to the value of drugs mentioned. Sold by dealers, or 100 tablets postpaid fifty cents Money back if dissatisfied.

Blackman Stock Remedy Co.
Chattanooga, Tennessee

OLD-TIME RELIGION

How many among the readers of this publication will be one of ten thousand to assist me, an experienced newspaper man, and a Baptist layman, in establishing at Washington, D. C., a new national interdenominational religious paper to be called "OLD-TIME RELIGION", advocating the fundamentals of the old-fashioned Gospel, and opposing the teachings of the religious Modernists, by sending me $1.00 advance yearly subscription, or at least 25c, for three months? (No Stamps).

Geo. D. Beason, 1510 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5½ inches.... $5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

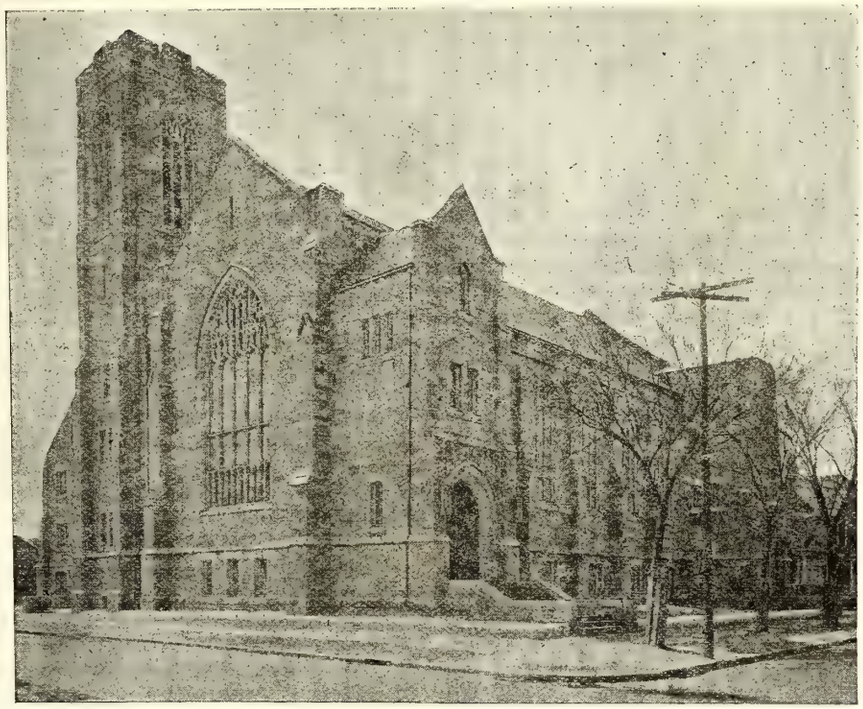
THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1924. | Number 12.

OPENING OF THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE



The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Rev. Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, Pastor.

HISTORIC STATEMENT

The beautiful church edifice which was opened on Sunday, March 16th, for worship is backed by a glorious history of more than one hundred years' standing. The membership of the Christian Temple is composed of the remaining members of Old Providence Christian Church, the Memorial Christian Temple, the Third Christian Church, and the members received since its organization.

Old Providence Christian Church.

On the fly-leaf of the record book of the old Church, the following statement is found: "About the commencement of the present century, many ministers of the gospel, viewing with sorrow an increased bitterness among the various sects of Christians in this State, and conscious that it all resulted from a diversity of sentiment and doctrines of minor importance, felt seriously impressed with the idea that these troubles might be ended by an association upon principles more liberal than those hitherto presented. They contended that Christians might live in utmost love and affection by allowing to each other the privilege of thinking for themselves, which each one taken separately wishes to enjoy. They, therefore, united together under the glorious appellation "Christian," which was given to the primitive disciples at Antioch, taking for their aim, both of faith and practice, the Holy Scriptures, and agreeing to adhere together in the strictest bonds of love and affection, allowing nothing to break this union but impurity."

The Church was organized in 1804, with Rev. Nathaniel P. Tatum as pastor. The Church prospered greatly and drew into its membership a most substantial people. It continued in existence and service more than one hundred years.

The Memorial Christian Temple.

Through the efforts of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, Dr. C. J. Jones, of Columbus, Ohio, was secured to take charge of our Church interest in Norfolk, and Dr. Jones began his work in November, 1889. The permanent organization was effected March 17, 1890, with nine charter members, two of whom are still living and active in the Church—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Eley. The permanent house of worship was built and dedicated May 6, 1894.

The Christian Church, like other denominations, was torn asunder by the Civil War, but it reunited at Marion, Ind., in 1890. The whole Church united in the building of the Church at Norfolk, and it was dedicated as a memorial to the union.

During the year 1901, it raised and sent in one check to the Mission Board for $1,303.67 for the support of its own missionary. In November of the same year, two of its members—Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett—offered themselves for the mission field, and were sent to Porto Rica, where they are still active in the work.

The Third Christian Church.

On September 8, 1907, the Third Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., was organized by Rev. P. S. Sailer, then pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple, with twenty-six charter members, twenty-four of whom are still living and are still active members of the Church. A Sunday School was organized, and the real work of a modern Church begun. The rapid growth and development of the organization has proved the wisdom of those early Christian leaders.

The congregation has always worshiped in temporary quarters, which have been enlarged from time to time to meet increasing needs. The first building would seat about one hundred and twenty five. This was enlarged to accommodate two hundred and fifty, and later in 1912 the seating capacity was increased to three hundred, with seven individual class-rooms.

On January 16, 1919, when Rev. Leon Edgar Smith, D. D., of Huntington, Ind., our present pastor, came to take up the work with us, our membership numbered 236. We were still in our temporary quarters. In April, however, the seating capacity was enlarged to nearly six hundred. The membership of the church increased very rapidly until the Christian Temple was organized.

The Christian Temple.

In the early spring of 1920, the Third Christian Church congregation decided to take definite steps to erect a modern house of worship. The architect was selected, plans adopted and the solicitation for funds begun.

In the summer of 1921, the Rev. James H. Lightbourne, then pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple, resigned his pastorate to take the pastorate of the Holland Christian Church. Mr. Lightbourne called the Rev. Leon Edgar Smith, pastor of the Third Christian Church, in conference relative to the future of the work in Brambleton. At this conference, the suggestion was made to merge the two congregations into one, under the name "The Christian Temple." The suggestion was passed by the official boards of both Churches and ratified by both congregations on Sunday, September 18, 1921. The first service of the united Church was held in the building of the former Third Christian Church at the corner of Thirty-fourth Street and Llewellyn Avenue, Sunday, October 1, 1921. The remaining members of the old Providence Christian Church became interested in the new movement to erect a new Church in Park Place, and on March 12, 1922, united with the congregation of the Christian Temple.

The merging of these three congregations into one, aside from the preservation of the denomination's history made possible under the blessings of God, the erection of this handsome, modern and adequate house of worship.

(Continued on page 10.)

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. S. Long continues to improve physically. Here is hoping that he will soon be entirely well.

Rev. B. J. Howard is suffering from the "flu," we understand. His family, too, has been sick. Let him be remembered in prayer.

At Louisville, Ky., April 18th to 20th, the college students of the Methodist Church will be called into national conference. A splendid idea!

Annouucement has just been made of the marriage of Dr. H. T. Floyd and Miss Nannie Lanore Bailey on Saturday, February 2, 1924. THE SUN wishes them long life, with every happiness.

Sunday, March 16th, was a great day for our Christian Temple of Norfolk. On that day the new $250,000 plant was formally opened. We hope next week to carry a full account of the opening day and of the week that followed.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, Fall River, Mass., is doing a great work in our First Church of that city. He is one of our most capable men. One of his leading laymen writes that Dr. Clem always gives his congregation something to think about.

Mr. W. F. Corwith, who is spending the winter at Southern Pines, visited the College last week. He is a fine type of Christian in business and a friend indeed to Elon and our other educational work. As a trustee of Elon, he is a valued counselor.

Dr. N. G. Newman has resigned as pastor at Elon College. Dr. Newman's resignation has not been accepted by the Church, but he insists that his action is final. For eight years, Dr. Newman has been pastor at our college. He is one of our ablest men, and is now in his prime. Dr. Newman has not made any announcement of his plans.

At this writing, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle is in the midst of a gracious revival at Elon. He preaches in plain gripping fashion on the fundamental tenets of our Christian faith. He brings the individual soul face to face with God. He pleads for fair play with God. And he is getting it. We will write more fully of the meeting next week.

Rev. W. P. Fletcher, D. D., adult division field secretary of the Board of Christian Education, is in the North Carolina Conferences for a month, conducting institutes. Dr. Fletcher is an expert in rural Church work, and his plans are being heartily appreciated. At Elon he gave a public address that won most favorable comment, and held two group Conferences that greatly edified his listeners. He is a radiant spirit. We hope our people will avail themselves of the opportunity to hear him.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty says: "The Church at Conshohocken, Pa., Rev. J. C. Barrett, pastor, did an unusual thing by placing a pledge to the Defiance College endowment in the regular Church budget, two hundred dollars per year for five years. This is a fine plan that might well be emulated by many of our other Churches, and done in such a way as not to cut down the personal contributions to our educational institutions."

Some of our Eastern Virginia readers will remember that Rev. E. B. Flory, who was then serving our First Church, Norfolk, Va., left there to go to Dayton, Ohio, to organize a Church in River Dale. His friends there will be glad to hear his success so far in a most encouraging way. The Herald of Gospel Liberty of March 6th says: "The new Riverdale Church, Rev. Edwin B. Flory, pastor, has just sent in a list of sixty-two subscriptions to the Herald. These are included in the annual budget and will be paid for by the Church, as it considers the Herald is a most vital factor in its own local work, and the only means by which it can make the membership thoroughly acquainted with denominational activities and obligations."

In this issue, Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, N. C., has an article which will attract attention. It is on the "Budget System." He favors the budget system. In that, he agrees with many others who have expressed themselves, but in addiion o favoring the budget system, he presents some of its disadvantages. We mention this point only to urge our brethren to give the advantages and the disadvantages of the system most careful attention. Undoubtedly it has some superior advantages, but it may have serious disadvantages, and if so, both ought to be studied with the most earnest effort to get at the truth of the meris and he demerits of the system. The Convention is not quite two months away. Let us remember that when that time comes, you will need to have your mind intelligently made up as to the desirability of this plan, and you cannot do that unless you can have some clear understanding as to the values of the plan.

Our many friends and readers generally will feel a deep sympathy for Miss Angie Crew in her far-off Japan home when the news of the death of her mother is conveyed to her. The Herald of Gospel Liberty says: "On Friday morning of last week our group at the publishing house was deeply saddened by the word that Mrs. Rosa Crew, of West Milton, Ohio, the mother of Miss Angie Crew, who went as missionary to Japan only last summer, had been suddenly called to her eternal home the night before. Her death was caused by heart trouble and came without a moment's warning. Mrs. Crew was known and loved throughout this part of our brotherhood for her beautiful life and her unusual faithfulness and layalty to Christ and His Church in all of its various lines of activity. For many years she has been the teacher of a large class of elderly women in the West Milton Church, and has been a most generous and faithful participant in all the other lines of Church work. It was a very unusual thing indeed for her not to be present at any service of the Church. Her home, her Church, and the entire community have suffered a very great loss. And the hearts of the entire brotherhood will go out in loving sympathy to them, but most of all to that daughter in Japan whose grief and sense of loss will be all the deeper because she is so far removed from her loved ones. And yet there will come to her a profound comfort in the consciousness which she bears in her heart that in the beautiful life which she is living and the missionary service which she is performing, she is simply fulfilling the most earnest prayers and desires of her mother's heart."

DELEGATES TO S. C. C.

The delegates of the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference to the Southern Christian Convention are as follows:

Laymen: K. B. Johnson, C. H. Stevenson, L. L. Vaughan, J. A. Kimball, J. U. Gunter, W. A. Newman, E. W. Clements, J. M. Banks, I. W. Pritchard, A. M. Long, S. M. Rowland.

Ministers: J. Lee Johnson, J. E. Franks, R. L. Williamson, J. Fuller Johnson, M. T. Sorrell, G. J. Green, B. J. Howard, H. Scholtz, J. D. Wicker, W. C. Wicker.

Alternates: J. R. Brown, John Murray, Ben Phelps, A. P. Strickland, J. W. Stout, J. B. Edwards, J. L. Brown, Scott Johnson, Paul Green, J. Walker Kelly, J. W. Neighbors.

Executive committee: W. C. Wicker, G. J. Green, I. W. Pritchard.

RICHMOND NOTES.

Sunday, March 9th, was a good day for the First Christian Church of Richmond. We had five new members in the Sunday School, with a good attendance. We received one member into the Church and organized a Christian Endeavor Society with twenty members. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Geo. Wythe Booth, president; Mrs. A. Walton Conover, vice-president; Mrs. Claud W. Woodward, recording secretary; Miss Virgie Beale, corresponding secretary; Miss Della Hamilton, treasurer, and Miss Inez Carr, pianist. They are a good set of officers, and we are looking forward to a live, aggressive and growing society.

The Sunday School voted to support a Bible woman in one of our mission fields. This is a step that we feel will mean much to our Church and lead to a growing interest in missions.

We are planning for two weeks' pre-Easter services. Our fourth anniversary service will be held April 6th. There is a growing interest in our work here, and we feel that the future is hopeful.

W. T. WALTERS.

Richmond, Va.

REV. W. T. SCOTT HONORED.

Wm. T. Scott, of Greensboro, N. C., president of the senior class of Elon College, has been accorded a great honor. He has accepted a call as assistant pastor of the Christian Temple at Norfolk, Va., and will enter upon his new work about June 1st.

The Christian Temple is the largest and most magnificent edifice of the Christian denomination, costing approximately $250,000. The opening service of this new Church was held on Sunday, March 16th.

Dr. L. E. Smith, an alumnus of Elon of the class of 1910, and of Princeton University, is the pastor.

Mr. Scott is well qualified for his new position. He has been actively engaged in pastoral work for the past three years, in addition to his other work as a student.

Mr. Scott has taken part in all college activities since he has been at Elon. He is this year student-assistant manager of athletics, and is a member of the Philologian Literary Society.

He has been especially active in debating, representing his class in the interclass debate once, and twice chosen to represent the college in the intercollegiate debates. He holds the distinction of having won both orator's medals of the Philologian Literary Society last year. He also represented Elon in the State peace oratorical contest.

Mr. Scott has served faithfully in the religious activities of the college. In 1923, he was president of the Christian Endeavor Society, and is this year president of the religious activities organzation.

With his ability as a leader, and faithfulness to tasks that confront him, the many friends of Mr. Scott congratulate him in his new work, and expect a great future from this, another Elon son.

C. M. CANNON.

THE RINGING OF THE BELLS.

When the village fire bell rings, the alarm which it sounds brings every citizen to a full consciousness of a common danger, and an instantaneous effort is made by all to put out the fire. No one stops to consider whether the man whose house is in flames is a Jew or a Gentile, rich or poor, saint or sinner, believer or unbeliever. In that moment, the instinct of humanity asserts itself and marshals every person in one great effort to suppress a common danger. In that critical hour, men work vigorously side by side as men, no one stopping to think whether his neighbor has been sprinkled or immersed; for if a Baptist or Presbyterian would fail to do his whole duty at a time like this, he would cover himself with the contempt of the community.

When the village school bell rings out from all the homes roundabout, the children start with a common purpose toward a common temple of learning. From modest homes and elegant mansions, from homes full of prayerfulness, and homes full of frivolity—the children gather in the school-house to sit side by side, to study the same books and to drink of the water of life from the same fountain. This clarion call of wisdom, rung by the school bell, is not addressed to the Methodist or Lutheran, but to the sons and daughters of man. It is the imperial summons of that truth which is as catholic as nature and as unsectarian as God. Among these children in the school-room, the day-spring from on high begins to dawn towards a universal recognition of the unity of humanity. They are learning to know each other, not as Irish or German, not as Trinitarian or Unitarian, but as human beings. But when the school-houses are closed; when the peace of the Sabbath morning has spread its hush over the country-side and the village Church bells ring—then what a remarkable change occurs! The two neighbors who worked side by side the night before to put out the fire hurry off to Churches which refuse to unite in a common effect to put out the fires of licentiousness which are destroying our youth; while children who study and play together on week-days are told by their respective pastors that their companions are surely on the broad road to perdition.

The Church bells produce in men and women the feeling that they are first of all Baptists or Methodists or Lutherans. The fire bell called aloud: "Come, every child, to the temple of wisdom, and grow strong and noble"; but the Church bells call :"You who are immersed, come hither and pray by yourselves; you who believe in election, worship here; you who belong to the one, true, apostolic, Episcopal Church, gather here"—and all the while there is the sad undertone of the damnatory clauses of the creeds: "Those who do not so believe, God will turn into hell."

The fire bell arouses men to the sense of a common humanity, and the response to its alarm is instant and universal. Is a man on fire with a passion for drink, or blinded by ignorance, less worthy a united effort on the part of the whole community than a burning dwelling? The secular school bell proclaims the unity of humanity and shows forth the Fatherhood of God; but the Church bells make people forget their identity of origin and destiny by gathering themselves within high-fenced folds into which no person can enter except upon profession of faith in certain theological notions. But is there any reason why we should hold dogma so dear and manhood so cheap? Is there any reason why religion should break up that fellowship, founded upon humanity, which exists in commerce and society; or why men who co-operate in behalf of the interests of education should refuse to co-operate for holiness? I would not contend that separate Churches are an evil, or that numerous forms of religious service are necessarily harmful, for differences of constitution and training necessitate different religious organizations. But the existence of different Churches need not mean bigotry and intolerance, nor is it that diversities of belief should lead different Churches to work against each other. The Church bells so often sound the signal of division and strife; but may ring in harmony as well as in dissonance, and each Church may mark simply a different post of duty rather than what is claimed as the one portal to heaven. The trouble is not primarily that there are too many Churches, or even that they differ so widely in policy and faith, though there are undoubtedly too many sects represented in our towns and villages—but that Churches are organized upon a false basis; that religious fellowship is so interpreted and exercised that it destroys the unity of humanity, while it wastes the forces which ought to be making for righteousness. The Church follows a policy which is radically wrong, because it makes opinion more important than life. No traveler into a far country on a sultry day ever complains that there are too many shade-trees by the roadside; but if a guardian stood under each tree, throwing stones toward the next tree and refusing to let any one enjoy the shade of his own tree unless he professed a certain belief, it is probable that a great many travelers would take to the middle of the road and try their chances there—just as many good men have left the Churches and taken to the common highway of humanity. I have no real fault to find with any man who strives to worship according to his own peculiar tastes and convictions, even if his Church has no real message for me; but when he rules out as heretical all forms of worship besides his own, assuming his to be the only true Church, and refuses to co-operate with others in a common cause against vice, ignorance and injustice and educational enterprises, then, speaking in behalf of the universal brotherhood of man, I condemn his course as harmful and retrogressive. The Church bell is a signal of division, because it has wrongfully associated people in loyalty to an opinion, in place of associating them in co-operation for righteousness. A false theory of religious organization has destroyed the peace of society and the brotherhood of humanity. A Church has but one true purpose or reason for existence—to unite men in a common effort to bring in the kingdom of God. The sole mission of the Church is to make the will of God prevail among men, to associate them for worship, edification, and helpfulness, and every earnest man and woman ought to be included there and set to work. The true bond of union for spiritual cultivation is not belief, but aspiration; the foundation on which to build a Church is not doctrine, but desire for holiness and service.

The motive to which we ought to appeal is not love of heaven, but sympathy for man. The interrogation which should meet every man at the Church-door ought to be not "What do you believe?" but "What are you willing to be and do?" The simple demand of Jesus was this: "Follow me"; that is, "Go about doing good." It is a misfortune that our Churches make it unnecessarily difficult for people to be religious in any public way or by any organic methods; not that the Church is demanding too much, but that she is demanding the wrong things. The Church cannot lift up too high an ideal of life, for the higher the standard, the more attractive its message. It cannot demand too much purity, philanthropy, human sympathy, consecration and service. Everywhere you go you will find a large proportion of the best men and women outside of the Church because they do not want to subscribe to its creed; and yet it insists on forcing a notion upon men and women against their reason, instead of marshaling them in co-operation for kingdom work. The fact, as plain as day to the unprejudiced mind, is this: that the very men who, for character and intelligence, have a first-class standing, and who, in view of ability and influence, ought to be rulers in Israel and pillars in the house of God, are kept out because of the creed test. Every one of them would be in the Church in less than ten days if they were simply asked to lend a helping hand and try to live a better life. The Church does not allow them to be religious upon the broad basis of a desire for holiness, and so they wander about unorganized and without a shepherd. Therefore, I contend that there must be something radically wrong with a method of religious organization which by its practical workings excludes so many good and efficient persons from its fellowship, and which also makes it so difficult for many thinking men to co-operate heartily with the existing Churches. So long as Churches stand primarily for a theological creed, Church bells will ring in dissonance rather than in harmony, for opinions must differ, and people will be kept apart by any policy which places doctrinal conformity above goodness of heart. There is no valid reason why we should not have both religious co-operation and intellectual freedom united in one administration of spiritual affairs; but if this condition does not exist, many will prefer freedom without association, to a religious fellowship conditioned upon servitude to Calvin or any other dogmatist. Some will exclaim: "Shall we throw aside our faith in God and immortality, and let men believe just as they please, while we write over our altars: "This Church stands for nothing in particular?" But no such result would follow from the policy proposed. The Church creed is not what holds men to faith in God and immortality, but the experience of life. There are those who are forever asking that some statement of faith be adopted, that the world may know what they represent; but no such statement of belief can adequately describe essential religion or vital piety. Publish what you are by what you do. When a company of earnest people associate themselves and begin to do something for humanity, their position and purpose are plan enough. When we drop the creed as a condition of fellowship, and make a spiritual purpose, expressed in the spirit of one's life rather than in words, the basis of organization, we do not thereby drop belief in God, for that is rooted in each soul. The course proposed is simply changing the policy of the Church from the defense of a dogma to the cultivation of holiness, in order that every earnest man may unite in its duties and felicities. This offers a practical basis in harmony with the modern spirit and conducive to the unity of humanity; and the only remedy for that appalling religious destitution which afflicts our towns and villages must be found in a radical reorganization of the Church on just this line. A call for helpers reaches farther and penetrates deeper than a call for believers; and that Church will touch men with largest inspiration which organizes men for helpfulness. A Church ought to be a mint, coining human life into character, rather than opinion; for it is more spiritual to work for holiness of life than for uniformity of belief. I hold that a religious organization which unites the very last man to be reached in an effort to wipe away tears and sow gladness, is engaged in a more spiritual mission than one who stands primarily for belief in the Westminster Confession. Every man owes this much to humanity—that he give himself heartily to the universal interests of society, both spiritual and material.

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

AT LEAST, IT IS ADMITTED.

The editor of this paper has been adjudged extreme in his thought that the division between the fundamentalists and the modernists is inevitable, and for the reason that the two faiths are so unlike that it is practically impossible for the two to live together in Christian fellowship. We took this position several years ago, when it was very unpopular to utter such sentiments, but popular or unpopular, we could not see it in any other light.

The Christian Century, of Chicago, was once a Disciple Church paper, but then it came out later as an independent modernist paper. However, it was a liberal when it was an advocate of the Disciples' position, just as truly as it has been since it became a non-denominational paper. It has kept in line with the most advanced modernists and out and out against fundamentalism.

In its issue of January 3, 1924, there is an editorial in which the editor openly admits that the two bodies cannot get along together. That our readers may be able to judge if we are putting the matter in a false light, or in its true light, we copy below enough of the article to show that we have good grounds for what we claim as to the said editorial in the Christian Century. It is as follows, copied from the Bible Champion:

"How deep-going is the fundamentalist-modernist controversy? Is it an issue worth serious attention? Does it matter vitally which way it comes out? . . . Are the fundamentalists right in claiming that the issue is a grave one, going to the roots of religious conviction and involving the basic purposes and almost the genius of Christianity?

"A candid reply to such inquiries must be one in agreement with the fundamentalist claim. It is to be doubted that the average churchman whose sympathies are in the main with modernism has any adequate appreciation of the sharpness and depth of the issue, and it would seem that the time has come to say to the rank and file of Church-folk and of the religiously disposed outside the Churches, that the differences between fundamentalism and modernism are not mere surface differences, which can be amiably waived aside or disregarded, but that they are foundation differences, structural differences, amounting, in their radical dissimilarity, almost to the differences between two distinct religions. The fact that the modernist and the fundamentalist groups both call themselves Christians, both derive their theological standards from the historic traditions of the Christian Church, and are both sheltered under the roofs of the same ecclesiastical institutions, should not blind any one to the profound disparity which characterizes not only their respective intellectual processes, but their objective goals, and even their spiritual experiences. Two world-views, two moral ideals, two sets of personal attitudes, have clashed, and it is a case of ostrich-like intelligence blindly to deny and evade the searching and serious character of the issue. Christianity, according to fundamentalism, is one religion; Chrstianity, according to modernism, is another religion. Which is the true Christian religion, is the question to be settled in all probability by our generation for future generations. . . . Christianity is hardly likely to last much longer half fundamentalist and half modernist. It is not merely the aggressiveness of fundamentalism that is forcing a choice; it is the inherent nature of the issue itself.

"Two worlds have crashed—the world of tradition and the world of modernism. One is scholastic, static, authoritarian, individualistic; the other is vital, dynamic, free, social. There is a clash here as profound and as grim as that between Christianity and Confucionism. Amiable words cannot hide the differences. 'Blest be the tie' may be sung until doom's day, but it cannot bind these two worlds together. The God of the fundamentalist is one God; the God of the modernist is another. The Christ of the fundamentalist is one Christ; the Christ of modernism is another. The Bible of fundamentalism is one Bible; the Bible of modernism is another. The Church, the kingdom, the salvation, the consummation of all things—these are one thing to fundamentalists and another thing to the modernists. Which God is the Christian God, which Christ is the Christian Christ, which Bible is the Christian Bible, which Church, which kingdom, which salvation, which consummation, are the Christian Church, the Christian kingdom, the Christian salvation, the Christian consummation? The future will tell. But that the issue is clear and that the inherent incompatibility of the two worlds has passed the stage of mutual tolerance is a fact concerning which there hardly seems room for any one to doubt."

We regard that statement as at least very candid and to the point. We cannot work together. Now, that is the opinion of the editor of this paper, but it is also the opinion of one of the leading modernists of the United States. This seems to be the beginning of an admission from both sides. Do you say, why cannot both sides work together as Christian? Well, the editor of the Christian Century explains how it is, and we must admit that we believe on that point he is right. Hear him as he declares the way he sees it: "It would seem that the time has come to say to the rank and file of Church-folk and of the religiously inclined outside of the Churches, that the differences between fundamentalism and modernism are not mere surface differences, which can be amiably waived aside or disregarded, but they are fundamental differences, structural differences, amounting in their radical dissimilarity almost to the differences between two distinct religions. The fact that the modernist and the fundamentalist groups both call themselves Christians, both derive their theological standards from the historic traditions of the Christian Church, and are both sheltered under the roofs of the same ecclesiastical institutions, should not blind any one to the profound disparity which characterizes not only their respective intellectual processes, but their objective goals, and even their spiritual experience. The world-views, two moral ideals, two sets of personal attitudes, have clashed, and it is a case of ostrich-like intelligence blindly to deny and evade the searching and serious character of the issue. Christianity, according to fundamentalism, is one religion; Christianity, according to modernism, is another religion. Which is the true Christian religion? is the question to be settled in all probability by our generation for future generations."

"Christianity is hardly likely to last much longer half fundamentalist and half modernist. It is not merely the aggressiveness of fundamentalism that is forcing a choice; it is the inherant nature of the issue itself."

That is a clear statement of the situation by a modernist. Will our brethren now believe the seriousness of the issue? The modernist himself gives a reason for the fact that we cannot get along in one Church—it is the fact that we are so unlike, and how can we work together?

DO WE UNDERSTAND OR NOT?

Every now and then we hear persons belittling the present discussion of modernism and fundamentalism, as if neither deserved the attention of real Christian men and women. Can that be possible? We recall hearing one person speak of it as not worthy of attention, but he must have been mistaken. Can it be possible that when men are repudiating parts of the sacred Word of God, when they are denouncing supernaturalism in Christianity, can it be that when they affirm the errancy of the Bible, that when they dispute the truth of miracles, when they dispute the doctrine of the resurrection, when they repudiate the account of creation as given us in Genesis—can it be possible that such facts deserve no attention as bearing on the faith of Christians?

Do you say, certainly not, if there were a sufficient number so leaning in the visible Church? But that is just what is on hand, and it is getting larger all the while, when it sometimes seems as if there were no brethren to rebuke it. So you still affirm that these things, this disaffection in the Church, and this renunciation of the Bible, as the inspired Word of God, is of no consequence to the cause of Christ? How can we take such an attitude when there are thousands of men and women in the Church who so stand against the fundamentals of the Christian faith? How can you do it, brother? Did you say that your faith in God and His truth is so strong that you have no fear of these evils in the Church? Alas! my brother, my sister, you must have a wonderful faith indeed! You see and read of hundreds and thousands of men and women who are turning away from the faith of the Christian life. and yet your faith is so strong as to warrant you in not saying a word by way of trying to save others from going the same way? Is your faith as strong as that?

The question is not that you fear for the final outcome of the truth of God's Word, but have you no fear for the safety of men and women who are being led astray by all this talk of the rejection of these fundamental truths of Christianity —that is the question facing us! We believe in the final triumph of the cause of Christ, but we fear for the safety of men and women who are being swept off their base as Christians—fear that they may be led to deny the faith and so lose their souls. And do you have enough faith to satisfy your heart and mind against the danger that is facing these dear ones for whom Christ died? Many believe that the present decline in personal religion is due to the repudiation of parts of God's Word and to the renouncing of many of the leading and fundamental doctrines of Christianity. And do you have no fear for the present decline of the faith in the Church of Christ?

The brethren who are so strong in faith as to have no fears of the outcome of it all, if you will notice, nearly always put the blame for this situation on the fundamentalists as well as the modernists. Now, candidly, brethren, do you not know that it was the unbelief of these modernists that started all of this discussion? And would you be willing to stand still on your great faith and see so many people go to ruin through their unbelief of the Word of God and yet say not a word of protest against it all, just because your faith is so strong individually? Do you say, yes, that is our attitude? Yes, but we are all one body, and if many are dying spiritually because the unbelief of certain leaders, then do you not see that your policy of, say nothing, and letting as many as may be so impressed, go on to ruin will help to yet further cripple the Church of Christ?

Suppose the ultimate triumph of the Church is assured, as we devoutly believe it is, do you feel justified in standing around and saying nothing to save people from falling into this dreadful situation of unbelief and ruin? If the deity of Christ is a biblical truth, will you allow men to go all around you repudiating His deity, and say nothing? If the atonement of Christ is a truth, will you allow false teachers to come into your congregation, or into your community, repudiating that atonement, and will you say nothing, so allowing to make every one he can to believe that His atonement is of no value in the Christian faith? Or, if he come declaring that the Bible is not reliable, will you stand around with closed mouth and say not a word? Or, if he come teaching that there is no resurrection of the body, will you stand by with a closed mouth because you are afraid of controversy? If he tell the people of your community that the Bible is not the inspired Word of God, that it is not divine, but a human work and of no more value than some human work, are you going to play the man afraid of his own shadow and say nothing? Your people will conclude that you do not think he is far from the truth, and they will in most cases think that he is right? Some dislike controversy, but so long as we see men bold enough to try to destroy the truth of God, just so long do we mean to contend for the truth, no matter who the offenders may be. As we understand it, the truth of God is to Him and His Son most precious, and I am sure that He wishes me to be brave for the truth. Did He not say to His people, through Jude, "Contend earnestly for the faith once delivered for the saints?"

When I see a man commissioned to preach this matchless truth of God, and I see him compromise this truth, or shun to declare it, then he commands my pity, that after God has done so much for him he will dare to stand in the presence of some who do not believe that truth and say not a word, virtually giving you consent to its truth, we feel sure that angels in heaven weep because of the lack of courage and devotion to the truth on the part of such a man. He needs pity!

Some of these men are bold enough to come out and condemn both of the contestants, both the modernist and the fundamentalist, as if they do sympathize with either party. Whenever that is the case, you may feel sure that the sympathies of the man who condemns both are with the modernists. But how can a sincere man stand against the fundamentalist, when he is only contending for the fundamental truths of Christianity? If the fundamentalist is true, the modernist is not right. If the modernist is right in his contention, then the fundamentalist is wrong. Alas! the fundamentalist, if he is true to his name, must be on the right side. Brethren, if we love the truth, let us stand for it any and everywhere there may be any occasion to do so.

TRUE GENEROSITY HAS A DOUBLE INFLUENCE.

By that, we mean that true generosity has a fine effect on the people for whom it is exercised, and then it has a great influence for good on the man or the woman who makes the offering. Under the heading "Extending Self," Rev. C. J. Felton, who by the way is a Southern boy, making good in Canada as a pastor and as assistant editor of the Vanguard, the organ of the Christian Church in Canada. In said article, he said many good things, and that our readers may get the benefit of the same we are republishing the article, as follows:

Jesus said, "Give and it shall be given unto you." And in these words He expressed a truth which man needs very much to know. It is so easy for people to get in the habit of thinking only of the struggle of life. In doing so, they are so tired from the struggle to make a living, that they have no energy or time to live. They spend all their energy upon themselves, and so have none left for community and Christian service. So they struggle on, while the difficulty and the drudgery of the struggle grows with the passing days.

But he who drowns thoughts of the difficulty of the struggle with thoughts of the possibility of being of service to God and his fellow-men, lives in an ever-widening circle of interests and ever-increasing sources of joy. He has stopped struggling to live and gone to living.

The same holds true in regard to the life of a Church. If a Church dwells all the time upon the effort and expense of keeping up its own organization, forgetting or thinking little of denominational enterprises, and of the command of Jesus to go and teach all nations, it will soon find the struggle to live too great, and death will come as a natural relief.

We know this statement has been frequently made. But it needs to be made over and over again. It seems so easy for our Churches to forget that they are a part of a denomination and must meet a responsibility outside themselves, if they are to live. There has been altogether too much yielding to this tendency in our Church. And we have failed to grow as we might and should have done because of it.

In the hundred years of our history in Canada, we haven't built a city Church adequate to meet the situation in a big and growing city. We think there are two reasons for this. One is that we have lacked the faith and courage to launch out into the deep and undertake great things for God and the Church. Donald Hankey said: "Religion is betting your life there is a God." Isn't it true that our Churches have failed to live up to that definition of religion?

The other reason is that our Churches haven't sufficiently felt their responsibility to denominational enterprises. They have been busy keeping their own show going and have expected other Churches to do the same. The result is that we have failed to branch out, and some of the Churches we did have are no more.

We should establish about two Churches in the city of Toronto every decade. Instead of that, we have but two small Churches here. One of these was organized with the thought that it would belong to another denomination, but decided of its own accord to unite with us. Neither of these organizations has a plant, by any means, adequate to meet the needs of city work. They are doing a splendid work, considering the circumstances under which they must carry on. But we can't have the standing in the community, nor can we grow as our cause deserves, until we put a great deal more money into our equipment. This can be made possible only by the proper backing of the Churches of our Conference.

Speaking particularly for our Church on Bathurst Street, I know that there are few Churches anywhere that use the building they have more efficiently, or put on a bigger program under the circumstances, than this Church is doing. We have a group of magnificently loyal workers here, but we are required to put too much energy into the task for the results obtained. It is like a farmer plowing his fields with a one-horse plow when he might invest in a tractor and do his work much more efficiently with far less expense of energy.

Oh! people of the Ontario Christian Conference, the fields are white unto the harvest. Won't you lend a hand to help while it is yet day?

A QUESTION FOR THE MODERNIST.

The modernist who trys to make you believe that his superior knowledge is the basis of what he says, is only playing with fire. He cannot maintain his knowledge in the face of death, and it is useless to undertake it. A man may live in error and a lack of faith, but he is not willing to die that way. Do the modernists die? And do they die in the triumphs of a living faith? Who can tell us? Only a true faith is sufficient to sustain us in life and comfort us in death. We heard, or rather read, somewhere of the death of a noted minister who was a modernist. When he was dying, he said to his son: "It is all dark, and I know not where I am going." What an awful death-bed scene that must have been! Of course, if people prefer that sort of life and death, no one has a right to forbid it; but it must be a terrible going out into the dark.

The Religious Telescope tells of a most interesting case in which the other side of this matter is beautifully and gloriously presented. The difference is most striking, but it means so much. Says the Telescope:

"Sometimes a great writer for secular papers strikes a fine strain, as did Arthur Brisbane the last week of December. He writes syndicated matter for a good many dailies, and puts up his points in an exceptional way. He told the familiar story of Helen Hamilton, the thirteen-year-old, who lay on her back for seven years, likely to die any day because of heart disease. She had prayed to see her birthday; and so it was. Then she prayed to die; and so it was again. 'Oh, Jesus, take me home,' she prayed. She believed that a real home had been prepared for her, where Christ is, and where God the Father is. Then Mr. Brisbane trenchantly adds: 'Would the higher criticism do any good to that mother by proving that Christ was an ordinary Man and that there isn't any real heaven—only infinite ether, at absolute zero? You must shore the building up well before you take away the foundation if you want the building to stand. You must supply the strong support of substantial knowledge before you venture to undermine the foundation of faith. Failing that, you will have trouble.'"

FREE PASTORS' SUMMER SCHOOL.

The free special summer course of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, for the benefit of pastors, teachers and Christian workers, will this year open on July 1st and continue to July 25th.

In addition to the faculty of the institute, special instructors will lecture, including John Alfred Faulkner, D. D., LL. D., professor of Church history in Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.; Dr. W. Graham Scroggie, of Edinburgh, Scotland, "the greatest Bible teacher in Great Britain"; and Rev. J. L. Campbell, D. D., dean of the Bible department of Carson and Newman College, Jefferson City, Tenn.

Dr. James M. Gray, president of the institute, will lecture on "Evolution, Inspiration and Prophecy," and Rev. Clarence H. Benson, head of the institute's religious education course, on how to teach Sunday School classes of various grades.

Subjects taught by others will include methods of practical Christian work, biblical criticism, New Testament Greek, phonetics, missionary problems, child study, Sunday School organization and management, choir conducting, and many others.

The expression, Lo, the poor Indian," is from Alexander Pope's Essay on Man. It occurs as follows: "Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutored mind sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind."

CONTRIBUTIONS

RELIGIOUS REVIVAL IN PHILIPPINES.

The work we have been permitted to do in the Philippines has really been so wonderfully owned of God that I have been led to tell the story myself. The Philippine Islands, we feel, are ripe for a great evangelistic effort. With the intelligent youth of the islands, Catholicism has had its day. Its policy in the land has been its own undoing, and now the students, of which there are at least one million, are ready for the pure Gospel of Christ.

The campaign opened in Manila on December 5th, and continued one week, and from there we took ship for Cebu, the next largest city of the islands. The work was very largely among the students of the universities and high schools. Many meetings were held during the day. Homer Rodeheaver of course delighted everybody with his music, both of his voice and his trombone. Miss Grace Saxe conducted from two to three Bible classes each day, and it was my privilege to speak three, four and sometimes five times a day. The meetings of the day culminated with the great evangelistic service at night when the largest edifice in each city was filled with an anxious, interested crowd, mostly students, young men and young women, although not a small number of the older people attended as well.

Of course, in the Philippine Islands we could use the English language, as all students are now taught English, and the meetings were conducted precisely as we would conduct them in the States. It was made very plain each night that the invitation given was for those who were not Christians. And how splendidly they responded! From 100 to 150 each night made, as far as we could determine, definite, intelligent decision for Jesus Christ.

The older people, under the rule and influence of the priests for so many years, find it harder to break away, and the converts are therefore, as already stated, mostly among the young, especially the students and the more intelligent class. The number of decisions among the young men was far in excess of that among the young women—quite the reverse being the case in America—the reason in the Philippines being that the restraining influence of the Catholic parents is naturally much stronger with the daughter and the young women.

Still, great numbers of decisions were registered among the young women, and not a few among the people more advanced in years. In Cebu the meetings were held in the Theatre Orientale. One night one of the missionaries said to me: "Do you see that well-dressed woman up in the gallery in the box? She is the most notorious woman in the city—the head of all the houses of shame." In giving the invitation, I repeatedly called to the gallery, and pointing in her direction I said: "Come, woman; come tonight!" Suddenly she sprang up and started back toward the exit, calling to her companion, another bad woman, as she went. I thought she had become angry and was leaving the building, but a few moments later I saw her standing with the penitent ones at the front. The next day she attended all the Bible classes, and was among the number at the dock to say "Good-by" to us. I was told that she gave every evidence of having been soundly converted.

In this same city one night, at 7 o'clock, I met all those who had come forward in token of their acceptance of Christ, and a fine, large group it was. I explained to them again what it meant to be a Christian, and found them all really very much in earnest and very intelligent as to what they had done. I then gave them an opportunity to ask questions, and a most interesting time it was indeed. Some of the questions were as follows:

"Has any one power to forgive sins but Christ?"

"If baptized in the Roman Catholic Church, must one be baptized again when he becomes a Christian?"

"Does the soul sleep in the grave at death, as the Seventh Day Adventists teach?"

"Are we judged immediately upon our death, or do we wait until the end of the world?"

"Is reincarnation a Christian doctrine?"

"Will a good Buddhist go to heaven?"

Every where we have been importuned to make another and more extended visit, these on the field sharing with us the conviction that these lands are waiting and ready for a great evangelistic work. The missionaries in general are earnest, hard-working messengers of the cross, and most of them are holding true to the great fundamentals of the faith, although we regret to say there is cause for anxiety in this respect. But the missionaries who are really doing great things are those faithful to the Word as the fully inspired and infallible revelation of God to the world; and these, thank God, are vastly in the majority. We will be back in the States in June, ready for evangelistic work at the close of the Winona Bible Conference.

W. E. Biederwolf.

SOME FACTS ABOUT BEREA, NORFOLK.

This Church was built in the year 1859 under the Methodist Protestant faith, and remained in that denomination until the year 1871. During the Civil War the Federal troops encamping near Great Bridge made it their business to interfere with the Church and premises, thereby defacing the Church and injuring the property. Because of this and other misfortunes, the Church became very much discouraged, and it seemed to be a problem to keep themselves united. Finally they came together and discussed the idea of transferring their Church property to the Christian denomination. Having decided to do this, they got in touch with Rev. J. N. Manning and made known to him their wishes. He at once proceeded to help them in drawing up the proper resolutions and decrees to be presented to the next session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. He also outlined the doctrines and principles of his Church, giving a brief explanation of the same, which was readily accepted by the brotherhood. The Church was successful in this move, as they were accepted that fall by the Eastern Virginia Conference.

This action of the Church took place August 15, 1871, with thirty-one members—fourteen brethren and seventeen sisters. We have been served by thirteen regular pastors, as follows: Rev. J. N. Manning, Rev. R. C. Tuck, Rev. H. H. Butler, Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. M. W. Butler, Rev. M. P. Porter, Rev. J. W. Harrell, D. D., Rev. H. E. Rountree, Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Rev. W. O. Hook, and Rev. B. F. Black. The longest service rendered by any pastor was by Rev. J. W. Harrell, who labored with us for thirteen years; the shortest service was given by Rev. J. N. Manning and Dr. W. S. Long, each giving one year. Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., supplied for us during the summer of 1891. This was by request of Dr. J. P. Barrett, then our pastor. The first four of our pastors have passed to their eternal rest, and I believe Rev. M. P. Porter also has passed away. All the others are still living and very active in the service of their Lord. We have had the co-operation of eleven deacons in our Church, as follows: William H. Stallings, W. P. Bland, Wesley Hall, N. Onley, W. T. Hanbury, Geo. F. Hanbury, M. W. Hollowell, M. W. Hall, K. S. Gammon, L. W. Nichols, and Willie F. Hodges. The first five of these dear brethren are asleep in Jesus. The sixth one, Bro. Geo. L. Hanbury, moved his membership to South Norfolk Christian Church. The other five are still active in our Church.

We have had three secretaries—first, Bro. S. J. Nichols served eight years; next, Bro. Willis Hall, nine years; and third, the writer, who has served thirty-five years last month, January, 1924.

During my secretaryship, we have had one hundred and sixty Church Conferences. I have been present one hundred and forty-four times, unavoidably missed sixteen. The highest number of members we ever had was one hundred and fifty-seven, between the years 1890 and 1895, during Dr. Barrett's ministry as pastor. Soon after this, our membership began to decrease by moving out to our city Churches. All of those Churches have some of our members, and some of our very best ones, too. You know, dear reader, what that means, so I will make no comment.

The smallest membership was at the time of the transfer and the reorganization. Today we number one hundred and thirty-one, and are still trusting and reclining in the embrace of Him who is able to keep us to the end and give us a glorious welcome into the eternal city.

M. W. Hollowell.

ELON CHAUTAUQUA THIS YEAR.

July 28th—August 3rd.

[NOTE: Below is the beginning of a series of short articles which Miss Eldredge is writing about the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods. They will appear from week to week as new things about the program are decided upon. Watch for them! They will give facts about the speakers and teachers, and other information concerning the plans.]

It is not too early to begin now to plan to save the dates July 28th to August 3rd for the Elon Chautauqua. The program this year promises to be better than ever, and provides for the needs and interests of all of our pastors and Church-workers. The mornings will be devoted to classes, including Bible, the psychology of preaching, children's work, young people's work, the educational task of the local Church, Christian music, Christian Endeavor, pageantry, missions, and other subjects. The courses are planned both to give information and inspiration which will lead to better work in all of our Churches in North Carolina and Virginia, and also to give practical methods for doing this work.

The afternoons will be devoted to rest, study and recreation, and the nights to inspirational lectures and music. The "young people's happy hour" on the campus at sunset has become one of the most popular hours of the whole day. For the children, there will be sessions every morning.

Begin now to plan to have your Church represented. Arrange to pay part or all of the expenses of two or more of your people. It will be a profitable investment. Watch The Christian Sun each week for announcements regarding speakers, teachers and plans for the week.

All Sunday School and Church leaders will be interested in the course in "The Educational Task of the Local Church," taught by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. This course will be a challenge to all to use the opportunities given to us for reaching more effectively the youth of the Church and holding them in the service of the Master.

Lucy M. Eldredge.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.
MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 30, 1924.

Review Lesson: Abraham to Solomon.

Golden Text: "Jehovah is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in loving-kindness."—Psa. 103:8.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 138.

It is a good thing, when one is mountain-climbing, to stop occasionally, not only to rest, but to take a look at the ever-widening panorama, and to see things in their proper perspective. The same principle obtains in spiritual mountain-climbing. In our effort to reach "the heights" of spiritual truth during the past quarter, we have come fast and gone far, and this review lesson affords us an opportunity to "get our breath" and to see things in their proper perspective.

I said we had come fast and gone far. It is true. During the quarter we have covered Genesis (beginning with chap. 12), Exodus, Levitious, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and eleven chapters of 1 Kings. That is going fast, according to my way of thinking. And we have come far. For the story began with a lone man, a member of an obscure clan, in a far-off country. It ends with a nation, grown to kingdom stature and power, strong, and with a more or less centralized religion. It is such a story that gives weight to the saying of a certain writer that "history is His story." No one of any intelligence who reads this story with an open mind can fail to see that God was in it all; that it was His story.

As we have said, the story begins with Abraham, the man of faith and the father of the Hebrew race. At the call of God, "he went out, not knowing whither he went." But he knew why he went. And because of that fact we can track him by the altars which he built. By the grace of God, a son of promise was given him, even after such a thing was impossible from a human standpoint. And yet he was willing to offer up this son of promise, so deep was his faith in God.

The story passes over Isaac, the man of peace and the well-digger, and over his two sons, Esau and Jacob, with all their stirring episodes, and is resumed with another favored son, Joseph. Around this fine young man there centers the experiences oft he chosen people in the land of Egypt—experiences that were to stand them in good stead in later years.

And then there appears on the scene another towering figure, one of the immortals—Moses. He is so big that even yet we can hardly comprehend him. As a young man, he attempted by force to deliver his people. Thwarted in his plan, he flees for his life and spends forty years in the outposts of civilization, thinking and gradually laying hold of God's purposes. And then at God's call he goes back to his brethren and leads them out of the land of bondage. It was he who organized a group of slaves into what became a nation, and it was he who gave to them, and to us, the fundamental principles of any enduring personal character or national greatness. Moses did more than climb a mountain peak and view the land from afar off. He was a mountin-peak of human greatness and moral sublimity.

The great Moses dies and another worker appears on the scene. He is a warrier—Joshua by name—and it was he who led the people into the chosen land. The Lord uses different instruments and different means to accomplish His purposes.

There follows the period of the judges. It was a time when every man did that which was right in his own eyes. Enemies from without and fightings from within made it one of the most turbulent periods of Israel's history. But God was standing within the shadow, keeping watch above His own, and He raised up deliverers for the people.

And finally come the kings—Saul, David, and Solomon. Under Saul, the kingdom was instituted and some of the tribes were brought together in a more or less loose organization. Under David, these tribes, and others, were cemented into a strong kingdom with a centralized government. And under Solomon the kingdom began to lose its solidarity, and to break down along clearly defined lines of cleavage.

It has been a period of great movements and great personalities. One hardly knows whether the movements made the personalities, or the personalities gave rise to the movements. In either case, there was a gradual, even though uneven, progress toward the purpose of God as finally revealed in Jesus Christ.

Questions for Review.

1. What is the striking difference between Hebrew history and that of other ancient peoples?
2. How was Israel governed in the beginning of its history?
3. During the wilderness wandering?
4. After Joshua's Day?
5. What was the condition of the people in the time of the patriarchs? In the time of the judges? Under the kings?
6. What benefits did the Israelites receive from their sojourn in Egypt? From their sojourn at Sinai? From their wanderings in the wilderness?
7. What men did most for Israel, and why?
8. For what is Abraham remembered? Moses? Joshua? Saul? David? Solomon?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

March 30, 1924.

Topic: "What Missions Have Done for Social Welfare."

Lesson: Isaiah 1:16-17; Luke 7:18-23.

There are some people who do not believe in the social gospel. They think that salvation is a purely individual matter. And, of course, we cannot deny that the matter of a man's individual relation to God is perhaps the most important fact in life. But the important fact still remains that men not only have to live, but they have to live with each other, and they have to live with each other in and under certain conditions. It becomes a very important factor, then, to see that men are saved in their social relations, and, furthermore, that the social conditions under which they live are made Christian. I have no sympathy with those who believe that men can be saved simply by giving them better living conditions. They are beginning at the wrong end. But I do not have any sympathy with those who say that living conditions have nothing to do with a man's spiritual life. They do not go far enough. In other words, I believe in saved men in a saved society.

John the Baptist sent to Jesus to know if He were the Christ. In spite of the fact that John had been the messenger who should prepare the way for Jesus, the Master was adopting such a strange policy that John was not quite sure as to whether He really was the Christ, or whether they should look for another. In reply to the question of John's disciples, Jesus said, "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached" (Luke 7:22). The same principle applies today. He who would know whether Jesus is the Christ has only to see and to hear what is being done, not only in the way of transforming lives, but in contributing to social welfare. Missions now is something more than a man sitting under a palm tree with several half-naked savages or cannibals sitting before him. It is even more than so-called Church activities, as important as they are. Missions is, as Mr. Patton in his fine book, "The Business of Missions," says: "The great business of the Church," and a business that includes practically every phase of human welfare. If one could look through a classification of modern missionaries and see listed there the professions and occupations of our missionaries, he might think he was reading a city directory, so comprehensive are the activities of these modern "knights of the cross."

It will be impossible to recount in detail what missions have done for social welfare. Take, for instance, the matter of education. There are over six hundred thousand pupils enrolled in mission schools of the foreign boards of the United States and Canada in 1920. Think what it means to have 600,000 young men and women and boys saved from ignorance and superstition, living in the atmosphere of Christian schools, and then going to their people and becoming centers of light and life.

Or take again the matter of medical missions. According to incomplete statistics, there are 1,052 missionary doctors maintained by Protestant Churches at work in foreign lands. Of these, 743 are men and 309 are women. To these may be added 537 nurses and 230 native physicians who are serving in mission hospitals or dispensaries. Think of the relief from suffering, the lessons in sanitation, the hygienic measures, the banishment of barbarous practices, and the hundred and one wholesome benefits that follow in the train of this ministry of healing.

Once more, take what appears to be such a simple factor—the missionary's home. It hardly seems possible that a few homes dotted here and there would do much good. And yet the Christian home, planted in heathen lands is one of the most powerful factors in missionary effort. One missionary has said that if he could get enough Christian homes in foreign lands, he could evangelize the people quickly.

In conclusion, I want to enumerate some of the things which missions have done and are doing for social welfare.

1. Teaching the ideas of liberty and equality.
2. The biggest educative factor in the period of national awakening.
3. Elevating the masses.
4. Breaking down social prejudice and social barriers.
5. Undermining superstition.
6. Abolishing slavery, foot-binding, and other degrading customs.
7. Stimulating equitable laws.
8. Promoting good health.
9. Promoting international friendships.
10. Teaching such Christian virtues as sobriety, self-control, honesty, truthfulness, pity, brotherhood, love.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE MODIFIED BUDGET.

I do not know that it will help Sun readers to have my position relative to the budget, but I am certainly willing to state it as clearly as I know. I most highly favor what may be called the modified budget system. By this is meant, first, a budget that is created and adopted by a delegated body, present and participating; second, each item of the budget made perfectly plain to all who are to contribute to the same. I most highly approve, for example, of the budget as created and voted by the last session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, at Bethlehem, in Alamance County, N. C. I refer to this in particular because it gives a concrete example of what the best authorities have voted in the matter, so far as I have been able to ascertain.

Here was a body of men and women, delegated by their Churches and clothed with certain authority. In this body, the amount of the budget for the whole Conference was named. Then the amount that each Church composing that Conference was asked to set as its goal was read. Then each item was named in the make up of the budget, so that every one who made a contribution in the home Church could know just what that contribution was for and where it was going. Then the Conference went further, and requested pastors and delegates to carry to the home Church the total amount of the budget asked by the Conference, and then the total amount that each Church was requested to undertake as its budget for the year, not including of course pastors' salary and current expense, which the system supposed the local Church would include when it voted on its Conference budget.

This system carries the budget to its proper place and allows those who are to contribute to it to have a say so in its size and in its manner of raising. The local Church whose members must pay the money, if it is to be paid, is asked to adopt the matter further in Church session or through its Conference committee, and give the Church the privilege of a say-so in the matter of performing the task before them.

Only that budget can be a satisfactory one, in which the people have participated, or may participate, either directly by their own vote or representatively through their delegate, and only such can prove satisfactory. Any budget made up by a board or a finance committee cannot be satisfactory and helpful unless the contributing constituents to the budget shall have at some time a part or a say-so. Many budgets have wrought much havoc because they have been autocratic, and not democratic; and they have been a burden imposed on the many by the few instead of a task undertaken by all for the good of the kingdom. No finance committee on earth has the right to make up and issue a budget unless and until those who are to contribute to that budget have had or shall have an opportunity of saying whether they will be a party to it or not. In many instances, the budget has come to be odious and has wrought havoc and left boards and agencies in debt, because the budget was a burden and not an opportunity undertaken for the good of a cause. In your budget-making, give the people a chance, and unless you do, there will be little benefit or blessing accruing therefrom.

I am fully aware that committees on finance have to be created, and they may figure out for us what amount is desired for carrying on the work. However, the result of their work is a burden, and not a budget, until those who are to pay the money have been consulted and have said directly through their vote, or through their responsible representative, that they are willing to undertake to raise such a budget. When a budget is made thoroughly democratic, and not autocratic, it serves as a great challenge, and accomplishes great spiritual ends.

Another illustration may be given. Our Southern Christian Convention is a unit, seeking to undertake certain financial tasks, and therefore has financial obligations. Committees or individuals of that Convention may formulate for the body, and to be voted upon by the same, certain amounts desirable for all the undertakings of the Convention. That Convention is made up of accredited and representative delegates from Conferences. All that the Convention can do is to ask these accredited delegates to carry home to their Conferences the amount the Convention has asked of that Conference to raise as its budget. Then, when that Conference assembles, it is made up of authentic representation from the Churches. All that that Conference can do is to decide that it will undertake to raise as its budget the amount asked of the Convention and in so deciding, vote how much each Church shall be called upon to contribute to the Conference budget, naming each item therein. Then, the delegates returning to their Churches can bring the matter to the attention of the Church, which in turn should vote either that it will undertake to raise the amount requested or whatever part thereof that it is or may be willing to undertake to raise. Until the local Church has voted the budget on itself, it is not a budget at all—it is a burden and a bother, and an annoyance. In the last analysis, the local Church is the sole authority in the matter of a budget, and there can be no budget until the local Church has spoken.

The difference in the writer's mind between the budget and what we have known as the apportionment rests most largely in the fact that under the name of a budget the Church sets a goal for itself, to be reached during the year; as an apportionment, it lays upon itself an obligation to be met, frequently at the last moment or when most difficult to secure. The emphasis with us of the Southern Convention is to be shifted rather than abolished. What we need to emphasize is that at the beginning of the year every Church will set for itself a goal, which through the whole year it will try to reach in kingdom service and advancement.

Another very dangerous tendency in budget-making has been to take from the auxiliary organizations of the Church the privilege of contributing through their organizations, and make them contribute everything through the Church itself. This deprives missionary societies, Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday Schools and other organizations of one of their highest and holiest privileges, namely: that of worshiping through their gifts. If the Sunday School or the Christian Endeavor, or the missionary society, shall vote afterwards that all their money shall go into the Church treasury, all well and good; but for the Church to say that it must do so takes away much of the personality, prestige and power, as well as privilege and purpose of these organizations.

The budget idea is a great and good one as long as two facts are kept prominently to the fore—first, that the budget must be decided upon by those who are to contribute to it; and, secondly, that the budget is a goal to be striven for, rather than a burden to be borne. If budget-makers will bear these two facts in mind, many a heartache will be spared and many a spiritual privilege will be enjoyed.

J. O. Atkinson.

INTEREST IN MISSIONS CONTINUES TO GROW IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Brother Willie Perry, secretary, writing under date of March 12th: "We have planned to give one Sunday's offering per month to missions. We are going to give every first Sunday's offering to the cause. Enclosed you will find our first check from Damascus Christian Sunday School, Orange County, N. C." Here is believing that all our Sunday Schools will see the wisdom and worth of this good undertaking and will join the list of progressive schools, wishing to see the Church go forward in kingdom service.

It was the writer's privilege to be in our Palm Street (Greensboro) Church and Sunday School on a recent Sunday. We found Rev. H. B. Hall the wide-awake pastor, with a Baracca class room packed full of eager and intelligent young men. The whole Sunday School was wide awake, and showed every sign of energy and activity. Bro. R. L. Fine is the accurate and painstaking secretary. Just a few weeks ago this Sunday School voted to give one offering a month to missions, as it had already been giving one offering a month to the Orphanage. This was either the cause or a result of redoubled activity and giving on the part of the Sunday School, for the offering on the morning we attended (March 2nd) was $12.58. Of course, the two offerings that the school will retain for itself each month will result in more than the four offerings per month which the school used to retain for itself. When we divide up with others, the Lord divides up with us. Secretary Fine made such an accurate and worthwhile report that I asked him for a copy of his monthly report for February. He handed it to me, which shows not a large school, but a very vigorous and active one.

The Citizens' Bible Class of Elon College Sunday School voted some months ago to give one offering per month to the Orphanage and one offering a month to missions, as the Southern Convention and all our Sunday School Conventions have requested all our schools to do. Dr. W. P. Lawrence is authority for the statement that the two offerings a month for others—the one for the Orphanage and the one for missions—are far in excess financially of what the class used to give in all the offerings of the month, when the same were retained and spent for its own use. This testimony seems to be universal in experience and is worthy of a trial at least by all our schools.

That which should never be lost sight of, however, is that on the Sunday the missionary offering is taken, some one appointed should give a brief missionary talk or program before the whole school. The missionary message must be lodged in the minds and hearts of Sunday School pupils before we come to be a truly missionary Church.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

CHURCHES CLIMBING IN M. & M. QUOTAS.

Eastern Virginia Conference.

	Per Cent.
Berea, Nansemond	100
Waverly	50
Wakefield	40
Suffolk	40

Ivor	40
Newport News	33 1-3
South Norfolk	33 1-3
Franklin	25
First, Norfolk	25
Johnson Grove	25
Rosemont	25
Holy Neck	25
Windsor	25
North Carolina Conference.
Elon College	100
Pleasant Grove	100
Raleigh	100
Sanford	50
Henderson	40
Mt. Auburn	40
Chapel Hill	25
Henderson	25
Turner's Chapel	25
Franklinton	25
Valley of Virginia Conference.
Timber Ridge	100
Washington, D. C.	100
Mayland	75
Antioch	25
Georgia and Alabama Conference.
Ambrose	25
Vanceville	25
Alabama Conference.
Cragford	25
Wadley	100

List of Churches in all Conferences that have paid 25 per cent and over on total quotas.

C. D. JOHNSTON,
Executive Secretary.

EFFORTS TO PAY M. & M. PLEDGES.

Elsewhere is printed, from the books of Bro. C. D. Johnston, a list of the Churches whose members have paid as much as 25 per cent or upward on their Men and Millions quotas. This list is gratifying because it shows an increase in porcentages and in numbers since our last report. Wherever the captains and pastors are keeping the matter before their members, the pledges are being paid. Our people are honest, sincere and want to do their duty. The difficulty is in reaching them with the information that their pledges still hold good and that many faithful ones are doing their best and making heroic sacrifices to meet their pledges.

The writer received a letter yesterday which is typical of a surprisingly large class, saying: "I thought my pledge and the Movement had been dropped." This was because nothing had been said to her in the community where she lived. A very small per cent of Men and Millions subscribers take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and in those Churches where the captain and the pastor say and do nothing in the matter of Men and Millions, there is a brick wall against all efforts to penetrate the minds and the hearts of many who pledged but are not paying.

On the other hand, some most timely and hopeful letters come from faithful ones, who declare if the Lord lets them live and gives them strength, every penny on their pledges shall be paid. As we see it, it is a question of lodging the information at the right place and in the right way. We do not question the honesty nor the Christianity nor the willingness to sacrifice on the part of our people. They will meet their obligations, as the Lord shall prosper them, as well as any people on earth, if they only know when their obligations are due and what they are. To the end that this information may be carried to every subscribed, the mission secretary desires suggestions and asisstance.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

RICHMOND CHURCH.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., has just closed four years' work of the First Christian Church of Richmond. The following are some of the accomplishments:

1. A Church has been organized and 120 members received into fellowship.
2. A good, live Sunday School has been maintained.
3. An active and progressive Ladies' Aid Society has been kept up.
4. A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized.
5. A Young People's Missionary Society has been rendering valuable service.
6. A mid-week prayer meeting is kept up in the Church.
7. One of the most beautiful Church buildings in the city has been erected, and the value of the property held by the Church is $100,000.
8. The Church has gained a recognition with the other evangelical denominations of the city.

This Church was started by the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. Forty per cent of all Men and Millions collections go to missions. Will you not stand behind the board in its progressive and constructive policies? Will you not stand by your own pledges?

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

A GOOD DAY.

I have a letter from our pastor at Richmond which all SUN readers will appreciate and enjoy. "Sunday was a good day for our Richmond Church. We had five new members in the Sunday School, one to join the Church, organized a Christian Endeavor Society with twenty members, and our Sunday School voted to support a Bible worker on the foreign field. We suppose the cost of this would be about $250 or $300. Please have one assigned to us, and send us her name at your earliest convenience. I am very happy over this decision of the school."

This new and vigorous school in Richmond is leading the way for some of our older Churches and schools, and is an inspiration. Surely, Dr. Walters and his workers are doing a work worthy of our emulation.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

FROM BRO. FLOWERS.

I think we are having splendid success on the new field that we are hoping to build here. We have had between thirty-five and forty new members to come into Mt. Olivet Church, and our Sunday School superintendent announced last Sunday that we have one of the best schools in the Conference. The president of the Young People's Christian Endeavor, which meets weekly, made the statement a few weeks ago that our Christian Endeavor, especially in attendance, was second to none. The Ladies' Aid puts on a program each month, and the Community League puts on a program each month. Both are well attended, and the interest is growing.

The schools that we have organized at three other points are doing good work, and we feel sure that the coming of spring will be much in our favor.

Mr. Herbert Morris is our representative for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Dyke, Va. A. W. FLOWERS.

Four more towers at the Tower of London—the Martin, Salt, Broad Arrow and Byward towers—are to be opened to tourists in April.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations—'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)—but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

THE MISSION BOARD.
Elon College, N. C.

LIEUT.-GOV. J. E. WEST, Chairman.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

OPENING OF THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

(Continued from Page 1.)

DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING.

Location.

The building is located at Thirty-fourth Street and Llewellyn Avenue, in the Park Place section, one of the finest residential sections of the city. It is two blocks from City Park, Granby Street, and two blocks from Colonial Avenue, and one block from the main car line of the city. It has every accessability, and yet free from the noise of busy streets. It is accessable to Villa Heights, Park Place, Virginia Place, Colonial Place and Riverview. These sections are connected and lie north of the Norfolk and Western Railroad. There are approximately thirty thousand people living in this part of the city.

Material.

The building is of genuine limestone construction, backed up with brick. The tracery and frames for the windows are all stone. There are twenty-seven carloads of stone, and more than one million hard brick in the building.

Architecture.

The style is perpendicular Gothic. The Gothic lines are rigidly adhered to in every detail throughout the structure.

Auditorium.

The auditorium is 53x65 feet in size, is entered through a spacious foyer having entrances from both streets, through the vestibules or enclosed stair-halls. In addition to the main entrances from the foyer, there are also minor entrances at each side of the front of the Church, thereby not only facilitating access to the auditorium, but exit as well. The gallery for the auditorium is very large, and may be entered from either side.

Social Hall.

The social hall is directly under the Church auditorium. It is used as Templemen's Bible Class room, dining-room, and is equipped for all kinds of indoor athletics. Opening into the dining-room is a modern kitchen with every possible equipment and convenience; lavatories with shower baths for both men and women are adjoining.

Educational Building.

The educational building is a three-and-a-half-story structure, arranged and fully equipped for modern Christian educational work.

First Floor.—Ladies' parlor, kindergarten, primary rooms and junior Church auditorium; the heating plant for the entire building, the most modern of its kind in the entire country. By means of a large fan, the heat is distributed in winter and dispelled in summer, giving a complete change of air every fifteen minutes in all auditoriums.

Second Floor.—The educational auditorium, with two large and a series of smaller class-rooms, which constitute different departments, the Church office and secretary's room. The pastor's study is on private elevation from the second floor.

Third Floor.—Large gallery in main auditorium with cantilever support, gallery in educational building, two large departments for educational work, club room in the tower, choir room, lavatory for the choir and entrance to choir loft, which is an elevation behind the pulpit.

Fourth Floor.—One finished room in the tower, the four organ chambers and unfinished space for at least twelve club or class-rooms.

Miscellaneous.—The lighting is something new for this section of the country. The auditorium is lighted by the use of seven large X-ray lanterns, Gothic in design. They give a semi-indirect ray. The large tower is not only decorative, but useful. From the tower, you enter every department of the building. The Church is equipped with individual drinking-fountains. There are lavatories on all floors, nine in all. There is a Johnson service thermostat control in every room in the building.

Financial Statement.

Total cost of the entire plant, including part of the lot and architects' fees..	$285,000
Amount paid to date	165,000
Amount provided for outside of the congregation	45,000
Amount due March 1, 1924.....	75,000

It is the plan of the committee to see that all unpaid obligations are met during this spring.

The Organ.

The organ in this Church was built by the Hall Organ Company, of West Haven, Conn., is a four-manual, antiphonal electric organ, containing five organs, viz: great, choir, swell solo and echo organs. The great and choir organs are in the chamber to the right of the choir-loft, and the swell to the left. In the rear of the Church, in one tower is the solo organ which is under a very high wind pressure and is the climax to the full organ. In the opposite tower is the echo organ, containing the soft-string stops; the Vox Humana, immitating the human voice; also the chimes.

The stops on all the organs are controlled by pistons, which makes it possible for one to bring on any one or the combination of stops.

This organ has forty-two stops and over three thousand pipes, and about twenty-five miles of electric wire, and is the latest creation in organ-building.

The specifications for this organ were drawn and built under the personal supervision of Mr. Horace L. Jones, organist for Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church.

Memorial Windows.

The art-glass windows are a combination of antique and opalescent glass, which gives both light and color, producing a most pleasing effect. The life of Christ is pictured, by means of medallion figures, from the annunciation to the ascension. These windows make beautiful and fitting memorials, and have been taken as such by members and friends of the Church, as follows:

"The Annunciation."—In memory of Mrs. T. A. Twiddy. Mr. T. A. Twiddy.

"The Holy Family."—Franklin Portlock and family. Miss Emmie Portlock.

"The Boy Christ in the Temple."—In memory of Mrs. E. Addie Barrett, Mrs. Emily S. Barrett. Dr. J. P. Barrett.

"The Baptism."—James A. Eley and Docia C. Eley. Mrs. A. B. Jarvie.

"The Gethsemane."—In memory of Col. Alexander A. Savage. Mrs. Hattie A. Savage.

"The Crucifixion."—William S. Johnson and family. Mrs. Karo Johnson.

"Christ Being Taken Down from the Cross."—D. P. Barrett and Olive G. Williams. By Mission Board, G. C. of the C. C.

"The Resurrection."—In memory of Rev. Chas. J. Jones, D. D., and Lydia D. Jones. By the family.

"The Walk to Emaus."—In memory of Ethel Etheridge Adams. J. E. Etheridge and family.

"The Breaking of the Bread."—In memory of A. M. Eley. By the family.

"The Ascension."—In memory of Mary Ann V. Eley. By the family.

"Foyer Window."—In memory of Thomas W. Butt. By Mrs. Eugenia Butt.

Memorials.

The tile and marble for all entrances placed to the memory of Samuel A. Etheridge. By E. S. Norfleet.

Gifts.

The pulpit paneling and choir rail—M. T. Blasingham.

Y. & E. efficiency desk mahogany for the pastor's study—W. J. Whitelock, Huntington, Ind.

ORDER OF SERVICE AT THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE SUNDAY, MARCH 16, 1924.

Morning Service, 10:45 o'Clock.

Organ Prelude.
Doxology.
Responsive Reading—Selection 12.
Gloria.
Hymn—No. 447, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord."
Scripture Lesson.
Anthem—"Open the Gates of the Temple" (Klapp).
Prayer.
Anthem—"O Clap Your Hands Together" (Turner).
Reception of Members.
Baritone Solo—(Selected) Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.
Hymn—No. 442, "The Church's One Foundation."
Postlude.

Afternoon, 3 o'Clock.

Organ Prelude.
Doxology.
Hymn—No. 373, "Lead On, O King Eternal."
Prayer.
Anthem—"Praise My Soul the King of Heaven" (Avery), followed by "Gloria" from Twelfth Mass (Mozart).
Greetings from Other Denominations of the City.
Anthem—"Festival te Deum" (Buck).
Hymn—No. 440, "Faith of Our Fathers."
Offertory.
Quartette—"My Faith Looks Up to Thee," Mrs. Eva C. Ogletree, Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, Mr. J. Alton Rea, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio.
Hymn—No. 155, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."
Postlude.

Evening Service, 7:45 o'Clock.

Organ Recital.
Gloria.
Reading of Psalm of Praise.
Anthem—"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel" (Spross).
Hymn—No. 32, "Day is Dying in the West."
Scripture Lesson.
Prayer.
Quartette—"The Lord is My Shepherd" (Neidlinger), Mrs. Edith S. Smith, Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, Mr. J. Alton Rea, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Hymn—No. 43, "Sun of My Soul, Thou Saviour Dear."
Offertory.
Duet—"Calm as the Night," Mrs. Edith S. Smith, Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge.
Sermon—Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., People's Christian Church, Dover, Del.
Hymn—No. 44, "Now, the Day is Over."
Organ Postlude.

PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK.

Tuesday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and the School," by Dr. W. A. Harper, President Elon College, Elon College, N. C.

Wednesday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and the Government," by Governor E. Lee Trinkle, Richmond, Va.

Thursday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.
Address—"The Church and Industry," by Mr. Homer Ferguson, President Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Corp., Newport News, Va.

Friday Evening, 7:30 o'Clock.

Half hour with the Organ.

Address—"The Church and Norfolk, Va., the Home," by Mrs. Walter C. Fain, Delegate House of Representatives of Virginia.

Building Committee.—Dr. J. W. Manning, chairman; A. B. Jarvis, secretary; Floyd Hurst, treasurer; T. J. Anderson, T. E. Brickhouse, E. M. Albright, Mordant Ethredge, A. M. Johnson, Logan McCloud, B. L. Nichols, Frank Portlock, J. J. Pitt, J. E. Harrell.

Church Officiary.—Rev. Leon Edgar Smith, D. D., pastor; Rev. William T. Scott, assistant to pastor.

Missionary Pastors.—Miss Olive G. Williams, Salinas, Porto Rica; Miss Toshio Kato, Miyagiken, Japan; Mrs. M. T. Sorell, Fancy Gap, Va.

Secretaries.—W. L. Cooper, membership; C. L. Dawson, financial.

Clerks.—W. L. Cooper, F. M. Brewer.

Publicity Agent.—J. H. Blanchard.

Board of Deacons.—O. L. West, chairman; F. A. Osborne, secretary.

Trustees.—J. A. Eley, T. E. Brickhouse, Dr. J. W. Manning, B. L. Nichols, M. J. W. White.

Finance Committee.—Dr. J. W. Manning, chairman; Paul Denison, secretary.

Official Board.—M. M. Vipond, chairman; F. M. Brewer, secretary.

Choir.—Mrs. A. C. Bush, organist and director; sopranos: Mrs. H. J. Dixon, Mrs. C. D. Ackiss, Mrs. S. M. Smith, Miss Grace Graham, Miss Aurelia Manning; altos: Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, Mrs. A. M. Johnson; tenors: B. J. Bowden, Dr. J. W. Manning, J. Alton Rea; bass: Mordaunt Ethredge, H. J. Dixon, L. L. Cuthrell.

Singers Assisting for the Day.—Mrs. Eva C. Ogletree, Mrs. Edith S. Smith, Mrs. J. Wesley Gregory, Mrs. E. C. Lohr; John Drew, Walter McFall, R. Pretlow, R. R. Richardson.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

It seems to me that Dr. W. A. Harper is right in asking for a pre-convention discussion of the budget plan which he has proposed. While one good brother, in last week's SUN, seems of the opinion that such discussion will tend to cloud the issue, I am in agreement with both Dr. Harper and THE SUN'S editor that this matter should be discussed. So I am joining others who have written, and will very briefly state my position.

The proposed system, as outlined by Dr. Harper, in my opinion, offers several commendable features, and at the same time it has its disadvantages, or difficulties.

Commendable Features.

1. A definite goal. Not only a definite goal is proposed, but a goal with an ascending scale to meet the needs of the work as it enlarges from year to year. Certainly, some provision needs to be made that will care for the increasing demands of the denominational program.

2. The system ought to mean increased efficiency. Much of our work is done, it seems, in a perfunctory way, and with consequent loss in many directions. We need some how to systematize our denominational activities.

3. The proposed budget system would tend to open a means of contact between the general work and the local Church. Many of our Churches have almost no contact with our general program. This we need, and need it greatly.

4. The educational feature of the system is a commendable one. Dr. Harper calls attention to this phase of the undertaking, and in this I think he is entirely right. All sections of our Church need the impetus an educational campaign in the stewardship of life, service and means would give.

Disadvantages.

1. The system might have a tendency to make giving mechanical. Too much machinery is not conducive to freedom of action. Special offerings which many of our people enjoy and which are productive of much good would, to some extent, be interrupted.

2. Increased machinery means increased expense of operation. If increased cost brings a proportionate increase in returns, it is all right, but there is danger of creating too great an expense.

3. Apportioning the year into periods for the various offerings is not a very practicable idea, for the reason that conditions vary so widely in the different sections of the Church. Many of our Churches are in the rural sections and must depend upon the returns from agricultural pursuits for the funds paid in. An offering in the trucking section of Virginia might be taken to good advantage in June or July, but in the cotton belt of North Carolina or Georgia, little could be expected for any offering at that time of the year. This apportioning of the year would, therefore, not work very well.

Other advantages and disadvantages could be mentioned, but these, it seems to me, are among the outstanding features of the system as suggested by Dr. Harper. For myself, I expect to keep an open mind and shall hope for some system to be worked out in the Convention that shall put us forward in the great work we are undertaking to do. We need not look for a perfect system. To do so is to court disappointment from the outset. Let us come together for that system and plan that will meet the largest need and give assurance of the largest returns in every way.

G. O. LANKFORD.

AN INTERESTING FIND.

The following is from Mr. W. E. MacClenny, of Suffolk, Va.:

For the benefit of those interested, we beg to hand you herewith some gleanings that throw some light on the life of the early leader of the Christian Church in the South.

By reference to the lists of the Virginia soldiers in the Revolution, we find the names of William D. and Thomas D. O'Kelly, yet we have not been able to determine from what section of the State.

We looked for months while gathering data for the "Life of James O'Kelly" to try to find out where he lived, and by the help of a friend it was at last learned that he at one time had his home in Mecklenburg County, Va., and through the courtesy of Hon. Harry F. Hutcheson we are able to hand you a copy of a deed of gift from Tignal Jones to James O'Kelly and his wife for forty (40) acres, with the house in the said county. (In 1782 Tignal Jones, Jr., was the head of a house with six in family, and owned twenty-four slaves. See U. S. Census of Va. of 1790.) This gift shows that Rev. James O'Kelly was a popular minister in that section at that time, and that when he took his stand for his beliefs as to what was right, he knew that he would be the loser.

The Recorded Deed.

To all to whom these presents may concern: Know ye, that I, Tignal Jones, of Mecklenburg County, for diverse consideration and good causes moving me thereto, the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have granted and released, conveyed and given, and by these presents do grant, give, deliver, convey and confirm unto my worthy friend James O'Kelly, N. D. M., of the county aforesaid, to him and his wife during the life of either of them, a certain part or tract of land on which the said O'Kelly house now stands, containing forty acres, more or less, bounded as follows, viz: Beginning at a Spanish oak at the lower corner of the field fence, grom thence running on a line of new-marked and blazed trees through my land next to my plantation whereon I now live, partly a north-and-northeast course to the line between my neighbor Watton and me; thence on the said line a west course; thence turning a south course till leaving the old line to a new-marked oak near the field on the north side of the said O'Kelly field; thence turning through the field a straight south course till cornering in the field; thence running through the field an east course by a marked persimmon tree to the first station.

The said James O'Kelly and his wife to have the said forty acres thus marked out, be the same more or less, and all appertaining thereto without exceptions as his property for his use, his right and title during the life of him or his wife, or both or either of their leaves against the claim or demand of me or mine heirs, etc., or any person whatsoever against all deeds, wills or whatever else hath, is or shall ever be and do hereby warrant and defend the same to all interest and purposes according to the pure interest of these presents. In testimony whereof, I have set my hand and affixed my seal this 8th of June, 1789.

TIGNOR JONES Ct. Caut. (L. L.)

Test—TIGNOR JONES, JR.

At a court held for Mecklenburg County the 13th day of July, 1789, this indenture of gift was acknowledged by Tignor Jones, a party thereto, and ordered to be recorded.

Teste: JOHN BROWN, Ct. Clk.

A copy—Teste:

H. F. HUTCHESON, Clerk.

In a personal letter from Mr. Hutcheson, the present clerk of the Circuit Court of Mecklenburg County, to the writer, he has this interesting comment to make:

"I have heard my mother say that her father thought he (Rev. James O'Kelly) was one of the greatest pulpit orators he had ever heard. When he split the Methodist Church, many of the Churches in this county followed him, and for a long time were known as O'Kellyites. The land described in the enclosed deed is located some four miles south of Boydton, near the old Glebe lands. Tignal Jones was the grandfather of James Alfred Jones, the noted Richmond lawyer, whose daughter married Judge Gardiner Tyler, of Williamsburg. I would like to know what N. D. M. is intended for after Mr. O'Kelly's name."

It is believed that Rev. James O'Kelly had lived in North Carolina before the above date, 1789, as we believe his son William was listed in the 1790 census as "William Chilly," in the Hillsboro district, as any one can see that the spelling in the orginal could have been easily mistaken by the printers.

The Rev. Jesse Nicholson, of Portsmouth, Va., to whom Mr. O'Kelly addressed one of his extant letters, was a prominent local Methodist preacher, and for a long term the postmaster of Portsmouth, Va., and no doubt was a sympathizer with the O'Kelly movement at the beginning, as there was a debate in Portsmouth over the matter and a contemporary says "The Church in Portsmouth was saved by the debate."

We pass these facts along, that the coming generations may know of them.

Truly, as Dr. Van Dyke says: "Enthusiasm for missions is the measure both of our faith in Christ and of our love for man."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE HUMAN CHRIST.

"And Jesus came forth and saw a great multitude and was moved with compassion on them, and healed their sickness."—Matt. 14:14.

These words are said of Jesus at a time when He was tired and, humanly speaking, broken down and in great sorrow in the death of John the Baptist, for which reason He had withdrawn Himself away from the people to a desert place to be all alone for awhile. The people followed Him in great throngs, seeking His help, and He at once forgot Himself and helped them.

In that crowd were all classes, morally as well as physically—the devout and the sincere; the sick and the afflicted; the dishonest business dealer and the corrupt politician; the giddy-headed youth and the curious pleasure-hunters; Sabbath-breakers and law-abiding citizens; dancing "flappers" and scorning hypocrites. They perhaps were not unlike any throng which might get together today. But these are not the things which the Saviour saw in them. He saw them as sheep without a shepherd; He saw the poor leper as a poor wounded one ostracized from companionship; He saw the blind crying for mercy; He saw the adulterous woman who needed forgiveness and purity to be an angel rather than an outcast; He saw the tired laboring man, world-builders; He saw the demoniac, who needed emancipation and not the asylum; and He had compassion on them. As we see it, to Him, the thing to do was not to be angry and condemn any of these folks, but to love them, be gentle and help them, heal and save them. That is what He did. As His representatives, that is our mission in the world. Let us make it so this week.

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thine is the greatness and the power. Help us to keep before us Jesus and what He would do, and what He would have us do. As Thou rulest over all and givest strength to all, rule Thou over our lives this week. Give us the Christ compassion for others. We ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

SERVICE.

"Whosoever would be great among you shall be your minister (servant), and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant (slave). —Matt. 20:20-34, vs. 26, 27.

This is Christ's comment on true greatness. Many think that to be rich is great; others think that to be popular is great; and again others think that honor and influence is great, and so on; but the Saviour said that the greatest servant is the greatest man. He Himself gave us the example and made it so plain that the disciples could think of no higher word or title for greatness than the word service. People said of Him, "He went about doing good." He said of Himself that he came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister. It is significant that the book of John says nothing about the sacrament and bread and wine, but it talks a lot about the basin and the towel. The spirit of Christ is service and helpfulness.

Prayer.—Dear Father, all things cometh of Thy hands? Keep Thy spirit of brotherliness in our thoughts and hearts as well as in our imaginations, and prepare us to serve our fellow-men for Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SACRIFICE.

"If any man will come after me, let Him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me."—Matt. 16:21-28, v. 24.

Review the thoughts of the previous devotions of this week. Then read again our text for today. This is just what we have to do if we would follow Christ and help others. This is exactly what we have to do if we would have the kingdom of God come.

Man is full of suspicions, fears, doubts, ill will, hatreds. Can the kingdom come when these exist? If these things were eliminated, could it come? If everybody had the spirit of service and sacrifice in such things, could the kingdom come? Yes! How about ourselves? Let us embrace Christ, throw away our un-Christ-like feelings, forgive everybody their trespasses, and, with an eye of singleness to His glory, endeavor to help others to what they ought to be. This is the only badge of discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye love one another."

Prayer.—O Thou, who hast set the glory of man in the heavens through the gift of Thy Son Jesus, as we close our devotions now, give us the power to put the highest price on our souls and the souls of others. Forbid that any act of ours shall cheapen us, any habit mar our character, but that every thought and act shall glorify Thee in making some one else better and the world more beautiful because we live in it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHY BE LATE? YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

"Redeeming the time because the days are evil." —Eph. 5:16.

There is none so aggravating as the person who is careless of keeping engagements or appointments promptly.

To be habitually a few moments late is soon known and recognized as an undesirable quality in a friend or business associate.

Men and women who have risen to great heights as executive heads are the sort who are prompt, to the dot.

Men who control the lives and actions of others know the value of prompt action and are pretty sure to expect it from others.

To some it may seem ruthless and unfeeling to be unflinching in a matter of a few seconds lost at one end or the other of the day, but successful students, teachers, and the big business man realize the importance of promptness.

The man who is prompt is also cultivating a habit of mind which will result in more effectual mental effort, through the physical act of being prompt.

The man who thinks quickly, acts quickly.

To be always just a few minutes behind is an easy way to proclaim that you are either lazy or a poor manager.

(Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.)

It is dishonest. It cheats you, and, worse still, it cheats the other fellow. How often are we required to wait even as much as an hour for the other person to show up, and this has ruined perhaps thousands? Time does not wait. Nature goes on, and while we wait, fortunes could be accomplished. Please, oh! please, be prompt with engagements. It is one of the highest laws of being. The time and the place is the time and the place! Let us be there! The world needs men and women who know not how to procrastinate; people of decision and energy who hear the first taps on the door of engagement, opportunity and duty.

Prayer.—Our Father, abide with us in promptness and punctuality, even as we pray that Thou wilt in Thy spirit, and make our labors a song and our lives a blessing of strength and cheer to the comrades of our toil. In Christ's name.

FRIDAY.

GOD IN ACTION.

"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."—Gen. 1:1-3.

In the Old Testament there are two terms applied to God which we use interchangeably, but there is an unobserved difference between them. One is "the Spirit of God" and the other is "the Spirit of the Lord." It seems from a close study of their use that the first of these terms is generally used to denote the divine power as creative, and the second to denote the activity of the divine nature in relation to human affairs, the operation of God in life, in the history of individuals and nations. The Scriptures represent "the Spirit of God" as at work creating and beautifying the earth and "the Spirit of the Lord" at work among men perfecting humanity.

When the Holy Spirit descended at Pentecost, it was not a new spirit that descended, but a new descent of the Eternal Spirit upon a company of men, who had especially prepared themselves for a fresh revelation of the wealth of power at God's command. The Holy Spirit of Pentecost is the same Spirit of God that moved upon the face of the waters in earth's beginning; the same Spirit of God that is at work in the spring when earth renews her ancient rapture; the same Spirit of God that garnished the heavens. When that Spirit deals with nature, the result is order and beauty. When He deals with human nature, when He acts upon responsive hearts and obedient wills, the result is faith and hope and love. When conditions are favorable that faith removes mountains, that hope glows like a star, that love lifts a world into the light.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining.)

SATURDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN FAMILY.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . and thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:30-31.

The Christian faith merely comforts the lonely life, but it was not meant merely for the lonely life. The "neighbor" always creeps into the Christian definition of love. Besides, the faith vastly enlarges the neighborhood. The parish of our Christianity is not a ward; it is the world! Our neighbors are the human race. Christ means that His faith shall not be narrowly bounded. He weeps over the city and He yearns over the world. There is an old fable about a veil that covered the head of a queen. Brought out into the courtyard, it enlarged itself and made a covering for the whole family. Carried forth to the plains, it was further enlarged until it became a vast tent for the whole people. So our Christian faith in true, loving hetrts, adapts itself ever to the wider circles of living.

When the young student asked of Jesus the key to the Scriptures, he was told that it was love—love to God and to one's neighbor. A good man is one who loves God and his fellow-men. Jesus taught that love was the key which unlocked the Old Book. He taught that this was the most essential thing for all the years to come. Take this key. It will unlock every door through which you must enter to be happy and useful. "Duty makes us do things well, but love makes us do them as beautiful as Christ."—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

The importance of this statement is permanent and universal. It establishes not the exception, but the rule. It deals not with special occasions or fluctuating prejudices, but with fixed, eternal principle. There remains, then, this conclusion: "I should not ask myself or any other why I should observe the Lord's Day, but, since it is set aside for me, why should I be deprived of it? If it is a delight holy and honorable, full of happy thoughts and feelings, a season of refreshing, bodily repose and spiritual rejoicing, why should I forfeit its privileges?" Let us resolve that as far as we are concerned, as for us and our household, we will not be deprived of its benefits, and we will observe it in the spirit of the Master.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord, our Heavenly Father, we Thy unworthy children, give Thee most hearty thanks for all Thy goodness, and especially that of the Sabbath day, bringing to us the wonderful love of the Saviour. Give us strength to observe it in His name and to receive its benefits. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

FOREIGN MISSIONS A SAFE INVESTMENT.

To any reader who should chance to read these lines I want to testify as to the value of money given to foreign missions. I know a Church within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention whose pastor caught a foreign missionary vision about a month ago while reading the February edition of the Christian Missionary.. The result was he began preaching on foreign missions as he never had before. But, first of all, he began praying for foreign missions as he had not prayed before.

Somehow, in such a way that this author shall not try to explain, the congregation at both morning and evening services began to be better than usual. Without the pastor even suggesting it, the Church began to get busy and raised money and papered both the Church and Sunday School rooms, and no appeal was made for funds with which to do the Church repairing. On March 9th, the pastor of this congregation asked his people for $50 as a special foreign mission offering. This Church is not a large church, and has a heavy budget for this year, but in answer to some one's prayers, this Church went over the top and raised $63.76, instead of the $50 asked for, and pastor and people were happier and loved each other better than they had for a long time.

I feel thoroughly convinced that the best way to strengthen the local work of any congregation is for the pastor to begin to preach on foreign missions, the livest subject in the Bible. For other information, ask some of the members of the Church we had in mind as we wrote this testimonial, namely: the Newport News Christian Church.

B. J. EARP.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. HOLLAND,
L. E. SMITH,
I. W. JOHNSON,
Executive Board

January 31, 1924.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

If the ground hog saw his shadow on the second day of February he certainly went back to his winter quarters, for since that time we have had all kinds of weather—cold, rain, sleet, snow, and hail. We are glad that his forty days are near an end. We are hoping to have some fairer days and more balmy breezes. The past month has made us feel as if we had moved to the Far North, yet we are glad we have had the snow and ice. Wheat and all small grain needed it, and since the snow it looks green and refreshed. The zero weather we had some time ago certainly hit small grain a hard blow; but the snow and sleet came to its rescue, and has drawn out the frost to a great extent, and it looks green again. Then, too, when the weather is pretty and the balmy breezes blow, it makes us have new life, new energies and causes us to form new resolutions. We want to sing with the birds and enjoy the beautiful flowers as they bloom, and share their fragrance.

It makes us feel that Easter Sunday is near when we are given an opportunity to make a special offering for the little children in the Christian Orphanage. What a happy occasion that should be for every one! An opportunity to share our joy and happiness with others more unfortunate than we have been! It gives us an opportunity to help the helpless. It gives us an opportunity to lend unto the Lord. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

We want to raise the largest Easter offering this year we have ever raised. We want every Church member to have an opportunity to make an offering. We are having envelopes printed for that purpose. Let us all look forward to Easter Sunday, when we will have an opportunity to lend unto the Lord.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR MARCH 20, 1924.

Amount brought forward	$3,092.29

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

North Carolina Conference:

Wentworth	$ 10.00
High Point	2.07
Shallow Well	2.19
Shiloh	1.97
New Lebanon	1.00
Baracca Class	1.00
Fullers	4.00
Turner's Chapel	1.93
Burlington	81.84
Catawba Springs	10.26
New Providence	3.16
Ramseur	4.27
Mebane	1.00
Hanks' Chapel	3.00
Randleman	2.40
Berea	2.80
Mt. Pleasant	1.40
Shallow Ford	3.55
		137.84

Eastern Virginia Conference:

Berea, Nansemond	$ 10.00
Oakland	10.21
Holland	12.00
Richmond, First Church	6.69
Norfolk, First Church	5.00
Dendron	18.85
		62.75

Valley of Virginia Conference:

Bethlehem	$ 1.28
Mayland	2.54
Leaksville	2.91
Centerville	2.00
		8.73

Georgia and Alabama Conference:

Richland	$ 1.00
Rose Hill	2.67
Mt. Zion	1.57
		5.24

Special Offering.

Chas. D. Johnston, guardian	$ 33.67
Missionary Socy., Rose Hill	5.00
Irene Reiber	15.00
Cash item	1.00
Mrs. H. A. Culver	30.00
Edgemont Baptist Ch., Durham	14.00
Mrs. Allie S. Black Rosemont	15.00
Mrs. Jennie Lockart	10.00
Mr. Owens	5.00
		128.67

Grand total	$3,435.52

A BANNER INTERMEDIATE C. E. SOCIETY.

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society of Newport News Christian Church, Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor, celebrated its first anniversary on February 15th, with a real birthday party, including an interesting program and a reception following to the society and invited guests. The program was carried out as a Church wedding, with bride, groom attendants, and everything, and typified the union of the heart and head of their new officers, and a uniting of Christian Endeavor forces in helping each other in the work for the good of the society. Following the program in the Church, the guests went to the Sunday School rooms for the reception. The rooms were beautifully decorated for the occasion. The table was in the shape of the cross, with an immense cake with "I C. E." on the top and one large candle for a centerpiece. Two other cakes showed forty-three candles, in honor of Christian Endeavor's forty-third birthday, and just forty-three were seated at the table. The superintendent, Mrs. T. G. Hyatte, read a letter of greeting from Mrs. Dooly, intermediate superintendent of Virginia, who sent to the society the Dixie Banner won for efficiency by Virginia last July in the Des Moines convention over all Dixie. It would be difficult to find any place a superintendent who could be more proud of the work of her society or happier boys and girls than Newport News had that night.

The record of this society's achievements in its one year of history is a long one. An outstanding thing was to assist their superintendent, now city intermediate superintendent, in the organization of an intermediate society in the Presbyterian Church, and also a visit to the Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, in the interest of intermediate Christian Endeavor work there. A bunch of intermediates like those in the Newport News Christian Church should be an inspiration to any Church, and this is a worth-while undertaking which will give Christian leaders to the Church.

LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged through Sun		$ 867.43
Miss Angie Winpee, Virgilina, Va.	$ 1.00
Missionary Aid Society, Rose Hill.	5.00
		6.00

Total	$ 873.43

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

GRIFFIN.

Alta Griffin, daughter of James Z. and Nannie Griffin, was born June 5, 1902, and departed this life at the home of her father, at Nelson, Va., February 11, 1924, age 21 years 3 months and 23 days. She is survived by her father, stepmother and two brothers, Wallace and James. Her mother died in the State of Kentucky when Alta was a small child. The deceased was a member of Hebron Christian Church and a faithful Christian daughter in the home. The vacancy caused by her death cannot be filled, we must take comfort in the hope of meeting her in heaven.

It is a cause for deep regret that I could not be with the family in their sorrow, and conduct the funeral, but two other funerals the same afternoon prevented me. I visited them the first opportunity and found hem sad but resigned to their Heavenly Father's will.

C. E. NEWMAN.

Sell TIRES
DIRECT FROM FACTORY

We want an auto owner in each locality to advertise Armour Cords. You can make big money and get your own sample Tires Free, by sending us orders from friends and neighbors. No capital or experience needed. We deliver & collect direct. Pay you daily.

Most Liberal Tire Guarantee Ever Written

Armour Cords guaranteed by Indemnity Bond against Blow Out, Wear and Tear Stone Bruise, Tread Separation, Blistering and Rim Cut for 12,500 miles. We are actual manufacturers. Write today for great Special Offer to Agents, and low Factory Prices.

ARMOUR TIRE & RUBBER CO., Dept. 393 Dayton, O.

Take Calotabs for the liver

TRADE MARK REG

Beware of imitations. Demand the genuine in 10c and 35c packages bearing above trade mark.

Elderly People Need More Iron in the Blood

To Give Added Strength, Vitality, and Greater Power of Resistance Against Disease.

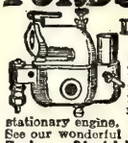
IRON is constantly leaving the body, especially toward the period of middle age and you must make up for this iron deficiency if you want to escape disease and be strong and well. When the iron in your blood runs low, signs of old age creep into your system. If there is not enough iron circulating the blood-stream becomes thin, pale and watery, the body weak and rundown. In such cases ordinary iron-containing foods seldom supply a sufficient quantity of this important element to make up for the waste so that many physicians now prescribe a concentrated form of organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which contains iron like the iron in your blood.

Actual blood tests show that a tremendously large number of people who are weak and ill lack iron in their blood. If you are not sure of your own condition, go to your doctor and have him take your blood-count and see where you stand or else make the following test yourself:

See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired; next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. By enriching the blood and creating new red blood cells Nuxated Iron strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and power into the whole system.

Unlike the older inorganic iron products, Nuxated Iron is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

FORDS run 34 Miles
on Gallon of Gasoline



Low Gear Seldom Used
with Air Friction Carburetor

And we guarantee all other cars nearly double present mileage, power and flexibility, make hills on high formerly difficult on low. Models for any car, truck, tractor, marine or stationary engine. Makes old cars better than new. See our wonderful mileage guarantees for other cars.

Ford.....34 mi.	Reo.....24 mi.	Chevro't...32 mi.
Buick 4...30 mi.	Chalm's...23 mi.	Max'l (25) 30 mi.
Buick 6...24 mi.	Olds. 6...23 mi.	Nash 6...23 mi.
Hudson...30 mi.	Paige 6...20 mi.	Lincoln 8..17 mi.
Hupp.....25 mi.	Oakland 6..24 mi.	StdbkrLt 6 23 mi.
Dodge....28 mi.	Overl'd 4..32 mi.	Cole 8.....17 mi.

If your car is not mentioned here send name and model for particulars and our guarantee on it. Agents wanted.

SENT ON 30 DAY'S FREE TRIAL

You can drive any car in heaviest traffic without shifting gears. Starts off on high in any weather without priming or heating—no jerking or choking. No more foul spark plugs or carbon in cylinders. No leaking of gas into crank case. Try it 30 days on our guarantee of money back if not entirely satisfied. No strings to our guarantee. YOU ARE THE JUDGE. Anyone who can handle a wrench can attach it. No boring of new holes or changing of operating mechanism. Write today. AIR-FRICTION CARBURETOR CO. 186 Raymond Bldg. Dayton, Ohio, U. S. A.

FASCINATING FICTION

"THE COVERED WAGON," by Emerson Hough.
"THE ETERNAL CITY," by Hall Caine.
"THE HARVESTER," by Jene Stratton-Porter.
"IF WINTER COMES," by Sinclair Lewis.

Seventy-Five Cents the Copy, Postpaid.

We carry the largest line of fiction of any Book Store in North Carolina. We have any Book you want or we can get.

SOUTHERN BOOK COMPANY, INC.,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with

Gray's Ointment

Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS

The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years

Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.

GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

Big News!

on buggies

Before you make a move, send for new 1924 catalog and see what BOHON offers you. Life long durability.

Send for new FREE catalog

At Low Prices

Backed by 50 years' square dealing, and Bohon's unlimited Guarantee. 60 days Road Test. You are satisfied or all your money is refunded. Get the new complete FREE catalog and see!

THE D. T. BOHON COMPANY - 60 Main St. - Harrodsburg, Ky.

THROAT IRRITATIONS

Throat irritations quickly disappear when you take Brown's Bronchial Troches. A dependable remedy—not a candy. Used for more than 70 years by singers and public speakers. Promptly relieves hoarseness, loss of voice, coughin. At all druggists. JOHN I. BROWN, & SON, Boston, Mass.

General Sales Agents:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York..London..Toronto

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
COUGH VOICE LOZENGES
IN 5 SIZE PACKAGES

The Modern Woman's Favorite Car

Chevrolet Utility Coupe appeals strongly to the bachelor maid or busy matron. Its graceful lines, fine finish, extra wide doors, big, cheerful windows, and deep upholstery meet her aesthetic requirements.

Its sturdy construction, economy, ease of operation, and roomy package compartment convince her of its practical value.

More and more women are becoming owners and drivers of their own transportation units.

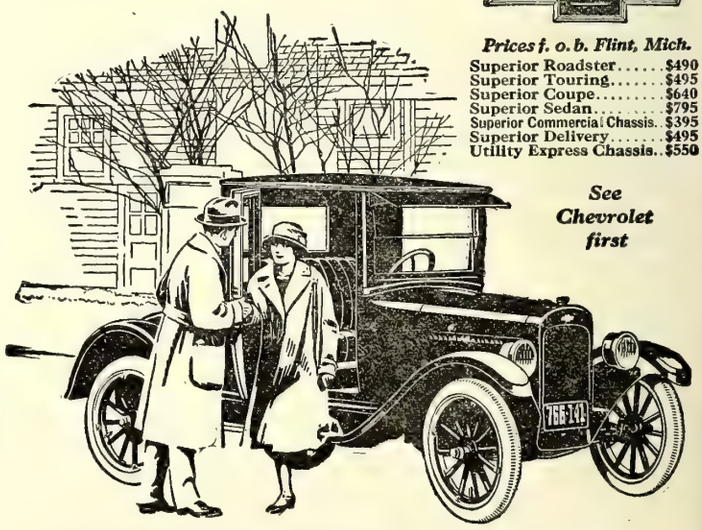
For business, social, or marketing purposes, Chevrolet saves an immense amount of valuable time and conserves the energy of today's busy woman.

for Economical Transportation

CHEVROLET

Prices f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Superior Roadster	$490
Superior Touring	$495
Superior Coupe	$640
Superior Sedan	$795
Superior Commercial Chassis	$395
Superior Delivery	$495
Utility Express Chassis	$550



See Chevrolet first

Utility Coupé $640 f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

CHEVROLET MOTOR COMPANY
Division of General Motors Corporation
DETROIT, MICH.

ATKINS.

James Luther Atkins, age 20 days, died Monday, February 11, 1924. The little one's stay here was brief, yet long enough to cause deep sorrow to his parents, brother and sister, and a feeling of a deep personal loss. Without the children, earth would be a dreary place. Heaven must be richer because of the presence of them.

C. E. NEWMAN.

TUCK.

John Bohannan Tuck, infant son of Brother and Sister Pressley Tuck, of Virgilina, Va., died on Friday, February 15, 1924, age 8 months. He was a bright little boy and was loved devotedly by his parents. This is the second child the death angel has taken from this home within the past two years, leaving one son in his fourth year. The parents, grandmother and aunt miss the little one, but there is comfort for them in trusting in Jesus.

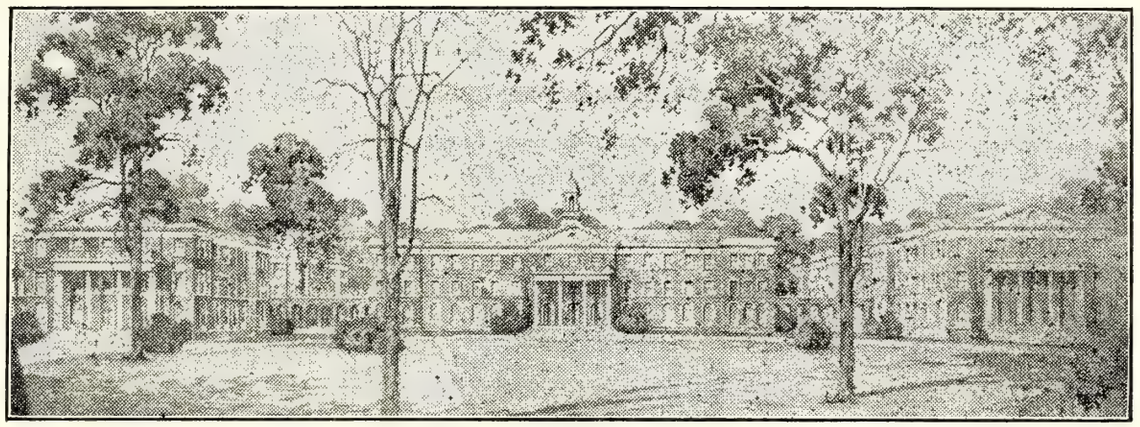
C. E. NEWMAN.

PURYEAR.

Lillian Ray, the lovely little infant daughter of Brother and Sister J. F. Puryear, of Virgilina, age 4 months, was taken from the home to be with Jesus after days of suffering from pneumonia. There are nine other children in the home. All devotedly loved Lillian and grieved at her departure. For days the loved ones did all possible and prayed for her to be spared, but since it was not the Father's will they are comforted in the hope of going to her.

C. E. NEWMAN.

Elon is Building for the Future



Auditorium — Library Building — Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) — Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE :: TENNESSEE

TRAVEL INFORMATION

EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS

LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM

Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

GROW COTTON IN VIRGINIA
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:

K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

MURRAY.

James Wiley Murray, son of Robert and Serena Murray, was born June 22, 1858, and died February 28, 1924, age 65 years 8 months and 6 days. The deceased is survived by his wife, Mrs. Letha J. Murray, and daughter, Mrs. Mamie M. Watts, and four sons, as follows: Andrew J. and Willie J., of Virgilina, Va.; Charlie L., of Raleigh, N. C., and Robert E., of Alton, Va. There are also eleven grandchildren and two sisters. The sisters are Mrs. Emily Cull and Mrs. Barbara Ford, of Virgilina, Va.

Bro. Murray was a quiet, industrious, honest man and a good citizen. During his illness of about ten days, he told his people he was ready to go, and sang several of his favorite songs. All that loving hearts and willing hands could do was done for him. His children were all with him the last few days of his stay on earth. Loved ones are deeply grieved, but are comforted with the assurance of meeting companion and father again.

C. E. NEWMAN.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8⅛ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.

Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1924. | Number 13.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Life of an Automobile.—

That there has been considerable improvement in general automobile construction in the last two years is indicated by the fact that in 1921 the average life of all motor cars made was 5.33 years. These figures were arrived at from statistics of annual production, yearly registration in all States and from the number of cars imported and exported each year.

The Chimes Cease to Chime.—

The chimes of the ancient Church of St. Ulrich, at Augsburg, Germany, no longer mark the hours. After working steadily for fifty years, the sacristan went on a strike because he had been paid but 4,000,000 marks from April to September—not enough to pay for the shoe leather he wore out climbing daily the 163 rough stair-steps to wind the clock.

New Radio Idea.—

Here is a new radio idea. British broadcasters will install a microphone and very small transmitter in some wild wood, frequented by nightingales, and the wonderful bird "not born for death" will be heard all over England.

Suggestion for American broadcasters. Instead of a bedtime story, let youngsters hear the lion roaring, elephant trumpeting, hyena laughing and baboon yelling from the zoo. It could be arranged by adjusting the feeding hours. Every boy would like it, especially the lion's roar.

Two Doing Great Things.—

With all our needs, we need a praying people. Our enterprises cannot mean much to us as a people, unless we support our work by both our money and our prayers, and prayer is by far the more important of the two. A real praying and spiritual people will be a giving people, and when men and women do learn—not this plan or that, but learn to pray truly and mightily—we shall see a new day for our work dawn. Let us do the work; but, brethren, our work must be supported by our prayers as well as maintained by our money. The two must go together, the one supporting and helping the other, and the two doing great things for the cause of Christ.

Ukrainian Chorus to be Heard Here.—

Arrangements have been made locally for a concert by the Ukrainian National Chorus on Friday, April 11th, at the City Auditorium. This is the famous Russian organization which has set the musical world of Europe and America aflame with its wonderful chorus singing. They will be presented by the Apollo Club of Richmond as a part of its donation to the social and musical life of the city.

This famous group of Russians already have appeared in Richmond. Their American tour opened in New York October 5, 1922, and on October 20th they sang at the City Auditorium, leaving an impression which is fresh in the memories of those who then heard them. They are recalled as having given their Richmond audience the finest ensemble singing ever heard here.

Virginia Apple Movement.—

An unusually heavy movement of Virginia apples was handled by the Southern Railway System during the shipping season just ended.

A report compiled by Division Freight Agent F. J. Davis, of Lynchburg, shows that total shipments from stations on the Washington division amounted to 431,483 barrels, or 2,877 cars, based on an average of 150 barrels to each car. Of this total, 292,196 barrels were shipped from stations on the Harrisonburg branch, and 139,287 barrels were shipped from stations on the line from Lynchburg to Calverton. The movement from the same territory last season was 370,421 barrels, or 2,500 carloads.

This season's crop was distributed (by barrels) as follows: Eastern cities, 48,875; Virginia and West Virginia points, 94,249; Ohio and Mississippi River crossings and points west, 5,987; Southeastern and Carolina points, 52,195; export, 138,858; to Broadway, Winchcester, Charlottesville and Richmond for cold storage, 91,319.

Here's Testimony that Counts.—

Salvation Army workers in New York City declare emphatically that prohibition has been of inestimable benefit in ameliorating the conditions of the persons with whom the Army comes in contact. There are fewer cases of destitution now, fewer persons applying for aid, fewer cases of drunkenness that come to the Army's attention. The condition of women and children is inexpressibly better.

The Salvation Army and other social workers come in contact daily with the seamy side of life. Everybody knows that prohibition is not 100 per cent effective anywhere and that in New York especially there is a great deal of lawlessness. But in spite of all this, this great social agency has discovered that its work is made easier by prohibition and that the banishment of the saloon has been in incalculable benefit. If prohibition did nothing else than to make the condition of the people of the Bowery and other such sections in New York City a little more tolerable than formerly, prohibition has been amply justified.

Open-Air Road Demonstration.—

The first open-air demonstration of road-building methods and machinery will take place in North Carolina June 4, 5, 6, and 7. The American Road Builders' Association has accepted the invitation of the North Carolina State Highway Commission to hold such a demonstration, or "shirt-sleeve road show," as it has been christened by Frank Page, president of the American Road Builders' Association.

The Pan-American Highway Commission, consisting of a group of about forty leaders in the highway movement in the various countries of South and Central America, will be in North Carolina at that time. These distinguished visitors will visit the shirt-sleeve show, and the American Road Builders' Association accepted the invitation of the North Carolina State Highway Commission in order that it might do its full share to assist the members of the Pan-American Highway Commission in their study of highway conditions in the United States.

Hitherto, all exhibits of road-building machinery in the United States have been held indoors, where it was impossible to put the machinery actually at work. For this reason, the North Carolina show will be of unusual interest. The Pan-American Highway Commission, as well as engineers from other foreign countries who may be in the United States at that time, will have an opportunity to see the latest types of machinery in operation under ordinary working conditions.

Law Saves Lives.—

Six months' operation of the North Carolina law, requiring drivers of motor vehicles to stop before crossing railway tracks, has shown a marked decline in deaths and injuries from accidents at highway crossings of the Southern Railway in that State.

The law became effective on July 1, 1923, and in the six months between that date and December 31st, four persons were killed and eleven injured in eleven accidents at crossings of the Southern's tracks in North Carolina, as against six killed and twenty-four injured in twenty-one accidents during the first six months of 1923; eleven killed and twenty-five injured in eighteen accidents during the last half of 1922, and eight killed and twenty-two injured in fifteen accidents during the first half of 1922.

The figures were compiled by the Southern's safety department from official reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and show that the law was obeyed by enough drivers to effect a material reduction in the number of casualties from grade-crossing accidents on the Southern in North Carolina in the face of a very substantial increase in the volume of motor-vehicle traffic.

During 1923 there were registered in the office of the Secretary of State of North Carolina 247,612 motor vehicles, as against 182,060 in 1922. This shows an increase of over 30 per cent in the number of trucks and automobiles in use.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. J. W. Wellons continues to hold up well for one of his advanced years. He is, however, quite feeble.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, Reidsville, N. C., was a visitor to the office on Friday. He says he is the busiest man at all. He is certainly a faithful worker.

Rev. F. C. Lester has accepted the call to the pastorate of the Franklin, Va., Church. He begins his work in July. We wish for him every success.

Rev. H. E. Truitt is to graduate this June from McCormick Theological Seminary. Any Church desiring his services may address him at 2330 North Halstead Street, Chicago, Ill.

Friends who wish to write to Dr. Barrett while he is away at the hospital are requested to address him at Elon College, N. C. His wife will see that he gets all such messages promptly.

Mr. C. A. Howell, for many years a faithful member of the Holy Neck Christian Church, died on March 8th, at his home, in Branford, Fla. He was a good man, and many will mourn his taking away in his fifty-eighth year.

Mr. Sam Davis, the celebrated pianist, of Norfolk, Va., accompanied by Mrs. Davis, has been playing at the Grace M. E. Church here for the past two weeks, Dr. Franklin, pastor. Any pastor will find Mr. Davis a valuable assistant in the musical program of his Church.

The Church at Elon College has accepted Dr. N. G. Newman's resignation as pastor. He is one of our ablest and most spiritually minded men. He has made no announcement of his plans. He will continue to serve the Church here till September 1st, unless by mutual agreement.

The conviction continues to grow here at the college that the meeting held by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle is among the best ever held in Elon. Sixty-seven new members have already been added upon profession of faith as a result and ten by transfer, making seventy-seven in all. It was really a great meeting, and the results appear to be abiding.

Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the First Church of Norfolk, Va., seems to be making headway with the work of that Church and doing it well. He is one of our best-equipped young men, and we think the First Church at Norfolk was especially fortunate in securing his services. We are expecting, under the blessings of God, to hear of great results from Bro. Truitt's labors in the First Church.

How large are you in mind and heart? Can you commend a good thing in the life, character and work of one who is not to your personal liking? If not, you will do well to plead with God to give you a bigger and better heart. When my enemy does a good thing, I like to commend it and try to profit by it. If you are so small that you cannot see good in a person you do not personally like, you need to be reconstructed, and radically so, but only the Lord can do it.

The Elon College Church began a meeting last Sunday, March 9th, in which the pastor is aided by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church. Bro. Hardcastle is another of our well-prepared young men. This is proved by the fact that he has gotten a strong hold on that congregation in only a few short months. We hope we may be able later to report a fine meeting among the students and citizens of Elon College community.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., formerly professor in Elon College, is now lecturing for the Masons, and one means of accomplishing his work as educational field secretary for the Grand Lodge of North Carolina, he is editing a department in the Orphans' Friend, in which he is seeking to educate Masons in the work of the lodge, and thereby extending its influence among the people of the State. He does his work with real ability, and no doubt the Masonic fraternity will reap a harvest from his labors.

Who can tell us? We would like to know what the administration of the work of the Christian Church, including salaries and all expenses, amounts to at this time? This does not include the salaries of pastors, but solely the cost of administration for the work of the Church, outside of the cost of pastor and local expenses. Who can tell us? This is an important matter, for if our administration expenses get to be too large, we shall find it difficult to maintain a growing work. When overhead expenses are too great, failure seems inevitable. Watch overhead expenses!

Elon College, under Dr. Harper's administration, is doing some great work in building. The administration building is almost completed, and the Liberty building has its walls up and the roof on, and the science hall walls are up to the second-story windows (it is to be three stories), and the Christian education building (the Mooney building) is not quite so far along, but it is well on the way, and we are hoping that in another year we shall have all of these five buildings completed and in use. That will mean an equipment not surpassed by any other small college in the State of North Carolina. Verily, much has been accomplished in one year.

Lieutenant-Governor West, though he is engaged in matters of State, is not forgetting the needs of the Church. Read his words in this issue. No question about it, he is striking some very vital points, and we wish our brethren and sisters generally would give his thoughts special attention. We need to have more and more of our people of the rank and file to give these matters careful attention. The Men and Millions money thus far given has been of great value to the Church. Indeed, without it some of our enterprises could hardly have existed, but with it they have been kept active. For instance, we do not see how our Church paper could have kept going. Our missionary work has also been helped by the Men and Millions money. It has served a good purpose, not for mere individuals, but for the life and activity of the Church at large.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence, English department of Elon College, has been chosen to teach English in the coming summer school at Wake Forest, and Wake Forest has made no mistake in selecting Dr. Lawrence to do this work for the summer. Of course, he will be in his own class-room at Elon when the next term opens. He is a growing man, and keeps himself up with his department. As a teacher of advanced English, he is fine, and other people know it as well as we do. This is proven by the calls to teach English in other institutions of higher learning. A few years ago he was called to Wooster College, in Ohio, to teach English during the summer school, and now the call is to one of the leading colleges of North Carolina. So he is appreciated at home as well as abroad. We are glad Dr. Lawrence belongs to us, for he was rocked in a cradle in the home of a Christian minister, and we believe he will stick. We congratulate you, Dr. Lawrence, on your popularity as a teacher of English.

Do you need a pastor for another year, or for the work of your Church right away? Well, Rev. H. E. Truitt, who graduates this spring from the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, Ill., can be secured. He is a brother of Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the Norfolk First Church, and is a well-prepared young man. He has already had considerable experience in the pastorate in the West. He cannot give up the South, and feels like he would be glad to return to his native country. He has a fine Southern wife also, who no doubt is very willing to come South and make it her home again. She was Miss Watkins, the second daughter of Brother and Sister John E. Watkins, of Rockingham County, Va. If you need him, write to him in care of his brother, Rev. John G. Truitt, Norfolk, Va. He will forward it to him.

The students and faculty of Elon College have but lately had a rare treat in a series of lectures on "Missions" by the Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., secretary of missions for the Southern Christian Convention, and they were of great value. We hope the young people (our students) will be greatly helped in shaping their lives for Christ and His cause under the stimulating influence of these most wonderful talks. The general subject of the full course was "The Church and World Service." There were four lectures on the following subjects: "The Church Adapted to and Equipped for World Service," "The Church Challenging to World Service," "The Church Contributing to World Service," "The Church Conquering in World Service." You can easily see that the line of thought from beginning to the end was one of real importance, and the lectures were of an extraordinary character. We wish every member of the Christian Church could read them, and if money were plentiful enough we should be glad to put them into book form and give one to every man and woman, boy and girl who would promise to read them and study them, seeking to get their own hearts and minds imbued with the thought and the spirit of these lectures.

Honesty is good everywhere, but in our public men it is a necessity, or they could not stand the fiery trial of this day and time. It takes a man to refuse certain advantages which no honest man ought to take. We are having many examples of it just now. Men are trembling and quaking for fear because they have not withstood the temptations which have come to them. Honor is a great thing in human life. We cannot stand without it. The man who lacks honor and integrity will go down quickly under modern temptations, for they are many and mighty. We need men to stand in places where the tempter is so strong and so inviting. General Lee was a man who could not be bought with money. Money could not purchase him—at least it did not, and that makes a strong presumption that it could not purchase him. It tried and failed as is so well shown in the following paragraphs from the Christian Evangelist:

"Public men, all men should care everything for personal honor. Robert Louis Stevenson knew much of life, and hence his morning prayer: 'Give us to go blithely on our business all this day, bring us to our resting-beds weary and content and undishonored.' Abraham challenged those who knew him to point out even a shoestring that he had taken as spoils. When Robert E. Lee came out of the army he was ruined in many ways. His property had been confiscated and his fine old mansion on the hill overlooking the Potomac and the capital had been converted into a cemetery. All the avenues of life seemed closed to him. He faced a hard wall of sectional hatred and the contumely of defeat. At this time when he seemed helpless, when it might have seemed that it mattered little what he did, he was offered $50,000 a year by an insurance company for the use of his name. He refused on the ground that he could actually earn no money in that way, and therefore it would not be honorable to allow his name to be used. Turning his face toward the friendly mountains, he went to the little village of Lexington, Va., where he spent his life as a teacher of young men, getting the sum of about $1,800 per year. In that fine act, the cavalier became the Puritan, and his honor won him a deathless place in the affections of even those who had hitherto been his foes. A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. It counts for more in the end, in both happiness and power. The old Puritan standards are not easy to live up to, but a nation need never fear so long as its people practice them. Character is worth more than anything else. It is the supreme conquest. At death we have to give up gold, silver and lands—but character is eternal. It stands the test of death. It cannot be destroyed."

We are passing through times that try men's souls, and in many instances the men go down under the trial. It is a testing-time indeed to any character, except those grounded on the Rock, Christ Jesus. It is not only that way in one department of life, but practically in every department. In business, in politics, in education, in religion, and everywhere, men are being tried as rarely, if ever, before, and the pity is that so many men who have stood well for almost a lifetime are falling under the power of temptation. An exchange says: "Liberalism and experimental morals, with which we have had to contend for some time, have had their share in untwisting the moral fiber of many men, both in public and in private life. Such liberality may seem very charitable and 'big-minded,' but its fruits are at last bitter and deadly. In all ages, liberalism in morals has been the road to ruin, while those who have disciplined their desires, and practiced severe standards of honor and morality have given to the world the mightiest men and women. These are the times to preach on sacrifice and self-denial, on refined manners and on strict, personal morals. The text of the hour is from the Sermon on the Mount: 'Enter ye in by the narrow gate: for wide is the gate, and broad in the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there are that enter in thereby. For narrow is the gate, and straightened the way that leadeth unto life, and few are they that find it.' "

ELEVEN THOUSAND BIBLES AFLOAT.

Cold weather and cloudy skies did not dampen the ardor of the representatives of the New York Bible Society during the days that the Pacific Fleet was in New York harbor. These workers for the society, through special arrangements previously made, visited the ships early in the morning on different days, carrying to each vessel about a thousand portions of the Bible, which were given free to the sailors on the battleships.

Before the fleet reached New York, Dr. George William Carter, the general secretary of the society, sent the following communication to Captain Patrick, chaplain of the fleet on board the flagship "U. S. California":

"The New York Bible Society bids welcome to the Pacific Fleet. Will you make early appointment to arrange presentation of Scripture portions to every man?"

A reply came from Chaplain Patrick as follows:

"Thanks. Meet chaplain of fleet at Hotel Astor 5:30 March 3rd for dinner. * * *"

At this gathering there were twelve chaplains present, including Chaplain Scott, from the Navy Department at Washington. The chaplains were unanimous in expressions of appreciation of the offer to supply portions of the Bible to every man of the fleet, and requested Chaplain Patrick to arrange for the distribution to be made on board each vessel.

Before the fleet left the harbor, several of the chaplains asked for a supply of Bibles and Testaments to carry with them for future use in Bible classes on board, to give to the men particularly interested. One chaplain said: "The boys are always asking me for these books, and I have not had any to give them for a long time."

ARE WE LABORERS?

The Mission Board reported to the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention held at Henderson, N. C., May 1 to 3, 1923, that for the past year we had made a gain in Church membership of 167, outside of our work in Carroll County, Va., which had enrolled 34 members. This may compare favorably with what we have been doing in the past. Does it compare with what we ought to do, and would do, if we were real laborers? To labor is to toil, exert, put forth a determined effort. It is not merely to get on the pay roll and idle the time away. No material harvest was ever gathered by such laborers.

When the Master was on earth and lifted up His eyes to the great harvest fields, His heart was moved in tender compassion. He not only did what he could day and night, praying and laboring, but, saith He unto His disciples, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest" (Matt. 9:37-38).

The Southern Convention has about 230 Churches, with a membership of 28,418. We have, among them, 162 ordained and licensed preachers. It is true that something like 20 of these are laboring in other fields, leaving us about 140 within the bounds of our Convention. Their business is to labor among and encourage the constituency to labor for the Master. Now, brethren and sisters of our dear Church, can we hope ever to hear the Master say: "Well done!" when the whole of us have done so little? Would we not make a better record if we had the passion for souls that our Lord wants us to have?

Jesus is still lifting His eyes from on high. He sees again the great harvest field. He sees precious souls fall one by one, but has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Moreover, He sees you and me as we, His professed followers, let them go. We go not into the harvest field after them, but too often after the wealth, fame, and pleasure of this world. Let us awake! Let us pray until we are filled with the spirit of Jesus. And when we shall have been, a few will not only go, and that but feebly, but we will rush to the harvest fields at home and away to work, ere "the night cometh when no man can work."

The Master has said to His great Church: "Ye are the salt of the earth." Paul said: "I am not ahsamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Dear reader, will you join me in daily prayer, that God may give us a real vision of our part in the King's business? I often think that we place the emphasis at the wrong place. When we succeed in building, organizing, financing and climbing the ladder of individual worldly fame, we are congratulated as being wise, good, honorable and great. But, alas! we may learn from another (and better) source that "He that winneth souls is wise," and will shine after the lights of this world have gone out. Let us of the Southern Christian Church seek first the kingdom's interest, and place the emphasis there on soul-winning, the special work Jesus came to do and has sent us to do. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world, through Him, might be saved (John 3:17). "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20:21). When we do this, God will increase our numbers annually by the thousands, and He will also take care of His work, which means He will take care of our colleges, orphanage, home and foreign missions, and all the enterprises of our Church that He leads us to undertake. Moreover, He will take care of us, His servants, without allowing it to be necessary for us to quit our job as preachers, and his servants to make a living for our families.

J. E. FRANKS.

DECALOGUE OF BUSINESS.

By John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

1. I believe that labor and capital are partners, not enemies.

2. I believe that the community is an essential party to industry, and that it should have adequate representation with the other parties.

3. I believe that the purpose of industry is quite as much to advance social well-being as material prosperity.

4. I believe that every man is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living, to fair wages, to reasonable hours of work and proper working conditions, to a decent home, to the opportunity to play, to learn, to worship and to love, as well as to toil, and that the responsibility rests as heavily upon industry as upon government or society to see that these conditions and opportunities prevail.

5. I believe that diligence, initiative and efficiency, wherever found, should be encouraged and adequately rewarded; and that service is the only justification for the possession of power.

6. I believe that the provision of adequate means of uncovering grievances and promptly adjusting them is of fundamental importance to the successful conduct of industry.

7. I believe that the most potent measure in bringing about industrial harmony and prosperity is adequate representation of the parties in interest.

8. I believe that the most effective structure of representation is built from the bottom up, which includes all employees.

9. I believe that to "do unto others as you would that they should do unto you" is as sound business as it is good religion.

10. I believe that the man renders the greatest social service who so co-operates in the organization of industry as to afford to the largest number of men the greatest opportunity of self-development and the enjoyment of those benefits which their united efforts add to the wealth of civilization.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

HOW IT WILL WORK—NO. 1.

A plan may be beautiful in concept, but disappointing in application. Any plan of financing our Church enterprises must stand the test of practice. I have suggested a plan that is known in the popular mind as the budget plan, and to it I have added educational and administrative features. All three are necessary, it would appear, if we are really to have an adequate financial plan. For three weeks now I propose to discuss this plan under the three suggested heads.

Our apportionment plan in the South is a budget plan less the administrative features and less the educational features which I have suggested. Our Men and Millions Movement combined all three aspects of the plan during the four fitful months of that great enterprise. As we look back on that remarkable achievement, we wonder that it succeeded so well. The time was too short, and immediately following the high-pressure methods of the campaign, the Southern Christian Convention voted to abolish the directive administrative work and to discontinue the educational features. Two years later we endeavored to redeem our error, but the slump had gone too far. We have recovered better than we could have expected, but complete recovery is out of the question.

The Interchurch World Movement likewise failed for three reasons. It presumed there was a large group of givers outside the circle of the Churches; it spent too much money on its survey; it pointed toward Church union. Its very friends strangled it in its infancy. Sectarians killed the InterChurch Movement.

Our apportionment, or budget, plan in the Southern Christian Convention has kept us at a standstill for a decade. By it alone, the future is hardly reassuring for the financing on a progressive scale of our expanding enterprises. We must give more money for our Church program, or we must retrench. There is no authority in the teachings of Jesus for retrenchment.

There is No Question Facing Us so Momentous as This.

1. Apportioning the Budget.

I have suggested four items as properly entering into the apportioning of the budget—membership, pastor's salary, value of Church plants, and previous record for giving. A careful consideration of how this would work is in order.

By Conferences, the amounts of these items, according to the latest "Annual," are as follows:

	Number of Members	Salaries Paid	Church Plants	Previous Record
Virginia Valley Central Conference	2,320	$ 4,243.34	$ 79,750.00	$ 1,265.00
Eastern Virginia Conference	9,527	39,075.12	987,100.00	7,616.50
Georgia and Alabama Conference	1,527	4,988.45	93,500.00	564.55
Alabama Conference	1,917	2,468.64	36,200.00	496.88
Eastern North Carolina Conference	3,862	11,467.68	124,172.00	2,118.51
Western North Carolina Conference	3,186	8,088.81	145,000.00	1,828.69
North Carolina and Virginia Conference	5,111	14,794.30	198,600.00	3,748.28
Total for Southern Christian Convention	27,450	$85,126.34	$ 1,664,322.00	$17,638.47

On these bases, weighting each cause as 25 per cent, these Conferences would be apportioned by percentages as follows:

	Members Per Cent.	Salaries Per Cent.	Church Plants Per Cent.	Previous Record Per Cent.	Total Per Cent.
Virginia Valley Central Conference	2.25	1.25	1.125	1.75	6.375
Eastern Virginia Conference	8.5	11	15	10.75	45.25
Georgia and Alabama Conference	1.5	1.5	1.375	.875	5.25
Alabama Conference	1.75	.75	.5	.875	3.875
Eastern North Carolina Conference	3.5	3.5	1.75	3	11.75
Western North Carolina Conference	3	2.25	2.25	2.5	10
North Carolina and Virginia Conference	4.5	4.75	3	5.25	17.5
Total for So. Christian Convention	25	25	25	25	100

By individual Churches (five selected to illustrate) in the Eastern Virginia Conference (the others, for this and for other Conferences on the same basis, can easily be computed), the percentages would be as follows:

	Members Per Cent.	Salaries Per Cent.	Church Plants Per Cent.	Previous Record Per Cent.	Total Per Cent.
Antioch	1	.2	.125	.5	1.825
Berea (Nansemond)	.333	.4	.833	1	2.566
Christian Temple	2.25	2.75	6.25	1.75	13
Franklin	.67	1.375	1	1.25	4.292
Suffolk	2.5	2	2.5	6.25	13.25

NOTE.—This table is based on percentage of what goes to the Conferecne, and not the whole amount.

Now, suppose we decide in Convention assembled to raise $50,000 annually for the next two years. This would go to the Conferences as follows:

Conference.	Amount.	Pctg.
Va. Valley Central	$ 3,187.50	6⅜
Eastern Virginia	22,625.00	45¼
Georgia and Alabama	2,625.00	5¼
Alabama	1,937.50	3⅞
Eastern N. C.	5,875.00	11¾
Western N. C.	5,000.00	10
North Carolina and Virginia.	8,750.00	17½
Total	$50,000.00	100

It would go to the five selected individual Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference as follows:

Church.	Amount.	Pctg.
Antioch	$ 413.00	1 33-40
Berea (Nansemond)	566.00	2½
Christian Temple	2,941.00	13
Franklin	971.00	4 7-24
Suffolk	2,998.00	13¼

Should we decide to raise $100,000, we should double the amount in each case, or to raise less than $50,000 we would decrease it proportionately.

The Convention would, of course, undertake to settle how this money should be distributed to the various enterprises. Dr. Staley has suggested the following basis:

Cause.	P. C.
Education	30
Missions	40
Publications	8
Convention	2
Orphanage	5
Superannuation	5
Sunday Schools	5
Christian Endeavor	5
Total	100

After the Convention has decided on the amount to be raised and the basis of apportionment, the individual Conferences would be asked to accept, modify, or reject, and each then to pass its decision on down to the local Churches. These, in turn, would have the right to accept, modify, or reject. Having decided what amount it will undertake to raise for benevolence, the local Church will proceed by the every-member canvass and the securing of tithers, together with faithful teaching of stewardship obligation to secure this amount by such frequency of payment through envelopes as best fits in with the local worship schedule.

Remittance should be made by the local Church to the Conference, and by the Conference to the Convention. Quarterly remittances have much to commend them, though we are accustomed to the annual method. That is a detail easily to be attended to.

Next week I would discuss the administrative features, and the week following, the educational methods necessary to enable the plan properly to function.

It should finally be noted that this plan would begin to be operative following Men and Millions.

THE EDITOR RESTS.

Eight years ago, about this very time, I wrote an editorial captioned as above, only the editor then was Dr. J. O. Atkinson. I had just journeyed with the then editor to Asheville, where he began a protracted rest, necessary, deserved, and, thank God, restorative in its results.

Now, another of our faithful servants is away on a rest, necessary, deserved, and, may God grant, destined to be restorative in its results. Our beloved editor is in the dry-dock for physical repairs, as Dr. Staley would say, in the Presbyterian Hospital, Charlotte, N. C. He has been suffering for some time now with a disease that at last calls for the rest cure and the treatment of skillful surgery. After careful investigation, he has placed himself under the care of Dr. A. J. Crowell, considered eminent in the very disease that has attacked Dr. Barrett.

It may be several days before Dr. Crowell will operate, and we would be glad if an operation should be found to be unnecessary, but of this we may be sure, our editor during these days of rest and physical replenishment will have the very best care and attention a modern hospital in Christian hands and a devout layman of splendid professional attainments can vouchsafe him. There is one resource the Church can draw upon on his behalf—the resource of prayer. The editor pro tem calls upon the brotherhood to pray earnestly for our editor, that God, in His mercy and wisdom, may speedily restore him to health, and that during his rest his wife and family may be sustained by an unfaltering trust that means spiritual joy under any burden or circumstance. I told him before he left I had the conviction he will get along beautifully. He desires that the brotherhood pray for him and for his family.

Dr. Barrett deserves his rest. His busy life has not provided him the opportunity to take vacations. His physical vitality has been steadily sapped through an active life of service to the Church and kingdom over a period of fifty years. As pastor at Raleigh, at Norfolk, and at Covington, Ohio, he represented our cause in strategic positions and wrought well as a watchman for his Lord. As editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and again of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, he has been the uncompromising exponent of the truth of God. He has also, during these long years of public service, been the vigorous champion of the enterprises of the Church. Some years ago I had the occasion to write the history of Elon College. I went, of course, to the "Christian Annual," but I was not satisfied with the resolutions therein printed and the official records. I felt instinctively that somebody had provided propaganda for the idea. So I turned to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

And I found on the pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN what my instinct had suggested to me as necessary. Dr. Barrett, as editor, was the ideal publicity man for the cause of Christian education in our Church in the late eighties. But for him, Dr. Long could never have persuaded our people to erect a college. I also found that the Christian Orphanage arose out of his propaganda for that undertaking and that the blasts of his editorial trumpet first set our people to thinking missions, a work which, on his part, culminated in the sending out of Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett as missionaries to Porto Rico by the Memorial Temple while he was pastor there. Truly has Dr. Barrett shown himself a prophet of the kingdom while wielding the editorial pen. He is a born editor, a publicity statesman of highest order The Church can never repay him for his splendid service.

And now he is taking a much-deserved and necessary rest. In his seventy-third year he should have it and a generous-hearted and grateful people should see that he has it without cost. That is all I have to say. That is all that it is necessary to say.

Further.

As I reached this point in my first effort for eight years as editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, my mail arrived with this word from Dr. Crowell, Dr. Barrett's physician: "Dr. Barrett came in yesterday, and we are now studying his case. We have investigated sufficiently to know that an operation will be necessary. It will be a week or so before he will be in condition to undergo operation. From what we have seen thus far, there is no reason why he should not undergo the operation and get along perfectly well thereafter."

A REAL CHRISTIAN IS THE HIGHEST TYPE OF HUMAN LIFE.

Never be satisfied to live below your privileges in Christ. We may not reach our highest ideal, but we can try, and a real earnest effort to live the Christian life will mean much to the one who tries to reach so high an elevation, and it is richly worth it, even if we should get only a small part of it. Even in that case, the effort will pay us compound interest at a high rate.

Here is a description of the highest type of life. We wish you would read it, and then set your mark on its mountain-top and try to reach it, and keep on trying till you are called to your everlasting home, and be assured that you will never lose anything that is good by such an effort. A selected description follows:

To talk with God before I talk with man. To do my daily work with sunshine on my face and honey on my tongue. To be strong in the presence of temptation; alert in the presence of opportunity; open-eared to the call of conscience for service or sacrifice; open-minded to views of truth which differ from mine.

To make duty a joy, and joy a duty. To work and not worry; to be energetic and not fussy. To be true to myself, and false to no man; diligent to make a living, and earnest to make a life. To cherish friendships and guard confidence. To be loyal to principle at the cost of popularity. To make no promises I cannot keep, and to keep no foolish promises. To be faithful to every honest obligation.

To be sweet-tempered under criticism, charitable in my judgments, discriminating in my adjectives. To honor no one simply because he is rich; to despise no one simply because he is poor. To be respectful, not cringing, to the great; sympathetic with the sorrowing; gentle to the weak; helpful to the fallen; courteous to all. To be simple in my tastes; quiet in my dress; pure in my speech; temperate in my pastimes.

To companion with great books, cherish inspiring thoughts, and to keep my body on friendly terms with water and fresh air. To fear nothing but sin; hate nothing but hypocrisy; envy nothing but a clean life; covet nothing but character. And at last to leave the world a little better for my stay; to face death without a tremor, with faith in Christ, who tunneled the grave that I might walk into the larger and perfect life.

A MARVELOUS STATEMENT.

It was Jesus who said: "I am the truth." We look at it and pass it by as ordinary, but it is the most extraordinary statement that was ever made by the lips of a man. Jesus is the truth; everything He said was the truth; everything He was was the truth, and everything he did was the truth, for He was the truth. In one place especially He is called the Word. Did it ever occur to you why Jesus was called the Word? Most certainly there was a reason for calling Him the Word. It may be that we are mistaken, but we believe He was called the Word because Jesus was what God said to this world concerning salvation and life everlasting. Now, if what Jesus is, is truth, if what He said is truth, and if what He did was truth, as evidently it was, we can see why He Himself said: "I am the truth."

In another place, Jesus declared that the glory the Father had given Him from heaven, He had given to His disciples. If Jesus was the truth, as evidently He was, then we easily reach the conclusion that Jesus was giving Himself to the world, and when He said that He had given them the glory which He had with the Father, why, it would seem that Jesus simply meant He was giving Himself, so that whether He was giving them Himself or the truth, or the glory which He had with the Father, after all it was simply the truth that Jesus was bestowing upon His disciples, so qualifying them to be real servants wherever they might go, and what ever good thing they might do. If we get Jesus as the truth, we may be sure that when we have Him in our hearts we have everything that we shall need for the life that now is and is to come.

WE MEAN TO BE ENTIRELY FAIR.

Our beloved brother, Dr. Lawrence, if we may judge by what he said in last week's issue, seems to think THE SUN's editor has made a mistake in calling on our people to discuss the financial plan suggested by Dr. Harper. We are calling that plan the "Budget Plan." It is probably more than that. It is a budget plan with educational features and a method of closer co-operation with our Northern brethren. Dr. Staley's plan is in fact the apportionment plan for the Southern Christian Convention alone. As we understand it, Dr. Harper is a member of a special committee, appointed by the Southern Christian Convention to study how we can co-operate more closely with the whole denomination, North and South. Dr. Lawrence seems to think we are trying to carry a point by urging this discussion. That is true. We are seeking to have our people informed as to the meaning of the budget plan, if practically applied to our work. We do not wish this, or any other plan, to be put upon our people till they understand and approve it. It was our thought in urging this discussion that a fair and Christian presentation of its merits would enable our people to determine whether it is what the Southern Christian Convention needs or not. If it is, all right, accept it, and do it intelligently. When we act, we really need to know just what we are doing.

The editor does not commit himself to the plan. He does not even venture to discuss it, but is patiently waiting to study it as its merits and demerits are brought out by our leading men. We are yet of the opinion that it ought to be faithfully discussed, so that the people may do whatever they decide to do, clearly understanding the full meaning of what they do, as for the good of the Church.

As to Dr. Staley's plan, we shall be glad to open THE SUN columns to a discussion of its merits or demerits, just as we have the budget plan, and for the reason that our people need to understand it well in order to adopt it if they wish, or to reject if they wish to do that, well understanding what they do. We believe our attitude is right. Do you not think so, Dr. L.?

Miss Helen Stearns, 9 Shawmuth Avenue, Bradford, Mass., is endeavoring to secure a party of our people to attend the World's Sunday School Convention in Glasgow, Scotland, in June. Let any who plan to go write her at once.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the early morning of March 13th I was called to go and baptize an infant three days old. The doctor had told the parents that it could not live. It was their first-born—only three days old. Only the father, mother, and doctor were present. The mother's left arm was extended to her husband beside the hospital bed. The tears from the father's eyes were dropping down upon the bare arm of the young mother as I read the ceremony of consecration and dipped my fingers in the bowl of warm water which the nurse had brought, and put the drops upon the tiny head of the babe.

Within one hour from that time, the little one passed into the arms of Jesus, who said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The scene at the consecration was so sweet and tender that it recalled an experience I had in Graham before I came to Suffolk. The doctor had given up hope for a blind infant in a Luthern family, nine miles from Graham. Their minister was absent at a synod of his Church. Their faith in infant baptism was an essential in their duty to the babe. They sent for me. I rode on horseback the nine miles in night and baptized the darling. It died before dawn. It was a great comfort to the parents that they had discharged their parental Christian duty to their babe. I found it so with this father and mother. The experience ended with me today, as I said, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust," at the grave of this immortal only three days old.

As I write this, I am thinking beyond the grave, beyond parental grief and disappointed hopes for their home in this world; I am thinking of eternity and the heavenly home: and the "Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." The word "family" is the center of my thought. It is family here, and it is family there. Now, the family is composed of all sizes, all ages, all experiences, all faiths, and all hopes. I cannot conceive of the family in heaven composed of all adults. It would be a gloomy heaven. It would be a solemn eternity. It would be endless monotony. It would not be the family, and it would not be home. But Paul describes the "whole family in heaven and earth." God's family dwells in two worlds, and they are named after Christ.

What I am trying to say is a word of comfort to parents who have lost children of any age. If there can be any difference in the bliss of heaven between the fortunates who enter into that home, it must be in favor of fathers and mothers who have children there. The little ones furnish the interest, the love, the service, the happiness of the home in "the earth." The least is the center of the family thought and joy. What would earth be without children? Christmas would perish; schools would die; family life would lose its color, its laughter, its music, and its price. But family life in heaven will not be in sections and groups. It will be one family, so that all will share in the family associations, love and praise. Heaven will be the richer and eternity will be the happier because infants are there. The little graves in the cemeteries are just as sacred as the graves that contain great men and women. The memory of babes is just as fresh and precious in mother's mind as that of parents or great characters that adorn the pages of history or brighten the lines of richest poetry.

Parents who bury their children are making a contribution to the heavenly family in the eternal home. The chorus that surrounds the throne in endless song will be a choir of mixed voices, and none will be sweeter than infants' praise in that endless song of praise.

W. W. STALEY.

AN APPRECIATION FOR THE MINISTER.

For some years, in connection with my work as teacher, I served Churches and had opportunity to come into contact with diffierent Church communities. In some of these communities and congregations, the minister was held in the highest esteem by the congregation and the people generallv. This was an inspiration, an uplift, and a great stimulus to the minister to inspire him to prepare better sermons, render better service, do more pastoral visiting; thus rendering better service to the congregation and being urged on to make a better pastor and preacher.

Not only did the minister receive the appreciation of the people in spiritual fellowship and love expressed in word and tongue, but these congregations expressed their appreciation in deed and in truth by liberal support financially and material help, ministering to his temporal needs so as to free his mind from the anxieties that naturally attend providing for the family. Such appreciation for the minister will make any man do his best to render real service for the people whom he serves. This should be the attitude of every congregation for their pastor.

The parents and adults in the community should magnify the office of the minister in the minds of the children. This would inspire many a child to think highly of the ministry as a calling. It would induce many children to purpose and plan to enter the ministry when they choose a life-work. One reason why so few children prepare for the ministry is doubtless due to the attitude that parents take toward the minister before their children. Early impressions have much to do in determining the future career of children. While parents should not use undue means to force children into the Christian ministry, they should make it a rule to magnify the office of the ministry in the minds of their children according to the real meaning of the service they render to society.

Not only the children would be benefitted by such an attitude, but parents themselves would have better religious characters, more loyalty to the Church, more devotion to Christ, more religion for service, if they would be loyal to the pastor and regard him as God regards him in His kingdom.

The financial support for the minister should be adequate to his needs and the needs of his family. He should be provided well enough to live as well as the average members of his congregation. It is the duty of the membership of the Church to make this provision for him. He should not be regarded as a hired man who works for his salary, but he should be so well paid that he will not have to think of his salary, and as a rule he will not think as much about salary as about souls. Most ministers who think of their salaries do so because they are so poorly paid that they have to exercise the most rigid economy to live on the salary paid and have to study some method by which they can keep out of debt and maintain respectability in the community by paying their necessary accounts for food and clothing for themselves and families.

It has been my misfortune to serve congregations, where the people paid their pastor niggardly and stingily and grudgingly. They looked upon him as they would look upon a hired colored servant and paid him in the same spirit. This attitude on the part of the congregation made the minister's soul shrink and shrivel up. It caused the children of the home to look upon the ministry as a mean calling and planted in their young minds an utter contempt for the minister and poisoned them forever against entering the ministry. Even though such children should have divine impulses to enter the gospel ministry, they would interpret them as temptations from the wicken one who would lure them into forbidden paths. Such poor pay and such poor appreciation for the work of the ministry forever set them against the divine calling and marred their future usefulness.

If the parents and leaders in the Christian Church would magnify the Christian ministry, never speak slightingly of it, support it faithfully with their substance as God has ordained, discourage all expressions of depreciation for the present generation, the next generation would supply all the recruits for the ministry that the Church could use.

W. C. WICKER.

THE ALL-SOUTH C. E. CONVENTION.

The paramount thing in the minds of Christian Endeavorers in Dixie just now is the coming All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, which will meet at Richmond July 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Stated unions are trying to reach their goal, districts are working for new records, city unions are striving for new heights, societies are working harder than ever, and Christian Endeavorers throughout Dixie are sending in registrations.

Endeavorers in Virginia are proud that the Convention is coming to the capital of the Old Dominion; they will be waiting to welcome the visitors from the South with one of the best programs that can be arranged.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the World's Union of Christian Endeavor, will be with us. Dr. Clark and Mrs. Clark are in Southern Italy for the winter, for a thorough rest and benefit of Dr. Clark's health, but will return to the States early in May to be on hand for the Convention.

Hon. E. Lee Trinkle, Governor of Virginia, has accepted the honorary chairmanship of the Convention, and will also give a number of addresses. Mrs. Trinkle has consented to render a number of violin solos.

William Jennings Bryan, one of the best-known platform men of the age, of whom it has been said that his outlook upon the future is one of the most comprehensive of the times, will be with us, with his old-time fire.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the United Society, will also be at the Convention. Dr. Poling is recognized as one of the outstanding speakers of the world today. It is said of Dr. Poling by the late ex-Governor Hanley, of Indiana, that he is the brainiest man of the age today.

Mr. E. P. Gates, general secretary of the United Society, the one we read so much about in the Christian Endeavor World, will be on hand.

These are just a few of the big men we will have with us at the Convention, and in addition to all of these, Field Secretary Miss Mamie Gene Cole, the all-South junior field secretary, the one we all love; Frank P. Wilson, our own field secretary, who has accomplished so much in Virginia and North Carolina. Miss Georgia Dunn and Gerald Harris, as well as the State officers and leaders, will all be there helping to make this the greatest Convention in the history of Dixie.

The western district of Virginia, the southern district of North Carolina, the northern district of Virginia, and the Orlando and Daytona districts of Florida, in order named, have all registered 100 per cent of their officers for the Convention. This is also true of the Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va., City Union, while the Little Rock, Ark., City Union has passed its entire city union quota. The First Christian Church of Little Rock, Ark., holds first honors among the Churches of Dixie, with 37 advanced paid registrations, while the Second Presbyterian Church of Staunton, Va., comes a close second, with 26.

The registration fee is one dollar, and covers the official badge, program and Convention privileges. To those who register and do not attend the Convention, provided advice is given to Secretary Evans of their non-attendance, will be sent a copy of the official Convention program, badge, and of the printed Convention report.

The railroad rates are one and one-half regular one-way fare on identification certificate plan. Certificate sent with registration card, and must be presented when ticket is purchased to Richmond, or no reduced rate can be had.

The after-trip will start July 15th, and close at Washington on 21st. Information can be secured from C. F. Evans, 5 Ferger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Virginia Endeavorers may send their registration cheques to W. H. Baker, 1028 Twenty-fourth Street, Newport News, Va. Plan to go to Richmond and attend the greatest All-South Christian Endeavor Convention.

W. H. Baker,
Vice-Pres. Va. C. E. Union.

A WORD ABOUT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

I trust that every Christian Endeavor Society throughout our Church will begin right away to make plans to send representatives or delegates to the fifth All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, Richmond, Va., July 10-14, 1924. What Christian Endeavor has done for the young people of other denominations, it can do for the Christian Church if we will only give it a chance. When our denominational Conference is held in Richmond as a part of the program features of this All-South Convention, I for one trust that we may have a real large group representing the Christian Church.

It is true that this date comes close to the S. S. & C. E. Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, but our Christian Endeavor Societies should send delegates to both conventions if possible, and it can be done if the local society will begin now and plan to do so.

I am hoping to see three societies of the Newport News Christian Church represented at both places, and your society is going to have to get busy if it makes a better report than the three of which I am pastor.

The following clipping may interest our readers:

The Twenty-third Street Christian Intermediate Society of Newport News celebrated its first anniversary in February and had as its guest the members of a society it organized that month.

This society held a banquet-echo meeting just after its State Convention last year; a twilight service on the banks of Hampton Roads, with fifty present, where after supper a very splendid devotional meeting was held; a "movie meeting," with 81 present, where pictures were shown of, and short talks made on, its denominational missions, schools and colleges; a temperance meeting, with 60 present; a Thanksgiving sunrise service; entertained the seamen at the "Sailors' Rest," giving a musical program and serving hot coffee and home-made candy; had Carolling bands which left Church at 5:30 Christmas morning for different parts of city, returning to the Church for a devotional service and breakfast, with 27 present; a Japanese meeting, with all speakers in Japanese costumes, and an offering for Japanese relief, in addition to its regular meeting and work. These intermediates and the juniors of the same Church have purchased a piano for their meeting-room. Mrs. T. G. Hyatte is the superintendent.—Dixie Endeavor.

B. J. Earp.

A SOUTHERN POET OF MUCH PROMISE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The Yale University Press, New Haven, Conn., has just issued the third book of poems from William Alexander Percy, the young Southern poet of Greenville, Miss. The book sells for $1.50 and is an attractive volume of 140 well-printed pages. Its title is "Enzio's Kingdom and Other Poems." The dedication reads as follows: "In memory of my friend, Caroline Stern, the poet to whom I am most indebted." The first part of sixty pages is taken up with forty short lyrics; this is followed by fifteen pages of Delta sketches, suggested by the Mississippi Valley life and surroundings; then comes a letter from John Keats to Fanny Brawne; then the forty-page poem in blank verse, called "Enzio's Kingdom." The book is closed by an epilogue which breathes more of the personal note than is found in anything else that the book contains.

This last volume is very suggestive of the first two books from the same author, Sappho in Levkas, and In April Once, and has the same merits, and the same limitations that are to be found in his first work. It is dominated by the spirit of classic and settled tradition in the art poetic, and suggests some lack of the abandon and freedom from conventions that we expect from a writer with a real message. Scholarship is evident, and wide reading is shown in the range of expression, still there is a feeling that the scholar dominates the poet in much that is spread upon the pages. There is but little of the "fine frenzy" that we are always hoping to find when we open the pages of a new book of poetry. In affection of a mild and gentle type, in love for the calmer aspects of nature, there is much to please; in bold daring and startling attempt there is much to be desired.

That the book is the work of a true poet, few will deny; that it will add measurably to the attention won by his previous work is questionable. He has established himself firmly as a writer of real merit by his work thus far; but it yet remains to be proven that unusual genius will enable him to range over new and undiscovered regions. With his devotion to poetry, his taste and scholarship, the high standards set in his first work, naturally we long for hints of a power that will leave us wondering as to the ultimate scope and range of his possible attainment. This book has been awaited as possibly bringing this new message of greater powers still in process of growth; in this respect the book fails to satisfy, but this does not mean that this collection is not in every sense worthy and highly creditable, for it, indeed, is all this. He has the poet's dreams and the poet's power of expressing these dreams. He can hardly be yet called the poet clothed in his prophetic role of authority. Some of the lines are mints of the vague and uncertain, as—

"This wind upon my mouth, these stars I see,
The breathing of the night above the trees,
Not these nor anything my senses touch
Are real to me or worth the boon of breath.
But all the never-heard, the never-seen,
The just-beyond my hands can never reach;
These have a substance that is stout and sure,
These brace the unsubstantial sliding world,
And led the evanescent actual
An air of life, a tint of worth and meaning."

"Enzio's Kingdom and Other Poems" is an entirely worth-while addition to the collection of poetry upon our shelves. In every way it is a credit to its author, and will well sustain the reputation he has thus far made if it even fails to add to it. As a first book, it would be regarded as especially notable; as the third book, it sustains easily the place won by the two previous works. It proves that he will do well to continue to labor in the field he has chosen, and that he will not disappoint us in work of finish, fine taste, scholarship, and real poetic feeling.

IS THERE ANY EVIL IN THE WORLD OUTSIDE OF HUMAN CONDUCT?

The fear of death appears to be possessed by all living creatures. The chicken flies to cover when the hawk appears; the little bird trembles in the hand that by chance catches it; the hare flees in terror before the pursuing hound; the fox cries out in agony as the leader of the pack pounces on him and buries his teeth in his throat. All kinds of animals, either directly or indirectly, live by the destruction of other animals.

Query: Is the manner of life among animals of the lower order evil? If not, why should the Lord who created all things establish and ordain a system of living things whose very existence is founded upon the suffering and death of one another? If so, why should the Lord who is revealed to us as just and good, and merciful and kind, establish such a system at all?

Again, animals in the wild state are subjected to certain influences of natural changes which appear cruel. A gale sweeps down from the North in winter, and in a few minutes the thermometer drops from temperate to several degrees below zero, and thousands of wild animals are frozen to death before they can readjust themselves to the change. Nature does not temper the wind to the shorn lamb, as some assert. During a long period of snow I have seen numbers of little birds frozen and starved to death. Earthquakes and tidal wakes take place, and in a few minutes destroy thousands of animals and human beings. Nature acts as cruelly at certain times as she acts kindly at other times.

Query: Are such demonstrations on the part of nature to be regarded as evil? If not, why should the Lord give to the lower order of animals a home that is at times so destructive of their welfare? If so, why should the Lord make this evil possible among a multitude of unaccountable living beings? So far as I know, the Bible does not explain these things, and yet I feel assured that I am not the only one who has been puzzled by them. Can Dr. Barrett explain?

Herbert Scholz.

[NOTE.—Dr. Barrett will explain when he is recovered.—W. A. H.]

NEW BOOK BY DR. STIDGER.

"That God's House May be Filled," by Rev. Dr. William L. Stidger, companion volume to "Standing Room Only," will make an immediate appeal to thousands of ministers who have found Dr. Stidger's methods for filling the pews so suggestive and helpful. The amazing growth of St. Mark's Church is proof enough of the practical worth of these original and unique plans for getting the people to go to Church. The material in this new volume is entirely fresh, and will be found equally as usable and effective. Net, $1.50. Geo. H. Doran Co., New York.

Don't forget to subscribe to The Christian Sun. It is our paper, and we love it. Let's support it.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A GREAT DAY.

The writer feels that all who attended the opening of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Sunday, March 16th, felt that it was worth while to be there, and that it was in every respect a great day. One does not know which to admire most, the magnificent temple of worship, with its unsurpassed equipment, or the fearless courage and the great vision which inspired Dr. L. E. Smith, the pastor, and his devoted membership, to erect such a building. As one contemplates the opening day, the immense throngs of happy worshipers and the great temple, one's mind is not clear as to detail and particular facts. One is swept on into the realm of higher thinking and deepest admiration when one tries to grasp what it is and signifies.

As this writer has said before in these columns, Dr. Smith and his co-workers have been and still are fighting the battles of our entire denomination. Christian Temple is more than a local enterprise. The congregation there has summarized our highest hopes and noblest aspirations in undertaking for us, that which no other local congregation had the daring, the vision and the courage to undertake. Now, that they have shown us how, it is safe to think that others will follow, and in future may possibly excel. This is why it has been said that a battle for the denomination was being fought out, and a wonderful victory for the whole Church achieved in Norfolk. Just how it has been done, what caused it, just who conceived the great idea, dreamed the great dream and had the vision may not be told, but it suffices to say that Dr. Smith and his co-workers have realized the vision and brought to actuality the facts of a great dream. Christian Temple of Norfolk has blazed the way for the denomination to bigger and better things, and no one of us who attended the services on the opening day could go away with any other feeling than that virtue would go out from this building to all the Churches which hold our cause dear and revere the name and principles for which we stand.

No description of the building can give the reader any adequate conception. To say that it cost $300,000; that it is a three-and-a-half-story building of genuine limestone construction; that there are in the building twenty-seven carloads of stone and more than a million hard brick; and that it is of Gothic architecture, may give one a sense of size, but in no manner describes the building. It is a modern Church house, with all equipment for real service.

On the first floor is the social hall, used as a men's Bible class room, in which we saw gathered on opening day more than 250 men in one class. This same hall is also equipped as a dining-room, and we saw on opening day hundreds comfortably seated, dining from tables loaded with food prepared in the adjoining kitchen. This floor is equipped also for all kinds of indoor athletics. The kitchen, with every convenience, large ranges, ample cabinets, plate and silverware from which to serve 250 to 300 at a sitting; rest room for both men and women, ladies' parlor, kindergarten, shower baths, primary rooms and junior Church auditorium. The heating for the entire building is on this floor, and is of the most modern type, equipped with large fans, by which the heat is distributed in winter and dispelled in summer, and giving a complete change of air every fifteen minutes in all the auditoriums of the building.

The second floor shows really a double building, but with such symmetry and beauty that one would regard each as complete in itself. Heavy windows on the inside walls are artistically lighted, giving a charming effect to the two main auditoriums. The great windows of art glass are a combination of antique and opalescent glass, which give both light and color and produce a most pleasing effect. The life of Christ, from the annunciation to the ascension, is pictured by means of medallion figures. The educational auditorium has two large class rooms and a series of smaller ones, which constitute different departments. There is a Church office and secretary's room and pastor's study on the second floor, apart from the other rooms.

The main auditorium is furnished with heavy oak pews of silver gray, on a thick carpet of green. The great organ is a four-manual, electric instrument, built by the Hall Organ Company, at a cost of $25,000, and really includes five separate organs and chimes. The great choir organs are in a chamber to the right of the loft, and the swell is to the left. In the rear of the Church, in one tower, is the solo organ, under very high wind-pressure and forming the climax to the full organ. In the opposite tower is the echo, containing soft-string stops and the vox humana, which imitates the human voice, and the chimes. It is a great instrument, which in the playing makes one feel that the very walls of the building are resonant with holy sounds and heavenly voices.

On the third floor there are large galleries, both in the main auditorium for preaching and the main auditorium in the educational building. On this floor are also a club room in the tower and choir room, labatory for the choir and entrances to choir loft.

The fourth floor contains a finished room in the tower, the four organ chambers and unfinished space for at least twelve class rooms.

The lighting of the building is by the use of seven large X-ray lanterns, Gothic in design. They give a semi-indirect ray.

The large tower is not only decorative, but useful. From it, you enter every department of the building. The Church is equipped with individual drinking-fountains, lavatories on all floors, nine in all, and in the various departments are eight pianos for use by various classes and organizations.

The various departments and class rooms adjoining and the galleries are thrown into one, as they were on opening day, giving a seating capacity of about 2,000. Yet on the opening day many were turned away, both from the morning and evening services, the seats and available standing-room being occupied.

The singing, by the assistance of various choirs in the city, was nothing short of heavenly. It was announced that there was an outstanding indebtedness of some $59,000. Of this amount, some over $40,000 in cash and subscriptions were secured on opening day. Seventy-seven members were received during the day. Dr. W. H. Dennison, of Dayton, Ohio, led in the financial campaign for the day, and did a wonderful piece of work. He also preached in the afternoon. Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Del., preached in the evening. Luncheon was served to all out-of-town guests in the dining-room of the Church.

With all, it was a great and good day, and Dr. Smith and his congregation were exceedingly happy, as they deserved to be. The thousands who attended the services were high in praise of what had been done. Many nearby congregations came in great numbers, and a dozen or more ministers were present to show their appreciation and enjoy the great occasion. This Church is a distinct contribution to the city of Norfolk, as well as to the Christian denomination. Dr. Smith and the congregation of Christian Temple are leading us on, and a brighter and better day dawns for the Christian Church, which is making an effort to serve not only the community and State and the nation, but all the world, in carrying the message of religious liberty to all peoples.

J. O. Atkinson.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH OUR OWN HISTORY AND LITERATURE.

There is little or no excuse for young ministers and officers in the Church and others who care for it, not being acquainted with the history, principles, position and polity of the Christian Church. The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, has been rendering invaluable assistance along this line to all who care to acquaint themselves with these fundamental and worth-while things in the Christian Church. Here are booklets containing from thirty to sixty pages, are beautifully printed and neatly bound for free distribution, and which can be had for the asking. Here is a list of the subjects:

"The Origin and Principles of the Christians."

"Rev. James O'Kelly—A Champion of Religious Liberty."

"Rev. Abner Jones—The Man Who Believed and Served."

"Rev. Barton Warren Stone—The Man Who Studied and Taught."

"Elias Smith—Reformer, Preacher, Journalist, Doctor."

"Horace Mann—Christian Statesman and Educator."

"Early Women of the Christian Church—Heroines All."

"The Church that Jesus is Building, and the Churches that Men are Organizing."

"The Christian Church at its Present Task."

In my work as mission secretary, I have found these books invaluable, and they have done much in many quarters to make our position and history known. They are a valuable contribution to any Christian's library, and their reading certainly will give infinite help to those who wish to understand the history and principles of the Christian Church.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

I wish that every subscriber to Men and Millions Fund could have been present last Sunday at the opening of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. It marked a new era in the history of the Christian denomination, and was a great day for Christianity in Norfolk and in the State of Virginia. This is a magnificent Church plant with a great membership of 987. The Southern Mission Board supported this work from the beginning of Third Church. We had faith in the people at this point, but as great faith in the membership of the Christian Church. The local Church has surpassed our greatest expectations in loyalty, sacrifice and gifts, and I believe that the entire denomination will not disappoint us, but will pay their pledges. Will our ministers, captains and leaders tell the people about Men and Millions?

J. E. West,
Chairman.

GENERAL CONVENTION FINANCES.

The occasion for this article is the suggestion of a budget system of financing the various enterprises of the General Convention. My friend and co-laborer, Dr. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, N. C., has suggested a very beautiful, elaborate budget system. He asks his brethren to consider this plan and express their opinion of it. I have, in part, expressed my opinion in the words "beautiful, elaborate" just a moment ago. But, somehow, the plan, in all its details, does not get my entire approval. It may be that the very elaborateness of it, the complexity and costliness of the machinery and its operation may not appeal to me. And then, it may be that the beautiful, elaborate plan of Church administration devised by experts in the "Interchurch World Movement," which plan in operation shone for a little time like a brilliant meteor in the sky, then paled and went out into blank darkness, plunging many denominations into deep debt—it may be that this recent experience in the religious world makes me a bit fearful of the consequences of so elaborate, beautiful a plan as my good brother, Dr. Harper, has proposed.

A denominational plan of finances may be effectually evolved from the local unit, i. e., the local Church with almost certain effectiveness, but rarely, if ever, can such plan be devolved downwards from the comprehensive unit, such as the General Convention, to the local Church. This is certainly true in a denomination with a congregational form of government, such as that of the Christian Church. It appears to me, therefore, that the most effective way of mobilizing the highest possible percentage of the denomination's financial strength is not by resolutions in big representative bodies, but by the method of individual appeal. The most satisfactory method of making this individual appeal, so far as I am aware, is by the "every-member canvass."

For an illustration of the financial plan I am thinking of, let us consider a supposed session of the General Convention of the Christian Church. Suppose that just before the session of the Convention, the General Board thereof, in which Board are representatives from all departments of the Convention—mission, publication, education, and so forth. Suppose that the financial needs of the various Convention enterprises for the ensuing Convention period are laid before this Board and an estimate of the amount of money that will be needed to take care of these enterprises of the Convention during the next Convention period, say four years. Now, should this General Board's estimate be submitted to the Convention in session, that estimate would be the proposed budget of the Convention. The Convention considers it and adopts it, say either with or without amendment. The adopted amount is the Convention budget for the next four years. Now, the question is: How can the Convention best raise the sum of money the budget calls for—one-fourth of the amount in each of the four years?

I propose the following: Divide the budget among the several regional Conventions in such proportion as the money raised by each of these regional Conventions for the general enterprises of the Convention, during the last five years, would seem to indicate to be just, and request each regional Convention to report as early as possible its response to such request, it being understood that a regional Convention might raise or lower the amount asked of it to be raised.

In turn, the regional Convention would apportion out to the Conferences therein whatever part of the Convention general budget it had agreed to raise, the Conferences passing upon the amounts they are asked, respectively, to raise in the same manner as the regional Convention had done. The Conferences would each take up its specific amount, adjust this amount, if adjustment were found necessary, pass the allotments to the local Churches for consideration and adoption, in the same manner as in the larger groups, and for raising from the individual members by the "every-member canvass" or by whatever method the local congregation could most effectually use.

In all this matter of apportioning the General Convention budget to constituent parts down to and including the individual member of the local Church, the principle of approval of the sum, or amount, asked for in each case should be accorded to the organization or to the individual in all cases. In some cases the "every-member canvass" will yield less than the amount the local Church decides it can raise for the general budget, and in other cases it will yield more.

As soon as the "every-member canvass" is completed in any given local Church, the result should be sent back through the same channel as the descent of the allotments came down from the General Convention to the local Church, so that the secretary, or whoever the General Convention should put in charge of the budget, would have a minimum of details in his office on account thereof. Too, the actual amounts raised should pass up through the regularly constituted financial channels of the denomination until they should come into the General Convention treasury.

The operation of such a financial plan as has been briefly outlined above would call for the meeting of each regional Convention, say within thirty days after the close of the General Convention, and of each Conference within a regional Convention as soon as possible after the session of the parent regional Convention.

I am of opinion that it would take several months, necessarily, for such a system to filter down from the General Convention to the individual Church member and for the results of the "every-member canvass" to get back to General Convention officials. Then, after the returns were all in, no General Convention Board would be safe in planning to spend as much money in its respective Church enterprise as the returns would seem to warrant—all personal pledges are not paid, neither is one hundred per cent of taxes levied by your municipality or your county paid even with the power of the law at the back of the tax collector. I think of no financial Church plan whereby the budget will work entirely satisfactorily except with a full treasury, i. e., for the expenses of one year to be paid out of what was paid into the treasury the previous year.

The greatest difficulty any plan of financing Church enterprises one can think of is the difficulty of reaching every member of every local Church with an intelligent appeal to aid in financing the general, as well as the local, interests of the kingdom. Many of our Churches have not tried the "every-member canvass," and would find it difficult, perhaps, to break away from accustomed methods of raising Church money. Then, there are, perhaps, other Churches that have tried the "every-member canvass" plan and have failed with it. The best methods men can devise are sometimes failures. It may be such failures are to teach us that there is not so much in the manner or method in which we do the work of life as in the spirit and willingness with which we do it. But whatever the manner of approach, approach and appeal should be made to every member of your Church to do his bit.

Whatever the method the General Convention may adopt, it is, in all probability, wise for the General Board to direct its efforts towards unity of financial method throughout the Convention and to seek the Convention's approval of the wisest method the Board is able to evolve.

W. P. LAWRENCE.

Elon College, N. C.

[NOTE.—A careful reading of the plan proposed by me will show that Dr. Lawrence's plan is almost the same, minus the officials to administer the plan, and also perhaps minus the educational features.—EDITOR PRO TEM.]

JOHN R. MOTT STREET IN SALONICA.

A cable dispatch from Salonica, Greece, tells of the extraordinary honors conferred upon Dr. John R. Mott and the Y. M. C. A. of America by the city council and people, the governor-general of the province, and the government of Greece itself, in connection with the laying of the corner-stone of a modern Y. M. C. A. building in that city. This building will stand at the intersection of two city thoroughfares, and as a perpetual mark of distinction one of them has been named "Y. M. C. A. Avenue," and the other "John R. Mott Street." On Dr. Mott's arrival, the newspapers acclaimed him as "the world's most useful citizen," and gave many columns to comment upon his work and the movement he represents. He was made an honorary citizen of the ancient city, the Thessalonica of Paul's day and present metropolis of Macedonia, with a population of upward of 300,000. He was the guest of the governor-general at his palace, and at a state dinner was decorated, by direction of the national government, with the Order of the Holy Saviour. The metropolitan of the Greek Orthodox Church blessed the corner-stone. At his invitation, Dr. Mott spoke on the aims and ideals of the association at a great meeting in the cathedral.

This is the outcome of a remarkable combination of welfare and relief work done in Salonica under the direction of the American "Y" secretary there—Ulius L. Amoss, formerly of Baltimore. This service included the trying period when the hordes of refugees from Anatolia and Thrace poured into Salonica and Northern Greece after the recapture of Smyrna by the Turks. Mr. Amoss kept in view through it all the goal to establish the association work on the basis familiar to the young men and boys of American communities. He was aided by military and civilian officers, leading citizens and the people at large, so that the work is well established in popular favor. The site for the new building was provided by the municipality. A conditional gift of $50,000 was arranged through the international committee, dependent on the raising of the balance by the Greek committee. The Prime Minister of Greece stated in a recent letter: "The American Y. M. C. A. has taught the people of Greece to trust its leadership and program. Our country needs this Christian brotherhood for its moral strengthening." Mr. Amoss has been awarded by royal decree the highest national decoration of Greece, and Mrs. Amoss the highest military cross, in recognition of their aid in relief work. The development of this Christian instituton for young men and boys, with all it means to the future of Greece, is but another illustration of the far-reaching results of the war welfare service of the American Y. M. C. A. which planted its principles deeply and permanently in all parts of Europe and the Near East.

Two excellent young men will graduate from the Yale Divinity School in June. They are Rev. Selden Humphrey and Rev. Raymond G. Clark. Any Church desiring their services should address them at Yale Station, New Haven, Conn.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.
MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods, Wadley, Ala., August 11 to 18.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 6, 1924.

Topic: "The Kingdom Rent Asunder."

Lesson: 1 Kings 12:1-16:28.

Devotional Reading: Psalms 131 and 133.

Golden Text: "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."—Prov. 16:18.

The worm will turn. Tyranny, injustice, exploitation, and cruelty may hold sway for a while, perhaps even for years, but the common people will have their innings at last. And when they do assert their rights, they will do it in a way that leaves no doubt as to the ultimate triumph of their cause. History is replete with instances of this truth. The revolt of the common people in England and the Magna Charta, the French Revolution and the establishment of the republic, the Revolutionary War and the establishment of our own liberty, and the Sunday School Lesson today illustrates what I mean.

We have seen that, though Solomon's reign was one of outward show and display, it was one of inward disintegration. The seeds of its dissolution had already been planted and had grown rapidly during his reign, especially during the closing years, and it was only a matter of time until his successors should reap from the whirlwind what he had sown to the wind. The harvest begins with today's lesson and continues until the final destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the Jews as a political and national factor. Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

When Solomon died, his son Rehoboam fell heir to the throne. But before his sovereignty could be established, the men of Israel asked (it would seem that they went about it in the right way) that he modify to some extent his father's hard policy. They had been impressed into labor, they had been taxed heavily, they had had no redress for their wrongs, and accordingly they waited upon the young king with a request that he be more humane and reasonable. They were led by Jereboam, who during Solomon's reign had attracted Solomon's attention by his industry and enthusiasm, but who had been caused to flee to Egypt in order to escape the king's wrath when he became suspicious that Jereboam had designs against the throne. At Solomon's death, Jereboam had returned to Israel and had espoused the cause of his oppressed countrymen.

Rehoboam had an opportunity to preserve the kingdom which had been established by David, even though it had begun to disintegrate under Solomon, had he been discreet and humane. But he rejected the counsel of the older men, who counseled moderation, and accepted the counsel of the younger men, who counseled a desperately hard policy. The men from the ten tribes became incensed, and under the leadership of Jereboam they revolted and established their own kingdom. Thus was fulfilled the prophecy of Ahijah, who had told Jereboam by a symbolic act that he should have ten tribes, and thus was begun the line of cleaverage between the two factions that resulted in wars and rumors of wars until the final destruction of both nations as nations.

The new kingdoms had eventful and disastrous careers. The history of each one is a recital of revolutions, assassinations, wars, idolatry, tyranny, immorality, invasions, and oppressions. The only redeeming feature about the whole thing is the fact that the Lord had always "His remnant," and that He was working out through all these misfortunes and catastrophes His own good purposes. The story is full of lessons for us and for today.

1. He that soweth to the wind shall reap of the whirlwind.
2. Always be ready to listen to the advice of older and wiser people.
3. Any nation cannot endure unless it is founded upon justice and righteousness.
4. A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievious words stir up anger.
5. God does not compel men to work out His purposes, but He works out His purposes through men just the same.
6. The way of force will never settle anything right.
7. Always be suspicious of advice that suits you. Be sure that it is right, rather than that it is what you want.
8. The divine right of the people, and not the divine right of the king is the ultimate principle of life.
9. Power always brings a subtle temptation to abuse.
10. Some people cannot stand a little prosperity.
11. A cause, however just, cannot succeed if principles of righteousness and justice are violated.
12. The man of God must often rebuke those in high places.
13. God has a way of making good His word, both promises and warnings.
14. Those who would lead the people must be of the people, and share the people's life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

April 6, 1924.

Topic: In His Steps. IV. How Jesus Loved and Served.

Lesson: John 11:3-5; Mark 10:42-45. (Consecration meeting.)

Service was one of the master motives of Jesus' life. He seemed to have a passion for helping folks, for doing something for others. On one occasion his friends were so surprised to see a man so eager to help, so reckless in his efforts to pour out his life for others, that they thought he was "beside himself." And when Peter wanted to sum up in a few words a biographical sketch of the Master, he said "He went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." And he added, "for God was with Him." In other words, what impressed Peter most was the Master's spirit of service. And he felt that the Master did this service because God was with Him. It might be added that even when Jesus withdrew from the multitudes that followed Him, it was only to the end that by communion with God He might renew His spirit and quicken His power, and thus come back to the people the better able to minister to their needs. Jesus was Master. But He was pre-eminently Servant. He said so Himself. Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many.

How account for this passion for service? Why did Jesus serve? The answer is not hard to find. It was because Jesus loved that He served. He loved God supremely. His greatest joy was to do the Father's will. And because He loved God, He wanted to serve God. But He also loved His fellow-man. I have been reading the gospels as a whole recently, and time and again I find the expression, "He looked with compassion on them," or words to that effect. Jesus loved men supremely, and because He did love them He wanted to serve them. In fact, Jesus seems to testify to the fact that the best way we can serve God is to serve God's children, to be kind toward, and to do something for, one of God's and all of God's children. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me." "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

How Jesus Loved.

1. Jesus loved comprehensively. He loved all men. There was no respect of persons with Him. It made no difference whether a person was rich or poor, learned or ignorant, good or bad, leader or outcast, sick or well—Jesus loved him. He loved even His enemies. Furthermore, Jesus loved the whole world. His great desire was that all men might know Him, whom to know aright was life eternal, and He sent His disciples into all the world in order that men might know of His love. Jesus loved all men of all time.

2. Jesus loved deeply. In spite of the fact that His love was as broad as the world, it was as deep as the sea. It was no superficial sentiment; it was an intense passion. Greater love hath no man than this: that a man will lay down his life for his friends.

3. Jesus loved eternally. "Having loved His own, He loved them to the end," said John. Jesus' love was not simply a fair-weather love. It was a love that endured even unto the end. We may be sure that He loves us today and will always love us, no matter who we are or what we are, or where we are. It is because He loves us so much that He hates sin so much.

4. Jesus loved sacrificially. "Even Christ pleased not Himself." Paul said: "The Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

5. Patiently. "Love suffers long and is kind." It "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." And Jesus never gave up those whom He loved. In spite of the fact that His disciples were hard of heart and slow of understanding, He was patient. Is there not a lesson here for us?

How Jesus Served.

1. Humbly. Read the 13th chapter of John (vs. 1-20), and see how humbly Jesus served. Read what Jesus says in the Sermon on the Mount about how we are to give our alms, and to do our service.

2. Incessantly. As I have said above, Jesus was always looking for an opportunity to do something for some one else.

3. Lovingly. There was always the touch of love about everything that the Master did. He did not serve men because He thought it was a stern, formal duty; He served them because He loved them.

4. Unobtrusively. He never thrust Himself upon other people. But He was always ready to help. It is as true today.

A Few Questions.

What was the spirit of Jesus' service?
How can we serve Christ today?
What must we do if our service is to be acceptable to Christ?
How can we show our love (a) at home? (b) at school? (c) at work? (d) in our life-work?
What is the relation between real service and love?
How can we prepare ourselves for better service?
What are some of the rewards of service for the Master?

OPENING FOUNDER'S WEEK CONFERENCE AT MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

President James M. Gray said that the text from the Bible suspended across the platform expressed the spirit in which the conference was called—"Wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable" (James 3:17).

"The Moody Bible Institute," he said, "is always peaceable. It never enters into controversy for controversy's sake. It sympathizes with the doctrines classed as fundamentalism, but, as its work is that of an educational institution simply, it has no official connection with the fundamentals' movement as such. Fundamentalism is only another term for the evangelical faith of all the centuries as expressed in the historic creeds of the Church.

"D. L. Moody, the founder of the institute, stood for that faith in its purity. He was a messenger of peace, but he knew that there could be no peace where the truth of God, which is the truth of the Bible, is minimized, denied or ignored.

"It has been said recently by the advocates of modernism, so-called, that if D. L. Moody were now living he would be on the side of liberal theology, and opposed to what he formerly believed and taught; but the extracts from his sermons which adorn these walls are the best answer we can give to so serious a reflection upon his honored name.

"Some of the extracts are: 'You would have a queer kind of Bible if everybody cut out what he wanted to.' 'Souls are always saved in the Church where the blood of Christ is preached.' 'A usurper has got this world now, but Christ will have it soon.' 'It is easier to believe that man was made after the image of God than that he is the offspring of a monkey.' 'A man who has broken away from the great fundamentals is like a blasted tree in the desert.' These words express the platform of D. L. Moody, and they likewise express the platform of this 'Founder's Week Conference.' "

"Modern man's antagonism to the supernatural in general and to Christian moracles in particular is due to intellectual, moral and emotional shallowness that has developed in our time," according to Rev. Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, pastor of the Central Methodist Episcipal Church, Bridgeton, N. J., in an address on "The Christ of the Ages" at the founder's week conference in Moody Bible Institute.

"The most modern of so-called 'modern men' are all painfully objective," he said, "and objectivity is only another name for shallowness. They are men inflamed by their heart's natural pride to impatience and contempt for all that differs from their views. Unbelief is always proud and shallow, whether it is the deism of Thomas Paine, the rationalism of Rimarus and Strauss, or the naturalism of the twentieth century.

"Supernaturalness is the secret of Christ's abiding supremacy through the ages. Man is a limited being, and when he can forget his pride of self-sufficiency long enough to realize his needs, he will admit his supreme thirst and greatest longing is for a touch of the transcendent and the supernatural to save him from futility.

"What more pathetic story in history than man's fruitless quest for truth. The quest still fails. Modern science is discovering new problems faster than it is solving old ones. The frantic devotion with which evolution is held by many today is a witness not to the strength of the scientific evidence for it so much as to the despairing realization settling down that without it there is no prospect of discovering any naturalistic explanation of the origin of the universe. By his intellect alone, man has not and cannot find the truth. Mysteries as incomprehensible as the virgin birth and resurrection are everywhere. The intellect alone is not capable of discovering final truth. Scienc is the quest by accumulation, comparison and classification of experiences. Philosophy is the quest of truth by analysis of mental intuitions. Religion is the quest of truth by faith in the longings of the soul. Beyond all science and philosophy is an abyss of reality where faith alone can save and where even faith must feel its way.

"Men who really live are always seeking for some touch of the supernatural to save them from futility. 'Modern man' may take offense at the supernatural and deny it, but the heart of man instinctively cries for it. In spite of ourselves, when the hour of affliction comes and limitation and futility shut us in, we turn to the supernatural as a tred child turns to the bosom of its mother. All religion, whether it is the lowest superstition or noblest faith, is but man's reach for the supernatural. Those who live in the vanity of sense and blindness of intellectual pride and shallowness of self-sufficiency may for a time be unconscious of their utter need, but it will force its way to recognition. Men must find the supernatural or give way to despair.

"The modernists tell us the virgin birth, the resurrection and deeds of power that lie between must be repudiated; that modern mind finds them stumbling-blocks to faith; that they are incredible. We ask what is behind this assertion?

"The answer doubtless will be forthcoming that modern science makes the whole idea of the supernatural untenable. But this answer will fail for two reasons. First, true science deals only with facts, and never talks about possibilities; second, all science and all possibilities of discovering truth rest down upon the recognition of human freedom, and freedom or personality in man transcends the little order of naturalism and is as supernatural as the omnipotence of God. A world of mechanical determinism can never be a world of truth. Naturalism with its denial of the supernatural and of all personality, is fatal not only to all religion, but to all truth, even including science itself.

"The age-long appeal of Jesus to the hearts of men is just this fact of his supernaturalism. After all, the question of the credibility of the supernatural is moral, rather than scientific. The fundamental law of the universe is the character of God, not the order of the spheres. The moral sublimity of the gospel record of the virgin birth, in contrast with the utter coarseness of pagan myths as to the supernatural births of their heroes, is in itself a sufficient reason why sensitive souls and earnest minds will keep the two forever wide apart. We need a new and deeper attitude toward the supernatural. Man must have the supernatural. He always has had it. He always will have it. When men lose faith in the moral supernatural of Jesus, some degraded non-moral supernatural will take its place. Where faith declines, superstition was always, and always will increase.

"It is time to ring down the curtain on the dark, cheerless rationalism of much current thinking. Science has its great, but limited sphere. Beyond it is philosophy, and beyond philosophy is faith. He who is wise enough to follow truth with all his powers, rather than with reason alone, will know how to find room for the supernatural truth in history and life, and how to separate the true supernatural from the false by the use of the ordinary canons of history united to the extraordinary canons of the soul."

In defense of the virgin birth at founder's week conference at the Moody Bible Institute, Rev. Alexander Sprunt, of Charleston, S. C., moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, quoted a unique statement made in the twelfth century by Anselm, the Archbishop of Canterbury. It was this:

"God can form man in four ways—from a man and woman, as constant custom shows; from neither man nor woman, as Adam; from a man without a woman, as Eve; and from a woman without a man, as the Son of God."

"I have also read," he continued, "these words credited to Ignatius, a companion of the apostle John: 'Stop your ears when any one speaks to you at variance with the truth that Jesus Christ was conceived by the Virgin Mary, of the seed of David, but by the Holy Ghost.' Isaiah tells us: 'Therefore, the Lord Himself shall give you a sign. Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call Him Immanuel.' Matthew and Luke both tell us the Virgin Mary did bring forth a son and his name was Immanuel. They believe it, and so do we." J. H.

(To be Continued.)

The Christian Evangelist has an article on "The Third-Degree Temptation," in which he says: "The recent revelations of political corruption at Washington have caused deep national humiliation. Men who hitherto enjoyed the fullest confidence of their associates have fallen into a welter of scandal and shame. With the details of this sordid business, we are not concerned here. They may be read in the daily papers, if any one has the heart to follow the nauseating narrative. It is the old, old story of yielding to the third-degree temptation of the devil, the promise of wealth, glory and ease for the surrender of honor, loyalty and righteousness. It is a very dark picture, but there is encouragement in the fact that it has aroused moral indignation all over the land. However, there must be something more than feeling aroused by the shocking revelations."

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. Holland,
L. E. Smith,
I. W. Johnson,
Executive Board

January 31, 1924.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE NEED OF A QUIET PRAYER HOUR.

"Be still and know that I am God."—Psa. 46:10.

There are two great realities, viz: life and God. It appears that the majority of folks exclude the fact of God from their lives; and as for their life, they just drift. They may sometimes stop and take a bit of inventory, but they do not understand their own hearts, they witness the suffering of humanity, they are conscious of unremedied sin, they are impotent themselves, and therefore they just fall into doubt and drift. As for God, they have had moments of inspiration, and, though struggling for a living, they have, in a way, been tempted and have fought against weakness and circumstances. God did not seem to help them, and, wondering if He cared, they slipped away. A fellow said one day: "When you get down to the bottom, God does seem to leave you." Are we not to blame for this?

Isn't it true that we are spending our days anxiously, hurriedly, feverishly, nervously, panicky, frenziedly, and we never have time for serious thought, much less for a constructive policy for the upbuilding of character? The streets of the city are in such a rush that one dares not look up. Our business keeps us so on the go that we cannot see well nor act wisely. Can we see God this way? God cannot be seen in a hurry. We have to tarry for the blessing. God comes to view after preparation and waiting for Him. May these meditations each day help somebody to be quiet and hear and know God.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who dost desire that we be happy and conquerers of ourselves, help us to tarry long enough each day to pray and know Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WARNINGS ON THE ROAD OF SUCCESS.

"Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory."—Phil. 2:3.

Do not triumph too much in thy successes. It is dangercus. How? If it induces satisfaction and contentment; if it inclines to rest and ease from the journey before the hill has been mounted; if it causes loss or ardor and slackens the speed; if it "pats you on the back" too soon and dims the eyes to the lure of the excellent—it is dangerous.

The tendency of triumph is moral satisfaction. It views self rather complacently; it compares self with the less fortunate; it prompts boastfulness and parades virtue. Warning! Look out! These ways lead to downfall. John said: "If I honor myself, my honor is nothing" (Jno. 8:54). Paul said: "For if a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself" (Gal. 6:3).

Remember the Pharasee praying on the street corner and the publican down in the dust crying: "Lord, have mercy upon me, a sinner." Remember the rich man and Lazarus. These men were under the tyrany of success. Their end is inevitable to any who parade their virtues. Paul, who had his triumphs, said: "I will forget the past and pass on."

Prayer.—O Lord, help us not to relax our efforts to serve Thee with our whole mind, soul and strength, but to reach out before us and to move from grace to grace, strength to strength, and glory to glory. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SENTENCES ON JUSTIFICATION.

1. For this is the will of my Father, that every one that beholdeth the Son, and believeth on Him, shall have eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. (Jno. 6:40.)

2. Repent ye, believe in the gospel (Mark 1:15). And he said unto her, thy sins are forgiven. Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace. (Luke 7:50.)

3. Every one that believeth on Him shall receive remission of sins. (Acts 10:43.)

4. As many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become the children of God. (Jno. 1:2.)

5. I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me may not abide in darkness. (Jno. 12:46.)

6. He that heareth my word cometh not into judgment, but hath passed out of death into life (Jno. 5:24). For the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth (Rom. 1:16). He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved (Mk. 16:16).

7. If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved (Rom. 10:8-10).

8. A man is not justified by works of law, but through faith in Jesus Christ (Gal. 2:16).

9. Cursed is every one who continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law, to do them (Gal. 3:10).

10. Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God (1 Jno. 5:1). Whosoever is born of God overcometh the world (1 Jno. 5:4).

11. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not reckon sin (Rom. 4:8).

Prayer.—Still sweeter, Lord, is Thy grace as we contemplate Thy love. Abide with us this day and turn Thy light upon every unconsecrated corner of our hearts and make us every whit thine. In Jesus' name, we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WINNING THE CROWN.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation."—James 1:12-13.

At one of the pagan festivals in ancient Gaul, a young Christian refused to do obeisance to the image of the goddess Cybele as it was borne along the streets. He was seized and dragged before the tribunal of the emperor, accused of sedition and sentenced to death. But, owing to his rank, he was offered life on condition that he cast a wreath into the lap of Cybele. His answer was "Christianus sum." These were portentous words in those days: "I am a Christian!" He was led outside the walls to the place of execution.

As he walked, guarded by lictors with the fatal axe, a cry was heard from above the gate, "My son, Symphorian!" It was his mother; and they said, "Surely her appeal will lead him to recant and live." But it was with no voice of weakness that the mother called, "My son, my only son Symphorian, be loyal to thy faith! They cannot take thy life, but only change it for a better. Be thou faithful unto death this day, and earn the crown of everlasting life!"

Brave words they were and worthy of the time when men counted honor better than life.

Our Lord wants men and women to serve Him in these days also. Men not weaklings; men made in God's likeness, with faces uplifted to His throne, obedient to His behest and ready at call to live or die for Him.—Rev. David James Burrell.

Prayer.—O God, the hearer and answerer of prayer, suffer Thy children to come to Thee for strength, to be loyal to Thee under all circumstances, and to be every whit a Christian. Preserve our dear ones from evil, and gather us into Thy home at last. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE HAPPY SOUL.

"'Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:2-6.

Here we have an unerring guide to Jesus' standards of value with reference to human happiness. With swift, sure strokes, He paints a series of portraits and virtually says, "Of all mortals, these are truly the happiest." Observe there is not one rich or popular or powerful person among them. That is strange. It contradicts all our notions of happiness. But happiness is a deeper word than we imagine. Jesus is thinking of the permanently happy, of those whose good fortune does not fluctuate with the price of coal or sugar, or the value of marks or francs. He is thinking of the abiding satisfactions of life.

First among them He names poverty of spirit. Let us not imagine for a moment that He means what we commonly call "poor-sporitedness." Nor does He mean timidity, false modesty, the shrinking, deprecatory, apologetic spirit. Rather, He has in mind simplicity of soul, child-like content with common things, faithful dependence upon God for help. If any man on earth is to be envied it is the man who takes this view of things, who rids himself of self-assertion and arrogance, and thinks of himself as a little child in the Heavenly Father's care. It is desirable that we "serve the Lord with gladness and enter into His courts with thanksgiving." He whose life is hid with Christ in God well understands the psalmist's testimony: "Then was my mouth filled with laughter and my tongue with singing."—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SATURDAY.

CONVERTING THE NATION.

"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 18:3.

After nineteen centuries of the Christian dispensation, we are still deficient in the things that satisfy the soul; we are still longing for reform and looking for a new age. Forces inexpressibly wicked flaunt their deadly work in our faces. After the war we expected something better, but, as far as we can see, it did not come. The League of Nations was a failure, and we are still looking for something better.

What is the trouble? It is hard to say. But this is apparent: There has been no national conversion. We have had a baptism without first principles. There are two conditions in salvation, viz: conversion and becoming like a child. The same applies to a nation. The salvation of any nation cannot be had through the salvation of a few, but the nation itself must be converted and be saved. Christ is in the individual as a leaven in the lump, but He is not reigning in the affairs of the nation. This must be, but it will be only by repentance and becoming like an humble, loving, obedient child.

Prayer.—Father, Thou who dost call us according to Thy purpose, and who art able to save us without spot, help us to come to Thee always in a way that shall be acceptable to Thee. Baptize us, and all the people, and the nation, and the nations with conversion and Thy Holy Spirit. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

If the Sabbath was made for man, it must have been because he needed it as a permanent blessing. Let us think of it in this light and apply it to our daily experiences. When we do so, all argument is dismissed. If we realize that in the Lord's Day we have all that frees the soul from earthly trammel and establishes our affinity with God, what does the argument of others amount to or matter? We can observe it as such without reference to their prejudices or practices and without involving ourselves in their mistakes.

The question is this: Do I use for my own benefit and for the benefit of those around me the Sabbath which was made for me and which His Church has asosciated forever with the crowning fact of His religion, the resurrection of the dead?

Prayer.—Our Father, this is a day of light; let there be light today. This is a day of rest; renew our failing strength, our weary brains, our troubled hearts and shed Thou Thy refreshing upon us. This is a day of peace; fill Thou our spirits with Thy peace, may all discords cease, and the waves of strife be still. This is Thy day; send forth Thy quickening breath and wake up dead souls to Thy love and praise. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FROM PALM STREET CHURCH.

On Sunday morning, March 2nd, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our enthusiastic secretary of missions; Mr. Charles D. Johnston, efficient superintendent of the Orphanage, and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, former pastor of Palm Street, were welcome visitors at Palm Street Church, Greensboro.

Mr. Johnston presented some live facts and interesting stories in connection with the work at the Orphanage, which were keenly enjoyed by the Sunday School, which is devoting its second Sunday's offering to Bro. Johnston's work.

Dr. Atkinson preached for us, and warmed our hearts with an inspirational message, based on John 3:16. The subject was "Organized Love."

Bro. G. C. Crutchfield sat in his accustomed place in the choir, and said he "felt perfectly at home again," and he verily looked it.

Brethren, come again. The latch-string is always on the outside of the door. H. B. Hall.

ELON NOTES.

Revival services were conducted by Elon College Christian Church from March 9th to March 14th, inclusive. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., did the preaching and led in the work. Mr. O. C. Johnson, a college student, conducted the singing. Solos, duets, and quartets were furnished by the college students and faculty. Miss Berkley and other members of the musical faculty did the playing. Services were held morning and night, and a Christian Workers' Conference in the afternoon. A special service for the public school students was held on Thursday afternoon. Brother Hardcastle's sermons were brief, pointed and spiritual. The singing was fine. The interest and attention were excellent from the beginning. There were about sixty professions and a large number of reconsecrations. Thirty-six united with the Church, including two by letter and about a dozen more have signified their purpose to join next Sunday. This is said to be the largest number ever joining the Church here at one time. This is by far the best revival we have had here during the present pastorate of seven years, and among the most satisfactory in the writer's entire experience.

Thirty of these members received the ordinance of baptism at the hands of the pastor, six having been previously baptized. N. G. Newman.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our Churches in the Southern Christian Convention have adopted the most excellent plan of making two special offerings for the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., each year on or near Thanksgiving Day, the other on or near Easter Sunday, and with the regular monthly offerings of the Sunday Schools and special offering we have been able to support the institution and make some permanent improvements to the plant. We want to call your attention to our special Easter offering. Easter Sunday will soon be here—it comes April 20th. I am hoping and praying that our people will make a liberal offering at that time. We depend largely upon the special Easter offering to carry us through the summer months when our income is low. We are now adding to our plant a shoe-repair shop and a poultry yard. We are also remodeling our old feed barn which we either had to remodel or tear down. We needed the room and thought it wise to remodel and put on a model roof. It takes money to build. It takes money to buy machinery.

I trust every pastor will see that each member of his Church gets a special Easter-offering envelope which we will furnish. One pastor told me he was going to see to it that each member of his Church got an envelope. Catch his spirit.

Chas. D. Johnston,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR MARCH 27, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$3,435.52
Children's Offerings.
Ray Welch		1.00
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North Carolina Conference:
Happy Home	$ 2.96
Auburn	4.50
Liberty, Vance	3.10
Damascus	1.67
Palm Street, Greensboro	10.88
Danville, Va.	4.70
Piney Plains	5.43
Reidsville	1.00
Bethel	1.50
Pleasant Union	7.00
		42.74
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Waverly	$ 15.00
South Norfolk	6.44
Bethlehem, Nansemond County	7.00
Damascus	3.25
Suffolk	25.00
Windsor	20.58
		77.27
Timber Ridge		3.00
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Pisgah	$ 1.82
Wadley	1.05
		2.87
Special Offerings.
Lawrence S. Holt, endowment	$150.00
J. L. Andrews	10.00
Rent	15.00
Elon Citizens' Bible Class	3.50
		278.50
Grand total		$3,740.90

Statistics show there is one officer for every eleven soldiers in the United States Army at present.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying something by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

THE MISSION BOARD,
Elon College, N. C.

Lieut.-Gov. J. E. West, Chairman.

J. O. Atkinson, Secretary.

TUCK.

Muriel Tuck, daughter of Brother and Sister Arthur Tuck, died at the home of her parents in Virgilina, Va., February 28, 1924, age four years eleven months and eighteen days. The funeral was conducted from the home on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. W. Fogleman, of the Baptist Church.

Muriel had never walked, but was gifted with a wonderfully brilliant mind and possessed a lovely disposition. No child in Virgilina was loved by everybody more than she. Her talent in music was wonderful. She delighted in attending Church and Sunday School, and to take a part in singing. All feel a personal loss because Muriel has been taken from us, and the hearts of all go out in sympathy to her parents in their deep sorrow. Brother and Sister Tuck are active, faithful workers in Union Christian Church and are excellent Christian people.

In my twenty years' experience in the ministry, it has not been my lot to witness a stronger evidence of the sustaining power of grace to enable people to be submissive to God's will, although it meant to them the loss here of that which was dearest to them.

C. E. NEWMAN.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. Marian Gay Clark, on February 14, 1924, God, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to take from the trials and pain of life our dear friend and member of the Ladies' Aid Society of Burton's Grove Christian Church. Marian was a good wife and mother, obedient to home and Church. We can't understand why one so useful should be taken in the bloom of life. But the Lord gave and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord in this hour of sorrow and bereavement. Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That the Ladies' Aid has lost a bright and cheerful member, and her home a good wife and mother.

Second, That, while home, Church and community mourns her death, we realize that there is a gain in that upper and better kingdom.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the records of the Ladies' Aid Society, a copy sent to the family, also a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. J. W. WHITE,
MRS. C. A. BRITTLE,
MRS. M. H. HARGRAVE,
Committee.

Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Without Plenty of Iron In Your Blood You Don't Get the Strength and Nourishment Out of the Food You Eat

When over-work, lack of sleep, improper food and impure air sap the iron from your blood and make you feel weak, nervous, irritable and out-of-sorts, it is important that you should at once put more iron into your blood. Without iron the blood loses the power to change food into living tissue and therefore nothing that you eat does you the proper amount of good because you don't get the full strength out of it. Your food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. Because of this steady starvation of the blood and nerves people often become weakened, tired-out, nervous and rundown and frequently develop all sorts of symptoms. But the moment organic iron—Nuxated Iron—is supplied a multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear in most cases, the flesh becomes firmer, the muscles get back their strength and the roses of health bloom in cheeks that were pale and sickly looking.

No matter what other so-called remedies you may have tried, if you are not strong, vigorous, hearty and well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next, take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. You can obtain Nuxated Iron from your druggist on the distinct understanding that if you are not fully satisfied your money will be refunded.

FOR GOOD HOME COOKING
—GO TO—
MRS. COOK'S CAFETERIA
805 East Grace Street.
Be sure to try her good Virginia Batter Bread.

BOILS Old Sores, Cuts and Burns have been healed since 1820 with
Gray's Ointment
Sold by all druggists. Write for sample to W. F. Gray & Co., 746 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THOROUGHBRED SEEDS
The Best By Test For Over Fifty Years
Write for our 100-page illustrated catalog free.
GEO. TAIT & SONS, Inc., Commercial Place, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

PARKER'S
HAIR BALSAM
REMOVES DANDRUFF
STOPS HAIR FALLING
Has been used with success for more than 40 years.
RESTORES COLOR AND BEAUTY TO GRAY AND FADED HAIR
60¢ & $1.00 at all druggists
HISCOX CHEMICAL WORKS
PATCHOGUE, N.Y.
When washing hair always use Floreston Shampoo

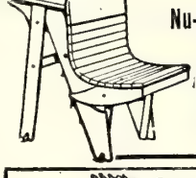
Get My New Buggy Catalog
Buy Direct from Factory
Save the Middleman's Profit
FREE BOOK describes my splendid Full Wrought Highland Hickory Buggies. Sold on 60 days Road Test. Money-back Guarantee. Write!
The D. T. Bohon Co.
60 Main Street
Harrodsburg, Ky.
LOW PRICES

FRECKLES
Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful, clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double-strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.



Nu-Idea School Desks
(Patent Applied for)
Thousands sold. Save one-third. Catalogue and prices on request.
Nu-Idea School Desk Co.
Darlington, S. C.

Something to Crow Over!
IDEAL POULTRY TABLETS
Contain:—Permanganate of Potash, Epsom Salts, Boric Acid and Sulphate of Iron. No mystery. No magic. A Sensible and Effective Remedy for Roup and other acute diseases. Helps chicks over their difficult period. Ask us for testimony of users. Consult any druggist as to the value of drugs mentioned. Sold by dealers, or 100 tablets postpaid fifty cents. Money back if dissatisfied.
Blackman Stock Remedy Co.
Chattanooga, Tennessee

The Modern Woman's Favorite Car

Chevrolet Utility Coupe appeals strongly to the bachelor maid or busy matron. Its graceful lines, fine finish, extra wide doors, big, cheerful windows, and deep upholstery meet her aesthetic requirements.

Its sturdy construction, economy, ease of operation, and roomy package compartment convince her of its practical value.

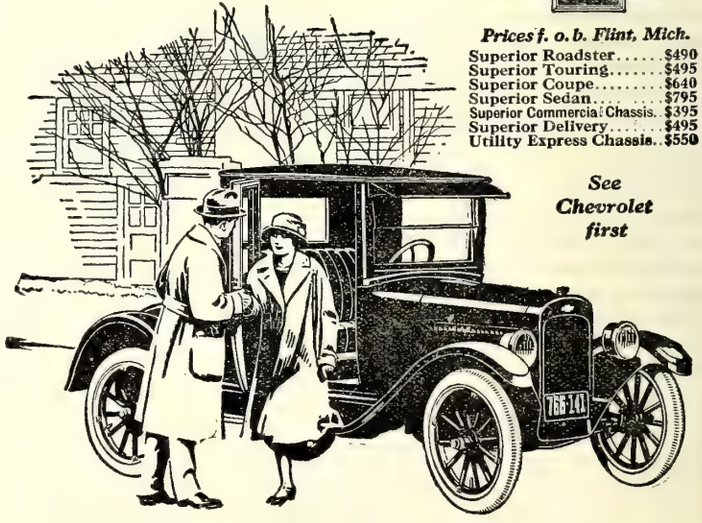
More and more women are becoming owners and drivers of their own transportation units.

For business, social, or marketing purposes, Chevrolet saves an immense amount of valuable time and conserves the energy of today's busy woman.

for Economical Transportation
CHEVROLET

Prices f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Superior Roadster	$490
Superior Touring	$495
Superior Coupe	$640
Superior Sedan	$795
Superior Commercial Chassis	$395
Superior Delivery	$495
Utility Express Chassis	$550

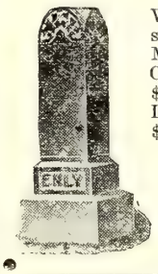


See Chevrolet first

Utility Coupé $640 f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

CHEVROLET MOTOR COMPANY
Division of General Motors Corporation
DETROIT, MICH.

$362.80 Commission on One Order



We offer a very attractive commission proposition to responsible men selling our line of guaranteed monuments, in Marble and Granite. On one deal our Mr. Fuller of North Carolina, made $362.80; Mr. Bryan of West Virginia, $206.25; Mr. Duncan, of Tennessee, $193.25; Mr. Willard, of Illinois, $131.25. We have many other agents making from $200.00 to $400.00 per month.

Our monuments are well finished. No trouble to sell. Write for full particulars and confidential contract.

National Marble & Granite Corporation
Dept. P., BALL GROUND, GA.

BRADY.

On Monday, March 3, 1924, after a brief illness, the sweet little spirit of Cletis Lee Brady, aged 11 months and 7 days, took its flight to the children's paradise, leaving his sad, fond parents, Mr. Shelton C. and Mrs. Lenora Brady, also many relatives and sorrowing friends to mourn their great loss.

On Wednesday, March 5th, the little tired body was laid to rest in the family plot in Green Hill Cemetery, Greensboro. The little mound was covered with beautiful flowers, placed by tender hands and loving hearts.

"Dearest Cletis, you have left us;
Left the ones who loved you well.
But some day we hope to meet you,
And together we shall dwell.

How we miss you, miss you,
More than tongue can tell;
Every day and hour that passes
Brings us nearer you to dwell.

Farewell, our darling baby,
Thy form lies cold and still;
Death has caused a vacant place
That this world can never fill."

H. B. HALL.

DEPOY.

Edith Rebeckah Depoy, of Linville, Va., died Monday, March 10, 1924, after an illness of only a few days. Her age was 8 years 5 months and 14 days. She was a very bright little girl. The funeral service was held in the Linville Christian Church Thursday, March 13th, and the body was buried in the cemetery of the Church. May our loving Heavenly Father console and strengthen the grief-stricken loved ones.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

Elon is Building for the Future

Library Building — Auditorium | Alamance Hall. (Administration Building.) | Religious Activities — Science Hall

(Two of these buildings are practically completed, and construction is progressing rapidly on the other three.)

A Denominational College is the Training School for Church Leaders.

Elon is striving to produce the future Leaders of the Church through its Departments of Bible, Religious Education, and Seminary Studies.

To this end, an entire building and a new Department of Christian Education are being added this next fall to the equipment for efficiently training Church Leaders for the future.

Build up Elon and build up your Church!

W. A. HARPER, W. W. STALEY, E. L. MOFFITT, W. S. LONG, J. G. TRUITT,
Committee on Education, Southern Christian Convention.

V. E. MAREAN
Pipe Organ Expert
TUNING
REPAIRING
REBUILDING
Motors Installed.
Yearly Contracts.
Phone Madison 5933-J.
P. O. Box 864, - Richmond, Va.

MAYO'S SEEDS
Send us only 10c and we will mail you postpaid one packet each of the following:
Early Scarlet Turnip Radish Seed,
White Spine Cucumber Seed,
Mayo's Blood Turnip Beet Seed,
Southern Giant Curled Mustard Seed,
Black Seeded Simpson Lettuce Seed,
Mayo's Special Mixture of Sweet Peas,
with our illustrated catalog of Seeds for the South.
Or we will be glad to mail you our catalog and price list of Farm Seeds free on request. 45th year in Seed business.
D. R. MAYO
KNOXVILLE :: :: TENNESSEE

GROW COTTON IN VIRGINIA
on the CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY
Where Boll Weevil is Unknown

Yields of a bale per acre on 50 acres grown last year.

Absence of boll weevil responsible for Virginia taking prize for highest cotton production per acre last year.

Land, with improvements, suitable for cotton and diversified crops, as low as $15.00 per acre; also large plantations, excellent for subdivision or colonization, in section where cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes and all trucks are being successfully grown. Convenient railway service to nearby markets and textile centers. Good roads, schools and churches.

For full information, address:
K. T. CRAWLEY, LAND AGENT
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY
Room 210 - - Richmond, Va.

TRAVEL INFORMATION
EVERYWHERE—ANYWHERE—ANY TIME
FARES—SCHEDULES—ITINERARIES—RESERVATIONS
LET US SOLVE YOUR TRAVEL PROBLEM
Apply to Local Agent, or Address
F. H. POSTON - - Division Passenger Agent
809 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom, as represented by the Christian Church.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D..Editor
P. J. KERNODLE....Managing Editor

Subscription Rates.

One Year $2.00
Six Months 1.00

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Entered at the post-office at Richmond, Va., as second-class matter.

Receipts: The change of label is your receipt for money paid. The label shows the date of expiration. Please renew at least two weeks in advance.

Change of Address: Give both old and new post-office when asking that your address be changed.

When subscriptions are made for friends, state whether paper is to be stopped at end of the year.

Remittances: Make all remittances to "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Notices: Obituary and Marriage Notices of less than one hundred words are published free of charge if received within thirty days from date of event; all over one hundred words, published at one cent a word.

Advertising Rates: "Want Ads," 2 cents a word an insertion. Display Rates quoted upon request.

Called Home

POWELL.

James W. Powell departed this life March 10, 1924. He was a deacon in Wake Chapel Church for many years and was one of the truest Christians I ever knew. His gift and power in prayer was unusual. Seldom ever did he offer public prayer but that his soul seemed to overflow, and others received the overflow. The Church will greatly miss this mighty man of prayer. Several children and grandchildren live to bless his memory; also an invalid wife, whose face so carries the sweetness of her love for Christ that it is a blessing and benediction to look upon.

The services were held at Wake Chapel, and the body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery to await the resurrection at our Lord's return.

May God's richest blessing rest on the remaining ones of the family and friends and raise up one to take his place.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

QUICKLY HEALS OLD SORES

Corona Wool Fat, a preparation extracted from the wool of sheep, is the world's greatest healing ointment. Quickly heals old sores and wounds of all kinds where everything else fails. Give it a trial. 8 oz. can 65c by mail. Money back if not pleased.

Corona Mfg. Company
Dept. 17 Kenton, Ohio

Something You Have Been Waiting For

Remington Portable Typewriter

—with Standard Keyboard and every other feature common to the larger machines. Case only four inches high. Price, with case, $60.

Send Your Order to
THE CHRISTIAN SUN
Richmond, Va.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

An Oxford Teachers' Bible has references and 300 pages of helps that are a mine of information to Bible students. The helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary. They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date. A few styles are listed here. Many others are described in our Bible catalogue, mailed upon request.

04403 [This size print] Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 6⅞ x 4¾ inches $3.60

0623x [Same Bible as 04403] Printed on Oxford India paper. Only 1 inch thick.....$6.00

04453 [This size print] French Morocco leather binding, overlapping covers, 7¼ x 5 in. $4.35

0773x [Same Bible as 04453] Printed on Oxford India paper. A remarkably thin and light Bible. (Only 1 inch thick) $7.65

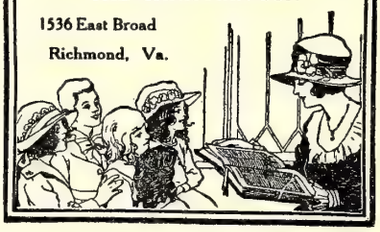
05453 [Same Bible as 04453] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $5.25

05453x [Same Bible as 0773x] With the words of Jesus Christ printed in red $8.35

04523 [This size print] A self-pronouncing Oxford Bible. Bound in French Morocco leather, overlapping covers, size 8½ x 5½ inches....$5.00

0923x [Same Bible as 04523] Printed on Oxford India paper, only 1⅛ inches thick....$9.65

ORDER FROM
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN"
1536 East Broad
Richmond, Va.



Money To Lend ON Improved Farms

Very favorable terms

Call or Write for Details

SOUTHERN BOND & MORTGAGE CO.

707 E. Main St. Richmond, Va.

Church Supplies

Books
Bibles
Blank Books
Communion Sets
Special Day Programs
Offering Envelopes
Offering Plates
Pledge Cards
Stationery

Church Supply House

Burlington - North Carolina

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

FOR

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LIBRARY

We need—

ATLASES
YEARBOOKS
DICTIONARIES (LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ENGLISH AND SPANISH)
SCIENCE BOOKS
AGRICULTURAL BOOKS
HOME ECONOMICS BOOKS
BOOKS OF MANUAL ARTS
WORKS OF STANDARD AMERICAN AND ENGLISH POETS
STANDARD FICTION
GENERAL LITERATURE BOOKS
BOOKS ON GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
HISTORIES
BIOGRAPHIES
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BOOKS
BIBLE COMMENTARIES
MODERN NOVELS

Subscriptions to magazines and periodicals will be appreciated. Send all books in care of

M. W. HOOK, President

Bethlehem College, - - Wadley, Ala.

Medical College of Virginia

Medicine Dentistry
Pharmacy Nursing

New Buildings. Well-equipped Laboratories, under the direction of full-time, competent teachers.

The Memorial Hospital, Dooley Hospital, St. Philip Hospital, are owned and controlled by the Medical College of Virginia, and offer every facility for thorough clinical teaching.

Staffs composed of the Faculty of the College. Additional clinical facilities are offered through other institutions in Richmond.

For full information and catalogue, address—

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY | IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY | IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXVI. | RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1924. | NUMBER 14.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

World's Largest Press.—

The New York World is installing a 200-ton duplex printing press in its pressroom. This is said to be the largest press ever made. May it be used as a power for good!

Revolutionary Event in Turkey.—

The separation of Church and State in Turkey will throw the Mohammedan religion upon its own resources. Not having the machinery of a State behind it, nor the sword in its hand, it will have to make its way henceforth by the power of its own deals and doctrines. Its real testing time has now come. Carlyle, who seems to have studied it deeply, called it "a bastard kind of Christianity." We could scarcely give it as high a place as that. But whether so or nit, has it real moral substance enough to win people today?—Exchange.

Textile Students Visit Cotton Plants.—

This week, twenty-one members of the senior textile class at North Carolina State College, accompanied by Prof. Thomas Nelson, head of the textile department, left for a tour of inspection of the cotton mills of North and South Carolina and Virginia. The trip is an annual feature, and forms a part of the training of the textile seniors. The party will be away from the college for a week.

Durham will be the first stop in the tour. After inspecting the Erwin Cotton Mills, the party will go on to Greensboro to visit the Proximity Manufacturing Company.

Not as Bad as Painted.—

Do not jump at the conclusion from reading newspapers that public men in Washington are all corrupt; that every stranger in your town is a bootlegger; that every business man is dishonest; that in every house on the street people make and drink liquor; that all the young people of today are incorrigible, and that the whole world is steeped in corruption and headed straight for perdition.

None of these things are true. Were it not presidential year, there would not be the sensations at Washington. Politics is at the bottom of many of these first-page stories. Thinking persons wish there was a presidential campaign every ten years instead of every four years. The whole thing is having an unwholesome influence on the public mind and is injurious.

But remember that the United States is the greatest, most powerful, most influential nation on the globe; that good men and women predominate; that the Churches and schools have not lost their influence, and that the people are growing better. Do not befoul your own country by joining the cry of the rabble that everything is going to the bow-wows.—Ex.

Life Savings Continue a Duty.—

The most pathetic sight in Germany is the aged couple who saved for years to provide for their old age, and now find their life savings wiped cut by the collapse of the mark's value.

But did it ever occur to you that the same thing on a smaller scale has happened right here in America?

Hundreds of thousands of old people thought they had saved enough to care for them in their old age. The rise in cost of living has reduced the buying power of their savings by 40 per cent.

As usual, it's a poor rule that won't work both ways. And 60 cents saved now will be worth about $1.00 later, not counting any increase by interest, provided the buying power of the dollar eventually returns to normal.

Whether the dollar will ever return to normal is debatable. Few economists expect any sudden return. But history has the reputation of always repeating. And history shows that prices travel in fifty-year cycles—roughly: up for twenty years, then down for thirty years, then up again, later down, and so on.

Lately, prices have been rising again, but they're still much lower than at the peak of the cost of living in 1920. Viewed as a long-range proposition, we may be on the down path again.

Twenty, or even thirty years, may pass before the cost of living gets back to its old-time level, supposing that it ever will. That's just about when old age will be creeping up to many of us. Regardless of how far the cost of living will finally drop, the dollar saved now will be worth much more later in buying power.

Religious Complexion of Congress.—

We have often wondered how much religious profession might be found in the legislative department of our national government. For this particular body of our fellow-countrymen we have a high respect. To be sure, they sometimes displease us, doing things with which we are not in accord. Now and then we are tempted to think that there are some queer citizens in the Senate, a few radicals and reactionaries who have missed their calling. But, on the whole, our national Congress is composed of men of earnest spirit and good judgment in whom the country takes a just pride.

The recent survey conducted by the board of temperance of the Methodist Episcopal Church has revealed some interesting facts. There are 435 members in the House of Representatives. Of this number, 373 are members of some denomination. The Senate has 96 members, and of this number 76 are professors of religion. Methodists lead the procession, with 96 in the House and 23 in the Senate. Next are the Episcopalians, with 56 in the House and 18 in the Senate. The Presbyterian family is represented by 73 members in House and Senate, while the Baptists have 48. There are 31 Congregationalists, 17 Disciples, 14 Lutherans, 3 Dutch Reformed, 3 Quakers, 1 United Brethren, 1 Mennonite. There are 43 Roman Catholics, 13 of whom are from New York State. Nine Jews are among our lawmakers; also 3 Mormons, 1 Universalist and 1 Christian Scientist.—United Presbyterian.

Agricultural Products in Virginia.—

Leave out all Virginia's stately history and her many priorities; leave out, for the moment, even her great manufacturing and mining productions, and consider only the products of her soil. These alone are worth talking about—always with decent and self-respecting restraint.

Consider, to be specific, the latest statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture as to the importance of Virginia as an agricultural State. Some of these statistics will shrprise those who have learned to think of Virginia in indnstrial terms.

Virginia is the largest producer of early potatoes in the Union. In 1923, her crop of 9,230,000 bushels constituted more than one-third of the total early crop produced in the country, and was valued at $14,214,000. Of what is classified as "commercial spinach," Virginia ships nearly one-half of the country's total output. From the limited area of the Norfolk section, the State shipped 43 per cent of the total number of cars shipped in the United States.

Virginia is the largest shipper of sweet potatoes in the United States, usually originating more than 30 per cent of the entire carlot movement in the country. In eleven of her southeastern counties, Virginia's peanut crop ranked second in the United States in 1923, reaching a production valued at $7,979,000. Virginia is the third largest producer of tobacco in the United States; growers in 1923 realized nearly $27,000,000 on this, the largest crop grown in the State.

Only the States of Washington and New York produce more apples than Virginia, which, in 1923, despite damage by frost, shipped more than 9,000 cars, valued at $5,735,000. No other State, strange as it may seem, produced more cotton per acre in 1923 than Virginia. Though grown only in twelve counties, Virginia's cotton crop was valued at $8,000,000. In truck crops, Virginia continues to be one of the leading producing States.

Spreading abroad this information is wholly legitimate, free from offense, tells the truth, and therefore is the only sort of "boosting" that is defensible and desirable.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dean A. L. Hook, of the college faculty, has recovered from his recent operation, and is again busy with the routine of his responsibilities.

Joe W. Stout & Co. are putting forth every available effort to complete the Whitley auditorium by commencement. We sincerely hope they may succeed in achieving their purpose.

Mr. F. F. Myrick, formerly professor in Elon, is now a full-fledged attorney at law, with offices in the Banner Building, Greensboro, N. C. We wish him well in his chosen vocation.

We understand that two young ladies who are to graduate from Elon this spring have offered themselves to the Mission Board for work in the foreign field, preferably Japan. We must surely send these ladies.

Bro. M. J. W. White, of the Norfolk Christian Temple, paid THE SUN a visit the past week while in the city. He has been a subscriber to THE SUN for forty years. He is welcome to come again.

Dr. Frank G. Coffin is to give a course of lectures on "The Principles and Polity of the Christian Church" at Yale the first of April. He will, no doubt, expound our cause in his usual convincing manner.

Mr. Sam Davis, the distinguished pianist of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., will conduct the music at the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., during the two weeks' evangelistic services to be held preceding Easter.

Rev. W. T. Scott, director-elect of religious education for the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, has just returned from a visit to see the plant there. He is full of enthusiasm for the outlook and more than hopeful for the future.

Dr. Barrett is at home for a few days. He continues to prepare himself for an early operation, which fortunately he can do at home, with visits at stated times to the hospital. Let our people pray earnestly for him and his restoration.

We are glad to learn that a movement is on foot to establish a Christian Church in Atlanta. For years we have needed such a Church. Let all who know the members of our Church in Atlanta write, sending names and addresses, to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

Mr. Martyn Summerbell is to be at Elon for a course of lectures beginning Sunday, April 6th, and continuing over Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following. His host of friends will greatly rejoice that he has recovered from his recent serious illness.

"Liberty Building" at Elon College, as described in a recent note on this page, should have read "Library Building." Everybody will think the supply editor's writing could not be disciphered. Now, as a matter of fact, the editor wrote that, in which fact there is comfort for the supply.

Mr. P. J. Carlton is to sail for Europe the last of April. This means he will not be able to attend the Elon trustee meeting in May. There will be deep regret over this by his colleagues. We wish him an excellent trip to Europe and a happy return.

Mr. W. F. Corwith, who has been wintering at Southern Pines, starts home this week. He is greatly improved in health. We rejoice with him and wish him long life with every happiness. We need more such Christian laymen. Where is the Church that does not?

The Federal Council, about which Dr. Coffin writes in this issue, certainly deserves the attention and co-operation of our people. This body comes as near as it seems possible now to uniting the denominations for effective co-operation, an idea dear to our people's hearts. We should support it liberally.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va., will preach the anniversary sermon of the First Christian Church, 3000 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va., April 6th. This Church was organized under the auspices of the Mission Board four years ago, with Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., as pastor.

Hon. I. W. Pritchard is deeply interested in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He stands ready to champion any method of guaranteeing the paper's future which promises success. There are a legion of laymen and laywomen of the same opinion. No more important matter faces the Southern Christian Convention when it meets in Norfolk this spring.

We have just heard of a rare instance of Christian liberality. Our Richmond Church is not yet paid for, and has a small membership. One of our members there attended the opening service of the Christian Temple of Norfolk and gave a thousand dollars. God will bless such a man and prosper the Church of which he is a member.

Arrangement has been made with Vanderbilt, Union (Richmond), Boston University, and Yale Divinity Schools for admitting Elon graduates who have pursued thirty semester hours in Bible and religious education courses to second-year standing in their theological work. This will shorten divinity courses for such students to two years. We consider this a very fortunate arrangement.

A Philadelphia company which operates a hotel and a number of eating-houses in that city, has put on prominent display in each of its establishments a card calling upon its patrons to obey the dry law. The card reads:

"The proprietors of this business are American citizens.

"They are aware of the fact that there is an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America making prohibition a law.

"Their personal opinion regarding the statute is irrelevant and unimportant.

"They love America and believe the right method of showing their respect and affection for the country of their birth is to obey its laws.

"They intend to observe this and all other laws to the best of their ability in both letter and spirit and to respect the Constitution of the United States of America.

"Recognizing the fact that the Constitution represents the rules of the game of life as played under the American flag, they want fair play and believe that all right-minded and patriotic citizens will gladly and whole-heartedly co-operate with them."

AYCOCK STATUE MARKS PROGRESS.

North Carolina is spending twenty-five million dollars on education. Charles B. Aycock, one-time Governor of North Carolina, has his fame as an educator perpetuated in bronze, erected and unveiled this month in Raleigh.

Aycock is generally credited with being the father of education in North Carolina. When he came into office, in response to an insistent popular demand that the man who awakened the State to the benefits of public school education be intrusted with its governorship, he had stirred up so much interest in education that in place of being backward and slow, North Carolina came into the front rank of States appropriating much money for educational purposes. In the pre-Aycock era, less than a million a year was spent for educational purposes; today, more than $25,000,000 is expended annually for schools and school work in the State.

The statue was made under the direction of Gutson Borglum, the noted sculptor, whose work on Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, Ga., is attracting wide attention, and whose statue of Lincoln at Newark, N. J., is regarded as a masterpiece.

The exercises were presided over by Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, and the presentation address was made by Josephus Daniels, formerly Secretary of the Navy. W. N. Everett, Secretary of State, accepted the statue on behalf of the State.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Dates and places of one-day schools of missions are as follows:

Eastern Virginia.

Isle of Wight Courthouse—Tuesday, April 8; Mrs. J. A. Williams, Leader.

New Lebanon—Wednesday, April 9; Mrs. Waverly S. Barrett.

Holy Neck—Thursday, April 10; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, leader.

Newport News—Friday, April 11; Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, leader.

North Carolina.

Fuller's Chapel—Saturday, April 12; Mrs. F. M. Harward, leader.

Piney Plains—Sunday, April 13; Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, leader.

Durham—Tuesday, April 15; Mrs. J. P. Avent, leader.

Elon College—Wednesday, April 16; Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, leader.

Apple's Chapel—Thursday, April 17; Mrs. M. F. Cooke, leader.

Ramseur—Friday, April 18; Mrs. D. A. Cornelison, leader.

Turner's Chapel—Sunday, April 20; Miss May Gunter, leader.

Lebanon—Tuesday, April 22; Mrs. T. W. Chandler, leader.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

E. E. HOLLAND,
L. E. SMITH,
I. W. JOHNSON,
Executive Board

January 31, 1924.

Questions and Answers.

DOES THE BIBLE TEACH THE TRINITY?

There is a passage in our English Bibles, in 1 John 5:7, which the best Bible scholars who hold to the full inspiration, integrity, and infallibility of the Bible as given by the Holy Spirit to its original writers, in the original autograph manuscripts, believe was not in the original God-breathed Scriptures. Verses 7-8, 1 John 5, in the Authorized Version read:

"For there are three that bear record in heaven —the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost— and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth—the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."

The Companion Bible, one of the soundest and most valuable reference and commentary Bibles in English, calls attention to the fact that the most of verse seven is not found in any Greek manuscript of the New Testament before the sixteenth century. The Schofield Reference Bible comments: "It is generally agreed that verse seven has no real authority, and has been inserted." And the American Standard Version omits the same portion of the text as unauthentic. There is good reason, therefore, to believe that these words were not in the Word of God, but were wrongly inserted in later copies; and that the correct text reads:

"For there are three that bear record—the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."

This was brought out in "Notes on Open Letters" in the Sunday School Times of August 18, answer to a reader's question, and now a Connecticut reader asks further:

"I consider the Sunday School Times the best and most reliable religious paper that I read, and was much interested in your reply to the "Open Letter" concerning 1 John 5:7.

"I have always supposed that the passage was the chief argument for the doctrine of the trinity, or the 'triune God.' If this is an interpolation, where do we get the doctrine?

"This is a matter in which, in common with many others, I am deeply interested. I am a believer in the inspiration of the Bible, and believe it as being the Word of God, and when anything seems to affect a doctrine in which I was brought up, I am anxious to know the truth."

God has not limited the revelation of any of the many precious doctrines of Christianity to a single verse or passage in His Word. All the great doctrines of the Bible are found repeatedly, and throughout the entire Bible. There is a first mention, somewhere in the Bible, of every great doctrine; then a general and steady unfolding and enlarging of that doctrine. As we thus bring together all that the whole Word of God has to say upon any doctrine, we see it in its fullness and richness, and we are safeguarded against any unbalanced or one-sided or defective view of that doctrine.

So of the great and precious doctrine of the trinity. It is found, and copiously, throughout the entire Bible. It by no means depends upon this single and legitimately questioned passage in 1 John.

For example, the trinity is plainly declared in our Lord's own words in the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of the gospel of John, where he says:

"And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that He may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth. . . .

"The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

"When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me. . . .

"I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. . . .

"When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me: for He shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you."

In these passages our Lord Jesus makes it very plain that the Comforter, the Spirit, is neither the Son nor the Father, but a third person in the Godhead. He is not Christ, for Christ, as He was about to leave His earthly ministry, promises 'another Comforter.' He is not the Father, for the Father will send him in answer to the Son's request, and in the name of the Son.

Full summaries of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, as set ffrth first in the Old Testament, and then in the New, are given in the Schofield Reference Bible in connection with Malachi 2:15 and Acts 2:4.

It has sometimes been said, by Unitarians and others who are hostile to the truth of the trinity, that this great doctrine of the Christian Church depends upon a single and uncertain passage, that in 1 John 5:7. The baselessness of this statement, and its ignorance, are exposed by the wealth of the light of Scripture which God has given us on the trinity.—S. S. Times.

Question.—How do England and the United States get along now as to selling liquor? Does England's ships continue to bring in the liquor supplies for prohabition territory.—John.

Answer.—We think the liquor differences between these two governments has been settled. In the Presbyterian of the South we find the following statement of the case, which seems to indicate that the differences have been amicably settled. The Presbyterian says:

"England and America are getting closer together in sentiment and feeling. Ever since the adoption of the prohibition law, one of the chief sources of trouble to the government in enforcing it has been that many English vessels have loaded whiskey in the Bahama Islands and brought it to the neighborhood of the American coast. They kept outside of the three-mile limit, so that our revenue officers could not interfere with them. From that distance it has been easy for the liquor to be secured and carried ashore on small, swift motor boats, which, under cover of darkness or otherwise, could evade capture by the government forces, which have never been large enough to guard all of the coast at the same time. Our Secretary of State and the English ambassador have signed a treaty which permits our government forces to search British vessels suspected of being in the liquor business for a distance of at least twelve miles from shore. This will keep the rum-runners so far from land that it will be much more difficult for the small boats to deal with them, and so it is expected that this smuggling business will be greatly reduced. In return for this concession, the United States is to allow British vessels to enter our ports with liquor on board, which belongs to the ships' supplies, provided it is kept under seal while within our territorial limits. This arrangement will be of great advantage to this country, but it is specially gratifying because it evidences a growing feeling of kindness and good will between these two nations. As long as these two countries are sympathetic to the interests of one another, the prospect of world peace will be far ahead of what it would be under any other conditions. This help in enforcing the prohibition laws will be an aid to us in showing to the world what is the benefit from the abolition of the liquor traffic. It is greatly desired that all the otherwise law-abiding citizens of this country shall be as sympathetic to the government in this matter as the English have shown themselves."

NORFOLK'S APPRECIATION OF TEMPLE.

The Ledger-Dispatch of March 15th gave us an editorial expressive of the appreciation of our new Christian Temple, as follows:

"New Church a Credit to Norfolk."

"Tomorrow's services will inaugurate the use and enjoyment by the congregation of the new Christian Temple, at the intersection of Thirty-fourth Street and Llewellyn Avenue. Rev. Dr. Leon Edgar Smith is pastor. It is more than a Church, the completion of which is an epoch in the history of this particular congregation as well as in the religious, commercial and industrial progress of Norfolk. The new Christian Temple is a community center in all that the name implies. An inspection of the great limestone structure is educational in a high degree. It is a Gothic architecture throughout, and is complete and up-to-date in every respect. Costing approximately $395,000, the active and energetic young pastor and his enthusiastic congregation have already succeeded in liquidating much the greater portion of the outlay, and steps are being taken which will result in the speedy payment of the balance.

"Dr. Smith and his people deserve and should receive the warmest congratulations of the people of Norfolk for their wonderful accomplishment. It is not too much to say that there is no city in the United States, no matter what the size and wealth, which has a more thoroughly equipped and complete Church plant and community center than the one which will be thrown open tomorrow. Advantage should be taken of the invitations which have been extended to all denominations and the beautiful and spacious auditorium should be crowded at all services Sunday. And also the meetings during the coming week, when the Governor of Virginia and other distinguished people will speak, should be attended by capacity crowds. By means of an ingenious system, it is possible to throw all the rooms on a floor into one. It is, therefore, possible to care for an almost limitless number, and the acoustics are so perfect that the voices of the speakers and the sweet strains of sacred music can be plainly heard everywhere. The magnificent new organ and the electrically played chimes will be features of tomorrow's and future services which will be thoroughly delightful.

"The Ledger-Dispatch extends hearty congratulations to Dr. Smith and his congregation. They have done a marvelous work, and deserve well of the people of Norfolk. Elsewhere in this issue appears a full description of the new Christian Temple, with informative illustrations. It is well worth perusal."

PASTOR'S HELPER
SOLOIST, CHORISTER, CHILDREN'S AND PERSONAL WORKER
Has Open Dates After April 20th.
TERMS: Transportation from Greensboro, N. C., entertainment, and offering.
ALFRED SHUMATE
Box 351 - - - LIMA, OHIO.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

HOW IT WILL WORK—NO. 2.

ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES.

Last week it was remarked that Men and Millions had taught us the need of directive agencies in any adequate financial scheme for our Church. That great Christian layman, Colonel J. E. West, remarked at the Raleigh session of the Southern Christian Convention, four years ago, that the people were tired of being called on to do things, and that we wanted no more speech-making or directive measures, but a rest and a chance to get our breath. Colonel West rightly interpreted the wants of our people. But our wants, unfortunately, are not always our needs. The calm that set in after the directors were disallowed by the Convention almost meant the collapse of Men and Millions.

One thing is certain—we must have administrative and promotional agencies for our financial program. Some of the brethren, in discussing the plan suggested, have cautioned against overhead expense. It is a wise counsel they have given. We must not make our financial plan top-heavy, with high-salaried specialists, who sit in offices and talk to stenographers. But, admitting the danger of incurring too great overhead does not militate against the soundness of the position that we must have administrative agents to guarantee the proper functioning of any adequate financial system.

The plan I proposed provides for a minimum of six salaried officers for the entire General Convention of the Christian Church. One of these men is to be the general administrative officer of the General Convention, and in addition there would be one such officer for each regional Convention, of which there are five. Two of these officers are already employed and at work—Dr. Warren H. Denison for the General Convention, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson for the Southern Christian Convention. Dr. Denison is to begin his work as stewardship secretary on January 1, 1925, and Dr. Atkinson can very readily be transferred to this work by the Mission Board of the South. This would leave us but four additional men for the entire Church—surely no extravagant outlay! It is conceivable that some of the stronger Conferences, like the Miami or the Eastern Virginia, might wish financial secretaries on all-time salary, but this is not required by the plan suggested. I think it will be readily admitted that each regional Convention needs a stewardship secretary to administer its budget, and that the General Convention has a similar need.

Each of these secretaries would be under the direction of a board. For the General Convention, this board might well consist of the secretaries of the departments entering into the budget, together with, say two other members, the Convention itself electing in any event. For the regional Conventions, the board might well consist of the stewardship or financial secretaries of the constituent Conferences, each regional Convention electing in any case. Each Conference should have a budget committee elected by the Conference, with its chairman acting as stewardship or financial secretary of the Conference. Each local Church should have a stewardship or financial secretary, responsible to a committee elected by the Church.

In the descending scale, each of these boards, or committees, would be responsible to the board or committee just above it for the faithful administration of the duties falling under its special jurisdiction. The graphic arrangement would be:

General Convention budget board and secretary.
Regional Convention budget board and secretary.
Conference budget board and secretary.
Local Church budget committee and secretary.

It would be the duty of the General Convention Board, acting through its secretary, to get each regional Convention to adopt the part of the budget naturally falling to it as suggested by the General Convention. This board will do likewise for each of its Conferences, and the board likewise for each of the local Churches.

The situation in the local Churches for many years to come would be far from uniform in detail. The only thing they would at first agree on would be the adoption of their part of the budget. The methods of raising it will for the present vary all the way from a public appeal just before the Conference year closes to the weekly offering through envelopes with quarterly payments, all the auxiliary organizations having been included in the budget. In every case, where an auxiliary organization participates in the budget of the local Church, it would be with its willing consent. It will be a long time before all our auxiliaries will enter into such a project; just as after 1900 years we have so few tithers!

Now, this budget plan is no revolutionary thing. We tried it in the Men and Millions in the South and in the Forward Movement in the North, and it has worked. The percentages of distribution would be agreed on just as the total amount of the budget and the whole work of the Church will rise or fall together. This is proper for a body knit together in unity. It is not Christian for the various boards of the Church to be competing with each other to build up constituencies. The work of the Church is a single work. It should be carried on and financed in the spirit of oneness for which our Master prayed as the victorious characteristic of His followers.

Another item we need to refer to in this connection is the designated gift. Brother Jones, we will say, wishes to give $25 for home missions, and not according to the budget percentage. He should give it over and above the budget of the Church, and it should be sent direct to the Home Mission Board. The same would apply to any other board. It would not be right to divert Brother Jones' gift to any other purpose than the one for which he gave it, nor would it be right for Brother Jones to insist that his gift should be given in such a way as to disrupt the whole financial system of his Church. This method permits system and cares for individuality at the same time.

Finally, the budget must have educational features or it will become mechanical and will not yield a growing income. Of these matters we shall speak next week.

"LIBELING CHRISTIAN LOVE."

Under this heading, the Southern Methodist has some wise words, as we think. It is true they cut, but they cut where cutting is needed and proper. That paper says:

"A persistent effort is being made to make it appear that it is the part of Christian love to be tolerant of ruinous unbelief and to leave it uncombated. Those presenting this view insist that love is ever amiably passive and essentially nonresisting. This is nothing short of libeling that noble fruit of the Holy Spirit.

"It was Paul, the author of that beautiful tribute to love found in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, who, when false teachers were trying to get in their work among the early Christians, declared: 'But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed' (Gal. 1:8).

"It was St. John, proverbially the apostle of love, who wrote these strong words: 'If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him godspeed; for he that biddeth him godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds' (2 John 10 &11).

" 'God is love,' yet it is He who has declared, 'The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.'

"A mushy namby-pambyism is not love. The mother loves her child with a measureless affection, and should you seek to injure it, the same love that croons over its cradle will fight to the death in its defense. Love is never nobler than when it stands fearlessly for the right, and bleeds and suffers to beat back the wrong.

"To try to shelter destructive skepticism, capable of wrecking immortal souls, under the banner of Christian love, is one of Satan's most subtle devices."

We must be gentle toward all men, but that does not mean that we must tolerate all men, irrespective of their character and conduct. John in his Second Epistle 1:7-11, teaches us very plainly that whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. Then he tells us such men must not be received into our homes, and we must not bid him godspeed. He gives a reason for this ruling. He says if we bid him godspeed, we become thereby partakers of his evil deeds. Then it is quite clear that men who are untrue to the Scriptures cannot be tolerated in our homes. You may squirm, but that is what the books say.

There is much said today about the sweet spirit of certain men who are subverting the faith of many by false teaching, and they are having quite a plea put up that we must be nice to them because they are so sweet-spirited. We like a sweet spirit, but a thousand men maintaining a sweet spirit while they are destroying the Word of God, or trying to do so, gains nothing for them, as we see it, and for the reason that we must first have the truth and then we can afford to have a sweet spirit, but without the truth to sustain you and back you up, it is worthless.

Let every man be true to the truth, and then he has a right to expect toleration on the part of them who have a like precious faith. But if instead of faith, they have unbelief, it does not matter how sweet-spirited he may be, he is not to be tolerated. Did you say, "Who made us a judge in this matter?" No one, we are thankful to say; but when the sweet-spirited one denied the Word of God, he judged himself, and we are instructed by the Word to have nothing to do with him, not even to sheltering him in our homes.

But why should we exclude such people from our homes? Why! because false teachers will seize every opportunity to poison the hearts and minds with their false teaching. As we understand it, the most important thing that God has among His people is truth. As an evidence of such a thing, we have only to notice and study how carefully God puts a hedge around about His truth. He does not mean for one little one to be misled by error, and therefore He says: "Do not admit him to your home, not even to bid him godspeed in the work he is doing to poison his fellows." No, God wants His people to be protected against the presence of unbelievers, who, like their master (the devil), are going around seeking whom they may devour.

Why should a man, who is the servant of God, give his house as a shelter to an unbeliever who is seeking to turn the people whose kindness he is enjoying away from God? There is no reason with which I am acquainted. On the contrary, the biggest reason in the world exists as to why he should not be taken in and accorded the privileges and blessings of the home—it is the fact that he is an unbeliever, and so an enemy of God and His people. Why should we open our doors to an enemy in the spiritual sense? We need to keep him on the outside. Truth is too precious to leave it exposed for an hour to one of the enemies of God and man.

THE TRUTH, AND WELL SAID!

If you wish to be talked about, just go into the ministry, and your desire will most likely be satisfied, especially if you could hear all that is said about you. Of course, that is quite an exception, for the people who say things of the minister are generally the people who like to say ugly things of the preachers, but are by all means most anxious that no one tell the minister what he has said about him. Oh, yes, just say this, but you must not say it so that it will get to the minister. Tell any one else you may please, but you must not tell it to the preacher and you must be sure not to use my name."

As an editor, we have had people come and tell us things which, if true, ought to be exposed, but the man who was talking said we must not use his name; oh, no! You may tell it, but take the responsibility on yourself—do not get me into trouble. We very much doubt that you can afford to tell anything, if the man who tells you says, "you must not use my name." Exactly! What a hero he is! He is willing to have some one else who knows nothing about it tell it—expose it—and so try to do good by correcting the wrong, but he cannot be induced to give his consent to back up his own statement by giving his name. Well, such a person ought to be punished for trying to get some one else to subject himself to the odium of starting a false report. Indeed, that must be a pretty hard case when a man wishes some one else to tell it without ever intimating who started the report.

Of course, when you accuse a man, the first thing he wishes to know is who says it, and he has a right to know who is accusing him. But all that can be said is a man or woman told me it is so, but he or she would not allow me to give his name, and then and there the accused says: "Well, sir, if you cannot give the name of your informant, then I will hold you responsible for what you have said. You must make it good or I will hold you personally responsible for the whole thing," and there you are.

Congressman Upshaw is quoted as having said, in Congress, a pretty plain thing, as follows:

"Whenever I hear a blind, stingy parasite say that 'a preacher always hears the call where the biggest salary is,' I want to be free as a layman to lash him with my tongue or crack him with my crutch and remind him that he is one of the 'nuts' that do not pay any of the salary. When I hear a critic of preachers and Churches say that 'preachers' children are the worst children in the world, I love to be free as a layman to look him straight in the face and tell him 'without mental reservation or purpose of evasion,' that he is an 'unmitigated fool or an unfumigated liar, either all or both.'

"If one child of a preacher goes wrong, you tell the world; but you tell nothing of the ninety and nine faithful ones who live in the modest beauty and conquering glory of their God-fearing lives, going out from the sacred influences of family altars and sacrificial parental example, making a constant gulf stream of blessing to the social, spiritual, educational and political life of the nation, fructifying every shore that they touch. Verily, the faithful preacher is the packhorse of the community life. He restrains the erring, marries the loving, he comforts the sorrowing, and buries the dead, and then he usually sinks into his grave without money enough to buy his own winding-sheet, because, like his Master, he has loved truth and humanity better than he has loved worldly preferment or the 'yellow glare of gold.' But—

As over the hilltops, the valleys, and plains,
Tho' the sun hath departed, a glory remains.

"Even so does the beauty of the faithful preacher's unselfish, consecrated life throw back its mellowed beams of radiant splendor upon the community sky—a light in which your children and mine walk, thank God, to nobler and grander living. Thinking of how preachers, Bibles, Churches and schools give fundamental value to our homes and property, and everything that is worth while in our civilization, I love to be free as a layman to crown the underpaid preachers and teachers as the most unselfish men and women the world has ever seen."

CREDULITY OF THE CRITICS.

The critics, to whom we refer, are the intellectuals who have grown too wise to be content with the traditional faith. They have found a more reasonable method of accounting for the Old Testament Scriptures than the account which those Scriptures give of themselves. They purport to be of divine origin, and to be a correct narration of the events which they record from the creation of the world to the advent of Christ. They profess to have been written by holy men of old as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Our fathers accepted them at their face value, and felt themselves justified in so doing because they exhibited characteristics in keeping with their claims; also because Jesus Christ accepted them in all good faith, and used them as of divine and final authority, and taught His disciples so to regard them. Our fathers, believing in Him as their divine Saviour, never questioned the propriety of anything He did, or the truth of anything that He taught.

Such was the traditional faith which our critics have outgrown. They think they have discovered that the oldest writings of the Old Testament do not date back farther than the eighth or ninth century B. C.; that Moses had little or nothing to do with them; that a large part of what we call the books of Moses was written after the Babylonian captivity, and that the latest books of the Old Testament were written in the first or second century before Christ. They do not believe, however, that we have the writings as they came from the hands of the authors. They believe that these writings were chopped up, and pieced together again in a most remarkable manner. They believe that the Bible, built up in this manner, was accepted by the Jewish nation without any knowledge of how it was formed. They believe that Jesus accepted the Bible without any knowledge of how it was formed, or if He possessed the knowledge He suppressed it, and encouraged His disciples in the belief that it was fashioned by an entirely different method.

We raise the question whether the critics have hit upon a more rational explanation of the way in which we got our Bible than the explanation which the Bible itself gives. No doubt, there are difficulties about accepting all the statements of the Old Testament Scriptures just as we find them in our Bibles today. But do our critics get rid of difficulties? Do they even diminish the difficulties? To our way of thinking, the Old Testament, as reconstructed by the higher critics, is the most marvelous book in the world. Think how it was made! A number of unknown men wrote different parts of it. They lived in different parts of the country, at different times, some of them separated by centuries, and they wrote under different motives. There was not only no concert among them, and could be none, but some of them wrote with the deliberate purpose of qualifying, and even contradicting, what previous ones had written. Then when these were through writing, some other unknown person, or persons, took the writings and chopped them into shreds, mixed the shreds together and wove them into a connected historical narrative, including an account of the creation of the world, and embodied in this narrative what purports to be a divine system of religion. And he, or they, did this with such consummate skill as to fool the whole Jewish nation, and secure the adoption of the book as a genuine and truthful narrative, and this with such unanimity of sentiment as that not one dissentient voice has come down to us. Talk about miracles! The whale swallowing Jonah is not a circumstance. Nothing short of Jonah swallowing the whale could match it.

And that is the book, made in the manner indicated, which our Saviour reverenced as the very Word of God. According to the critics, He did this ignorantly, or in a spirit of accommodation to the erroneous ideas of His contemporaries. Whatever the explanation, He did it, and that is the tremendous fact. "My sheep hear my voice and they follow me. A stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers!" When it is a question between Christ and the critics, it takes no prophet to say which will prevail.

GIVE MORE—GET MORE!

We do not refer to the giving of money, although we believe the same thing is true of money. We refer here particularly to the giving of more praise to God for what He has done for us as His children. Some one has said that the hog eats the acorns from the tree, but never looks up to thank the tree for what it has done for the hog. That is hog-like, and we sometimes fear that many of God's professing children act much that way—we receive and receive from the bountiful hand of God, but seldom do some of us stop and look up to Him with praise and thanksgiving. Let us change this in our lives, so that instead of getting all and giving nothing in return, we may get and give. That is as we receive from God the things we need for this life and the promises of things to come, we shall be thoughtful enough to acknowledge the gifts and give Him thanks and praise for all of His goodness to us.

Mr. Spurgeon, the great English preacher, is quoted as having said: "Bless God for stralight, and He will give you moonlight; praise Him for moonlight, and He will give you sunlight; thank Him for sunlight, and you shall yet come to the land where they need no light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light forever and ever."

That is not only the fact in the case, but it sets forth the principle involved in giving and getting. Give, and it shall be given to you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye meet withal, it shall be measured to you again?

If people would only believe this truth, how different life would be in living it! Let us give God more praise and thanksgiving, and we shall receive far more than we have done; it is God's way to have and to give, but He wishes for our good that we may have an abundance of His gifts; but if we do not believe for them and do not thank Him for His gifts, how shall we expect to receive. Ten lepers were healed, but only the one came back to give thanks for his healing. We wonder if many of us do not act much the same way toward God for all His goodness to us in the time of our great need.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Education is "the systematic development and cultivation of the natural powers, and the direction of the feelings, tastes, and manners, by inculcation and example"; and education may include character, personality, and citizenship. The development of character is primary. The home is the school for beginners. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The Church is the college for the completion of character. All other human development can be built on character, but character cannot be built on other foundations. Right and wrong are fundamental in character-building, and these can be developed best as the first elements of education. Character is faulty without religion; hence no home can be a safe school for childhood without religion. The spiritual sense is the first in capacity for real character. Education should begin with the heart.

Personality comes second in the line of education; and this includes the development of the body and the mind. Here the school has its opportunity and its obligation. All that enters into young life helps to develop a permanent personality. Here, example counts as much as instruction. Most young people, unconsciously, invite some teacher. His manner, his methods, his tastes, his ideals, find response in the young life, and personality is developed. This is especially true in the school of music, painting, elocution, and composition. Moral ideas also count largely in this contact with teachers. Next to parents, teachers rank in help or hindrance. One of the weak spots in modern schools is the lack of personality built on character. Hurried methods of pedagogy make teachers more in books than in person. A teacher should not only be an instructor, but an example. When one returns from college, people do not want to see the diploma, but the person. It is not what one knows, but what one is, that counts in human society. Personality is better understood by the word personage, which means a man or woman of rank. Personality includes character and learning.

Citizenship embraces character and personality; it is no mean attainment to be a good citizen, and there is hardly any lower state than to be a bad citizen. Citizenship relates one not only to society, but to government. It binds one to the nation. This larger sphere for the exercise of character and personality is the greatest test of manhood and womanhood. People who are very good at home break down in the State. It is harder to be honest in politics than in a Sunday School, but the real citizen is faithful in both. In a Christian State, no one can be a good citizen who is not a Christian; and no one can be a good teacher, or a good parent, who is not a Christian. As the child grows in the home, the school, and the State, character, personality, and citizenship find their true value in Christian civilization.

Three nations illustrate partial education. The Hebrews were trained in religion chiefly, and were lacking in broad sympathies. To them, Gentiles were dogs. Greece was developed intellectually, but lacking in character. Rome developed great citizens without character, and went down under social corruption. Christian civilization undertakes the larger task of combining the moral, the intellectual, and the civic in all.

W. W. Staley.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

A religious body which stands for Christian unity ought to give approval and co-operation to every advancing movement in that direction. To withhold aid is either inconsistency or something worse. Unreasonable idealists may demand that any movement shall come up to their high standards or conform to their methods as a condition of their assistance, but the man who has observed the evolutionary process of every good movement in society understands that any sincere effort in the direction of the ultimate end should have every possible encouragement. Perhaps the beginnings of the most successful efforts of the kingdom have always had marks of inadequacy which required the development of time and experience to eliminate.

The Commission on Christian Unity of the Christian Church has declared by vote of itself and the approval of the Executive Board of the Christian Church as follows:

First.—That, however much our several denominations may have accomplished, the spirit of denominationalism as it has dominated the past has delayed the establishment of Christ's kingdom on earth.

Second.—That, before any further great aggressive movement of the Church for world betterment can take place, the forces of the entire Church must be more closely united.

Third.—That the majority of the rank and file of our Churches are, in heart, ready for a closer unity, and therefore the time demands a concentration of thought on the great unities of faith and work, with less emphasis upon the few divisive features.

Fourth.—That the present situation is so insistent that the effecting of a closer affiliation of Christian forces should be a primary objective in our Church program, and together we should devise adequate plans for its realization.

Fifth.—To this commission, Christian unity means the organic union of the followers of Christ into one body. However, knowing that this is not the expression of a unanimous opinion prevailing among the Churches and also that even this ultimate objective will be realized through preparatory steps, we heartily favor other co-operative relationships which will bring God's people nearer together.

Sixth.—That a Christian unity broad enough to include all the followers of Christ and fraternal enough to exclude none is a present possibility; therefore, those of all denominations who believe these things should be industrious in agitating in its behalf.

The commission has addressed an overture to over thirty Protestant denominations, asking consideration, consultation and prayer, to the end that Christian unity of this type may be speedily realized. The pronouncement of the commission probably represents the majoring conviction of the membership of the Christian Church. Personally, I believe that nothing less than an organic fusion of Christian forces can measure up to modern requirements or fulfill the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of His followers. The pronounced advocates of unity of this type still recognize that it will not be reached by a single bound, but by a series of advancing steps. It is doubtful if there could be a more disastrous occurrence to Christian unity than to jump to its accomplishment with a spirit unready for it. The step-by-step process may be tantalizingly slow, but the safety of the method fully compensates for its tardiness.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is now the most sane approach to co-operative effort among our Churches. It does not attempt to go as far as some might wish, but it is ready to go further when its constituent bodies desire it. The carefulness of the council has made posible its continued existence. Had it been carelessly aggressive or sought objectives beyond which the Church was willing to go, it would have long ago forfeited its life. It has been prudently careful without being cowardly or compromising, all of which has made its continuance a possibility.

The council has amply justified its existence, and, from its achievements, is now entitled to the financial support of all Churches. Without this, that which it is accomplishing would be turned backward.

In the financial support of the Federal Council, the Christian Church has a natural responsibility. We have accepted membership in the body, given promise to pay a definite part of the budget, appointed representatives to its sessions and talked and written much on the value of the council in the present divided state of the Church. We should, therefore, provide our proportion of the budget or participate less in these other things. Every one has a very definite opinion of the fellow who, in the local community, gets the benefits of the Church, talks loudest and longest in its favor, and then leaves when the collection plate is to be passed. Having put our hand to the plow, let us not now turn back, thereby demonstrating our unfitness for the kingdom of God.

There are at least nine definite reasons of particular appeal to the Christian Church why each Church should co-operate in this offering and make as large a contribution as possible for the work of the council.

First.—It helps to answer the prayer and fulfill the will of the great Head of the Church.

Second.—It adds a much-needed propaganda in ecclesiastical enterprise.

Third.—It is wise missioneering in behalf of Christian co-operation.

Fourth.—It helps to actually establish a co-operative working program in States, cities, and other geographical units, establishing united evangelistic social service and other programs, the value of which is no longer uncertain.

Fifth.—It makes possible the first steps of approach to a complete Christian unity.

Sixth.—It is the testimony to, and evidence of, our faith in one of our own cardinal principles.

Seventh.—It helps to extend the position and principles of the Christian Church beyond our own borders, thus providing the strategic opportunity to infuse the largest possible group with the idea of the oneness of Christ's followers.

Eighth.—It provides for the participation of our representatives in the general movement and enables our Commission on Christian Unity to continue its propaganda.

Ninth.—It is the right, wise, strategic and Christian thing to do. A generous offering will stimulate our respect for ourselves and prompt a similar attitude on the part of others, all of which may be used for the kingdom of God.

F. G. Coffin.

JAPANESE RELIEF FUND.

Previously acknowledged through Sun...		$ 873.43
Mrs. Venie Motley	$ 1.00
S. Norfolk S. S.	21.50
		22.50
Total		$ 895.93

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

"CHRISTIAN CHURCH."

We find the following in a recent issue of the Biblical Recorder, and as it seems rather unusual, we are giving it to our readers, that they may know some things that a man down in Louisiana has to say about us as a people. We copy from the Recorder as follows:

"In its issue of March 13th, the Baptist Message, published in Shreveport, La., contains the following editorial paragraph:

" 'We are surprised to find the following sentence in the Biblical Recorder (Baptist paper for North Carolina): "Dr. Daniel Albright Long, minister of the Christian Church," etc. Does our esteemed contemporary refer to the denomination popularly known as the "Campbellites," officially named the "Disciples," and self-styled "Christian?" If so, pray tell us what are we Baptists —pagans? When we acknowledge their right to appropriate the name "Christians" by using that name when referring to them, do we not place ourselves in a rather shady light? Such self-assumed names as "the Christian Church," "the Church of God," to us smack strongly of the Pharisee who once was heard to say, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as the rest of men." '

"There are in North Carolina, and, we suppose, in most of the other Southern States, two denominations calling themselves 'Christian,' one of these preferring the name 'Disciples.' These are the followers of Alexander Campbell, and are known by some as 'Campbellites.' The others are sometimes called 'O'Kellyites.' To the latter denomination Dr. Long belongs.

"The thing that appears to surprise our good Bro. Tinnin is the fact that the Biblical Recorder (Baptist paper for North Carolina) should call a denomination by a name that is not peculiar to that denomination, but which can be properly claimed by all followers of our Lord. In publishing a name which cannot be claimed as purely distinctive by any one group of people, the Recorder no more admits that those assuming the name are the only people who are entitled to it than it admits the infallibility of the Pope of Rome when it refers to the person who makes that pretenticus claim."

We are glad that these brethren find so little objection to us that they make no claim against us except that we wear the name which all claim to own, but do not wear except under the cover of another name. They claim to be Christians, but call themselves Baptists, so while they recognize the name Christian, they put such little value on it as to cover it (the name Christian) with the name Baptists. They prefer to be known not by the name of their Master, but with the name of one of their disciples. Now, if that suits them, that is their business, but we are unable to see why they should object to our wearing the name without a covering. If they do not sufficiently appreciate the name of their Lord and Master as to wear it on its own merits, without the extra covering of a human name, so far as we are concerned, we say, suit yourselves so far as this name is concerned, but we cannot see why they object to our honoring our Lord and Saviour by wearing His name without any human patchwork. Brethren, be reasonable and be fair toward a people who see this question in the light of Scripture as well as of privilege—we call ourselves Christians because we love our Lord and feel that He is worthy of the honor we seek to do Him by wearing His name as the only appellation by which we are willing to be known. If Jesus is a Saviour and a man is saved, we can see nothing more appropriate than for the saved man or woman to wear the name of his or her Saviour. It is true that the name Baptist is an honorable name, so far as we know; but we think it is far more appropriate to be called Christian in honor of Christ the Saviour of them that believe.

The editor of the Recorder seems to feel that we are wearing a name to which we are not entitled. Well, if our Baptist brethren prefer to be called Baptist, and we are prefering to be called Christian, why should our Baptist brethren object to our choice of a name for our Church? When we prefer the name Christian for our Church rather than that of the name Baptist, in what way are we outside of our rights? We have never put forth the claim that, in wearing the name Christian, we are in any way saying that other people are not Christians. If all of God's people are entitled to the name Christian (and we are glad to believe they are), why are they not willing to wear the name of their Lord and Master? Is not the name Christian more significant as the name of a child of God than is the name Baptist?

JAMES LARKIN PEARSON'S POEMS.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

James Larkin Pearson, of Boomer, N. C., has just published a collection of his poetical works under the title of "Pearson's Poems." It is a book of nearly four hundred pages, and is, perhaps, the only instance on record where a writer has set-up himself, and printed with his own hands, a book of poems which he has composed. It is a typographical work in good taste, and the mechanical part is better than could have been expected; in fact, he states that he is rather well pleased with the job he has accomplished, and the reader will agree that the book presents an attractive appearance with its good paper, open pages, and easily read type. The author is now forty years old, and he has here given his work, year by year, since he was twelve years old. Each selection has attached to it the year it was written, and the age of the writer at that time.

In a twelve-page preface to the book, Mr. Pearson gives a full sketch of his life, and goes into details as to the various influences that have tended to shape his career in the field of poesy. Among the writers who have most influenced him, he mentions especially Longfellow, Whittier, Riley, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Poe, Tennyson, Byron, Keats, Shelley, Whitman, and Swinburne. In the midst of all the struggles that have beset his path, he has kept an almost pathetic love for the best in literature, together with a burning desire to give expression to his own poetic conceptions. As he draws the picture, his has been a life of struggle with grim realities, and yet he has somehow managed to produce a collection that is rather remarkable in view of what he says of his material struggles.

If he had kept in mind simply the making of a reputation as a writer of verse, he would, doubtless, have omitted some of the selections that are in his book, such as occasional poems called forth by current events and others of a more or less personal nature; but he has chosen to make a rather open and free confession of himself, and has included without reservation his work from year to year.

The book sells for two dollars, and will find many friends as it becomes known; it may be had, postpaid, from the author, who, as stated, is his own printer and publisher. In its dark-green cloth binding, it will hold its own in appearance upon the shelves of our libraries with other much-more pretentious work.

At some later time we propose to deal with this author in a fuller way as to his native talent, his likeness in many ways to the spontaniety of Robert Burns or James Whitcombe Riley, and his true poetic insight as revealed in some of the best of his works. His power of expression when considered in the light of what he mentions as to his educational opportunities, is very unusual. His name is fairly well known as a contributor of verse to the readers of various publications, and some of his friends have felt that he could easily secure fuller recognition were he to devote himself to the production of the best of which he is capable. We are here attempting no final estimate of his work, and no critical judgment, but this much is due him upon the appearance of this book coming from its own writer-printer-publisher-poet. Below will be found a selection or two from the book.

Under the Willow.

Who wins my heart with gentle words?
Who whispers love to me?
The blue-eyed girl who stands beneath
Yon weeping-willow tree.
Her cheeks are of the morning's dye,
Her eyes as bits of fallen sky.

The smile that plays across her cheek
Lights up the gloomy day,
Inspires the heart to nobler things,
And drives despair away.
In truth, she hath a simple grace—
Her faultless beauty cheers the place.
—James Larkin Pearson (age 14).

The Law of the Earth.

Life for life is the law of the earth,
Death for death is the price we pay;
Battle and bleed from the hour of birth,
Back to the arms of the primal clay.

Only the seed that falls and dies
Lives again in the tender plan,
And the blood of a thousand murders cries
Through every life that the heavens grant.

The atom dies that the worm may live,
And the worm must die for the fowl to feast;
And the fowl, ere long, its life must give
To prolong the life of the hungry beast.

And then we follow the winding way,
With life and death in the mingled plan,
Till the beast his head on the block must lay
To feed the life of the master—man.

The soldiers march to the roll of drums,
And many a battle is bravely planned;
And the fight goes on till the finish comes,
And men must fall, that the State may stand.

And oh, how transient is the State!
For kingdoms crumble like the clod;
And all our works that seem so great
Are playthings in the hands of God.
—James Larkin Pearson (age 32).

Beauty and Pain.

Whene'er I look on any lovely thing—
A landscape, or a garden, or a face;
Or when sweet music's murmuring
Is wafted to me from some quiet place,
Somewhere inside there comes a happy pain:
A glad, ecstatic feeling of regret,
That rises up and tingles through each vein,
As if despair and blessedness had met.

I know not why the goblet of delight
Is always flavored with the taste of tears,
Nor why the face of beauty is not quite
The unalloyed good that it appears.
But this I know, that beauty is most wise
When she appeals, and hurts, and satisfies.
—James Larkin Pearson (age 41).

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

In keeping with the budget system, adopted by the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, the Elon College Christian Church has sent its quarterly apportionment of $87.50 to Mr. W. J. Graham, treasurer, Burlington, N. C.

This Conference, at its last session, adopted the budget system instead of the apportionment system, and through its secretary made known to each Church the amount of the goal to be reached in the budget. The Conference deemed it wise that the Churches send in the amount of the budget raised quarterly, so that the Churches would not be burdened at the last days just before Conference, in getting their financial matters out of the way.

Possibly other Churches in this Conference have done as the Elon College Church. It seems to be a worth-while plan that this Conference has adopted.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

PLEASE ANNOUNCE.

Will pastors and captains of Men and Millions please announce to their congregation that this (April) is the last month of the fourth year of our Men and Millions pledges? We want all subscribers to know exactly how the time is going and understand the date of their pledges.

A leaflet was issued November 1, 1923, showing how all the Churches stood, and another leaflet is to be issued May 1st, showing how all the Churches stand, with regard to their pledges, on April 30th. We are so anxious that all the Churches make as good showing as possible! Please further announce that the enterprises of the Church, all of them, share in the amounts given to Men and Millions, and are dependent for progress and growth upon what is received for Men and Millions. Surely all who can do so will make an effort to see the captain and make some payment on their pledges during the present month, or send same to the writer, who will give credit and receipt and turn same over to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston.

Please make these announcements, that all may know the situation.

Gratefully,
J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

A PERSONAL LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Utsunomiya, Japan, Feb. 23, 1924.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

First, your letter of January 22nd, then that of the 30th, and now the money ($270) have all reached me. Present condition of exchange increases the amount in Japanese money. I showed your letter to Mrs. Toshio, and she and I both thank you most heartily. Also I wish you would thank the Southern women for their fine contributions toward the school. Mrs. Toshio is always well and doing splendid work in the teaching. She has a wonderful baby. All the Japanese say his equal was never seen before.

Thank you for the information about the medical school.

Very gratefully,
(S) Susie V. Fry.

ANOTHER CHURCH THAT DOES THINGS.

This information is in a letter before me. No doubt, some Christian Sun reader will wish to be a member of a Church that brings things to pass. Our correspondent says: "I belong to the men's Bible class of our Church, to which I pay $36.00 annually, and we are doing a great work. We have about 350 members. We support five missionaries in the home and foreign field, help a mountain training school for delinquent boys, contribute liberally to our Orphanage, and also to Associated Charities. I only wish I could do more for the Master and humanity."

It must be a source of inspiration to belong to a class in a Church that supports five missionaries. No wonder that class does things at home and abroad!

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Collections to March 1st were $114,157.78. We need to collect $99,408 in March and April to make 40 per cent by May 1, 1924, which completes four years of the movement. In The Christian Sun of January 10, 1924, I published a list of the Churches which had paid 40 per cent and 25 per cent of the amount subscribed. As many Churches did not subscribe their quota, our board has been recently using quotas in making reports through The Sun.

Churches subscribing to fund	190
Churches not subscribing	16

Quotas Paid.

100 per cent	7
75 per cent	1
50 per cent	2
40 per cent	5
33½ per cent	2
25 per cent	14
Total	31

While the collections have been disappointing, let us rejoice at what has been done. Let us be thankful that before four years is completed, seven Churches have paid their quotas in full. Brace up! ye men of little faith. If seven Churches can pay their quotas in less than four years, seventy-seven can pay their quotas in five years! Examine The Christian Sun of March 20, 1924, and read the list of Churches. Learn them by heart; teach them to your children, and whenever a weak-kneed minister or layman says Men and Millions cannot be collected, tell him what these Churches have done. Watch the list grow when March reports come in! Watch the Churches change their positions! The 40 per cent class will change to 50 or more, and the 25 per cent class will change to 40 or more.

Can't Maryland, Valley of Virginia, go to 100 per cent by May 1, 1924, and make eight Churches to pay 100 per cent quota by that time?

How many Churches will go 80 per cent by that time?

How many will go 40 per cent by that time and get honorable mention?

J. E. West, Chairman.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The season now passing has been one of increasing activity.

A successful every-member canvass and the regular Thanksgiving offering made unnecessary the annual Church fair, usually held early in December.

That month was occupied by the celebration of Christmas, including an entertainment by The Gleaners, an organized class of the Church School, and a Christmas party for the children of the school. On the latter occasion a gift was made for the benefit of our workers in Japan.

Attendance on the sessions of the Church, the Church School and of the Christian Endeavor, as well as interest in their programs, has steadily increased.

The Junior Christian Endeavor is thriving under a devoted leader. The intermediates were promoted to senior rank and incorporated with the former senior society. Beginning with the last Sunday in January, the Missionary Society of the Church put on the six-weeks school of missions for the Christian Endeavorers, and the Christian Endeavor missionary committee gave a Defiance-Elon Valentine party February 14th. At the close of the school of missions, March 7th, the day of prayer for missions was observed.

Since that date, two enjoyable socials have been given, one by the four women's organizations of the Church, the other by the Christian Endeavor social committee.

At the invitation of the pastor, the four women's organizations attended the evening service on March 9th in a body, taxing the seating capacity of the auditorium. Sunday evening, March 23rd, the Ancient City Lodge of Masons attended in a body.

At a morning service recently, the Genieva King Guild, in memory of their former teacher, assembled to report that, as a result of its activity, the mortgage on our parsonage had been reduced by $500.

At a recent Church business meeting, Mrs. Ardella B. Blade guaranteed the legal transfer to the Church, to be held in trust by her till her death, of the Anna B. Sisson endowment fund of $12,000 in stocks and bonds.

Rev. W. P. Fletcher, adult division secretary of the department of Christian education, visited us in February and brought us into touch with the new program of education in the Christian Church. His vital message is already bearing fruit in new plans for our Church School.

Six members of our school attend the Albany School of Religious Education for Bible study and methods of teaching. Our school is also represented in the various interdenominational conventions, conferences and socials and the Christian Endeavor in the Albany Christian Endeavor Union. A Defiance-Elon attendance contest is now in progress in our Church School. Plans are also maturing for an every-member evangelistic campaign to terminate with an Easter ingathering.

The annual Church business meeting and banquet for election of officers for the ensuing year is fixed for April 4th. The prospects for another progressive Church year are good.

Rev. W. C. Hook is our pastor.

Charlette L. Estes.

A REASONABLE EASTER.

Paul said to Agrippa: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" In this statement we have faith before the bar of reason, defending her own hopes. After all, it is no small thing to establish the probability of our hopes and to see that it is not incredible that God should raise the dead. To one contemplating the idea from a distance of time and space, it would seem quite incredible that from the mass of organic matter God should raise a man; but it is no more improbable that we should continue to live than that we should have begun to live. "That the life of man ceases with the death of the body," said the late John Fiske, "is the most colossal instance of baseless assumption known to the history of philosophy." It is not to be expected that all scientists would accept that statement of the case, for if some disbelieve, others say with Dr. Coue: "There are no facts known to modern science which make it difficult to believe in the survival of individual consciousness after the death of the body." Suppose, for the moment, that there were no direct evidence one way or the other on the subject, yet it would be altogether rational to accept that interpretation of life which is universally believed and most congenial to our hearts and hopes.

It is more probable that in the world there are beings superior to physical man than it is to suppose that we exhaust the possibilities of the universe. We know no bounds to the universe, nor any limits to its possibilities. That we know of no higher being than man is not in point; doubtless, the dog questions the possibility of higher forms of life than his own, and to him probably his master is only a larger and more kindly quadruped. The present life with all its richness may well enclose and conceal a form of being compared with which the physical life of man is crude and elemental. There are many forms of life invisible to us, and there may be higher as well as lower. Life ascends to the infinite as well as descends to the infinitesimal. It is not for me to say that such is the case; but it is no more unreasonable that there should be forms of life superior to ours that there should be types of life above the brute. In fact, the probabilities point in this upward direction. Man is not the ultima thule of organic life. It seems to me that this is the logic of the case; and, as we stand on the shore of life's boundless ocean, it is unreasonable to say to its swelling tides: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther; and here shalt thy proud waves be stayed."

If there are higher forms of life than physical man, it is more probable that their ranks are recruited from human beings than that such beings should be created de novo. It is more probable that we are in the line of promotion to higher capacities and activities than that we are to drop out of the line of march. Man feels within himself the stirrings of a higher life, and there are latent powers within him which might well connect him to that higher life. "So far as the knowledge of nature goes, the whole momentum of it carries us onward to the conclusion that the unseen world, as the objective term in a relation of fundamental importance that has co-existed with the whole career of mankind, has a real existence; and it is but following out the analogy to regard that unseen world as the theatre where the ethical process is destined to reach its full consummation," says John Fiske. And it is interesting to see how Channing, another great soul, contemplating the subject from another point of view, says practically the same thing, though in different words: "It is posible that the distance of heaven lies wholly in the veil of flesh, which we now want power to penetrate. A new sense, a new eye, might show the spiritual world compassing us on every side." These great minds certainly did not deem it "a thing incredible that God should raise the dead."

Given a theory that fits and supplements our present knowledge and which is not disproved by known facts, the probability is that the theory is true. This is no new test of an hypothesis. Over fifty years ago Bessel advanced the theory that Sirius, from certain strange behaviour, must have a companion, whose time of revolution he computed to be about fifty years. It was a mere theory with no facts to prove it; but Clark, with his telescope, sixteen years later, saw what Bessel foresaw. With Neptune, history repeats itself. In 1821 it was suggested that from certain variations from an assumed regularity, that beyond the limits of the planets as then known there must be another planet, whose pull was felt by Uranus, though the body was not seen by man. Adams and Leverier located the distant body, on paper, and in 1846 Galle observed the planet. So it is that some hypotheses are so reasonable they explain known facts so clearly and perfectly, that we unhesitatingly accept them—it is true with the life to come.

Our life is incomplete where we assume ultimate completeness to be the goal. Certain observed variations of life justify the postulate that the present is not the bounds of life, that beyond this and a part of it is the life dreamed of by saints, sung by poets, and to be entered by all. Man's incompleteness prophesies his perfection; time points to eternity. Goethe, looking upon the great Strasburg Cathedral, said: "It seems a great pity that this one tower is not completed, for the four volutes end much too abruptly. Four light spires should be added to them as well as a higher one in the middle, where the clumsy cross now stands."

When asked who told him that such additions should be made, he replied that the unfinished structure argued its own completion. The superintendent of the building went into the archives and brought out the original design, and it was precisely as he said it should be. Change "man" for "cathedral" and the prophecy is no less true. The tower of life ends quite too abruptly, and the cross does thwart our purposes and crown our insufficiency—we are not yet finished. In the archives of God, the design calls for a fuller and richer life even than this. I know full well that the line of thought we have been following does not constitute a "demonstrative"; neither does it satisfy our instinctive desire for immortality, and we have never read an argument on the subject of immortality that did. We are unconvinced, not because of the weakness of the argument, of the insufficiency of the evidence; but because of the constitution of our own minds.

We are forward-looking beings; it is impossible to satisfy us. If we were satisfied, we should at once become dissatisfied with our own satisfaction. If, by the most irrefutable logic and the most direct evidence, it were shown us that at death man simply sheds his body and glides and ascends into a higher life, as I believe in the case, what then? We would accept the logic, and then ask: What after that? Life itself makes us restless; when we have gained that part of life which is now future to us, we at once speculate about a next; and so it is ever true—the question is shifted, not settled. We can be assured of the future, and we can speculate about it, but we can know only the life that is here and is now, for it is a law of our being that we can know only as we live. Life is a scroll which we can read only as time unrolls the mystic parchment. The path of life has many sharp turns, hiding alike our heretofore and our hereafter; only the straight section of today can be really known. No amount of evidence can make plain to the boy what it is to be a man—he knows only as he lives. We may assure ourselves that after our three-score years and ten life still awaits us, but as to the nature of this higher manhood no amount of argument nor any kind of evidence can make us know more than we live. Certitude is an article that most of us carry a very small stock of, and fortunately we need little of it. We act on probability. No one knows the sun will rise tomorrow, and no one needs to know. It is enough for us to know that, as the sun rose yesterday, the probability is that it will not fail to morrow. Why should we not be as wise and trusting about the great tomorrow?

That there is, however, awaiting us something better than dust and ashes ought not to be questioned. That those we have loved and lost are not gone far or forever, that ought not seem a thing incredible to one who all his life long has been living not by certainty, but by probability, who has walked "not by sight, but by faith." Professor Ramsay, speaking before the chemical section of the British Association in 1897, opened his address with these words: "The subject of my remarks today is a new gas. I shall describe to you later its 'curious properties,' but it would be unfair not to put you at once in possession of the knowledge of its most remarkable property—it has not yet been discovered." We are justified in affirming our eternity as a moral certainty, and although it has not yet been discovered—that is, uncovered—we, too, may speak of its "curious properties." There are three of these "properties" that we associate with all forms of life, and we cannot think of our Easter life without them; they are work, companionship and growth—these are the "three graces" of life. Life without motion and activity would be but another name for death. It is impossible to think of the human soul in contented idleness. Nothing is good for and by itself. The stones in the quarries, the trees in the forests, the cattle in the herds, men in families—this formulates for us the law of association which we cannot imagine annulled in the higher life. The world is wide, but not wide enough to keep the loving and the loved apart. No soul so sorrowful but its closely folded petals will one day feel the expanding life. One of the most convincing arguments for immortality is the undying appetite of the soul for knowledge, love, progress. As we approach the term of life, it never occurs to us that it is time to fold our arms, close our eyes, and bid farewell to nature, poetry, art, friendship, business. As long as our faculties permit, we take exactly the same interest in life as if we were to live fifty years longer. Rest assured that the fondest Easter hope is only a hint of the inheritance that awaits the children of God, for Christ our great hope is not here, but is risen, and because He lives, we shall live also.

Graham, N. C. S. L. Beougher.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, who has been with the Christian Temple this month in the interest of the Christian educational activities of that Church, delivered an address Monday night in the auditorium of the new building. There was a fine attendance.

The Department of Christian Education was represented at the above meeting by the speaker, the secretary of administration; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, who edits page in Sun; Rev. B. J. Earp, recording secretary of the Eastern Virginia Conference Convention of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor; and J. H. Lightbcurne, regional director of Christian education.

Newport News was represented by a delegation of eighteen. Except for the Temple itself, we do not think any Church surpassed them. In Rev. B. J. Earp, Mr. W. H. Baker, and Mrs. T. G. Hyatte, the Newport News Church has a great group of young folks.

On Monday night, the 24th, Mr. Eldredge met with the council of the Suffolk Sunday School.

James H. Lightbourne.

Our Sanford Church, which was recently burned, is preparing to rebuild. You cannot keep a Church like our Sanford Church down.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.
MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

COMING EVENTS.

Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Linville Church, May 14, 15, 16.

North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15, 16, 17.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23.

Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Oak Grove Church, June 28, 29.

Elon Chautauqua, July 28 to August 3.

Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods, Wadley, Ala., August 11 to 18.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 13, 1924.

Topic: "Elijah and the Struggle with Baal."
Lesson: 1 Kings 16:29, 19:21, ch. 21; 2 Kings 1:1, 2:12.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 15.

Elijah appears abruptly in Hebrew history. Without any preliminary warning, he suddenly bursts upon the scene in the seventeenth chapter of Kings. And he walks in without knocking, so to speak. He does not remain very long either. His activities are confined to the latter part of Ahab's reign. But he made his presence felt while he was on the scene. It was he who really gave birth to the prophetic line in its more spiritual aspects, and he defined issues, and established principles that found fullest expression in the life and teachings of Jesus. Elijah was indeed a man of God.

We cannot understand the man or his work without at least a passing knowledge of the historical background. This background was furnished by the reign of Ahab. It was a time of significance, politically, socially and religiously. Unlike his predecessors, Ahab refused to be subject to other kings, and he had thrown off the Aramean yoke, which had been galling to his father Omri. Furthermore, he had effected treaties and alliances which had strengthened his position, and having secured himself in this way, he embarked upon a great commercial program. At the same time, he had continued Solomon's policy of building on a large scale. All these political factors had brought about a radical policy in Ahab's attitude toward his subjects. This is strikingly illustrated in the story of Naboth's vineyard, which shows how his despotism had over-reached itself. Worst of all, affairs had gone from bad to worse in religion. Ahab had always been lax in religion from the standpoint of Jehovah, but when he married Jezebel, Jehovah worship was practically doomed, so far as the court and royal example was concerned. For Jezebel was a devotee of Baal, a Canaanitish and Phoenecian god, the worship of whom was very materialistic and very immoral. In many ways, therefore, the times were out of joint. There was a call for a man of prophetic insight, courage, and heroic character. Such a man was Elijah.

We do not know much about the man's early life. He came from Gilead, which was on the borderland between Israel's earlier home and Palestine, and he dressed in a shepherd's mantle, and carried a staff. He was rugged, heroic, and picturesque. He also had the prophetic insight. He saw clearly the issues involved, and he boldly declared that Jehovah and Baal had nothing in common. His logic was as follows: Jehovah had chosen Israel for His own people; He alone was to be their God. Therefore, if they worshiped Baal or gave him any place in their religious life, they were traitors to Jehovah. He called upon the people to choose one or the other. They had been "limping" too long between both.

The issue is strikingly presented in the incident—and more than an incident—on Mt. Carmel. It is a story that bears reading and rereading. There are few more dramatic scenes in the Bible. In the first place, Elijah carries the fight into the enemy's country, for he suggests that the test be made on Mt. Carmel, the stronghold of Baal, and a place, according to popular belief beyond Jehovah's jurisdiction. On the one side are the prophets of Baal—four hundred and fifty of them; on the other there is a lone man. On the one side there is the royal patronage and approval; on the other there is an unknown, and to all appearances, a fanatical man. "On the one side the fat, sleek, idolaters, fed from Jezebel's table; on the other the gaunt, thin Elijah, fed by the ravens."

I need not go into the details of the scene. The teacher will naturally read them, and as naturally present them to the class. Suffice it to say that the lone, gaunt man put to flight the four hundred and fifty priests of Baal, for he fought with God, and one with God is a majority. And by this act, he once and for all established the supremacy of the spiritual over the material. He did not live to see this principle accepted generally. Nor is it generally accepted even now. But it is the supreme fact in the religious life.

A Few Teaching Points.

1. Men can go for a time with a both-and attitude, but eventually they come to an either-or issue.
2. One man, with God at his back, and afraid of nothing, can work miracles.
3. The religion that brings "fire from heaven" is still the best religion.
4. We can give pagan religions all the odds and then beat them at their own game.
5. People are always trying to serve two masters.
6. If God be God, we ought to serve Him.
7. The ideals of a nation determine a nation's destiny.
8. The ultimate test of a religion is the kind of character it produces.
9. A false religion always proves valueless in the day of testing.
10. Times of crisis need bold, aggressive champions.
11. Our own day and time must choose between two issues:

(a) Whether we shall accept the idea of one human family, created by God of one blood, or whether we shall accept the idea based on racial prejudice and superiority.
(b) Whether the universe is living and spiritual, or whether it is materialistic.
(c) Whether we shall have the way of Christ, the Prince of Peace, or the way of Mars, the god of war.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

April 13, 1924.

Topic: "My Decisions, and What They Have Meant to Me."

Lesson: Luke 10:42, 15:18.

Daily Readings: Godless decisions.—James 4:13-17. Wicked decisions.—Gen. 37:12-28. A prophet's decision—Isa. 6:1-8. Esther's decision.—Esther 4:1-17.

Man is a creature of choice. He is always being called upon to make decisions. And in a way, he is a free moral agent; that is, he is free to make his own choice. In the final analysis, the man himself makes his own decision. It goes without saying, then, that man is responsible for his decisions. He must give an account of himself before God for his choices, for his decisions.

Decisions may be of several kinds. Some decisions are, in a way, trivial in their consequence. For instance, it does not make much difference which necktie a boy decides to wear when he dresses in the morning; nor does it make much difference which skirt a girl decides to wear to school. The same principle applies to a hundred and one things on which we are called to make a decision.

On the other hand, some decisions are momentous in their consequences. Some of them mark turning points in our lives, and affect not only our happiness and our usefulness here, but our life hereafter. A man determines his destiny by his decisions on some great life-issues. I will mention them here in a brief way.

(a) A decision as to whether I will continue with my education and my preparation for life.
(b) A decision as to what I am going to do with my life.
(c) A decision as to what kind of books I shall read.
(d) A decision as to what kind of company I will keep.
(e) A decision as to what kind of amusement I will indulge in.
(f) A decision as to whether I will marry, and if I do marry, as to what kind of woman I will marry.
(g) A decision as to whether I will be a Christian or not.

These may seem very simple things, but many young people have made or wrecked their lives according to the decisions which they have made on these simple, but fundamental, issues of life.

I have mentioned the fact that some decisions are trivial. And in a sense they are. But even many so-called trivial decisions have involved far-reaching consequences. And in two ways. First of all, a young person may have made a decision to go some place, or to do something, and the decision may have been trivial in itself. But, in going some place, or in doing something, or in meeting some person, a life has been changed and a destiny determined. Or, again, every time a man makes a decision, it makes it easier to make a similar decision the next time. The law of habit operates here as elsewhere. Thus, even trivial decisions may determine character, and character determines destiny. Take heed how you choose.

Decisions should be made; then they should be acted upon. It it not enough to make a decision; we must put it into effect. That is, of course, if the decision is a good one. No one is justified in acting upon a decision which he finds out later is wrong. Better break a vow than to act upon a wrong decision.

The supreme decision is undoubtedly a man's decision as to whether he is going to be a Christian. For it affects not only his life here, but it determines his life hereafter. If a man decides to be a Christian, he has gone a long way toward a solution toward his other decisions, for he will have one supreme principle to guide him in making his other decisions. Everything will be brought to the touch-stone of Christ and His will for us. And he who decides to be a Christian will find God ready and able to help him to stick to that decision. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

Some Suggestions and Questions.

"No captain sails the sea with the idea of letting the wind and tide drive him wherever they will. He chooses his port. So must we."

Hasty decisions often mean loss. The ancient wise man said, "Look before you leap."

Selfish decisions also bring pain. Selfishness blinds us to our real good.

We should look ahead in making our decisions. Some people see only the present—the pleasure of the moment, the seemingly high wage, the advantage over some one else. We should see through to the end.

We must struggle to uphold our decisions. He who makes a decision will have to fight to keep it. But the fact that he has made a decision will help him in that fight.

Have some one discuss briefly the decisions as recounted in the daily readings given above.

Have the Endeavorers tell of some decision that they have made which has helped them.

Have a brief discussion as to whether a man is free in making his decisions, and, if so, as to how far.

DEAN ENDERS AT ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

No pastor in the Southern Christian Convention should miss hearing Rev. George C. Enders, D. D., dean of Defiance College, at the Elon Chautauqua, July 28th to August 3rd. Dean Enders is one of the best teachers we have in the Christian Church, and he comes to give a series of daily lectures on "The Psychology of Preaching," which will be a great help to every pastor privileged to hear him. Dr. Enders will also have charge each morning of the morning devotional period, and will make this brief period each day a fitting beginning to a day of study and fellowship and real joy together. Dr. Enders has taken part in the other summer schools of the Christian Church in other years, and the Elon committee feels very fortunate to have secured him for this season.

Pastors will also be interested in Dr. Harper's class on "The Educational Task of the Local Church." Dr. Harper is the chairman of the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church, and has devoted much time and thought and study to the program of Christian education in the whole Church, as well as in the local Church, and the pastor and Sunday School superintendent who is seeking aid in organizing his Church school and carrying on a program which will win the boys and girls to Jesus Christ, and train them for Christian service, will find much help in this course with Dr. Harper. This class will have two sessions each day, or ten sessions in all, and for its work, credit will be given for one unit on the International Standard Training Course.

No other summer school offers pastors two more practical and worth-while courses than these with Dr. Enders and Dr. Harper at Elon this year.

P. C.

CONFERENCE AT MOODY INSTITUTE.

(Continued from Last Week.)

"The rural population is in need of evangelism," according to the Rev. William W. Johnstone, superintendent of the Lakes district of the American Sunday School Union.

"It is estimated," he said, "that only one-fifth of the rural population attends Church; that two-fifths of the rural Churches are standing still or losing ground; that one-third of the rural ministers must have other occupations than the ministry to secure adequate support—in some cases the minister acting as the town barber or doing paper-hanging and painting as a side line; that one-fourth of the rural Churches have no Sunday Schools. Many communities in Southern Illinois have been entirely without the gospel for years. Children have grown to youth without having known of a Sunday School. There are many rural parishes all over the country that have been deserted by the denominations that served them. In a town of 2,000, there may be found a dozen or more Churches competing with each other, and all equally neglecting the great opportunity that lies outside in the adjoining open country. When the Church fails to evangelize its community, it fails in its duty to rural civilization. While urban population exceeds rural, there are 2,500,000 more children in villages and the open country than in cities."

"One of our Ohio missionaries says: 'In my field of two counties containing 1,120 square miles there is a population of 88,000 people. I found forty-eight abandoned Churches and 50,000 people who did not go to Church at all. Of these, 3,000 lived in sparsely settled rural districts where Churches had been abandoned. I have seen hundreds of little children to whom the gospel story had never been told. In more than 8,000 visits to the homes of such people I found in the majority of cases no helping hand had been extended.'"

Narrowly escaping being stoned to death on one occasion during his evangelization campaign covering 30,000 miles and twenty republics in South and Central America, the Rev. Harry L. Strachan, who recently returned to the United States, told of the struggles of the missionaries in the Latin-American countries at founder's week conference in the Moody Bible Institute.

"Missionaries are looked upon as part of what they term the 'American Army of Occupation' in the Latin-American republics," said the Rev. Mr. Strachan. "Especially is this true in Columbia. So great is the prejudice against Protestant missionaries that it is next to impossible to get an audience in any of the regular mission meeting places or Church halls. The natives will not come, so in this new, aggressive evangelization campaign we have adopted circus methods. My plan of action is this. I hire a theater—the biggest one in town—or use a monster tent which I carry with me on my trips. The people will go to a show or a circus. That is why I use these types of meeting-places. I also advertise in the newspapers, designating the occasion as a big conference, and using a title that will attract attention, such as 'Death in the Pot.' Not until they get inside the theater or tent do they know what they are going to hear or see. I have heard natives on the street ask one another if they were going to the 'circus,' referring to me as the 'clown.'

"In this way we have been able to get over our gospel message to thousands, whereas we would not have a handful at a regular mission meeting place. On my trips I take with me teams of native Spanish workers, who have been of invaluable assistance in winning the confidence of thce people and overcoming the prejudice against American Protestant missionaries.

"In planning these big meetings, we select strategic centers, sending out teams of native workers into the outlying districts. We do not find the same prejudice in the interior that we do in the towns and cities. Thirty different denominations are co-operating in this work."

It was in Gautemala where Mr. Strachan was nearly overpowered by a mob. He was planning one of his gospel meetings and was set upon by a crowd of more than 500 people, who threw stones and sticks at him. Through the tactfulness of some of the native workers, he was rescued before he suffered any serious injury.

Modernism is getting a stronger hold on the clergy of England than it is in America, according to the Rev. W. Talbot Hindley, vicar of St. John's Church, London, England, one of the speakers at founder's week conference in Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, February 4 to 8.

"While the newspapers in England do not give the prominence to this controversy between the fundamentalists and the modernists as they do in the United States," said Mr. Hindley, "the war is just as keen in London and other parts of England as it is in America, only with this difference that the modernists have the upper hand in my country and the fundamentalists are not as well organized as they are in America. Every professor in both Oxford and Cambridge are modernists, and I believe that the only hope for the fundamentalists in England is to found a fundamentalist Church of their own, irrespective of denominations. It is different in America, as far as I can judge. Here, the fundamentalists are well organized, and can cope with the situation better than we can in England. The American laymen give you more support than they do in my country.

"At a recent conference of Anglican Church leaders, only seven out of the 70 present were fundamentalists. We have what are called near-evangelicals, moderate liberals, who rule out of the Bible all the miraculous, such as Jonah and the whale, Noah and the flood, etc., but who do not deny the virgin birth or the resurrection. There are modernists who do, however. The situation, so far as modernism is concerned, is even worse among the nonconformists than in the Church of England.

"The big fight we are having in England now is over the revision of the prayer-book. It is being sought to fill it with ritualism and modernism, and to cut out, among other things, every Old Testament reference in the marriage service. If that is done, it will split the Church of England in two. There is a strong, growing tendency to ritualism in England today, and it is getting stronger every day."

Speaking on "Freedom and Honesty," Rev. J. Gresham Machen, D. D., of Princeton Seminary, said at the founder's week conference in Moody Bible Institute: "Paul the apostle was tolerant about methods of work, and intolerant about matters of doctrine. He was tolerant about the way in which the message was proclaimed, but insisted that the message itself should be true. Paul would have had no sympathy with those who at the last Presbyterian General Assembly professed to believe in the Bible and yet voted for the denial of the Bible in the First Presbyterian Church of New York City. Tolerance in Paul was just the opposite to the tolerance in the modern Church. We ought to be very tolerant about methods of work, but exceedingly careful about the content of our message.

"I believe in the freedom of the preacher, and I can imagine no more degrading and miserable existence than that of speaking from a platform where one is not allowed to speak his full mind. That is why the recent report submitted to the Presbytery of New York regarding the First Presbyterian Church of that city seems to me to stand on deplorably low moral ground. In that report, the special preacher in the First Presbyterian Church is rebuked for the form of a sermon called 'Shall we Fundamentalists Win?' and for the provocative title, and it is intimated that the preacher will be more discreet in the future.

(To be Continued.)

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

OUR PRAYERS ARE A DOOR TO GOD.

"All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive them."—Matt. 21:22.

"And ye shall seek me and find me when ye shall seek me with a whole heart."—Jer. 29:13.

Prayer makes God possible to us, for only the one who prays is in a receptive spirit, and to him only can God make Himself vivid. What will we do about it? Shall we pray only when we are in distress? Will we let the days slip by and our cares absorb us and steal away our time with the Lord? Are we going to disregard the Father, His blessings for us, until, like the prodigal, we reach some desperate moment? Is it not better to pray through every day and daily grow into His blessings and His likenss, or as nearly so as it is possible for us to do?

We have no use for a citizen who evades his country's calls, does nothing for it, takes no interest in its problems, is careless of its franchise, and tries to evade the taxes, and then when troubles come and his personal rights are attacked, he calls upon his country for protection. Will we live that way?

Prayer.—In mercy, dear Father, come Thou and dwell in our souls. Help us to follow our Saviour and take His life into ours without whom we cannot do well. Cause us to seek Thee evermore until we have found Thee, and we shall be completed in Thee. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DON'T BE A GROUCH!

"A cheerful heart is a good medicine; but a broken spirit drieth up the bones."—Prov. 17:22.

Are you grouchy in the mornings?

Allowed this feeling to grow on till you are almost intolerable?

If any one should ask you why you were so surly this morning, could you give a reason?

Drifted into the habit, and not trying to break yourself of it?

Why should the morning meal be an occasion when cheerful words are never uttered, when smiles are never seen?

How much more happiness there would be in your home if you schooled yourself to be pleasant and agreeable at the table, especially in the morning!

Can you give any good reason for the grouch at breakfast?

Of course, there are mornings when you feel badly; every one has such times.

But how mean of you to be cross and ugly, mean and disagreeable to those around you, who are in no way responsible for your bad feelings.

From a selfish standpoint, would you not be happier all day if you could look back at a happy breakfast hour?

A bit of good-natured talk, a smile and a pleasant word, an encouraging look at the proper time, would make the family appreciate you and add to your own happiness all day. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, turn Thy light upon our hearts and help us to know ourselves. Too easily we slip into bad moods and thereby make others feel evil. We beseech Thee to take the beam out of our own eyes, help us to tear down every wrong thing about us and set up everything good, the hope of life, and enthrone Thee completely. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IN THE LIKENESS OF GOD.

"God created man in His own image."—Gen. 1:27.

"If he shall be manifested, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."—1 Jno. 3:2.

Before sin entered into the world, God said: "Let us make man in our own image," which means, "after our own likeness." In the time of God, when sin has been driven out, that image will be perfected in His likeness. In the beginning, whatever in us was like Him, and in the ending, however glorious that image may be, in between we know somewhat of it. For instance, when we turn to our hopes and aspirations, our loves and our spirit of kindness, to that which may be somewhat good and holy, to those noble feelings and impulses we may have, to any beauty of character we may have achieved, we have turned to our invisible but true selves which constitute the image of God in us.

There are other realities of ourselves which share in His image. Catch the snow-flake and examine it with a microscope, and we say it is a perfect geometric concept. How can we determine that? Because God, who made the snow-flake, also put something in us that is like His conception of the snow-flake and enables us to say that it is perfect. The same may be said of our appreciation of music, or of art and things beautiful, etc., all of which means that we share with God in His creation of these things. It is His image in us. This is the image that prays, that serves, that gives thanks, that enlarges, that grows in grace, that worships God. It is the image He would have us, and the image which is to grow and be made perfect in His likeness. It is the image that sin destroys. It is the image that Christ has redeemed and shall be like Him through following Him.

Prayer.—Oh, God, we pray Thee for ourselves, for that likeness of Thee in us, now set in the world amidst so many perplexities. Help us daily to obtain the nurture of spiritual life, to remember the task given us for growing in strength and grace, the power gathered in devotion and the perfection obtained in faithfulness. May we never relinquish our efforts to attain. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

YOUR FACE, GOD'S FACE.

"I have seen Thy face as though it had been the face of God."—Gen. 3:10.

This is what Jacob said when he met his brother Esau, after years of separation on account of that ungodly storm of anger that came between them when Jacob stole Esau's birthright from his father. Jacob now looks into the face of Esau and sees it as the face of God. When he saw that the storm of Esau's heart was broken, he knew that the storm of God's heart was broken. When Esau forgave him, he knew that God had forgiven him. Suppose he had seen an unforgiving face, what would have happened? The Bible gives us another instance when the prodigal returned to his father. Suppose he had met his angry brother instead of his forgiving father, what would have been the story?

In all things, others judge God by just what we are. Others know the forgiveness of heaven by the forgiveness we exercise. Others know the love of heaven by the love that we manifest. others judge the goodness of God by the goodness that we show. Too often we pass by the infirm, the mourner, the blind, the sick and the needy with blank faces. And they look at our blank faces and wonder if God's face is like that. Our faces can carry the real semblance of God's by showing love and forgiveness and blessing, and letting not passion and temper take revenge. We may be indignant in the presence of sin and injured love, but revenge is selfish and seeks only to destroy. Love may be indignant, but it has no motive but that to purify. This is the face of God.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to so live that when others see us they may know and judge something of the mind of the Master toward them. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CONTROL YOUR PASSIONS OR THEY WILL CONTROL YOU.

"Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."—Luke 21:34-36.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him."—Jas. 1:12.

Are you losing control of your emotions?

Little things easily annoy you?

Nervous and irritable, you are allowing outbursts of temper to become more and more frequent.

What are you doing about these signs of weakness—merely allowing them to go on without making an effort at control?

Why let a detrimental force overpower you?

You have will-power enough to master the situation if you will only exert it to become your own master.

It is distinctly up to you.

A few months ago you would have scorned to allow yourself to fly in a rage, which seems so easy today.

You would better make up your mind to check the evil influences which are working against you.

It rests with you alone to get control of your passions and keep them from being a menace to your health and happiness. (Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive us all of our sins and baptize us afresh in the living spirit of Jesus. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LET US PRAY.

Dear Father, as we approach Thy altar in our hearts, fashion our minds and hearts anew and humble us in submissive contrition to Thy will. As we pause in this devotion, may we worship Thee in the beauty of holiness. In our worship may we find Thee, and finding Thee may we learn of Thy friendship which is ever with us and ready to protect us from evil and to lead us unto victory. As we know Thy friendship, may we know Thy spirit which is our spirit in all our joys, the comfort in all our sorrows, the helper in all our difficulties, the companion in all our disappointments, and the strength in all our weaknesses. Save us from all the faults and failures of being too busy, lest we lose that spirit and miss the true goals of life. Forbid that we shall engage in pleasures or anything that is but for a moment and passes away with the doing thereof. Grant unto us grateful and obedient hearts. Lift us from complaint and dispair. Enoble our purposes of life by glorifying all the duties thereof and make toil and drudgery a pleasure. May all life find us walking with Thee, seeking, as the Master sought, the comfort and happiness of others, and making the world better and more beautiful because we live in it. This we ask, with the forgiveness of our sins, in the name of Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

While Rev. H. S. Hardcastle was holding a series of meetings at Elon College Church, he seemed to strike a responsive cord in the hearts of the orphanage children. Forty-two of our boys and girls made a decision for Christ and forty-one joined the Church. We are very happy over the results. We have, for a long time, been very much concerned as to the religious atmosphere among our children. We have felt that it was not what it ought to be and that it ought to be better, but God was waiting for the proper time to touch their hearts and we are happy that so many made the supreme choice. It was a beautiful sight last Sunday morning when twenty-six went forward to join the Church and to be baptized. Nineteen of them being our grown girls, fifteen having joined the Church the Sunday before. It was touching to those who were present. May their lives be given to His service, is our prayer.

Bro. L. R. Jones, of Franklin, Va., struck the right chord when he said in his letter to me, "According to my judgment, a majority of the Churches have fallen short of their obligations resting upon their shoulders in helping the fatherless and motherless children. As I grow older in life, the little ones left homeless appeal to me. I shall endeavor to do my best as superintendent of our school to make Easter offering 1924 our banner offering."

May all our Sunday School superintendents catch his spirit and make the Easter offering worth while this year. Envelopes have been mailed to all the superintendents for the offering. We want to ask that one be placed in the hands of each member of the Sunday School and Church at least one week before the offering is taken. Let us do our very best this year. May God bless you in your offering this year.

The following has been sent in since our last report: Class 3, Raleigh Church, curtains for matron's room in baby home; Mrs. R. L. Ingram, Ingram, Va., community box; Mrs. Margaret Clegg, Burlington, N. C., 1 box clothing; Woman's Missionary Society, Coshocton, Ohio, 1 quilt, 1 comfort; Dr. Millie J. Chapman and sister, Springboro, Pa., 3 dresses; Miss Mary A. Hardcastle, Dover, Del., 1 box clothing; Mrs. G. F. Partridge and ladies of Lanett, Ala., 1 quilt; Manchester, Ind., 1 box clothing; McCabe Fertilizer Co., Charlotte, 5 bags fertilizer; Pocahuntus Guano Co., Lynchburg, Va., 5 bags fertilizer; N. B. Josey Guano Co., Wilmington, N. C., 6 bags; Farmers' Cotton Oil Co., Wilson, N. C., 5 bags; Carleigh Phosphate and Fertilizer Works, Raleigh, N. C., 5 bags; Acme Manufacturing Co., Wilmington, N. C., 5 bags; Pamlico Guano Co., Washington, N. C., 5 bags; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., Durham, N. C., 5 bags; F. S. Royster Guano Co., Norfolk, Va., 5 bags; Columbia Guano Co., Norfolk, Va., 5 bags; American Agricultural Chemical Co., Greensboro, N. C., 5 bags; Navassa Guano Co., Durham, N. C., 5 bags.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR APRIL 3, 1924.

Amount brought forward		$3,740.90
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
North aCrolina Conference:
Christian Light	$ 2.30
Graham	5.00
Wake Chapel	5.00
Mt. Auburn	8.08
Durham	18.09
Morrisville	2.00
Ingram, Va.	5.00
		45.47
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Rosemont	$ 14.71
Wakefield	3.75
Newport News	8.67
Union, Surry	3.00
		30.13
Valley Virginia Conference:
Antioch	$ 5.61
Winchester	5.30
		10.91
Georgia and Alabama Conference:
Corinth	$ 1.45
North Highlands	2.16
		3.61
Special Offerings.
Chas. D. Johnston, guardian	$ 4.50
G. L. Gwinn	10.00
R. W. Thompson	30.00
		44.50
Grand total		$3,875.52

FAMILY ALTAR.

(Concluded.)

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

All people need alike the blessings of the Sabbath Day—servants and masters, the low and the high, the poor and the rich. Instincts are universal and circumstances do not alter the spiritual needs of any one.

Today is a day for all, then; and no person who attempts to grasp all that its right use means to him can persuade himself that its observance, whether right or wrong, is a matter to be decided on personal or selfish grounds; it is to be decided by the claims of all righteousness upon him, and that his keeping of it affects not himself merely and his own conscience, but the well being of others.

Therefore, a Christian may not do all that is lawful for him personally to do, but he must limit his actions to its effect upon others. If the day is for man as a whole, every man is responsible for the effect of his actions upon others, and to do nothing that will mar the character of others or even lead them astray. In fact, the Sabbath is in no sense spent correctly when it is spent selfishly. All must rise from littleness, rivalries and limitations of this life and look through the Sabbath skies to the Holy City and be with God. The Sabbath was made for this.

Prayer.—Dear Father, grant us a new birth today, though it be in the travail of repentance and humiliation. Amen.

POUNDED.

Just a few nights ago the people of Wake Chapel Christian Church began to file into my house as though they would give me a storm party. It was all such a surprise that I thought when the first few came in that they just happened to arrive here at the same time. After a few moments around the fire, they went out and began to bring in lots of good things to eat, wear and use. So, once again our pantry was filled with the things that express the devotions of a people that it is a pleasure to serve. We appreciate this expression more than words can tell. May our Lord richly bless them and help me to be a better pastor and preacher.

Fuquay Springs, N. C. J. LEE JOHNSON.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

THE MISSION BOARD,
Elon College, N. C.

LIEUT.-GOV. J. E. WEST, Chairman.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, on the evening of March 3, 1924, our all-wise Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, saw best to visit the home of one of our devoted members of the Baraca Bible Class and to take unto Himself the dear little infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Shelton C. Brady; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we, a the Baraca Class of the Palm Street Christian Church, hereby express to Bro. Brady and his dear wife, and family connections, and sorrowing friends, our deep and heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement and irreparable loss.

